The appearance of Mr. Curzon was by no means the only event of the afternoon, since we had the pleasure of hearing Samuel Barber conduct his Second Symphony. This sterling work had its initial performance at the hands of Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra in 1944. Written in that year, it was inspired by Mr. Barber's experience as a member of the army air corps (he was stationed at Forth Worth, Texas).

In the slow movement he had introduced a specially contrived instrument to simulate the sound of a radio beam used in blind flying. In revising the score he has deleted that detail, and he now wishes that the music be heard as music alone. Seven years ago it was the finale that impressed this listener most.

Perhaps Koussevitzky made it more exciting than the composer could, since yesterday chief honors seemed to go to the first movement. The effect of the moody and atmospheric Andante was somewhat spoiled by its resemblance to Copland's piece. You were made to feel, and perhaps unjustly, that American composers in general have not yet achieved an idiom that is either distinctly national or distinctly personal. Mr. Barber has, in fact, written more personal music than this symphony, which he conducted with poise and authority. He was warmly applauded and so was Mr. Curzon.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE
APR 14 1951

MUSIC

Suzanne Danco Makes Debut at Symphony; Munch Plays D'Indy

By CYRUS DURGIN

Suzanne Danco, the distinguished Belgian-born soprano, made her Boston debut yesterday afternoon as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall. She sang a brace of Mozart arias and Ravel's trilogy, "Scheherazade." Charles Munch had arranged a largely French program that began with Vincent D'Indy's Second Symphony, in observance of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth, and which ended with the first suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

As some of us had surmised from her phonograph recordings, Miss Danco is a first-rate vocalist and a singer who is also a musician. She has a light, easily produced, clear and flexible soprano voice. It has perhaps a shade too much vibrato and it is rather small, but of pleasant quality and easily susceptible to tone-coloring. Most important, Miss Danco is one of those musicians to whom, seemingly, singing comes as easily as breathing.

The Mozart arias, with their preceding recitative, were Fiordiligi's "Per pieta" from "Cosi fan tutte," and Susanna's "Deh vieni, non tardar," out of "The Marriage of Figaro." Here Miss Danco's musicianship and mastery of style were put to a severe test. She emerged triumphant, after a superb exhibition of delicate, expressive singing, in which every phase was gracefully traced, every nuance given its due, and the rhythm had received both exact and subtle treatment.

You might ask for a larger, more sensuous voice for Ravel's three settings of the poems of Tristan Leclere, for this is primarily color-music. But you could not ask for a clearer or more intelligent performance of this early 20th Century exoticism. Miss Danco deserved every round of the handclapping she received.

I am afraid, when you get right down to it, that Vincent D'Indy's B-flat Symphony is the sort of admirably constructed, massive, colorful and slightly boring music that is received with respectful attention because its creator was such an eminent man. Not that the B-flat Symphony does not have its decided virtues. They are there, in plain sight, or rather hearing, but all the same it is long and there is a strong aroma of academicism-plus Wagner and the coloration of the fin de siecle. Mr. Munch gave it a rousing performance, and the sheer sound was superb. Ravel's less familiar "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite went well, too, and brought the concert to a spectacular conclusion.

MUSIC 4/14

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 22d concert of the 70th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Suzanne Danco, soprano, was the soloist. The program:

Symphony No. 2 in B flat, Op. 57 D'Indy
Recitative and Rondo ("Per Pieta") from Cosi fan Tutte: Recitative and Air ("Deh vieni") from "Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Scheherazade; Daphnis and Chloe. First Suite Ravel

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The custom of having arias with orchestra is a very amiable and, hereabouts, a very infrequent one. Thus when Suzanne Danco, the noted Belgian soprano, appeared yesterday in two Mozart arias and Ravel's exquisite "Scheherazade" as well, and did them with the most refined musicianship, it was doubly pleasant.

Musicianship of the first order characterizes Miss Danco's singing. She produces a voice perfectly focused in every register—and that register is wide indeed. The quality is not opulent or highly colored, but it more than makes up for it in its exceeding purity and exactitude. Technically she seems to have everything; I don't know when I've heard an extended trill, as in the Mozart, performed as a trill and not as a tremolo.

Yet it is more than voice and technique; it is that Miss Danco is obviously an interpretative intelligence of the highest order. She knows what the words are all about; conveying the significance and poetry of these words is her primary purpose. The voice and the technique are merely the means to the ultimate aim, which is the projection of the inner substance of words and music to the hearts and minds of the listeners. In this respect Miss Danco, even in these brief examples, demonstrated the maturest musico-poetic spirit. The Fanny Mason Music Foundation is presenting her in a free recital this coming Wednesday and at that time, I have no doubt, Miss Danco will strengthen the impression, so favorable yesterday she was called back four or five times.

D'Indy's Second Symphony is a work to provoke rather mingled impressions. It is clearly a symphony informed with the most distinguished material and workmanship, yet all through it it suggests the quality of being special, of being just a bit off the main line. You hear a suggestion of Wagner with the steam heat shut off; you hear a touch of Franck with the reptilian chromatics safely caged behind glass windows; you hear wisps of Ravel with his gloves on. You also hear some beautiful sounds and melodic inspirations, but they don't quite get you. You can take the Second Symphony, in short, or you can leave it alone, and I think it might safely be left alone for another 10 years.

As a postlude to all this, Ravel's first suite from "Daphnis and Chloe," in a ravishing performance, was an ideal conclusion. I am at a loss to explain how Mr. Munch and the orchestra maintain their mid-season form after so exhausting a season, but they do; indeed, they get better. Next week's program offers the first performance (by this orchestra) of Berlioz' awesome Requiem—chorus, soloist, brass bands and all.

This Clipping From AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL
APR 21 1951

HARVARD GLEE CLUB HERE MAY 4—The Harvard Glee Club, famed men's singing group, will appear at Cony high school auditorium Friday, May 4, at 8:15 o'clock, under sponsorship of All Souls Unitarian Church, of Augusta, according to announcement last evening. The Club of 50 voices has been on tour, and will conclude its current season with three Yard concerts later in May. The Club will present the Berlioz Requiem with the Boston Symphony Orchestra April 20, 21 and 22.

APR 7 – 1951

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Concerts had gone for sometime without offering anything in the way of music or performance that could be properly described as sensational, which is not to say that they have lacked interest. However, the needed stimulation came yesterday afternoon when the British pianist Clifford Curzon, made his local debut in the Fifth Concerto of Beethoven.

The Emperor, as it is popularly called, is anything but performance proof. In a great performance it stands as great music; in a mediocre or pedestrian one it can relapse into dullness. Happily, that of yesterday was of the great variety, surpassing on the pianistic side any traversal of the work we had heard in years. Nor was the orchestral part unworthy of the distinguished company in which it was placed. Sometimes inclined to extravagance and overemphasis in the music of Beethoven, Mr. Munch yesterday had everything under control and the whole effect was magnificent.

As for Mr. Curzon, whom we had waited for too long to hear, he disclosed his stature as virtuoso and musician in the very opening measures, so arresting were they both tonally and rhythmically. After that no opportunity was lost: every measure, every note had significance. Even in a day when such things are taken for granted, Mr. Curzon's command of different varieties and gradations of tone is exceptional. He seemed to be playing not one instrument but a dozen.

An eleventh hour change in the program brought Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" as opening number in place of the announced "Carmel" Concerto of Carpenter. Mr. Munch gave it a sensitive reading, and Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer distinguished themselves in their respective roles of solo trumpet and English horn.

The appearance of Mr. Curzon was by no means the only event of the afternoon, since we had the pleasure of hearing Samuel Barber conduct his Second Symphony. This sterling work had its initial performance at the hands of Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra in 1944. Written in that year, it was inspired by Mr. Barber's experience as a member of the army air corps (he was stationed at Forth Worth, Texas).

In the slow movement he had introduced a specially contrived instrument to simulate the sound of a radio beam used in blind flying. In revising the score he has deleted that detail, and he now wishes that the music be heard as music alone. Seven years ago it was the finale that impressed this listener most.

Perhaps Koussevitzky made it more exciting than the composer could, since yesterday chief honors seemed to go to the first movement. The effect of the moody and atmospheric Andante was somewhat spoiled by its resemblance to Copland's piece. You were made to feel, and perhaps unjustly, that American composers in general have not yet achieved an idiom that is either distinctly national or distinctly personal. Mr. Barber has, in fact, written more personal music than this symphony, which he conducted with poise and authority. He was warmly applauded and so was Mr. Curzon.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 14 1951

MUSIC

Suzanne Danco Makes Debut at Symphony; Munch Plays D'Indy

By CYRUS DURGIN

Suzanne Danco, the distinguished Belgian-born soprano, made her Boston debut yesterday afternoon as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall. She sang a brace of Mozart arias and Ravel's trilogy, "Scheherazade." Charles Munch had arranged a largely French program that began with Vincent D'Indy's Second Symphony, in observance of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth, and which ended with the first suite from Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe."

As some of us had surmised from her phonograph recordings, Miss Danco is a first-rate vocalist and a singer who is also a musician. She has a light, easily produced, clear and flexible soprano voice. It has perhaps a shade too much vibrato and it is rather small, but of pleasant quality and easily susceptible to tone-coloring. Most important, Miss Danco is one of those musicians to whom, seemingly, singing comes as easily as breathing.

The Mozart arias, with their preceding recitative, were Fiordiligi's "Per pieta" from "Cosi fan tutte," and Susanna's "Deh vieni, non tardar," out of "The Marriage of Figaro." Here Miss Danco's musicianship and mastery of style were put to a severe test. She emerged triumphant, after a superb exhibition of delicate, expressive singing, in which every phase was gracefully traced, every nuance given its due, and the rhythm had received both exact and subtle treatment.

You might ask for a larger, more sensuous voice for Ravel's three settings of the poems of Tristan Leclere, for this is primarily color-music. But you could not ask for a clearer or more intelligent performance of this early 20th Century exoticism. Miss Danco deserved every round of the handclapping she received.

I am afraid, when you get right down to it, that Vincent D'Indy's B-flat Symphony is the sort of admirably constructed, massive, colorful and slightly boring music that is received with respectful attention because its creator was such an eminent man. Not that the B-flat Symphony does not have its decided virtues. They are there, in plain sight, or rather hearing, but all the same it is long and there is a strong aroma of academicism-plus Wagner and the coloration of the fin de siecle. Mr. Munch gave it a rousing performance, and the sheer sound was superb. Ravel's less familiar "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite went well, too, and brought the concert to a spectacular conclusion.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
APR 16 1951

Noted Quartet, Organist Heard

E. Power Biggs, one of the foremost organists of the day, and a string quartet from the Boston Symphony orchestra, presented a concert of flawless proportions, in a vesper hour of music at Christ church yesterday afternoon.

From the opening strains of Handel's "Concerto in C Major" it was apparent that here was an organist who had complete mastery of his instrument. The clarity and precision of tone, vigorous interpretations and ample technique showed him worthy of a place in the highest rank of organ virtuosos.

The Handel concerto has never been published, and was first performed in Boston in 1949 by Mr. Biggs and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The artist obtained a [illegible] of the score from Austria where the manuscript survived in monasteries of Melk and Gottweig. The largo was exceptionally beautiful.

Two Bach numbers "Sheep May Safely Graze" and "Toccata and Fugue In D Minor" were magnificent. Three sonatas for organ and strings by Mozart were delightful, almost like a suite. Two Schumann numbers, "Sketch In D Flat" and "Canon In B Minor" were exquisite and almost pianistic in effect. The concert closed with Handel's "Concert In F Major," a beautiful blending of organ and strings.

It was worthy of note, and a credit to Christ church that the choir could sing an anthem "Let All the World In Every Corner Sing" by Thiman, in a concert on such a high artistic level, with no sense of letdown. Donald G. Wilcox, organist and choir director, accompanied at the organ for the anthem.

Quartet members included Gaston Elcus, first violin; Harry Ellis Dickson, second violin; Albert Bernard, viola; and Alfred Zighera, violincello.

Rev. A. Vincent Bennett, DD, rector, presided at the brief worship service.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
APR 15 1951

Lowell Institute Announces Educational FM Station

Ralph Lowell, trustee of the Lowell Institute, has announced plans for a new FM radio station for educational broadcasting which will bring the cultural resources of six Greater Boston colleges, as well as the full concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to millions of listeners.

The Lowell Institute has applied to the Federal Communications Commission for a construction permit to erect a high-power, non-commercial educational station with 20,000 watts effective radiated power to be operated in the FM band.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will join Harvard, Boston University, M.I.T., Boston College, Tufts and Northeastern to inaugurate the new station which, beginning in the Fall, will broadcast all the scheduled performances of the Boston Symphony's 71st season.

In addition, Mr. Lowell writes that "the proposed station is planned to carry addresses by national and international figures speaking at the universities, important public discussions, great lectures from the classrooms, full-length performances of good plays and authoritative and comprehensive interpretation of news and events by faculty specialists."

The transmitter and antenna of the proposed FM station will be located atop Great Blue Hill in Milton, with central offices and studios in Symphony Hall, Boston. The new station is expected to provide strong, high-quality signals within a 65-mile radius of Blue Hill, which is 10 miles south of Boston.

Mr. Lowell reports that FM listening is on the increase, stimulated in part by the sale of combination FM-TV sets. A recent survey revealed there were more than 102,000 families in the five counties of Eastern Massachusetts with FM receivers, an increase of 50 percent over a year ago.

This Clipping From WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS
TIMES
APR 15 1951

In Memory

Last year Ginette Neveu, French violinist, and her brother Jean were lost in a plane crash on the Azores, en route to America. (Marcel Cerdan, middleweight, also died there.) Recently, Charles Munch and members of the Boston Symphony voluntarily pooled $800 for Madame Neveu, the bereft mother.

This Clipping From WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
APR 16 1951

Week's Schedule For 'Symphonic Varieties' Show

This week's schedule for "Symphonic Varieties," "heard over WHHH from 10:15 to 11 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and from 10:15 to 11 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday, will be as follows:

Monday — Schubert: Unfinished Symphony, Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitsky; Ballet music from Rosamunde, Ave Maria and Serenade.

Tuesday — Orchestras of the World "Portuguese Hour."

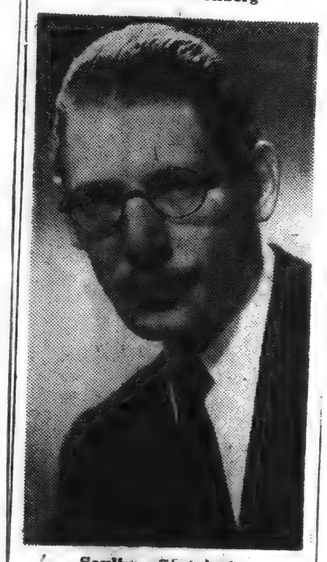
Wednesday April 18 — Chopin: Pianists Vladimir Horowitz and Jose Iturbi.

Thursday April 19 — All Strauss Program (Johann the younger) including Blue Danube, Die Fledermaus, Tales of the Vienna Woods, Gypsy Baron, and Emperor Waltz.

Friday — Sibelius: Symphony No. 4, Philadelphia Orchestra with Leopold Stokowski.

This Clipping From
WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 1[illegible] 51

Roman Totenberg



Soulima Stravinsky

JOINT CONCERT SLATED AT S. L. U.

Soulima Stravinsky, Composer's Son, and Violinist Roman Totenberg to Play.

Canton, April 17. — Soulima Stravinsky, pianist, and Roman Totenberg, violinist, will present a joint concert at Gunnison chapel at 8:15 tonight, under the auspices of the St. Lawrence university concert and lecture series.

Mr. Stravinsky, who made his American debut in July, 1948, has appeared with the Boston, CBS, Denver, Seattle and Toronto symphony orchestras. He is an exponent of the music of 17th and 18th century composers, as well as of the works of his father, Igor Stravinsky.

Mr. Totenberg will be making his second appearance in three years at St. Lawrence. He made his debut in his native Poland in 1925, and his first American appearance in 1935, as soloist with the National Symphony, Washington, D. C.

The program will include four movements of Handel's Sonata in D Major, played by both artists; four Scarlatti sonatas, by Mr. Stravinsky; Bach's Partita in E Major, by Mr. Totenberg; Suite Italienne, by Stravinsky, played by both artists; Paganini's Caprice No. 24, by Mr. Totenberg; three mazurkas and two etudes by Chopin, played by Mr. Stravinsky; and Igor Stravinsky's Divertimento, played by both artists.

[267]

Pierre Monteux — Serge Koussevitzky und Charles Munch, drei berühmte Dirigenten des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters

Das Boston Symphonie-Orchester plant Jubiläums-Festkonzerte

Von FRED LOW

Das Boston Symphonie-Orchester ist 1881 gegründet worden; am 22. Oktober des gleichen Jahres fand das erste Konzert in der Boston Music Hall unter Leitung Georg Henschels statt; die "Weihe des Hauses" von Beethoven erklang sinnvoll als Eröffnung des Programms, das mit der Jubelouvertüre Carl Maria von Webers abgeschlossen wurde.

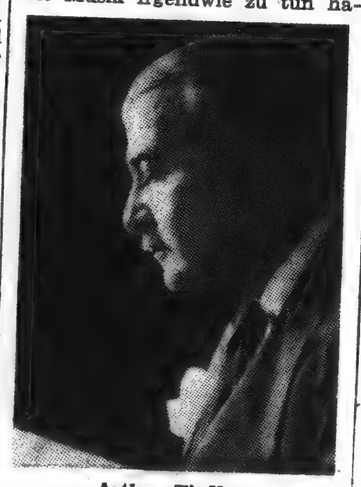
In diesen sieben Jahrzehnten ist das Ensemble zu einem der allerersten Orchester der Welt geworden, beispielgebend für die Disziplin und das große Können der Musiker, die ihm angehören. Die Leitung des Ensembles hat zur Erinnerung an die Entstehung und die Tätigkeit des Orchesters eine interessante Broschüre erscheinen lassen, die den Werdegang schildert und mit zahlreichen Photographien illustriert ist.

Der Gründer des Orchesters war Henry L. Higginson, der 1881 sechzig Musiker auswählte und mit Unterstützung der Bostoner Bürger die erste Konzertserie veranstaltete, die in der Folge einer der wertvollsten kulturellen Zweige Bostons und damit Amerikas geworden ist. Higginson hat 1860 in Wien Musik studiert, er war stark beeindruckt von den hervorragenden Konzertaufführungen der Werke der klassischen Meister und faßte schon damals den Beschluß, alles aufzubieten, um in Boston ein erstklassiges Orchester zu gründen. Er engagierte Georg Henschel, einen jungen englischen Sänger, Komponisten und Dirigenten, um die Leitung des neugegründeten Ensembles zu übernehmen. Zwei Jahre später folgte der erfahrene Musiker Wilhelm Gericke, der in unermüdlicher Arbeit die Klangwirkung des Orchesters weiter verbesserte und schließlich die Leitung Arthur Nikisch übergab, der durch vier Jahre als Dirigent der Boston Symphonie wirkte. Emil Paur, der Nikisch in Leipzig gefolgt war, dirigierte die Konzerte die nächsten fünf Jahre und Wilhelm Gericke kehrte 1898 wieder an die Spitze des Ensembles zurück. — Diese Jahre können die Vorbereitungsperiode des Orchesters genannt werden, berühmte und anerkannte Dirigenten hatten ein erstklassiges Ensemble herangebildet, dessen Ruf in alle Welt gedrungen war.

Mit Karl Muck von der Königlichen Oper Berlin erhielt das Orchester einen der besten Dirigenten der damaligen Zeit, nach zweijähriger Tätigkeit an der Spitze der Bostoner wurde er nach Deutschland zurückberufen und durch den Hamburger Max Fiedler ersetzt, der von 1908-12 die Leitung innehatte. Karl Muck erhielt dann die Erlaubnis seiner Regierung, nach Amerika zu gehen, und war von 1912 bis 1918 wieder Dirigent der Bostoner. Die Aufführungen des Orchesters wurden weltberühmt, die Symphonien von Beethoven, die Auszüge von Werken Richard Wagners erhielten vorbildliche Wiedergaben und die Zukunft des hervorragenden Ensembles schien gesichert. Henry L. Higginson sah seinen großen Plan verwirklicht und trat zugunsten eines Komitees zurück, das die Geschäftsführung übernahm.

Henri Rabaud, der ausgezeichnete Pariser Komponist, wurde als Leiter der Konzertserien 1918-1919 engagiert und gestaltete das Programm, das bis dahin hauptsächlich klassischen Werken gewidmet war, weiter aus. Neue Kompositionen kamen zur Aufführung, zeitgenössische Musiker sandten ihre Werke dem Komitee ein, um ihren Schaffungen erstklassige Wiedergaben zu sichern. — Pierre Monteux war der zweite französische Dirigent des Orchesters, er leitete das Ensemble von 1919-24 und war ebenfalls immerwährend bemüht, das Repertoire zu erweitern und neben den Standardwerken auch unbekannten Komponisten einen Platz zu geben.

1924 war ein Schicksalsjahr für die Bostoner; Serge Koussevitzky wurde zum Dirigenten des Orchesters ernannt und wirkte 25 Jahre lang als Leiter des Ensembles. Die Tätigkeit Koussevitzkys ist allen Besuchern der Konzerte, allen, die mit Musik irgendwie zu tun haben, bekannt. Er hat nicht nur die Tradition der Bostoner erhalten, sondern bahnbrechend für die zeitgenössische Musik gewirkt. Serge Koussevitzky hat begabten Komponisten Aufträge für Orchesterwerke erteilt und vielen Musikern dadurch erst die Möglichkeit geboten, sich ihrem Schaffen zu widmen; er hat in jahrelanger unablässiger Arbeit Außerordentliches geleistet. Die Berkshire Musikfestspiele sind seiner Initiative zu danken, und als er 1949 von der Leitung des Bostoner Orchesters zurückgetreten war, behielt er die Direktion der Festveranstaltungen in Tanglewood.



Arthur Fiedler, Leiter der "Boston Pops"-Konzerte

Der Nachfolger Serge Koussevitzkys ist Charles Munch, geborener Straßburger, Dirigent der Lamoureux- und Straram-Konzerte, Paris, und späterer Leiter des berühmten französischen Ensembles "Orchestre du Conservatoire, Paris". Er kam 1948 mit dem französischen Rundfunkorchester nach Amerika und erzielte bei Kritik und Publikum hervorragende Erfolge.

Die Veranstaltung der Bostoner

Man muß das Programm des Boston Symphonie Orchesters vor Augen haben, um die umfangreiche Tätigkeit des Ensembles voll zu erfassen. Konzertserien in Boston bilden die Basis für die Aufführungen, 48 Konzerte finden in der Boston Music Hall alljährlich statt. Die Reisen führen das Ensemble nach New York, wo in der Carnegie Hall jede Saison zehn Konzerte, in der Brooklyn Akademie für Musik fünf Konzerte veranstaltet werden. Das Orchester geht zu Beginn der Saison auf Reisen in den Mittelwest und ist auch später in der Spielzeit oft auf Tourneen. Von Mai bis Juni sind die Pops-Konzerte unter Leitung Arthur Fiedlers, die dem Publikum leichtere Programme bringen und im Juli gibt es Freiluftaufführungen in Boston. Juli, August sind die Festspielmonate in Tanglewood, Berkshire Festwochen, die alljährlich hunderttausenden Gelegenheit geben, in der reizenden Umgebung hervorragende Darbietungen zu genießen. Das Music Center ist einer Idee Koussevitzkys zu danken, es gibt jungen Musikern und solchen, die es werden wollen, die Möglichkeit, unter fachmännischer Leitung ihre Studien zu vervollkommnen.

Rückblick auf die Saison

Ein kurzer Rückblick auf die vergangene Saison gibt Gelegenheit sich an die Aufführungen der Bostoner in der Carnegie Hall zu erinnern. Charles Munch brachte die New Yorker Erstaufführung von Honeggers "Prelude, Fugue et Postlude", die dritte Symphonie von Diamond, das Klavierkonzert von Martinu (ebenfalls New Yorker Erstaufführung); im Programm der New Yorker Serie waren ferner die zeitgenössischen Werke von Roussel (3. Symphonie), die Erstaufführung für New York von Peter Mennins 5. Symphonie, Honeggers fünfte Symphonie und Bela Bartoks Komposition für Streicher, Celesta und Schlagwerk, Bloch "Vidni" und "Nigun" aus Baal Shem" und das Violinkonzert von Riviere (Ruth Posselt Solistin). Höhepunkte der Konzerte waren die grandiose Wiedergabe der "Symphonie fantastique" von Berlioz und D-moll Symphonie Cesar Francks, die in der Interpretation des Dirigenten hervorragende Wirkung ausübten. Serge Koussevitzky hatte die Leitung von drei Konzerten übernommen, um den 85. Geburtstag Sibelius' mit dem Vortrag von zweien seiner Werke zu ehren. Das Programm für die Berkshire Festwochen bringt Wiederholungen von Aufführungen zeitgenössischer Werke, Charles Munch wird zum erstenmal als Dirigent der Konzerte erscheinen, Serge Koussevitzky leitet die Kammerorchesterkonzerte in Werken von Mozart, Bach und Haydn, und Eleazar de Carvalho, ein Schüler Koussevitzkys, dirigiert ein Sonntagskonzert. — Die Aufführung von Tschaikowskys "Pique Dame" unter Koussevitzky wird dem Opern-Department Gelegenheit geben, seine Qualitäten zu zeigen.

Für die Eröffnung der kommenden Saison sind Festkonzerte geplant, die den 70. Geburtstag des Orchesters gebührend feiern sollen.

This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
APR 18 1951

Happy Birthday

Only Survivor of Original Boston Symphony 91

By WILLIAM GILL

BOSTON, April 18 (U.P.)—In a quiet residential hotel one block from Symphony Hall, the only surviving member of the original Boston Symphony orchestra cheerfully keeps tabs on the world of music.

Daniel Kuntz will be 91 tomorrow. Seventy years ago he was in the first violin section when "the Boston" gave its first concert. For 33 years after that he played with the orchestra—the second oldest Symphony orchestra in the nation.

Kuntz is a stocky little man with a friendly smile. He puffs a pipe constantly. He is surprisingly agile, and his memory is keen.

He remembers, for instance, how in 1881 the musicians resisted orchestra founder Henry Lee Higginson's efforts to sign them to a contract.

"We didn't want a contract in those times," Kuntz said. "We wanted to be free citizens."

But they signed just the same. Their salary was $1,500 a year, and they were forbidden to play at dances.

Kuntz arrived in America in 1874, a promising 14-year-old violinist from the Rhineland. The night after he landed he played at a Beacon Hill Ball until 5 a.m.

With the Boston he played under six regular conductors. The first George Henschel was a singer. It was Henschel's successor Wilhelm Gericke who "really made the orchestra," according to Kuntz.

Kuntz traveled frequently to Europe to study. While playing at the Wagner festival in Bayreuth, Germany, he got one of his biggest thrills.

One night a young man talked to him and introduced him to a woman.

"She was a beautiful lady, and she was dressed like a queen," Kuntz recalled. "She held out her hand and I kissed it."

The young man was Siegfried Wagner, the composer's son. The woman was his mother, the daughter of Franz Lizst.

Kuntz resigned from the Boston Symphony in 1914. After that he directed orchestras at Plush Summer resorts until 1937.

He doesn't go to the concerts any more. Instead he sits in his comfortably cluttered little room and listens in on the musical world on his radio.

"Music is a satisfying profession," Kuntz said. "It is good to know you can make people happy."

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
APR 18 1951

12 Concerts By Symphony For Next Year

(Reprinted from yesterday's late edition)

The Norfolk Symphony Orchestra and Civic Chorus are planning to present 12 concerts next year, Conductor Edgar Schenkman told Civitans this afternoon.

That's twice as many as being presented this year.

The orchestra has already scheduled seven regular concerts for next year. Two of these will be with the chorus.

In addition, the board has approved five other concerts, Schenkman said.

Three of the five additional concerts will be children's concerts, Schenkman said. Of these, two are being underwritten by the Musician's Union, Local 125. A sponsor is now being sought for the third children's concert and for two "pops" concerts.

Schenkman pointed out that "pops" concerts should be well received here with the need for entertainment for servicemen.

The budget of the orchestra and chorus, Schenkman said, is $35,000. He compared this to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's of $1,000,000, with often a deficit of from $150,000 to $250,000 at the end of a year.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 17 1951

[268]

REHEARSING MASSIVE BERLIOZ "REQUIEM"—Boston Symphony conductor Charles Munch works with Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, drilled by Wallace Woodworth. They will join with orchestra and four brass ensembles in Pension Fund performance next Tuesday.

OPEN REHEARSALS

One of the "listeningest" audiences anywhere is this one, the attitudes of which seem to show that thorough listening doesn't depend on the ears alone, but all the rest of the body. The occasion is one of the Boston Symphony's "open rehearsals," an innovation this year. The public, formerly excluded, may now purchase tickets to Thursday evening dress rehearsals about once a month.

THE AUDIENCE — from colleges, music studios, and general public — is fascinated. Last open rehearsal this season will be Thursday evening, April 26.
(Photos by Dave Lawlor)

This Clipping From
WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES

Huge Tribute To Soldiers

The most awe-inspiring music ever performed in memory of soldier heroes will be presented in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and Tuesday evening. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with four bands of brass instruments stationed in the forward ends of balconies, one hundred and twenty choristers from Harvard and Radcliffe, and a tenor soloist, David Lloyd. Orchestra rehearsals are now in progress, and the college singers have been undergoing training by G. Wallace Woodworth for months.

This stupendous composition, so elaborate, that it has remained unplayed by the Boston Symphony for seventy years, is the Berlioz "Requiem." Performed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the Siege of Constantine, Algeria, one hundred and fourteen years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed. Incidentally, this revival of the work will take place a little over six months before the tenth anniversary of occupation of Constantine by troops of the United States and her allies in World War II.

The composer of the "Requiem," Hector Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of the whole of his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Other composers have heaped praises upon it. The modern English critic, Cecil Gray, has said of it: "Berlioz has reared up gigantic pyramids of sound which will endure as long as music itself."

Next Tuesday's performance, 8:30, will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. The intricacies of this stupendous masterpiece were met and conquered by Mr. Munch in 1937, when he conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the seventieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

Third Performance of Berlioz Requiem for Pension Fund Tuesday

There are a total of 228 instrumentalists and singers in the performance of Hector Berlioz' Requiem which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the regular series at Symphony Hall, this afternoon and tomorrow night, and again next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition to full symphonic orchestra and large chorus (in this case the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Berlioz calls for four small brass ensembles, two of four players each and two of five. These miniature brass bands will be stationed at strategic points in the first balcony, two on either side at front near the stage, and two in the rear. The one soloist called for will be David Lloyd, tenor. Charles Munch will conduct.

Composed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the siege of Constantine, Algeria, 114 years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed.

Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of all his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Mr. Munch in 1937 conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the 17th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

Third Performance of Berlioz Requiem for Pension Fund Tuesday

There are a total of 228 instrumentalists and singers in the performance of Hector Berlioz' Requiem which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the regular series at Symphony Hall, this afternoon and tomorrow night, and again next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition to full symphonic orchestra and large chorus (in this case the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Berlioz calls for four small brass ensembles, two of four players each and two of five. These miniature brass bands will be stationed at strategic points in the first balcony, two on either side at front near the stage, and two in the rear. The one soloist called for will be David Lloyd, tenor. Charles Munch will conduct.

Composed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the siege of Constantine, Algeria, 114 years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed.

Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of all his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Mr. Munch in 1937 conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the 17th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER

Huge Tribute To Soldiers

The most awe-inspiring music ever performed in memory of soldier heroes will be presented in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and Tuesday evening. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with four bands of brass instruments stationed in the forward ends of balconies, one hundred and twenty choristers from Harvard and Radcliffe, and a tenor soloist, David Lloyd. Orchestra rehearsals are now in progress, and the college singers have been undergoing training by G. Wallace Woodworth for months.

This stupendous composition, so elaborate, that it has remained unplayed by the Boston Symphony for seventy years, is the Berlioz "Requiem." Performed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the Siege of Constantine, Algeria, one hundred and fourteen years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed. Incidentally, this revival of the work will take place a little over six months before the tenth anniversary of occupation of Constantine by troops of the United States and her allies in World War II.

The composer of the "Requiem," Hector Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of the whole of his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Other composers have heaped praises upon it. The modern English critic, Cecil Gray, has said of it: "Berlioz has reared up gigantic pyramids of sound which will endure as long as music itself."

Next Tuesday's performance, 8:30, will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. The intricacies of this stupendous masterpiece were met and conquered by Mr. Munch in 1937, when he conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the seventieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

OPEN REHEARSALS

One of the "listeningest" audiences anywhere is this one, the attitudes of which seem to show that thorough listening doesn't depend on the ears alone, but all the rest of the body. The occasion is one of the Boston Symphony's "open rehearsals," an innovation this year. The public, formerly excluded, may now purchase tickets to Thursday evening dress rehearsals about once a month.

THE AUDIENCE — from colleges, music studios, and general public — is fascinated. Last open rehearsal this season will be Thursday evening, April 26.
(Photos by Dave Lawlor)

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER

APR 18 1951

Huge Tribute To Soldiers

The most awe-inspiring music ever performed in memory of soldier heroes will be presented in Symphony Hall on next Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and Tuesday evening. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with four bands of brass instruments stationed in the forward ends of balconies, one hundred and twenty choristers from Harvard and Radcliffe, and a tenor soloist, David Lloyd. Orchestra rehearsals are now in progress, and the college singers have been undergoing training by G. Wallace Woodworth for months.

This stupendous composition, so elaborate, that it has remained unplayed by the Boston Symphony for seventy years, is the Berlioz "Requiem." Performed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the Siege of Constantine, Algeria, one hundred and fourteen years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed. Incidentally, this revival of the work will take place a little over six months before the tenth anniversary of occupation of Constantine by troops of the United States and her allies in World War II.

The composer of the "Requiem," Hector Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of the whole of his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Other composers have heaped praises upon it. The modern English critic, Cecil Gray, has said of it: "Berlioz has reared up gigantic pyramids of sound which will endure as long as music itself."

Next Tuesday's performance, 8:30, will be for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund. The intricacies of this stupendous masterpiece were met and conquered by Mr. Munch in 1937, when he conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the seventieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES

APR 19 1951

Boston Symphony Will Pay Tribute to Soldier Heroes

Boston.—The most awe-inspiring music ever performed in memory of soldier heroes will be presented in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and Tuesday evening. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with four bands of brass instruments stationed in the forward ends of balconies, one hundred and twenty choristers from Harvard and Radcliffe, and a tenor soloist, David Lloyd. Orchestra rehearsals are now in progress, and the college singers have been undergoing training by G. Wallace Woodworth for months.

This stupendous composition, so elaborate, that it has remained unplayed by the Boston Symphony for 70 years, is the Berlioz "Requiem." Performed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the Siege of Constantine, Algeria, one hundred and fourteen years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed. Incidentally, this revival of the work will take place a little over six months before the tenth anniversary of occupation of Constantine by troops of the United States and her allies in World War II.

The composer of the "Requiem," Hector Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of the whole of his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Other composers have heaped praises upon it. The modern English critic, Cecil Gray, has said of it: "Berlioz has reared up gigantic pyramids of sound which will endure as long as music itself."

Tuesday's performance (Apr. 24 at 8:30) will be for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The intricacies of this stupendous masterpiece were met and conquered by Mr. Munch in 1937, when he conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the 70th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

APR 20 1951

Third Performance of Berlioz Requiem for Pension Fund Tuesday

There are a total of 228 instrumentalists and singers in the performance of Hector Berlioz' Requiem which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the regular series at Symphony Hall, this afternoon and tomorrow night, and again next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition to full symphonic orchestra and large chorus (in this case the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Berlioz calls for four small brass ensembles, two of four players each and two of five. These miniature brass bands will be stationed at strategic points in the first balcony, two on either side at front near the stage, and two in the rear. The one soloist called for will be David Lloyd, tenor. Charles Munch will conduct.

Composed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the siege of Constantine, Algeria, 114 years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed.

Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of all his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Mr. Munch in 1937 conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the 17th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

APR 20 1951

Third Performance of Berlioz Requiem for Pension Fund Tuesday

There are a total of 228 instrumentalists and singers in the performance of Hector Berlioz' Requiem which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in the regular series at Symphony Hall, this afternoon and tomorrow night, and again next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

In addition to full symphonic orchestra and large chorus (in this case the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth), Berlioz calls for four small brass ensembles, two of four players each and two of five. These miniature brass bands will be stationed at strategic points in the first balcony, two on either side at front near the stage, and two in the rear. The one soloist called for will be David Lloyd, tenor. Charles Munch will conduct.

Composed as a tribute to French officers and soldiers who gave their lives in the siege of Constantine, Algeria, 114 years ago, it has remained one of the most gripping musical memorials ever composed.

Berlioz, said that if he were threatened with the destruction of all his works save one, he would crave mercy for this. Mr. Munch in 1937 conducted it with 600 musicians in the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, on the centennial of its first performance there. His introduction of the work at Symphony Hall will be one of the high points of the 17th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony.

[269]

This Clipping From
GREENFIELD, IND.
REPORTER
APR 18 1951

Opera Artist To Appear Here

Blazer Studio Presents Anna Kaskas Concert

The Le Blazer Studio Club and its group of more than 50 artist sponsors are bringing to Greenfield a rare musical treat when they present Anna Kaskas, a popular contralto artist and leading member of the Metropolitan Opera Association in a concert on the evening of Sunday, April 29th at 8 o'clock in the Bradley Methodist church.

Born in Bridgeport, Conn., of Lithauanian parents, this golden - haired luscious - voiced young artist has built up an enviable career. Brought up in Hartford she started her musical studies at the local conservatory. Her ability attracted the attention of a prominent music lover who financed a trip to Lithuania, the birthplace of her family. At her debut at Kaunas, the President of Lithuania heard her sing and was so impressed he arranged to have the Lithuanian government give her financial assistance to go to Milan, Italy, for two year's further study. Returning to the U. S., Miss Kaskas worked under Enrico Rosati.

Anna Kaskas entered the first Metropolitan "Auditions of the Air" and won a thousand dollars and a contract with the Metropolitan Opera, over 700 aspirants. On the regular roster of the Metropolitan she established herself as a valued and popular member of the company. She has also sung several seasons with the Chicago Opera.

The contralto has appeared repeatedly with the major orchestras of the country, including the New York Philharmonic Symphony, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia and Cleveland orchestras, the Toronto Philharmonic, and with the orchestras of Kansas City, Grand Rapids and Denver. She has been featured at the Worcester and Berkshire Festivals and at Colorado's Central City Opera Festival in the title role of "Orpheus." Radio audiences know her through such programs as Ford, Cocoa Cola, etc.

In concert particularly, Anna Kaskas' personality and voice have made her one of America's favorite singers.

She is an honorary member of the American Legion and of the national musical sorority, Sigma Alpha Iota.

Archie Black, pianist, will accompany Miss Kaskas and will present a group of piano selections during the concert.

There will be no charge for this outstanding program of the club's year and the public is cordially invited and urged to be in attendance.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 23d concert of the 70th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was devoted to Berlioz' Requiem. The soloist was David Lloyd, tenor, the assisting artists the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Among the minor wonders of Boston's musical life is the fact that Hector Berlioz' gigantic Requiem has lain on the shelf for 55 years, the last occasion of its performance here being in 1896 when B. J. Lang and the Cecilia Society gave it for the last time (Lang introduced it in 1882).

The only explanation seems to be that no one, until Charles Munch appeared on the scene, quite dared to do it without the vast forces usually deemed necessary to a proper traversal, which is to say everything from four brass bands to a chorus of six or eight hundred, from 16 timpani to an orchestra of 200 or more. Having long lived with both the music and its tradition, Mr. Munch could, with indisputable authority, mount the Requiem in scale in Symphony Hall. The effect was no less than stunning.

CHORAL FORCES

Employing the choral forces of Harvard and Radcliffe notably trained for the occasion by G. Wallace Woodworth with four- and five-man brass ensembles posted in the first balcony aisles (one at each corner of the hall), Mr. Munch not only produced a mammoth effect from them, but one of doubtless far more musical coherence than could be obtained from larger but more widely dispersed forces. As it happens the fullest instrumentation is called for in only three of the Requiem's 10 sections. To bring them into play for the first time in the antiphonal fanfares of the Dies Irae the conductor turned and faced the audience. Thereafter, in the Rex Tremendae and the Lacrymosa, the brass ensembles, playing with remarkable brightness and majesty of tone, carried out their entrances with marvelous accuracy.

Only once, in the closing moments of the Lacrymosa, did a greater, more powerful choral force seem absolutely necessary to the fullest realization of the work, though it is true the choral aspect, from the point of view of volume alone, was the one weakness of the performance. On the other hand, the singing was marked throughout by extreme accuracy of attack, while the unaccompanied Quarens Me was one of the finest a cappella moments I can bring to mind.

Musically, the Requiem is a strange work, at once theatrical but filled with a curiously effective if unquestionably sophisticated religious fervor; at once bombastic and inflated but filled with a sort of spiritual radiance. Reduced to a piano score its musical contents are slim in the extreme; without the orchestra (which for example, in the Offertorium, conveys the entire musical substance over a constantly reiterated two notes for voices) it is remarkably devoid of substance. Yet throughout there are ideas of extraordinary beauty and moments profoundly moving, as in the devastating Agnus Dei.

Mr. Munch observed a few cuts in the score, omitting only material that repeated itself, as in the Sanctus, where Berlioz wrote a virtual da capo. David Lloyd, in his brief solo in the Sanctus, incidentally, sang beautifully and expressively. The Requiem ran just over an hour and a half with intermission after the Lacrymosa. It will be repeated tonight, of course, and there will be a special repetition next Tuesday night in the annual Pension Fund concert. It can be recommended as a musical experience, no matter what the Requiem's place as a ranking masterwork of musico-religious expression, that cannot help but shake the listener.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

What with brass players blazing away from four points in the first balcony and the stage packed to the last inch with singers and instrumentalists, yesterday's Symphony Concert was something different. The occasion was the first of three performances of the stupendous Requiem of Berlioz, the others being the conventional repetition this evening and a special concert Tuesday night in aid of the pension fund.

Berlioz's Grand Mass for the Dead, commissioned by the French government in 1837, is one of the most famed compositions of the 19th century—and one of the most rarely heard. Written for a colossal array of players and singers (there are 190 of the one and 290 of the other in the Paris premiere) the Requiem can properly be heard only in a huge auditorium, which Symphony Hall is not. At anything but the regular concerts the stage could at least be built out. Nevertheless, Mr. Munch was determined to try it; and the audience's response fully justified his course.

Berlioz wished to have his additional brass choirs (considerably larger than those that functioned yesterday) placed at the four corners of the orchestra. That being out of the question, Mr. Munch stood them in the two aisles at the rear of the first balcony and the two nearest the stage. Berlioz's 16 kettledrums were not in evidence, nor all 12 of his French horns, though we were given to understand that no actual note of the score was missing. The chorus was again drawn from the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and it was as numerous as space permitted, which, for Berlioz's purpose, was not numerous enough. In the softer passages this group accomplished some finished singing. There was a lack of proper volume at times, and the Lacrymosa did not have the hair-raising quality that one finds in the French recording of the work. But since we have not a chance in the world of hearing the Requiem as Berlioz designed it, far better to hear it in its current form than never to hear it at all, which was the prospect before Mr. Munch came on the scene. There was, by the way, a performance from the Cecilian Society in 1882, but I have come across no account of the nature of it.

Berlioz uses his extra brass in two numbers only, the Tuba Mirum and the Rex Tremendae. Afterwards, some of the trombones are heard in the orchestra-proper. Prevailingly, the Requiem is not a noisy piece, and it contains much that is conventionally beautiful in a manner we do not ordinarily associate with its composer. Among such spots are the beginning, the Recordare, the Pie Jesu Domine, the Sanctus and the close. One finds incredible today the statement in Grove's Dictionary that the work is "unchristian in feeling," that it suggests "human sacrifices and blood-curdling rites," that it grips emotion "by the throat" and leaves it "gasping for breath." No such impression was created yesterday. One thought rather of "Aida" raised to a higher power. Most of the rest is just plain nice music, and there is, for Berlioz, an extremely good fugue in the Osanna. Mr. Munch had a little trouble co-ordinating his scattered forces yesterday but things may go better tonight.

MUSIC

Berlioz Requiem Revived By Munch at Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

Yesterday afternoon was a great and historic occasion at Symphony Hall, for it heard the revival by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the Requiem Mass by Hector Berlioz. This vast and beautiful score was introduced to Boston by B. J. Lang and the Cecilia Society in 1882, and until now apparently had not been done here since. By a coincidence that bound past to present, I held on my knees yesterday afternoon the old full score that Mr. Lang had used at those two performances 69 years ago.

Berlioz composed his Requiem (he referred to it as Messe des Morts, or Mass for the Dead) in memory of soldiers who had perished in the service of France. He conducted its first performance at the Hotel des Invalides in Paris in 1837. Berlioz wrote with the sound of heroic forces in his ear, and demanded such large choral and orchestral forces for its performance, that in later years the Requiem came to be regarded, more or less as a freak score touched with megalomania.

But as various perceptive musical scholars have pointed out since, nothing could be farther from the truth. It is a vast work and a superbly original one, from the overall conception of huge design down to the unconventional and distinctive musical phrasing of the Latin words. This Requiem, when the four added brass bands sound in formidable ensemble, may be one of the greatest musical shows on earth, but far more important than that, it is a touching, profound and truly worshipful creation of art.

It shows us a somewhat different side of Berlioz than those of the program symphonies and the overtures, but touches of the Symphonie Fantastique, "Harold in Italy," "Romeo and Juliet" and other works are there, at least in the orchestral detail. It is this very detail and the mastery from which it sprang, that are so impressive. Long since it became standard humorous practice to refer to those German masters of orchestration, Wagner and Strauss, as "Kings Richard I and Richard II." But the emperor who started that royal line was Berlioz, and without him the history of music in the last century would have been quite different.

From the merest wisps of sound to the gigantic fortissimos he envisioned, this Requiem is a gorgeous tissue of colorful sorority, glorious and splendid. For the present performances there is a total of 228 singers and instrumentalists, entirely adequate in view of the size of the hall. The choruses are those of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, admirably prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloist for the Sanctus is David Lloyd, whose lyric but powerful tenor voice, and admirable conception of style, added much to the overwhelming success of the whole.

Conductor Charles Munch places those four extra small brass groups (trumpets, trombones and tubas) in aisles of the first balcony, two groups at each side near the stage, two at the rear. Their sound is stupendous and overwhelming, as near as you are likely to get in this life to an approximation of The Last Trump. The effect is exciting beyond description, adding not only weight of sound but emotional majesty to the words of the Dies Irae, Tuba Mirum and Lachrymosa.

Mr. Munch is first of all a devoted conductor. His performance, likewise, was first of all a dedicated recreation of a masterpiece, as devotional, in a different way, as his presentations of Bach's St. John and St. Matthew Passions and Christmas Oratorio. He has made a few cuts in the Hostias, Sanctus and Agnus Dei. These must have been for reasons of his own, since the total running time was not exceptionally long. There is an intermission between Lachrymosa and Offtaking.

While the youthful choral voices did not provide the weight that older voices would have done, the Harvard and Radcliffe singers did a noble job. The effect of the high sopranos, in octaves, was breathtaking..

[270]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
APR 21 1951

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 23d concert of the 70th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program was devoted to Berlioz' Requiem. The soloist was David Lloyd, tenor, the assisting artists the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor.

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Among the minor wonders of Boston's musical life is the fact that Hector Berlioz' gigantic Requiem has lain on the shelf for 55 years, the last occasion of its performance here being in 1896 when B. J. Lang and the Cecilia Society gave it for the last time (Lang introduced it in 1882).

The only explanation seems to be that no one, until Charles Munch appeared on the scene, quite dared to do it without the vast forces usually deemed necessary to a proper traversal, which is to say everything from four brass bands to a chorus of six or eight hundred, from 16 timpani to an orchestra of 200 or more. Having long lived with both the music and its tradition, Mr. Munch could, with indisputable authority, mount the Requiem in scale in Symphony Hall. The effect was no less than stunning.

CHORAL FORCES

Employing the choral forces of Harvard and Radcliffe notably trained for the occasion by G. Wallace Woodworth with four- and five-man brass ensembles posted in the first balcony aisles (one at each corner of the hall), Mr. Munch not only produced a mammoth effect from them, but one of doubtless far more musical coherence than could be obtained from larger but more widely dispersed forces. As it happens the fullest instrumentation is called for in only three of the Requiem's 10 sections. To bring them into play for the first time in the antiphonal fanfares of the Dies Irae the conductor turned and faced the audience. Thereafter, in the Rex Tremendae and the Lacrymosa, the brass ensembles, playing with remarkable brightness and majesty of tone, carried out their entrances with marvelous accuracy.

Only once, in the closing moments of the Lacrymosa, did a greater, more powerful choral force seem absolutely necessary to the fullest realization of the work, though it is true the choral aspect, from the point of view of volume alone, was the one weakness of the performance. On the other hand, the singing was marked throughout by extreme accuracy of attack, while the unaccompanied Quarens Me was one of the finest a cappella moments I can bring to mind.

Musically, the Requiem is a strange work, at once theatrical but filled with a curiously effective if unquestionably sophisticated religious fervor; at once bombastic and inflated but filled with a sort of spiritual radiance. Reduced to a piano score its musical contents are slim in the extreme; without the orchestra (which for example, in the Offertorium, conveys the entire musical substance over a constantly reiterated two notes for voices) it is remarkably devoid of substance. Yet throughout there are ideas of extraordinary beauty and moments profoundly moving, as in the devastating Agnus Dei.

Mr. Munch observed a few cuts in the score, omitting only material that repeated itself, as in the Sanctus, where Berlioz wrote a virtual da capo. David Lloyd, in his brief solo in the Sanctus, incidentally, sang beautifully and expressively. The Requiem ran just over an hour and a half with intermission after the Lacrymosa. It will be repeated tonight, of course, and there will be a special repetition next Tuesday night in the annual Pension Fund concert. It can be recommended as a musical experience, no matter what the Requiem's place as a ranking masterwork of musico-religious expression, that cannot help but shake the listener.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 21 1951

MUSIC

Berlioz Requiem Revived By Munch at Symphony

By CYRUS DURGIN

Yesterday afternoon was a great and historic occasion at Symphony Hall, for it heard the revival by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the Requiem Mass by Hector Berlioz. This vast and beautiful score was introduced to Boston by B. J. Lang and the Cecilia Society in 1882, and until now apparently had not been done here since. By a coincidence that bound past to present, I held on my knees yesterday afternoon the old full score that Mr. Lang had used at those two performances 69 years ago.

Berlioz composed his Requiem (he referred to it as Messe des Morts, or Mass for the Dead) in memory of soldiers who had perished in the service of France. He conducted its first performance at the Hotel des Invalides in Paris in 1837. Berlioz wrote with the sound of heroic forces in his ear, and demanded such large choral and orchestral forces for its performance, that in later years the Requiem came to be regarded, more or less as a freak score touched with megalomania.

But as various perceptive musical scholars have pointed out since, nothing could be farther from the truth. It is a vast work and a superbly original one, from the overall conception of huge design down to the unconventional and distinctive musical phrasing of the Latin words. This Requiem, when the four added brass bands sound in formidable ensemble, may be one of the greatest musical shows on earth, but far more important than that, it is a touching, profound and truly worshipful creation of art.

It shows us a somewhat different side of Berlioz than those of the program symphonies and the overtures, but touches of the Symphonie Fantastique, "Harold in Italy," "Romeo and Juliet" and other works are there, at least in the orchestral detail. It is this very detail and the mastery from which it sprang, that are so impressive. Long since it became standard humorous practice to refer to those German masters of orchestration, Wagner and Strauss, as "Kings Richard I and Richard II." But the emperor who started that royal line was Berlioz, and without him the history of music in the last century would have been quite different.

From the merest wisps of sound to the gigantic fortissimos he envisioned, this Requiem is a gorgeous tissue of colorful sorority, glorious and splendid. For the present performances there is a total of 228 singers and instrumentalists, entirely adequate in view of the size of the hall. The choruses are those of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, admirably prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloist for the Sanctus is David Lloyd, whose lyric but powerful tenor voice, and admirable conception of style, added much to the overwhelming success of the whole.

Conductor Charles Munch places those four extra small brass groups (trumpets, trombones and tubas) in aisles of the first balcony, two groups at each side near the stage, two at the rear. Their sound is stupendous and overwhelming, as near as you are likely to get in this life to an approximation of The Last Trump. The effect is exciting beyond description, adding not only weight of sound but emotional majesty to the words of the Dies Irae, Tuba Mirum and Lachrymosa.

Mr. Munch is first of all a devoted conductor. His performance, likewise, was first of all a dedicated recreation of a masterpiece, as devotional, in a different way, as his presentations of Bach's St. John and St. Matthew Passions and Christmas Oratorio. He has made a few cuts in the Hostias, Sanctus and Agnus Dei. These must have been for reasons of his own, since the total running time was not exceptionally long. There is an intermission between Lachrymosa and Offtaking.

While the youthful choral voices did not provide the weight that older voices would have done, the Harvard and Radcliffe singers did a noble job. The effect of the high sopranos, in octaves, was breath-taking..

... and Berlioz at Symphony

Requiem Heard in Rare Boston Performance

By Harold Rogers

The Munch-Berlioz combination, greatly in evidence since Charles Munch took over the artistic destinies of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has culminated in a majestic production of the Berlioz Requiem—the "Grande Messe des Morts," Opus 5. With four brass choirs augmenting the orchestra from different points in the first balcony, Symphony Hall reverberated yesterday afternoon like a Gothic cathedral. The performance was the first in Boston in 70 years. It will be repeated tonight and again Tuesday evening for the concert benefiting the Pension Fund.

The 120 voices of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society seemed too few in proportion to the enlarged orchestra. But the Symphony Hall stage could scarcely accommodate another person. The chorus was admirably trained for its duties by G. Wallace Woodworth, its regular conductor. David Lloyd, whose excellent voice has been much in demand at Symphony Hall for the past few seasons, sang the tenor solo for the Sanctus.

* * *

When Berlioz was commissioned by the Minister of Fine Arts of France in 1837 to compose a requiem, he had to invent a musical shorthand in order to capture the ideas that flooded his thought. When the score was completed in three months, the ministry unaccountably canceled the première. Later that year, however, General Damrémont was killed when the French took Constantine in Algeria, and Berlioz was recommissioned to present his Requiem at a memorial service in the Hôtel des Invalides. Berlioz was then 34. One hundred years later Charles Munch conducted the same work in the same place with 600 musicians.

Compared to such an aggregation, the present production is a pocket edition. But when the orchestra, chorus, and four brass choirs unite triple-fortissimo in the Dies Irae, Tuba Mirum, and Lacrymosa, it is possible that Symphony Hall has never contained a more glorious noise.

* * *

The Requiem, however, is not all kettledrums and trombones booming on their pedal tones. Such dramatic outbursts are held to a respectable minimum and serve to heighten the more sublime sections—the heavenly Quarens Me, for instance, sung a capella, or the serene choral phrases in the Rex Tremendae.

In the Dies Irae, when the first great explosion of sound occurred, the audience suddenly found itself face to face with the conductor as he turned to direct the brass choirs. This was a rare experience and an exciting one with a conductor like Mr. Munch. In the agitated Lacrymosa he gave the brass choirs flamboyant cues without turning again to face them. The few times when they weren't exactly together produced a dramatic echoing effect.

The Offertorium came closest to giving a churchly impression with its chant-like iterations on only two notes—A and B-flat. But as Verdi's Requiem is more operatic than sacred in feeling, the Berlioz Requiem is more secular than sacred. Mr. Munch in his Boston revival of this work has climaxed the season with a performance that is sometimes frankly theatrical but more often contemplative and inspiring.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN
APR 21 1951

Requiem of Berlioz Like Crack of Doom

By L. G. GAFFNEY

The last trumpet sounded in Boston yesterday afternoon. It was Doomsday in the Berlioz Requiem, most massive work in music, performed for the first time by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall.

When the appalling words of the Dies Irae reached the Tuba Mirum which describes the Last Judgment Conductor Charles Munch shot his left hand skyward, the signal for four brass bands to bray in the balcony . . . as if from the four corners of the earth.

But this tremendous composition for chorus and orchestra is not intended to stupefy by mere volume of sound. Neither does it fall into the trap of dramatics only, as other famous Requiems.

This Berlioz work remembers its purpose, the Missa Defunctorum, for which it maintains a liturgical connection . . . in spite of its "wild, convulsed, dolorous nature, as denoted by Alfred de Vigny.

First performed as funeral service at the bier of General Damremont in the Church of St. Louis, Paris, 1837, the great Mass had seldom been given with anything like its full scoring until Charles Munch reproduced it on the occasion of its hundredth anniversary in Paris, 1937.

At that time the orchestra and chorus added to 600. Yesterday in Boston, owing to the limitations of the auditorium, the forces were reduced to far less than half. And it is necessary to report further reduction in the vocal department because of the thin substance of the combined Harvard and Radcliffe choruses.

These boys' and girls' voices, though well trained and well matched in the sections, produced but little sonority. The Lacrymosa in particular calls for big, beefy mature tone. It was lacking.

Won't somebody, therefore, please organize a mixed chorus in Boston comparable in volume and distinction to the town's great orchestra? The voices certainly exist here. (One wonders, though, if they would be willing to work with the fervor and intelligence of the Harvard and Radcliffe groups.)

Aware of the shortcoming, Conductor Munch, cut his orchestral garment to fit his vocal cloth. True, the tympani thundered and the four choirs of trumpets and trombones gave their brazen bursts, but the noble statues up over the second deck did not topple.

The "stupendous" nature of the performance as a show, as indicated in the billing —excepting as the music itself addressed the heart and mind. It is indeed "wild and dolorous" and, in consideration of the Berlioz character, uninhibited. To that extent it is "modern"; yet the composer's integrity is so profound, his classical base so solid that the Requiem stands up as music for the ages.

There is a tenor solo in the Sanctus, well sung by David Lloyd, that is heart-rending; an Offertorium of exquisite loveliness, and the Mass ends, as it should in the Agnus Dei, with a hushed plea for the Divine mercy. No theatrics. No "effects."

No doubt about it, the Requiem is Berlioz' unique work of genius—not a trace of his Fantastic Symphony (which also likes the Dies Irae) nor Harold In Italy.

The performance will be repeated tonight and Tuesday evening for the orchestra's Pension Fund. As this is written there are yet a few seats for Tuesday evening.

[271]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 22 1951

RECORDS: OPERATIC

'Carmen' and 'Tales of Hoffmann' Among New Releases Now Available Here

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

COLUMBIA'S new recording of the complete Carmen (three twelve-inch disks) is a smooth, agreeable, satisfying job. It is not perhaps the last word that can be said on this most enchanting and elusive of operas, but it is good enough to merit addition to your collection if you have a weakness for Bizet's masterpiece.

And who has not such a weakness? It may well be that "Carmen" today would outrank all other operas in popularity. It has everything grand opera should have, and in a wholly distinctive combination. The most remarkable thing about "Carmen" is that all elements of the musical public—lowbrow, highbrow and people in the middle—are enormously fond of it.

For its recording Columbia went to the Paris Opéra-Comique, employing its chorus, orchestra, conductor and leading singers as well as its traditions of performance. Thus there is use of spoken dialogue, which is preferable to recitative. There is also a sense of a living performance in this recording; it is as though stage noises have been incorporated to make one feel one is in a theatre.

The cast is thoroughly competent. Solange Michel as Carmen, Raoul Jobin as Don José, Michel Dens as Escamillo and Marthe Angelici as Micaëla sing with warm feeling, and André Cluytens conducts skillfully. The voices may not be great ones, but it is more important that the flavor of the opera is conveyed.

From Sound Track

Another opera that has been done handsomely is Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann (London, three twelve-inch disks). This recording has been taken from the sound track of film production now showing in town, and it is brilliantly played under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham. The singing in English is fine, with Robert Rounseville as the Hoffmann; Bruce Dargavel as the Lindorf, Coppelius, Dapertutto and Miracle; Dorothy Bond as Olympia; Margherita Grandi as Giulietta; Ann Ayars as Antonia and Monica Sinclair as Nicklausse.

Where "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann" are recurrent in our opera repertories, Puccini's Girl of the Golden West is not. It is easy to see why an audience today, especially in this country, would find it hard to take seriously this Italian version of wild West corn. The opera is not even first-rate Puccini, but it has moments. The whole piece is available in a good recording (Cetra-Soria, three twelve-inch disks) with Carla Gavazzi as Minnie, Vasco Campagnano as Dick Johnson and Ugo Savarese as Jack Rance and with Arturo Basile conducting.

A new version of Cinderella, using music from Prokofieff's charming ballet score and a text by Leo Israel, has been put out by Children's Record Guild (two 78 r. p. m. disks). Meant primarily for children, it should prove pleasant listening even for grown-ups. Richard Mohaupt conducts, and Norman Rose is the narrator. It is the music that gives special quality to this recording.

From the Past

In the first releases of its "Treasury of Immortal Performances" Victor went back to the singing stars of another generation. In its second batch it turns to the instrumentalists. The company knows that it can do better technical work with its recordings today, but it knows also that some of the most memorable performances in its catalogue cannot be duplicated.

Sergei Rachmaninoff is dead, but his performances of his own works should be available on long-playing disks. In these reissues you will hear him playing his Concerto No. 2, with Leopold Stokowski conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Concerto No. 4, with Eugene Ormandy conducting the same orchestra.

Emanuel Feuermann, who was an outstanding 'cellist and chamber music performer, is also dead. You can hear him with Jascha Heifetz and Artur Rubinstein in a series of performances in which violin, piano and 'cello are much better balanced than in the latest recordings by Heifetz, Rubinstein and Gregor Piatigorsky. The reissues include Mozart's Divertimento in E flat (K. 563); Beethoven's Trio in B flat, Op. 97 (the Archduke); Schubert's Trio in B flat, Op. 99; Brahms' Trio in B, Op. 8. Mr. Feuermann is also to be heard in the Brahms Double Concerto with Heifetz and the Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy.

Arturo Toscanini is 84, and he has not been recording much of late. He began a new version of Beethoven's Seventh symphony a few years ago, blew up because something went wrong at the start and abandoned the project. Yet his conception of this work is so extraordinary it must be kept alive in the catalogues, and Victor has now reissued his 1936 performance with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony.

It has also reissued his performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G, with the NBC Symphony; the Tchaikovsky B flat minor Concerto, with Vladimir Horowitz as the pianist; the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Heifetz; and the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 3, with Rubinstein, which was taken off the air in a 1944 broadcast.

The two remaining reissues we have heard are the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 5 (the Emperor), with Artur Schnabel as the brilliant pianist and Frederick Stock leading the Chicago Orchestra, and Prokofieff's Concerto No. 2, in G minor, with Heifetz, the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky.

Some of the reissues have emerged remarkably vibrant in sound in the course of reprocessing; a few show their age and the difficulties of transferrence from the old masters. On the whole, they constitute an invaluable revival of great performances.

OTHER REVIEWS

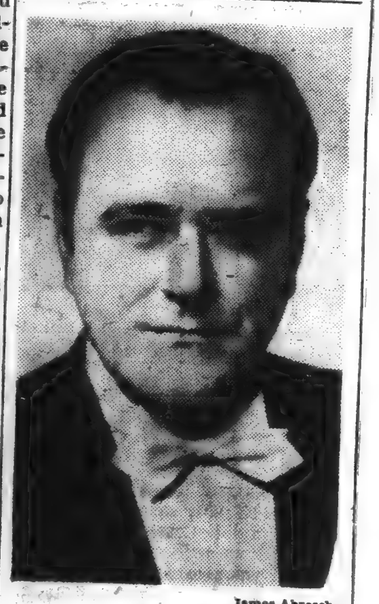
A pair of Mozart concertos have been released on one disk by Mercury. On one side Margaret Knittel and the Bavarian Radio Orchestra conducted by Rudolf Albert play the Concerto No. 12 in A (K. 414); on the reverse, Heinz Schroeter and Hans Altmann, with the same orchestra, are heard in the Two-Piano Concerto in E flat (K. 365). No conductor's name is given for the latter.

Miss Knittel, unknown in this country, appears to be a competent, musical pianist, and there is little in her playing of the fine, not often heard, Concerto in A that one could take exception to. The Two-Piano Concerto receives a spirited but rather rough-and-ready performance, with loose ends flapping here and there. In both cases the recording is a little shrill, necessitating a reduction of the highs.

Westminster has recorded Clara Haskil and the Winterthur Symphony conducted by Henry Swoboda in Beethoven's C minor Piano Concerto. Here the orchestra accompaniment is a little thin; and while Miss Haskil plays in a perfectly acceptable manner—much better than in her prior Westminster recording of a pair of Mozart concertos—the recent Backhaus interpretation (on London) is better.

Westminster has taken two of its talented young pianists, Paul Badura-Skoda and Joerg Demus—and paired them in a group of Mozart four-hand music—the Sonatas in B flat (K.358), D (K.381) and G (K.357). None of these, apparently, has ever been recorded before. Two of them, the Sonatas in B flat and D, are well known to amateur duettists; they are easy to play and charming in sound. The Sonata in G is a rarity—a two-movement fragment consisting of an Allegro and Andante, not included in the standard Peters edition of Mozart's four-hand music. It too is a lightweight piece, but in the slow movement there suddenly emerges a glorious theme that can match any Mozart inspiration for depth and sheer loveliness. There is some amusing rhythmic by-play, too, where Mozart stops and starts abruptly, evidently having a good time purposely throwing his listeners off balance. Good recording and excellent, easy-going performances from Demus and Badura-Skoda, a pair of pianists who think alike on musical particulars.

H. C. S.



James Abresch
Raoul Jobin.

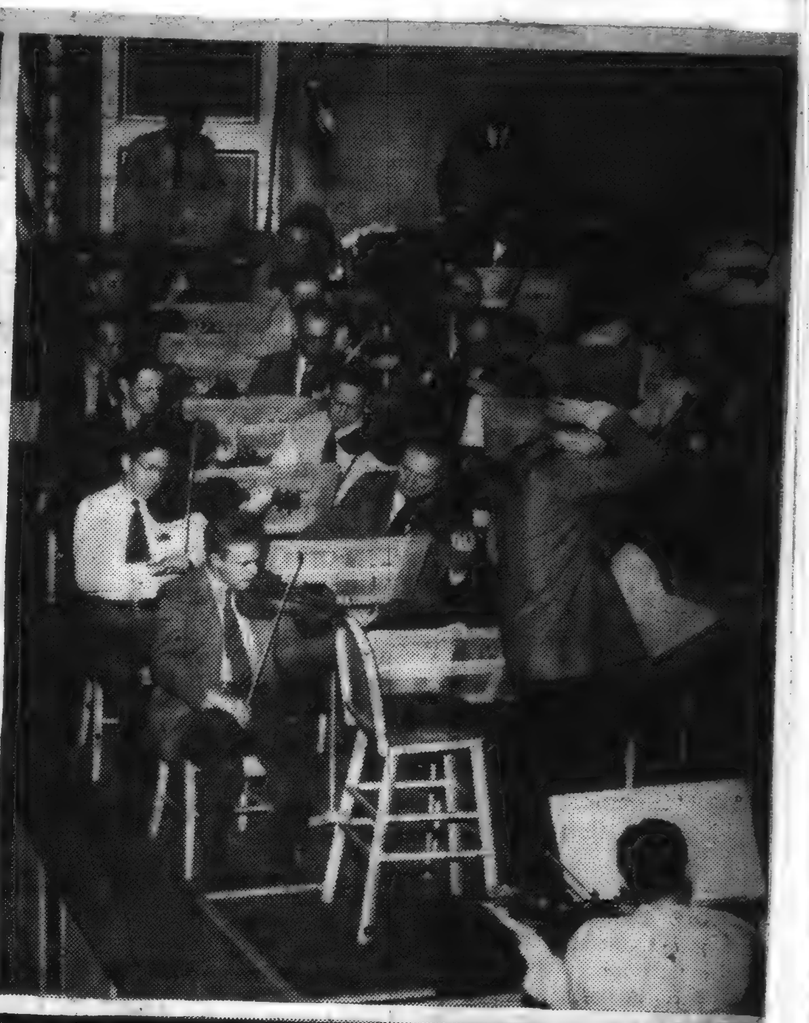
Pergolesi

Recent releases from London range widely over the repertory. Nearly all are of high technical quality and preferences will depend on musical tastes. One listener's pick of a current batch is the twelve-inch disk made by the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, under Karl Muenchinger that has Pergolesi's Concertino in F minor on one side and, on the reverse, the third of the suites for string orchestra that Resphigi made from Ancient Airs and Dances.

For admirers of Wagner there is an excellent ten-inch disk made by Hans Knappertsbusch and the Vienna Philharmonic. The Rienzi Overture is given a good performance, but the more choice selection is the Forest Murmurs excerpt with Franz Lechleitner, a fine German tenor, singing the part of Siegfried.

Stravinsky admirers will be grateful for the recording of the Firebird Suite that Ernest Ansermet has made with the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande. And those who like Franck's Sonata for Violin and Piano have a good choice in the performance of it by Lola Bobesco and Jacques Genty. Both works are on ten-inch disks. R. P.

April 23, 1951



GIGANTIC REHEARSAL—These photos were taken as Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rehearsed the orchestra, the Harvard and Radcliffe Glee Clubs and four brass choirs in Berlioz's Requiem, to be performed at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 8:30. For the benefit of the Orchestra's pension fund. Upper right photo shows Munch leading the orchestra and giving a cue over his head to one of the four brass choirs stationed in the balconies (upper left). Lower photo shows Munch rehearsing the glee clubs. The Requiem is one of the most complex works in music.

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
APR 26 1951

Male Quartet To Be Heard Here Sunday

Lovers of music of Greater Lynn will be afforded a treat Sunday when "The Vesper Singers," a nationally known male quartet, present a concert program in First Methodist Church, at 4 PM, under sponsorship of the Women's Society of Christian Service of the parish.

The program will range from the classics of grand opera to the popular compositions of the best of our modern day composers.

Gene Cox, tenor, is a member of Boris Goldovsky's New England Opera Theatre and John Patterson, tenor, was the winner of the singing competition held by the Southeastern Federation of Women's Clubs.

Richard Riddell, baritone, was a member of the Denver Grand Opera Company and sang the leading roles for two seasons. Robert Griffin, bass, has been guest soloist with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra and was the only bass soloist out of 550 contestants to win the Arthur Fiedler artists audition.

Earl Weidner, accompanist and arranger for the quartet, is organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pop concerts, as well as organist at the "Cathedral of the Pines" in New Hampshire.

All lovers of good music are welcome to attend the concert at which a free will offering will be made.

This Clipping From NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN
APR 26 1951

TO USE VIOLIN
THAT IS 197 YEARS OLD

When Miss Marylyn Crittendon steps on the stage at the Noank school Friday, April 27, in the presentation of a concert she will be using a violin that is 197 years old. The instrument, a valuable collector's item, is now owned by George Zazofsky, a violinist with the Boston symphony orchestra. A friends of Miss Crittendon, Zazofsky heard of the difficulties which she was having with her own instrument and offered her the use of his. He is scheduled to make his appearance at the affair. It will be the first time that the violin has been used by another artist other than Zazofsky since he gained possession of the treasure.

Guadagnini was a pupil of the renowned violin maker, Antonio Stradivari.

Mrs. Frank R. Aikin, Jr., concert committee chairman, announced that other distinguished guests will include Dr. Alexander Leslie, conductor of the Springfield (Mass.) Symphony orchestra.

The concert committee is composed of Mrs. Ambrose Burfoot, Mrs O. E. Liebeg, Miss Katrina Gesner Mrs. Robert E. Burnett, Mrs. Luason H. Clarke, Mrs. Alice S. Lambert, Mrs. William Butler and Mrs Adelaide Waugh.

[272]

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, gave the 24th concert of the 70th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Architetture ..... Ghedini
Symphony No. 4 in C minor .... Schubert
Symphony No. 2 in D, Op. 73 .... Brahms

By RUDOLPH ELIE

It is always an occasion of mingled surprise and regret when the symphony concerts come to an end; surprise that another season has slipped by so quickly, and regret that these inimitable ceremonies will cease, for the time being, to give musical meaning and punctuation to the passing weeks. And yesterday's finale was memorable enough to make the loss even more acute.

The program, for one thing, had a special interest of its own. There was a striking new work by a composer unknown to us, a striking old work by a composer long familiar to us all, and a long established, though lesser, favorite of the standard repertoire in, it might be added, an unfamiliar interpretation.

TYPICAL EXAMPLE

The new work was by Giorgio Ghedini, a contemporary Italian who, if this is a typical example of his music, clearly stands out as a man with a very powerful musical inspiration. Its title, "Architeture," would seem to refer to the Latin definition of the word meaning "the act of building" rather than to a pictorial representation of, say, the monument to Victor Emmanuel II. He has thus built an original musical structure suggesting (but by no means resembling) the theme and variations.

In this case there are seven brief sections all developing naturally from an initial musical statement that contains all the vivacity and strength (and, in contemporary idiom, even the sound) of an orchestral tutti of Vivaldi. Termed a concerto for orchestra, the piece uses the various choirs, including a piano, as massed units contending one against the other rather than as a single soloist against the orchestra. This effect, exploited both more fully and more successfully by Bartok, is always arresting, and Ghedini's handling of the orchestra is striking throughout. The musical materials are advanced but by no means unmelodic, and the textures, though often highlighted by dissonant tensions, are sharp and well defined. I would say that it is, in short, a fine occasional piece put together by skilled hands and informed with urgency and vigor.

Why Schubert's C minor Symphony ever earned the sub-title "Tragic" is incomprehensible. Here is a symphony of the sheerest sunlight, a gay, happy, purely musical affair without any dark- or emotional significance whatever. He wrote it for an amateur orchestra, in which he played the viola, and if that orchestra ever played it, neither Schubert nor any one else ever bothered to note the fact.

FINELY GRAINED

It is the opening bars, however, that have since given this symphony its sub-title, though they are no more "tragic" than the similar adagio introductions to countless Haydn symphonies. After that, with the conventional bustle of the first movement, the sentiment of the andante, the charm of the minuet and the fine whirling vivacity of the finale, it is marvelously unpretentious. Mr. Munch, who has a way with Schubert, gave it a brilliant but finely grained performance, the orchestra performing with a bravura that would have doubtless staggered Schubert, who quite possibly never imagined, as he sawed away at the viola part back in 1816, that it would ever sound like this.

It would be easy enough to take issue with Mr. Munch's reading of the Brahms Second, however, for the Brahms' performance tradition remains alive, and I doubt it that tradition would accept the tempo or the driving tensions of the finale. On the other hand, in a work that finds Brahms somewhat below par, and which would hardly make its way in a strictly Germanic fashion combining severity with sentimentality, Mr. Munch gave it a refreshing character to say the least. The orchestra, pressed to the last bar, gave its considerable all to bring down an ovation for all concerned at the end. It was, in fine, a triumphant conclusion to a splendid season, and as Mr. Munch flies back to Paris next week I believe I speak for all of us in wishing him bon voyage, a pleasant summer and a happy return home in October.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 28 1951

Schubert, Brahms Close Boston Symphony Season

Special to The Hartford Times

Boston—The Boston Symphony performed its last ~~regular Friday~~ afternoon concert of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday. Charles Munch chose two old favorites with which to close his year —the Fourth Symphony of Schubert and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

This is the sort of stuff the Symphony plays so very well, and after the programs of modern fare, which Mr. Munch has presented pretty regularly during the season, Schubert and Brahms are still mighty grand old friends.

* * *

TECHNICALLY, the orchestra has maintained a fairly constant pace over the course of the winter after a somewhat shaky start, a condition no doubt aggravated by the new tonal structure of the orchestra, caused by the much-discussed seating arrangement. The playing the group has more or less set a norm for itself.

This last concert, although of a wholly classic nature, was nonetheless an inspiring one. Mr. Munch is a fine interpreter of the modern music we hear so much of these days, but it is good to have him back with the old masters occasionally. It was refreshing and his audience gave him a real send-off ovation, which was quite in keeping, really, since Mr. Munch probably will be sailing for Paris very soon for his summer vacation.

He will, of course, be back with the Boston Symphony next year, and deservedly so. More than ever before, there is a dearth of great conductors. Who will take the places of the present incumbents, leaves much food for thought.

* * *

THESE TWO YEARS under Charles Munch have seemed strangely at pull with one another. The feeling of change comes rather with a summing up of the whole than the listening of a concert or two.

The first year was full of the bubbling and enthusiastic effervesance which often accompanies a chance in routine. This year brought with it the consequent toning down of the first bursts of freedom from the old grind. Perhaps for the first months the orchestra was more or less playing itself. Now the transition from the old regime to the new is completed and Mr. Munch is free now to take it from here.

Charles Munch has few equals as a conductor and he and the Symphony have just completed a good year. Next year is sure to be an interesting one.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE
APR 28 1951

MUSIC

Munch Conducts Ghedini, Schubert and Brahms at Final Symphony Concerts

By CYRUS DURGIN

The concerts this week by the Boston Symphony are the last of the Orchestra's 70th season, and of the second season of Charles Munch as music director. They begin with "Architecture," by Giorgio Federico Ghedini, and include Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Ghedini's piece is new to Boston, though composed in 1940. It is an orchestral concerto, abstract and mechanistic, whose long single movement exhibits the various sections of the orchestra, combines some of them and ends its course in about 20 energetic minutes. When it is over you realize you have heard some carefully organized and prevailingly dissonant music, very cool, very academic. Perhaps you may wonder what all the tooting is about, but you won't wonder very long.

The present trends of musical composition are internationalizing contemporary music. That is, they are internationalizing it in the sense that a good deal of the current product (and, of course, as far back as 20 years or more) sounds pretty much alike. Certainly those pieces of less than first rank sound alike, and Ghedini's "Architteture" is one of them. He is an Italian, but you would never know it from this pie-e. These technical procedures now in vogue rob music of even its national flavor, to say nothing of the composer's own individuality, unless the creator is a top notch artist. A Prokofieff, a Diamond, a Piston, a Honegger or a Milhaud will leave his own stamp on his work, and he will triumph over the impersonalities of these procedures. But not a Ghedini.

Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, which is his No. 4, and in C minor, had been played only twice before in the history of this orchestra, by Pierre Monteux in 1921, and by Koussevitzky during the Schubert Centenary of 1928. It is a charming score, admirably wrought, and not so darkly emotional as the popular title might suggest.

Mr. Munch's performance of it is a superlative demonstration of how intimately this conductor knows the Schubert style. It does not sound like Beethoven, but like Schubert, in the gentle tracing of the phrases, the firm but subtle accents, and the delicate balance between melody and supporting harmony. Now that Mr. Munch has rediscovered it, let us hope it will turn up again on these programs.

Mr. Munch had not presented Brahms' D major Symphony here before. His reading of it is quite different from what we had been accustomed to before his advent. I think all the tempi are a little faster, which is to the good, and the dominant characteristic is an unfailing maintenance of the "long rhythmic line." A good deal of Brahms, by its own nature, can sound episodic, but Mr. Munch takes a broader view, and this "long line" gives the music a finer sense of continuity.

The Munch reading, further, is one of extreme clarity: dozens of orchestral details can be noted, the texture is always open and the individual voices are plainly to be heard. Now and again there was a sense of hurry in the first and last movements, but not to any important detriment of the Symphony.

Mr. Munch ends his second season with as much popular favor and musicianly respect, as when he came. He has kept the orchestra at the peak of its capabilities, and his programs have widened our local horizons. We say au revoir to him with content, because we know he will return.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 28 1951

MUSIC

Munch Conducts Ghedini, Schubert and Brahms at Final Symphony Concerts

The concerts this week by the Boston Symphony are the last of the Orchestra's 70th season, and of the second season of Charles Munch as music director. They begin with "Architecture," by Giorgio Federico Ghedini, and include Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Ghedini's piece is new to Boston, though composed in 1940. It is an orchestral concerto, abstract and mechanistic, whose long single movement exhibits the various sections of the orchestra, combines some of them and ends its course in about 20 energetic minutes. When it is over you realize you have heard some carefully organized and prevailingly dissonant music, very cool, very academic. Perhaps you may wonder what all the tooting is about, but you won't wonder very long.

The present trends of musical composition are internationalizing contemporary music. That is, they are internationalizing it in the sense that a good deal of the current product (and, of course, as far back as 20 years or more) sounds pretty much alike. Certainly those pieces of less than first rank sound alike, and Ghedini's "Architteture" is one of them. He is an Italian, but you would never know it from this piece. These technical procedures now in vogue rob music of even its national flavor, to say nothing of the composer's own individuality, unless the creator is a top notch artist. A Prokofieff, a Diamond, a Piston, a Honegger or a Milhaud will leave his own stamp on his work, and he will triumph over the impersonalities of these procedures. But not a Ghedini.

Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony, which is his No. 4, and in C minor, had been played only twice before in the history of this orchestra, by Pierre Monteux in 1921, and by Koussevitzky during the Schubert Centenary of 1928. It is a charming score, admirably wrought, and not so darkly emotional as the popular title might suggest.

Mr. Munch's performance of it is a superlative demonstration of how intimately this conductor knows the Schubert style. It does not sound like Beethoven, but like Schubert, in the gentle tracing of the phrases, the firm but subtle accents, and the delicate balance between melody and supporting harmony. Now that Mr. Munch has rediscovered it, let us hope it will turn up again on these programs.

Mr. Munch had not presented Brahms' D major Symphony here before. His reading of it is quite different from what we had been accustomed to before his advent. I think all the tempi are a little faster, which is to the good, and the dominant characteristic is an unfailing maintenance of the "long rhythmic line." A good deal of Brahms, by its own nature, can sound episodic, but Mr. Munch takes a broader view, and this "long line" gives the music a finer sense of continuity.

The Munch reading, further, is one of extreme clarity: dozens of orchestral details can be noted, the texture is always open and the individual voices are plainly to be heard. Now and again there was a sense of hurry in the first and last movements, but not to any important detriment of the Symphony.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 28 1951

HONORED BY FRENCH GOVERNMENT—Harrison Keller, director of the New England Conservatory of Music (center), was decorated with the Croix de Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At left, Albert Chambon, Consul General of France in Boston.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

In yesterday's Symphony Concert, Charles Munch, who rejoins the orchestra in August to take over the first two weeks of the Berkshire Festival, fully revealed himself as conductor. We had an example of his consistent interest in new music (Ghedini's "Architeture"), of his interest in neglected music of the past (the Fourth, or "Tragic" Symphony of Schubert), his devotion to the standard classics (the Second Symphony of Brahms).

In Ghedini's Concerto for orchestra that introduced to Symphony Hall the 58-year-old Italian he showed his feeling for contemporary music and the same scrupulous care in conducting it that we observed in Koussevitzky. In the youthful Symphony of Schubert, unheard at the Hall since 1928, he showed us again how beautifully he can interpret certain compositions and how beautifully he can cause them to be played by the men of the orchestra.

And in the Symphony of Brahms he revealed again his tendency to go to extremes, to whip music up to an unwarranted degrees, to distort it and thus transform the composer's personality. It happened earlier in the season with the Symphony of Franck. And it must be said that in both instances the audience went for this misinterpretation in a big way. Mr. Munch was not able to finish the frenzied version of the coda of the Brahms before the equally frantic applauding began, and it was a long time before the bulk of the audience was content to depart. For American listeners, one fears, nothing can ever be too loud or too fast.

As a matter of fact, the little third movement went very well, but the first and second were marred by violent changes in mood, and the finale went all right until the coda when Mr. Munch really cut loose.

Though the subtitle was his own, the 19-year-old Schubert could not be "tragic" for very long at a time. That was to come later. Only in the introduction to the first movement, and here and there in the rather Beethovenish Allegro that follows, does this piece live up to its title, though Schubert tries to recapture the mood in the finale. The Minuet, incidentally, is not without a suggestion of Haydn, while the finale contains an amusing reminder of Rossini, who cut quite a figure in the Vienna of 1816. The Andante, however, is pure Schubert. And, with all its inconsistencies of style and its immaturities, the Symphony is a joy to hear, particularly in so polished and sympathetic a performance as that of yesterday.

If Ghedini's name is new to Symphony Hall, it was not wholly new to the concerts of our orchestra, since Victor de Sabata conducted his "Pezzo Concertante" at last summer's Berkshire Festival. The Concerto of this week is interesting but hardly outstanding, save in the fifth section, the molto lento expressivo, with, to quote Mr. Burk's notes, its "melody for violin solo with soft sustaining chords for the muted strings and piano." Richard Burgin played this solo handsomely and Bernard Zighera shone in his performance of the obligato part for piano. The piece closes sonorously and it got a very good hand.

Pops Opening—Symphony Closes

OPEN REHEARSALS HAVE proven popular and worthwhile at Symphony hall, enabling hundreds of students and others to see and hear the Boston Symphony orchestra. Those who attended the open rehearsals (on five Thursday evenings, one a month) had the privilege of seeing the musicians preparing themselves for regular concerts. At best they were inspired and reached heights of artistic expression, under the leadership of Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra. At worst—but interesting, nevertheless—the conductor kept stopping the music and requiring the players to repeat passages in accordance with his wishes.

AT THE LAST of the season's open rehearsals, works by Ghedini, Schubert and Brahms were practiced. Ghedini's spirited passages exemplified a wild discipline. The Schubert Fourth Symphony was lovely in its harmonies and melodic phrases. Mr. Munch worked the musicians hard. He urged them on with violent gestures and maneuverings of his whole body. He pleaded with his fingertips and hands. He commanded with his arms and athletic shoulders. He stopped the orchestra and pointed meaningfully at sections and individuals, then encouraged the players to give out as he wished.

IT IS TRUE to say that an orchestra conductor constitutes a show in himself with his hand and arm movements and his torso convolutions and nodding and shaking of the head. Yet it is true that Charles Munch does command attention not only of his musicians but of the audience. He is extraordinarily active, even violent, in the course of his conducting. There is obvious reason for his athletic shoulders. Sometimes he seems to exude physical force that brings out the timing and volume and interpretations he wants. "Sing it!" he seems to say in gestures, and the musicians make their tones sing wonderfully. He steps down from the podium now and then to lead violinists and woodwinds. He builds the strings into downright majesty,—an attribute sometimes astonishing in view of the variety of violinists' personalities.

VIOLINISTS CHARACTERIZE THE orchestra. Individually they appear to be characters, ranging from an oldtimer who sits back in a psuedo-relaxed position and saws away impeccably, to a man of Scandinavian appearance who looks more like an athlete than a musician. There are neatly clad men who look as though they might be bankers or office managers, and who tend to business and give the conductor what he demands. There are men in shirtsleeves and sport coats (at rehearsals) who look as though they might be bookkeepers. Some sit stiffly, some lounge and cross their legs and twist their feet around the legs of their chairs. Their individualities are at the same time accentuated and subdued in the magic of the music.

WORKDAY CARES FADE into insignificance. Troubles of the family and the world pale as the music sounds in Symphony hall. For the time being the important thing in the world is the making of great music. The conductor and the musicians know this, and the audience gets an insight into the matter. There is no doubt left after a half hour of rehearsal. Let's get the composer's spirit, enhanced by the conductor's interpretation and enriched by the individual expressions. Come, now, this is the way it should go—you hear? Play it . . . listen. This is a precious moment. Live it to the full. . .

SUDDENLY THE REHEARSAL is over and the audience, prominently youthful, applauds with real vigor rather than New England reserve. Cries of "Bravo!" are heard. Mr. Munch bows gratefully and motions the players up. An ancient and honorable institution is demonstrated as a vital force in our culture. The Boston Symphony is appreciated by new music lovers, who determine to continue their patronage, and note that the yearly activities of the orchestra include the regular concerts on 24 Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, six Sunday afternoons and nine Tuesday evenings, between October and April. The orchestra gives occasional pension fund concerts, tours mid-western cities early in the season and makes five week-long tours. In May and June come the Pops, with Arthur Fiedler conducting and refreshments served. During July the orchestra gives concerts free at the Hatch Memorial shell on the Charles river embankment, just off Beacon street. In July and August comes the Berkshire festival, which attracts 100,000 listeners in a season.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY has widened its popularity in recent years by the making of RCA Victor records and by NBC radio programs, including rehearsal sessions on Sundays and Pops concerts Monday evenings. Records and broadcasts are fine, but there is no real substitute for seeing the men on the stage, wrestling with the music and emerging triumphant, performing the notable feat of being human individualists and cogs in a beauty-producing machine at the same time.

MUSIC

Our Critic's Report for the Week

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With last evening's concert, the Boston Symphony Orchestra completed its 70th season and its second under the direction of Charles Munch. We are already taking the Alsation conductor quite for granted. It seems more certain than ever that he was the one to take Koussevitzky's place; and his hold on the public is now secure. Dimitri Mitropoulos is undoubtedly the most brilliant leader now regularly in charge of an orchestra, but New York is the place for him. Imagine Boston going for such things as his concert versions of radical operas, from "Elektra" to "Wozzeck," or providing the array of outstanding vocal talent that they require.

* * *

If Mr. Munch's programs were on the whole a little less interesting than those of last season, it is partly because he had put his best foot forward then. He has also made the wise provision of not repeating in any season that which he had played in the one before. However, in the case of Brahms' Second Symphony, done here last year by Leonard Bernstein, he did not refrain from repeating a work conducted by another. No doubt such concession to Boston's inordinate love for Brahms, was excusable, though his Second Symphony is one piece that could stand a bit of a rest.

* * *

When Koussevitzky found that something went over big, no matter how many times he played it, he followed the line of least resistance. Coming back as guest this year, he gave us again the Sibelius Second and Fifth and the Brahms First. The Third, which he conducted so eloquently at a Tuesday concert, has not been as much in evidence locally as the other three, and sounds all the better for that reason.

* * *

Whereas last season we had 81 works by 49 composers (and the year before one less on each count), in the season just ended, still speaking of the Friday-Saturday series, 44 composers were represented by 73 compositions. The reason for this smaller number was that we had fewer short pieces and more of concert-length. The last-named were the Christmas Oratorio and St. Matthew Passion of Bach and, the most dramatic event of the season, the vast Requiem of Berlioz, with its four groups of brass players stationed in the first balcony simply because there was no room for them anywhere else. This was indeed very much of a choral season, since we also had the G major Mass of Schubert and, from Koussevitzky, Barraud's "Mystery of the Holy Innocents," given for the first time in America. A well-contrived piece, it still hardly seemed worth the trouble its preparation entailed. The Berlioz, the Bach works, and the little Schubert were definitely worthwhile. The Christmas Oratorio, pushed into the background by Handel's "Messiah," might be made an annual event, and Mr. Munch's idea of giving one of the Bach Passions on Good Friday is an excellent one. But why must these partly Biblical pieces be sung in German? Here, certainly, the advantage of using the original text do not outweigh the loss in meaning to the listeners.

* * *

Three actual first performances were those of Diamond's Third Symphony, Honegger's Fifth and Nabokov's "La Vita Nuova," after Dante, with soprano and tenor soloists. The Diamond proved of slight consequence, the Nabokov was at least different and distinctive, and Honegger's Symphony, though vital and compelling, still did not measure up to his Prelude, Fugue and Postlude, one of the season's local novelties. In all, 19 works, old and new, were added to the repertory, a goodly proportion of the whole, and there were some interesting revivals, notably that of Dvorak's charming Fourth Symphony, unheard at the Symphony concerts since 1892. The outstanding new piece was the Prokofieff Sixth, the work which so unaccountably got him in wrong with the Russian authorities.

* * *

Some notable soloists were introduced to us at these concerts: the pianists, Clifford Curzon and Aldo Ciccolini; the cellist, Pierre Fournier, and the soprano, Suzanne Danco, while one or the other of the shorter series brought to us an extremely gifted violinist, Michele Auclair, and a pleasing pianist, Joseph Battista.

* * *

A high spot of the season, much discussed here, was Pierre Monteux's definitive performance of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre de Printemps," and that conductor's old friends rejoiced to see him once more at the head of the orchestra to which he rendered such conspicuous service. French music again loomed relatively large, with 19 works by 13 composers. The Russians, including the expatriots Stravinsky and Nabokov, were again much less in evidence than in the Koussevitzky days; five composers represented by as many works. This change of emphasis makes for agreeable variety, and Mr. Munch by no means neglects the Germans and Austrians. The lion's share of the repertory is still theirs. For native Americans we had Barber, Copland, Diamond and Peter Mennin, a new and welcome name at the Symphony Concerts. And Mr. Munch being Mr. Munch, we can now start wondering what pleasures are in store for us next season.

* * *

Munch Gives Exhilarating Reading of Brahms Second

By Harold Rogers

For the last Boston Symphony concerts of the season Charles Munch has programmed Ghedini's "Architetture," Schubert's Symphony No. 4, and—as Brahms is almost traditionally the composer to end seasons with—the Brahms Symphony No. 2. The Ghedini was a Boston first, the Schubert was heard for the first time since 1928, and the Brahms, of course, is perennial.

Giorgio Federico Ghedini, director of the conservatory in Milan, completed his "Architectures," a concerto for orchestra, in 1940. The architecture involved is apparently more literal than musical. The seven connected sections are almost obvious in their presentation of big-city moods, sometimes mechanistic, always urban, and uneven in quality of inspiration. Some trite figures are monotonously repeated. Other sections, however, are poetically lyrical, and the effect obtained by contrasting blasts from the brass with progressions for muted strings is strongly dramatic. During the applause that followed, Mr. Munch shook hands with Bernard Zighera, whose performance of the piano obbligato was especially delicate and crisp.

Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony in C minor, written when he was 19, is one of those inspired and flawless scores that should not suffer such neglect. Patterned closely on classical models, it does not speak with the expansive freedom of the "Great" C major, nor does it have the more startling harmonic treatment that began to appear in the Fifth. But it is filled with Schubert's genius for melody, especially in the lovely Andante that sings a song of longing, interspersed with phrases of agitation. Mr. Munch heightened the crystalline nature of this music with the polish of his accurate technique.

After the intermission yesterday afternoon Mr. Munch continued to provide a prismatic performance—this time of the Brahms Second. He delineated the subtleties of this idyllic symphony in sharp contrasts of brilliant color. By tightening the tempo of the dancing finale (and who can tighten a tempo better than Mr. Munch?), he brought the concert—and his second season in Symphony Hall—to an exhilarating climax and conclusion.

On Sunday Mr. Munch will leave for France and will fill a series of summer engagements in Europe. He will return to the United States by July 26, when he is scheduled to conduct the first concerts of the summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood Shed. This will mark Mr. Munch's first appearance at the Berkshire Music Festival.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
SUNDAY TIMES
APR 29 1951

List Three Symphony Concerts In Rutgers '51-'52 Programs

Three of the nation's best known symphony orchestras will perform on the Rutgers University campus here during the 1951-1952 concert season it was revealed today as Dr. Howard D. McKinney, chairman of the music department, announced the schedule for the 36th annual Rutgers concert series.

The state university series will open on Tuesday, November 6, with the appearance of the Philadelphia Orchestra under the baton of its famous conductor, Eugene Ormandy.

An unusual musical organization, combining some of the qualities of a chamber music ensemble with those of a larger group, will come here for the second concert on January 7, 1952. This is the Virtuosi di Roma, 14 selected soloists who likewise play as an ensemble. This unit came to the United States for the first time last year. Ronato Fasano is the conductor.

The Boston Symphony which has appeared on the Rutgers concert stage more times than any other musical group will return for its 16th visit, February 12. Charles Munch will conduct.

The March 20 concert will present the English pianist, Clifford Curzon, and the series will be concluded on April 17 when Eric Leinsdorf conducts the Rochester Orchestra in a concert with the Rutgers University Choir and Leslie Chabay, former Metropolitan tenor. The orchestra, choir and Chabay will join the presentation of Kodaly's "Psalmus Hungericus."

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
POST
APR 29 1951

MUSIC

Our Critic's Report for the Week

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With last evening's concert, the Boston Symphony Orchestra completed its 70th season and its second under the direction of Charles Munch. We are already taking the Alsation conductor quite for granted. It seems more certain than ever that he was the one to take Koussevitzky's place; and his hold on the public is now secure. Dimitri Mitropoulos is undoubtedly the most brilliant leader now regularly in charge of an orchestra, but New York is the place for him. Imagine Boston going for such things as his concert versions of radical operas, from "Elektra" to "Wozzeck," or providing the array of outstanding vocal talent that they require.

* * *

If Mr. Munch's programs were on the whole a little less interesting than those of last season, it is partly because he had put his best foot forward then. He has also made the wise provision of not repeating in any season that which he had played in the one before. However, in the case of Brahms' Second Symphony, done here last year by Leonard Bernstein, he did not refrain from repeating a work conducted by another. No doubt such concession to Boston's inordinate love for Brahms, was excusable, though his Second Symphony is one piece that could stand a bit of a rest.

* * *

When Koussevitzky found that something went over big, no matter how many times he played it, he followed the line of least resistance. Coming back as guest this year, he gave us again the Sibelius Second and Fifth and the Brahms First. The Third, which he conducted so eloquently at a Tuesday concert, has not been as much in evidence locally as the other three, and sounds all the better for that reason.

* * *

Whereas last season we had 81 works by 49 composers (and the year before one less on each count), in the season just ended, still speaking of the Friday-Saturday series, 44 composers were represented by 73 compositions. The reason for this smaller number was that we had fewer short pieces and more of concert-length. The last-named were the Christmas Oratorio and St. Matthew Passion of Bach and, the most dramatic event of the season, the vast Requiem of Berlioz, with its four groups of brass players stationed in the first balcony simply because there was no room for them anywhere else. This was indeed very much of a choral season, since we also had the G major Mass of Schubert and, from Koussevitzky, Barraud's "Mystery of the Holy Innocents," given for the first time in America. A well-contrived piece, it still hardly seemed worth the trouble its preparation entailed. The Berlioz, the Bach works, and the little Schubert were definitely worthwhile. The Christmas Oratorio, pushed into the background by Handel's "Messiah," might be made an annual event, and Mr. Munch's idea of giving one of the Bach Passions on Good Friday is an excellent one. But why must these partly Biblical pieces be sung in German? Here, certainly, the advantage of using the original text do not outweigh the loss in meaning to the listeners.

* * *

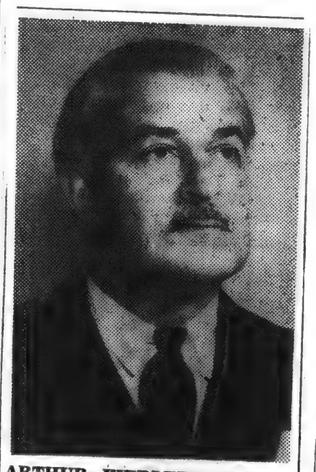
Three actual first performances were those of Diamond's Third Symphony, Honegger's Fifth and Nabokov's "La Vita Nuova," after Dante, with soprano and tenor soloists. The Diamond proved of slight consequence, the Nabokov was at least different and distinctive, and Honegger's Symphony, though vital and compelling, still did not measure up to his Prelude, Fugue and Postlude, one of the season's local novelties. In all, 19 works, old and new, were added to the repertory, a goodly proportion of the whole, and there were some interesting revivals, notably that of Dvorak's charming Fourth Symphony, unheard at the Symphony concerts since 1892. The outstanding new piece was the Prokofieff Sixth, the work which so unaccountably got him in wrong with the Russian authorities.

* * *

Some notable soloists were introduced to us at these concerts: the pianists, Clifford Curzon and Aldo Ciccolini; the cellist, Pierre Fournier, and the soprano, Suzanne Danco, while one or the other of the shorter series brought to us an extremely gifted violinist, Michele Auclair, and a pleasing pianist, Joseph Battista.

* * *

A high spot of the season, much discussed here, was Pierre Monteux's definitive performance of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre de Printemps," and that conductor's old friends rejoiced to see him once more at the head of the orchestra to which he rendered such conspicuous service. French music again loomed relatively large, with 19 works by 13 composers. The Russians, including the expatriots Stravinsky and Nabokov, were again much less in evidence than in the Koussevitzky days; five composers represented by as many works. This change of emphasis makes for agreeable variety, and Mr. Munch by no means neglects the Germans and Austrians. The lion's share of the repertory is still theirs. For native Americans we had Barber, Copland, Diamond and Peter Mennin, a new and welcome name at the Symphony Concerts. And Mr. Munch being Mr. Munch, we can now start wondering what pleasures are in store for us next season.



ARTHUR FIEDLER, conductor of the Boston Pops, which open their 67th annual season at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

Pops Tomorrow

Second Season: Charles Munch Fits Into Own Special Niche

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The 1950-1951 season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now come to an end, was particularly interesting for the appearance during the season of two former conductors of this orchestra: Pierre Monteux, returning to Boston for the first time since 1924, and Serge Koussevitzky, returning for the first time since he resigned as of the season of 1949. These two visitors, both received with devotion and acclaim, somehow contrived to fix, as it were, the position among us of Charles Munch.

As I have had occasion to say before, no man ever faced a more awkward situation than Charles Munch did as the successor to a man who had for 25 years absolutely dominated, indeed, reigned over, the musical directorship of what we are pleased to term the greatest orchestra in the world. Koussevitzky's achievements need no recapitulation at this time; everybody knows what he stood for, what he was, what he did. His place in our hearts is secure for all time. So secure, indeed, that any successor was thrust into the unenviable position of being held up to comparison point by point.

DIGNITY AND DISTINCTION

Charles Munch, to his immense credit, has never attempted to "supplant" Koussevitzky. On the contrary, no man could have more gracefully accepted the position he found himself in. A man of unchallenged musical integrity, a veritable hermit untouched by the subtle currents of social mingling, an artist unswayed one way or the other by public acclamation, above all a dedicated musician, he at once perceived that his only course—and indeed the one course he would have accepted anyway—was to let his great musicianship and his intense musical conviction speak for him.

He has clearly made no bid for the gallery; such an act was and is impossible for him. He has conveyed the impression, without ever saying a word, that he is what he is, and that he must be accepted on his own terms. He has even conveyed—again merely by his presence—that if not accepted on these terms he, will go back to France with no hard feelings. His attitude, in short, has been one of the greatest distinction and dignity.

It is always hard to warm up to distinction and dignity, whether it be displayed in a conductor or a ball player. Ted Williams refuses to tip his cap to the mob; the mob doesn't deny his stature, but it doesn't respond warmly. Charles Munch does not hold court in the green room, or make an obvious play to the audience on the conductor's stand. He is immensely respected, but some of the older members of the audience do not warm to him. How could they, nurtured for 25 years on the hot radiance of the Koussevitzky personality?

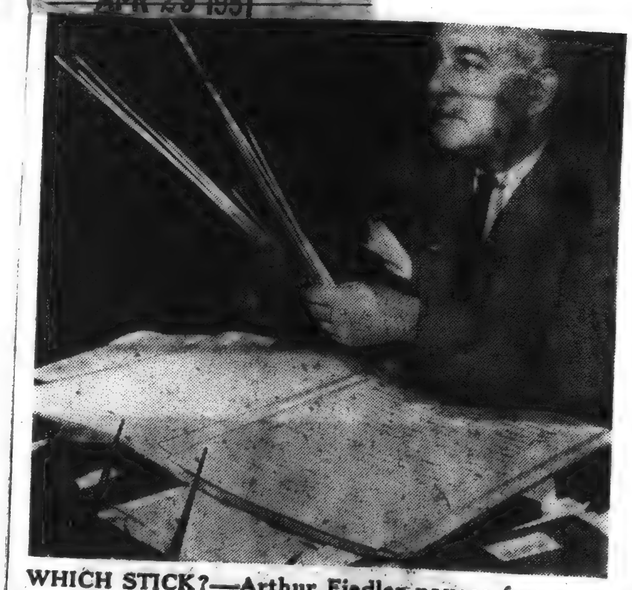
Yet, on Koussevitzky's return here this season, though the warmth and drive and contagion of his personality was apparent every minute, it was clear that the drier, more proportioned, more intellectual, more poised and balanced musical personality of Charles Munch had had its effect in the season intervening. Koussevitzky was always great, always inflammatory, always capable of producing the old magic, but he was, after all, the guest conductor. Things had changed.

CHANGING TIMES

Much more had changed since Monteux. He, too, was in his own way magnificent. He brought back something that has receded into history: the superb clarity of the beater of time, the man who knew every single note, every single phrase, every single nuance as a musician and nothing more; the man who was content to follow out the instructions of the composer to the letter and let him speak in his own clear voice. There wasn't a single moment of "interpretation"; he presided with unchallenged authority, the baton master of masters. We all saw that and admired it and loved him for it. But few of us, I think, could live with him now; too much has happened.

Thus it is that history, at the exact moment required of it, seems to me to have produced the right man: a man combining in generous proportions the utter musical integrity, musicianship and baton mastery of Pierre Monteux with the emotional intensity and incandescence of Serge Koussevitzky. He needs another season to establish contact, to project the real warmth and animation of his personality so well known to the men of the orchestra and those of us who have had the privilege to meet and talk to him in his own home. In the meantime, as he completes his second season with us, he has once again shown beyond dispute that he is, if not (as one of the board of directors of the orchestra stated during the meeting of the Friends) "God's gift to Boston," he is certainly—if I may coin an equally novel cliche—just what the doctor ordered.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 29 1951



WHICH STICK?—Arthur Fiedler pauses for a moment in his preparations for the 66th season of the Boston Pops, to select a proper baton. The opening gun will be fired tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall.

Fiedler Begins 66th Pops Season Tomorrow Night

The Pops, for which Boston has been famous these sixty-six years, will open a new season tomorrow night at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler, conducting the Boston Pops Orchestra which is composed of Boston Symphony players, will present many old favorites from the classical and popular repertory as well as hits of the moment which are to have their first hearing at the Pops.

Except for the concert next Sunday evening which is taken over by M. I. T., the Pops will be open to the public each night. The opening program, in which the pianist Eugene List will make his Pops debut, will be succeeded by the following programs of variety and interest:

Monday—Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia," Delibes; Ballet Suite (first performance in America), Shostakovitch; Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat"), Strauss; Le Carnaval d'Aix, Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra from "Salade," Milhaud. Soloist, Eugene List; Capriccio Italien, Tchaikovsky; "Girls of Baden" Waltz, Komzak; Symphonette No. 2, Gould; Selection from "Call Me Madam," Berlin; March, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Tuesday, March, "Second Connecticut Regiment," Reeves; Overture to "Martha," Flotow; Liebestraum, Liszt; Finale from the Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; A Siegfried Idyll, Wagner; Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra, Schumann. Soloist; Zosia Jacynowicz; Selection from "South Pacific," Rodgers; Saraband, Sleigh Ride, Anderson; Television March, Coates.

Wednesday, Entrance of the Guests into Wartburg from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla," Glinka; Clair de Lune, Debussy; "London" Suite, Coates; Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat"), Strauss; Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, for Piano and Orchestra, Tchaikovsky. Soloist; Gerson Yessin; Selection from "Call Me Madam," Berlin; Variations on Pop Goes the Weasel, Cailliet; Dance of the Buffoons, Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Thursday, Procession from "The Queen of Sheba, Gounod; Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" ("The Thieving Magpie"), Rossini; Meditation from "Thais," Massenet; Solo Violin; Alfred Krips, Waltz Scene from "Faust," Gounod; Concerto in E-flat for Piano and Orchestra, Soloist; Elias Lopez, Liszt; Capriccio Espagnol, Rimsky-Korsakoff; Selection from "Annie Get Your Gun," Berlin; Serenata, Anderson; Russian Sailors' Dance from "The Red Poppy," Gliere.

Friday—March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; Overture to "La Belle Helene," Offenbach; Little Fugue in G minor, Bach-Cailliet; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; From Peer Gynt, Suite No. 2, Grieg; Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra, Grieg, Soloist: Denise Bacon; Selection from "Carousel," Rodgers; Classical Juke Box, Anderson; Prelude to Act III "Lohengrin," Wagner.

Saturday—National Emblem, March, Bagley; Overture to "Zampa," Herold; Walther's Prize Song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner; From "Henry VIII" Suite, German; "Artists' Life" Waltzes, Strauss; The Irish Suite, Anderson. Regis College Glee Club—Jane Ryan, '51, Conducting; Assumpta Est Maria, Carturan; Deep Purple, De Rose; Malaguena, Lecuona; George M. Cohan Medley, Bodge; Gypsy Tango, "Jealousy," Gade; Strike Up the Band, Gershwin; Regis Alma Mater.

Sunday, May 6. "Semper Fidelis" March, Sousa; Suite from "The Water Music," Handel-Harty; Toccata, Frescobaldi-Kindler; Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat"), Strauss; Concertino for Clarinet and Orchestra, Op. 26, Weber. Soloist: Nathan Levine '52; Bolero, Ravel; M. I. T. Glee Club and M. I. T. Choral Society, Klaus Liepmann, Conductor; Richard Rodgers Waltzes. Arranged by Anderson; Syncopated Clock, Saraband, Anderson; Procession of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches," Ippolitov-Ivanov.

Pops Program

The Pops, for which Boston has been famous these 66 years, open their 67th season at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening, with Arthur Fiedler again conducting the orchestra of Boston Symphony players. The first week's program will include popular and classical favorites as well as hits of the moment now having their first hearing at the Pops. Except for Sunday evening's concert, May 6, all concerts are open to the public.

Soloists for the week will include pianist Eugene List, who makes his Pops debut tomorrow night, playing Milhaud's "Le Carnaval D'Aix"; Zosia Jacynowicz, pianist, in Schumann's Concerto in A minor Tuesday night; Gerson Yessin, pianist, in Tchaikovsky's Concerto No. 1, on Wednesday evening; Elias Lopez, pianist, in Liszt's Concerto in E-flat, on Thursday evening; and Denise Bacon, pianist, in Grieg's Concerto in A minor on Friday evening.

Programs for the first week, all of which start at 8:30 P. M., are as follows:

TOMORROW NIGHT
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia" Delibes
Ballet Suite (First performance in America) Shostakovitch
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat") Strauss
Le Varnaval d'Aix, Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra from "Salade" Milhaud
Soloist—Eugene List
Capriccio Italien Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden" Waltz Komzak
Symphonette No. 2 Gould
Moderately fast (with vigor and bounce)—Pavanne—Very fast-racy
Selection from "Call Me Madam" Berlin
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa

TUESDAY EVENING
March, "Second Connecticut Regiment" Reeves
Overture to "Martha" Flotow
Liebestraum Liszt
Finale from the Fourth Symphony Tchaikovsky
A Siegfried Idyll Wagner
Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra Schumann
Soloist: Zosia Jacynowicz
Selection from "South Pacific" Rodgers
Saraband, Sleigh Ride Anderson
Television March Coates

WEDNESDAY EVENING
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser" Wagner
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" Glinka
Clair de Lune Debussy
"London" Suite Coates
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat") Strauss
Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, for Piano and Orchestra Tchaikovsky
Soloist: Gerson Yessin
Selection from "Call Me Madam" Berlin
Variations on Pop Goes the Weasel Cailliet
Dance of the Buffoons Rimsky-Korsakoff

THURSDAY EVENING
Procession from "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" ("The Thieving Magpie") Rossini
Meditation from "Thais" Massenet
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Waltz Scene from "Faust" Gounod
Concerto in E-flat for Piano and Orchestra Liszt
Soloist: Elias Lopez
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakoff
Selection from "Annie Get Your Gun" Berlin
Serenata Anderson
Russian Sailors' Dance from "The Red Poppy" Gliere

FRIDAY EVENING
March, Pomp and Circumstance" Elgar
Overture to "La Belle Helene" Offenbach
Little Fugue in G minor Bach-Cailliet
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
From Peer Gynt, Suite No. 2 Grieg
Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra Grieg
Soloist: Denise Bacon.
Selection from "Carousel" Rodgers
Classical Juke Box Anderson
Prelude to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner

SATURDAY EVENING
National Emblem March Bagley
Overture to "Zampa" Herold
Walther's Prize Song from "The Mastersinger of Nuremberg" Wagner
From "Henry, VIII" Suite German
"Artists' Life" Waltzes Strauss
The Irish Suite Anderson
REGIS COLLEGE GLEE CLUB
Jane Ryan '51, Conducting
Dorothy Gallagher '53, Accompanist
Assumpta Est Maria Carturan
Deep Purple De Rose
Malaguena Lecuona
George M. Cohan Medley Bodge
Gypsy Tango, "Jealousy" Gade
Strike Up the Band Gershwin

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 6
"Semper Fidelis" March Sousa
Suite from "The Water Music" Handel-Harty
Toccata Frescobaldi-Kindler
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat") Strauss
Concertino for Clarinet and Orchestra, Op. 26 Weber
Soloist: Nathan Levine '52
Bolero Ravel
M. I. T. GLEE CLUB and M. I. T. CHORAL SOCIETY
Klaus Liepmann, Conductor
Richard Rodgers Waltzes Arranged by Anderson
Syncopated Clock Anderson
Saraband
Procession of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches" Ippolitov-Ivanov

[275]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 29 1951

Charles Munch's Second Season: Rich and Varied

By CYRUS DURGIN

The 70th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the second of Charles Munch as music director, ended last night with the final D major chord of Brahms Second Symphony. Like its predecessor, this season was rich and varied, with sufficient revivals and novelties to leaven the items from the familiar repertory. This season's conclusion finds the Boston Orchestra still at the top of its form, an orchestra equalled by few others and very likely surpassed by none.

Mr. Munch, from the audience's point of view, is a conductor who wears well. In certain respects he is extraordinary, among them the fact that he is a modest and unassuming musician and at the same time one with tremendous drive, passion and force. From the point of view of the orchestra he is virtually an ideal boss, one who commands the willing respect—even affection—of the players, without ever sacrificing one jot of discipline or artistic supremacy. That is not common in the world of music, and we Bostonians may rejoice in it.

When Mr. Munch first visited Boston, and his admirable conducting was duly noted in general, it was quietly pondered whether as a permanent leader he might be overly given to super-energized performances that might take the gentle sheen off composers like Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven.

Now we know that he is not one such, that while the passion and the drive are there when needed, and can be terrific, Mr. Munch is a well-rounded conductor and, further, a master of different styles. No composer ever suffers exaggeration at his hands.

I think the tone of the orchestra, this season, has been richer and more fluid, than last, while retaining Gallic brightness. Last season, I suspect, he was not only becoming accustomed to the keen resonance of Symphony Hall, but also was plagued by the tonal balance influenced by the high platforms on which the orchestra sat. That was an arrangement suited to Koussevitzky's way, but conductors are different, and it was not suited to Munch's way.

The present seating plan, with only slight elevation, has done a world of good, especially for the relationships between brass, percussion and the rest of the instruments. Even the string ensemble, now so clear, delicate and mellow, has been improved by the change.

In considering the programs, we might as well face, immediately, the small undercurrent of grumbling about "too much French music." I do not pretend to know how strong is this wave of opinion, for the grapevine, while it communicates fascinating details, is not a geiger counter of public intensity. A small group can make a big noise.

As a professional music reviewer who hears a great deal of all sorts of music, I have found Mr. Munch's programs by no means too heavily weighted with French pieces. In fact I have welcomed the increase from this school, because what Mr. Munch has played has been not only of interest per se, but fresh and unhackneyed.

Perhaps he is not personally strong for Sibelius, Bruckner and Mahler, for example, but there have been others to give us those composers. No conductor, any more than a casual listener, can be expected to like everything—or, what is more important, to play everything if he himself considers that he does not play some composers well. I am not inferring that Mr. Munch feels that way about any composer but the observation is attached as a hypothetical possibility.

To my mind, the highlights of the season were from Bach, in the Christmas Oratorio and St. Matthew Passion, and from Berlioz in the form of the gigantic Requiem performed last week. Mr. Munch has said publicly that he will repeat only two works from year to year, alternating the St. John and St. Matthew Passions at Easter. A highly commendable plan! (Recently Mr. Munch also confided that next season's programs will avoid the works he has performed in his first two.)

Berlioz' Requiem can stand a little more discussion where the vast artistic stature of Bach's work needs no elaboration. The Requiem is notable not only for the huge forces, choral and instrumental, required. Most importantly it is unique, for it is a Requiem expressed in Romantic terms of tone-painting, tonal color and melodic invention of a sort much more passionate than austere.

Berlioz even had a distinctive way of treating the syllables of the Latin text, a way perceptibly governed more by expression than by rigorous musical patterns. You can find many such examples to prove these points, and one day, in another article, I should like to do so. The Requiem by no means is a musical show; it is a great work that spans the distance between warm Romantic feeling and liturgical intent.

Of the new pieces, my vote for the best must be divided between Peter Mennin's Symphony, the Prelude, Fugue and Postlude of Honegger, and Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony. Perhaps none is a supreme masterpiece, but each has high merit. Following closely, if not with so much immediately discernible worth, are David Diamond's Third Symphony, the Third Piano Concerto of Martinu and Samuel Barber's Second Symphony.

From my point of view these next may be forgotten and, I hope, not repeated: Barraud's "Le Mystere des Saints Innocents," Nabokov's "La Vita Nuova," Jean Rivier's Violin Concerto.

The return, as guest for two weeks, of Serge Koussevitzky brought an old friend and a great conductor, and also Sibelius, which he reads superlatively well. We may thank Mr. Burgin for Mahler's Fifth Symphony and Haydn's Sinfonie Concertante. The Schubert Mass, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane," the splendid work of Pierre Monteux (a guest long overdue), especially in that wondrous performance of "Le Sacre du Printemps," Berlioz' "Fantastic" Symphony and Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta all were memorable events. Among the new soloists the most notable were pianists Ciccolini and Solomon, the Belgian soprano Suzanne Danco and that superb cellist Pierre Fournier. Clifford Curzon is a fine artist, but he was hampered by pitch difficulties between his own instrument and the orchestra. It was a pleasure, too, to hear again Mr. Firkusny, Miss Posselt and Miss Henriot.

[276]

OPEN POPS SEASON

Arthur Fiedler to Conduct

The Pops will open a new season tomorrow night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops orchestra, composed of Boston Symphony players. Except for the concert next Sunday evening which is taken over by M.I.T., the Pops will be open to the public each night.

The programs of the opening week are as follows:

MONDAY EVENING AT 8:30

PROGRAM

Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Ballet Suite ..... Shostakoviteh
Waltz — Polka — Adagio — Danse Waltz-scherzo—Galop
(First performance in America)
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat") ... Strauss
Le Carnaval d'Aix, Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra from "Salade" ..... Milhaud
Le Corso — Tartaglia — Isabelle — Rosetta — Le Bon et le mauvais tuteur — Coviello — Le Capitaine Cartuccia — Polchinelle — Polka — Cinzio — Souvenir de Rio (Tango) —Final

Soloist: Eugene List

"Girls of Baden" Waltz ..... Komzak
Capriccio Italien ..... Tchaikovsky
Symphonette No. 2 ..... Gould
Moderately fast (with vigor and bounce)—Pavanne — Very fast — racy
Selection from "Call Me Madam" ... Berlin
The Best Thing for You Is Me — The Ocarina — You Are Just in Love — It Is a Lovely Day Today—Washington Square Dance
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" ... Sousa

* * *

TUESDAY EVENING

March, "Second Connecticut Regiment"
Overture to "Martha" ..... Reeves
Liebestraum ..... Flotow
Finale from the Fourth Symphony ..... Lisst
Tchaikovsky

A Siegfried Idyll ..... Wagner
Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra ..... Schumann
1. Allegro affettuoso
2 Intermezzo: Andantino grazioso
3. Allegro vivace
Soloist: Zosia Jacynowicz

Selection from "South Pacific" ... Rodgers
I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Outa My Hair—Bali Ha'i—Happy Talk—Some Enchanted Evening—A Wonderful Guy.
Sleigh Ride)
Saraband) ..... Anderson
Television March ..... Coates

* * *

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg from "Tannhauser" ... Wagner
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" ... Glinka
Clair de Lune ..... Debussy
"London" Suite ..... Coates
Covent Garden (Tarantelle) — Westminster (Meditation) — Knightsbridge (In Town Tonight) (March)
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" (The Bat") ..... Strauss
Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, for Piano and Orchestra ..... Tchaikovsky
I. Allegro non troppo e molto maestoso; Allegro con spirito
II. Andantino semplice; Allegro; Vivace assai
III. Allegro con fuoco
Soloist: Gerson Yessin
Selection from "Call Me Madam" Berlin
The Best Thing for You Is Me—The Ocarina—You Are Just in Love—It Is a Lovely Day Today—Washington Square Dance
Variations on Pop Goes the Weasel ... Caillet
Theme—Fugue—Minuet—In Jerusalem—Music Box—A La Jazz
Dance of the Buffoons ... Rimsky-Korsakoff

* * *

THURSDAY EVENING

Procession from "The Queen of Sheba" ..... Gounod
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra" ("The Thieving Magpie") ... Rossini
Meditation from "Thais" ..... Massenet
Solo Violin: Alfred Krips
Waltz Scene from "Faust" ..... Gounod

Concerto in E-flat for Piano and Orchestra ..... Lisst
Soloist: Elias Lopez
Capriccio Espagnol ... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Alborada — Variations — Alborada — Gypsy Scene — Fandango of the Asturias

Selection from "Annie Get Your Gun" ..... Berlin
Serenata ..... Anderson
Russian Sailors' Dance from "The Red Poppy" ..... Gliere

* * *

FRIDAY EVENING

Selection from "Call Me Madam" ... Berlin
Overture to "La Belle Helene" ... Offenbach
Little Fugue in G minor ... Bach-Caillet
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saens

From Peer Gynt, Suite No. 2 ..... Grieg
Ingrid's Lament—Solveig's Song—Dance of the Mountain King's Daughter
Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra ..... Grieg
Soloist: Denise Bacon

Selection from "Carousel" ..... Rodgers
Classical Juke Box ..... Anderson
Prelude to Act III, "Lohengrin" .. Wagner

* * *

REGIS NIGHT

SATURDAY EVENING

National Emblem March ..... Bagley
Overture to "Zampa" ..... Herold
Walther's Prize Song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .. Wagner
From "Henry VIII" Suite ..... German

"Artists' Life" Waltzes ..... Strauss
The Irish Suite ..... Anderson
The Irish Washerwoman—The Minstrel Boy—The Last Rose of Summer (Solo Violin: Alfred Krips)—The Rakes of Mallow

REGIS COLLEGE GLEE CLUB
Jane Ryan, '51, Conducting
Dorothy Gallagher, '53, Accompanist
Assumpta Est Maria ..... Carturan
Deep Purple ..... De Rose
Malaguena ..... Lecuona

George M. Cohan Medley ..... Bodag
Give My Regards to Broadway—Mary's a Grand Old Name—Nelly Kelly, I Love You—You're a Grand Old Flag—You Remind Me of My Mother — Harrigan — Yankee Doodle Dandy
Gypsy Tango, "Jealousy" ..... Gade
Strike Up the Band ..... Gershwin
Regis Alma Mater

* * *

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 6

At 8:30 P. M.

"Semper Fidelis" March ..... Sousa
Suite from "The Water Music" ... Handel-Harty
Toccata ..... Frescobaldi-Kindler
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ("The Bat") ... Strauss

Concertino for Clarinet and Orchestra, Op. 26 ..... Weber
Soloist: Nathan Levine '52
Bolero ..... Ravel
M.I.T. Glee Club and M.I.T. Choral Society
Klaus Liepmann, Conductor

Richard Rodgers Waltzes ... Arranged by Anderson
Lover—Falling in Love With Love—Oh, What a Beautiful Morning—It's a Grand Night for Singing
Syncopated Clock—Saraband ... Anderson
Procession of the Sardar from "Caucasian Sketches" .. Ippolitov-Ivanov

SYMPHONY HALL—CO 6-1492
66th Season Opens
TOMORROW AT 8:30
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER - Conductor
ADMISSION 50c
1ST BALCONY $1.00, $1.50
TABLE SEATS $2.50

66TH POPS SEASON AT SYMPHONY

Eugene List Soloist in Program's Top Number

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Pops opened their 66th season, at Symphony last evening, with a concert that was in one way different. The second half of the program went on the air, as part of the weekly broadcast that features Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra.

APPLAUD FIEDLER

First of all, at the end of the intermission there was a placing of microphones. Ben Grauer, the announcer, told the audience that in a minute and a half the concert would be on the air. The signal was given, and concert master. Alfred Krips, directed the orchestra in the theme song (a few bars from Richard Strauss' "Don Juan").

Then Mr. Fiedler returned to the stage, and was properly applauded; and the portion of the concert that, as Mr. Grauer said, was heard by some 10,000,000 radio listeners, over the NBC network, began. It consisted of Tchaikovsky's Italian Caprice, the enticing "Girls of Baden" Waltz by Komzak, Morton Gould's clever Symphonette No. 2, a selection from Irving Berlin hit, "Call Me Madam," and the most stirring of American marches, Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

All Seats Taken

Relatively speaking, the first part of the concert was heard by a handful of listeners, though hardly a seat was unfilled. Here we had the Procession of Bacchus from Delibes' "Sylvia," A Ballet Suite by Shostakovitch, played for the first time in America, the Overture to the operetta of the hour, Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," and, finally, as the piece de resistance of the entire concert, Milhaud's "Le Carnaval d'Aix," Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra from "Salade," with that brilliant young virtuoso, Eugene List, as soloist.

The learned program annotator, Laning Humphrey, writes that nothing can be ascertained regarding the origin of this Ballet Suite. It sounds like very early Shostakovitch, being completely lacking in distinction. Of course, it might be one of the compositions written according to the dictates of the Central Soviet committee and adopted to the musical capacities of the tone-deaf.

Tongue-in-Cheek

One recalls with pleasure the music for the ballet, "The Golden Age," with its famous Polka, a very different Polka from the one heard last evening. There was nothing like that in this commonplace suite. The Milhaud, in which Mr. List shone as pianist, is the intriguing tongue-in-cheek stuff that we expect from him, though he has been more amusing on other occasions.

Having been deposited virtually in the collective lap of the orchestra, this reviewer is better informed regarding the trees than the forest. He could tell you exactly how the inside man at the third desk of the first violins played his pizzicati. But the boys seemed to be doing all right.

The RED SEAL PICTURE

Guest Reviewer

Emily Coleman
Music Editor
Newsweek

At first glance, it might seem that RCA Victor's May Catalog Offering is a re-issue of former friends. But while the titles and the artists concerned are familiar, the performances are all new, made especially for 45 and 33⅓ rpm listing.

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor—Symphonie Fantastique, Op. 14 (Berlioz) (Album WDM-994—LM-1131) It is hard to believe that the man who unloosed this torrent of orchestral sound was under 30, yet Hector Berlioz celebrated his 27th birthday just six days after the "Symphonie Fantastique" had its première in Paris on December 5, 1830. Written in the heat of his passion for the English-Irish actress Harriet Smithson (whom Berlioz called Henriette), the "Symphonie Fantastique" is in five movements, each related by the melody of the idée fixe, or theme of the Beloved. The program notes are by Berlioz himself. The work belongs in every record collector's library, for Berlioz was both a master of melody and of orchestration. And Pierre Monteux with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra is a master of Berlioz, as this new rendition of the "Symphonie Fantastique" more than proves.

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, Pianist—Scherzi (Chopin) Album WDM-189—LM-1132) There is little to be said to add to what has already been written and said about Artur Rubinstein playing Chopin—except where else does one find the peculiar affinity which the great Polish pianist has for the immortal Polish composer? These "Scherzi" (No. 1 in B Minor, Op. 20; No. 2 in B-Flat Minor, Op. 31; No. 3 in C-Sharp Minor, Op. 39 and No. 4 in E, Op. 54) are particularly indicative of the Rubinstein-Chopin hallmark.

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA—ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor—Capriccio Italien, Op. 45 and 1812 Overture, Op. 49 (Tchaikovsky) (Album DM/WDM-776—LM-1134) Written in 1880, the "Capriccio Italien" is a product of the period of the composer's wanderlust, when he traveled from one European capital and resort to another. For at this time Tchaikovsky was unhappy at the rather cool, or polite, reception given his works in Russia. Fiedler and his incomparable Boston Pops Orchestra give this sample of the composer's impression of Italy—with the sure-fire "1812 Overture" coupled as a dividend—a thoroughly resounding treatment.

Single records by the BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA—ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor—Turkey in the Straw and Music Box (4390—49-1428); The Toy Trumpet and Pavanne (4456—49-1429); Entrance of the Little Fauns, Mosquito Dance and Thunder and Lightning-Polka (49-1430); Jewels of the Madonna, Dance of the Camorristi and Malagueña (4330—49-1431); March of the Little Lead Soldiers and Marche Militaire (4314—49-1432); Carioca and The Continental (4287—49-1433); Cradle Song, Waltz in A-Flat and Perpetuum Mobile, Op. 257 (4435—49-1434); The Banjo, Jazz Legato and Jazz Pizzicato (10-1089—49-1435); Pop Goes the Weasel (49-1436); España Rapsodie (49-1437); Dagger Dance and The Sleeping Beauty: Waltz (49-1438); Poet and Peasant Overture (11986—49-1439); In a Persian Market (4338—49-1440); La Paloma and La Golondrina (4434—49-1441); Prelude in C-Sharp Minor, Op. 3, No. 2 and Prelude In G Minor, Op. 23, No. 5 (49-1442); España Waltz (49-1443); Faust: Waltzes (49-1444); Cavalleria Rusticana: Intermezzo and Song of India (4303—49-1445); Old Timers Night at the Pops (4395—49-1446); Panis Angelicus and Ave Maria (49-1447); Kamennoi-Ostrow, Op. 10, No. 22 (12191—49-1448); Hungarian Dance No. 5, in G Minor and Hungarian Dance No. 6, in D (4321—49-1449). Here are additional record samples—22 in all—of why the Boston Pops Orchestra is deservedly unique in music annals. Arthur Fiedler and his musicians emerge trimphant over any challenge, be it the folksy "Turkey in the Straw," the classic gaiety of Johann Strauss, or the more conventional concert hall favorite, like the "España Rapsodie" ("Spanish Rhapsody") of Chabrier.

[272]

The RED SEAL PICTURE

Guest Reviewer

Emily Coleman
Music Editor
Newsweek

At first glance, it might seem that RCA Victor's May Catalog Offering is a re-issue of former friends. But while the titles and the artists concerned are familiar, the performances are all new, made especially for 45 and 33⅓ rpm listing.

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor—Symphonie Fantastique, Op. 14 (Berlioz) (Album WDM-994—LM-1131) It is hard to believe that the man who unloosed this torrent of orchestral sound was under 30, yet Hector Berlioz celebrated his 27th birthday just six days after the "Symphonie Fantastique" had its première in Paris on December 5, 1830. Written in the heat of his passion for the English-Irish actress Harriet Smithson (whom Berlioz called Henriette), the "Symphonie Fantastique" is in five movements, each related by the melody of the idée fixe, or theme of the Beloved. The program notes are by Berlioz himself. The work belongs in every record collector's library, for Berlioz was both a master of melody and of orchestration. And Pierre Monteux with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra is a master of Berlioz, as this new rendition of the "Symphonie Fantastique" more than proves.

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, Pianist—Scherzi (Chopin) Album WDM-189—LM-1132) There is little to be said to add to what has already been written and said about Artur Rubinstein playing Chopin—except where else does one find the peculiar affinity which the great Polish pianist has for the immortal Polish composer? These "Scherzi" (No. 1 in B Minor, Op. 20; No. 2 in B-Flat Minor, Op. 31; No. 3 in C-Sharp Minor, Op. 39 and No. 4 in E, Op. 54) are particularly indicative of the Rubinstein-Chopin hallmark.

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA—ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor—Capriccio Italien, Op. 45 and 1812 Overture, Op. 49 (Tchaikovsky) (Album DM/WDM-776—LM-1134) Written in 1880, the "Capriccio Italien" is a product of the period of the composer's wanderlust, when he traveled from one European capital and resort to another. For at this time Tchaikovsky was unhappy at the rather cool, or polite, reception given his works in Russia. Fiedler and his incomparable Boston Pops Orchestra give this sample of the composer's impression of Italy—with the sure-fire "1812 Overture" coupled as a dividend—a thoroughly resounding treatment.

Single records by the BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA—ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor—Turkey in the Straw and Music Box (4390—49-1428); The Toy Trumpet and Pavanne (4456—49-1429); Entrance of the Little Fauns, Mosquito Dance and Thunder and Lightning-Polka (49-1430); Jewels of the Madonna, Dance of the Camorristi and Malagueña (4330—49-1431); March of the Little Lead Soldiers and Marche Militaire (4314—49-1432); Carioca and The Continental (4287—49-1433); Cradle Song, Waltz in A-Flat and Perpetuum Mobile, Op. 257 (4435—49-1434); The Banjo, Jazz Legato and Jazz Pizzicato (10-1089—49-1435); Pop Goes the Weasel (49-1436); España Rapsodie (49-1437); Dagger Dance and The Sleeping Beauty: Waltz (49-1438); Poet and Peasant Overture (11986—49-1439); In a Persian Market (4338—49-1440); La Paloma and La Golondrina (4434—49-1441); Prelude in C-Sharp Minor, Op. 3, No. 2 and Prelude In G Minor, Op. 23, No. 5 (49-1442); España Waltz (49-1443); Faust: Waltzes (49-1444); Cavalleria Rusticana: Intermezzo and Song of India (4303—49-1445); Old Timers Night at the Pops (4395—49-1446); Panis Angelicus and Ave Maria (49-1447); Kamennoi-Ostrow, Op. 10, No. 22 (12191—49-1448); Hungarian Dance No. 5, in G Minor and Hungarian Dance No. 6, in D (4321—49-1449). Here are additional record samples—22 in all—of why the Boston Pops Orchestra is deservedly unique in music annals. Arthur Fiedler and his musicians emerge trimphant over any challenge, be it the folksy "Turkey in the Straw," the classic gaiety of Johann Strauss, or the more conventional concert hall favorite, like the "España Rapsodie" ("Spanish Rhapsody") of Chabrier.

66TH POPS SEASON AT SYMPHONY

Eugene List Soloist in Program's Top Number

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Pops opened their 66th season, at Symphony last evening, with a concert that was in one way different. The second half of the program went on the air, as part of the weekly broadcast that features Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra.

APPLAUD FIEDLER

First of all, at the end of the intermission there was a placing of microphones. Ben Grauer, the announcer, told the audience that in a minute and a half the concert would be on the air. The signal was given, and concert master, Alfred Krips, directed the orchestra in the theme song (a few bars from Richard Strauss' "Don Juan").

Then Mr. Fiedler returned to the stage, and was properly applauded; and the portion of the concert that, as Mr. Grauer said, was heard by some 10,000,000 radio listeners, over the NBC network, began. It consisted of Tchaikovsky's Italian Caprice, the enticing "Girls of Baden" Waltz by Komzak, Morton Gould's clever Symphonette No. 2, a selection from Irving Berlin hit, "Call Me Madam," and the most stirring of American marches, Sousa's "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

All Seats Taken

Relatively speaking, the first part of the concert was heard by a handful of listeners, though hardly a seat was unfilled. Here we had the Procession of Bacchus from Delibes' "Sylvia," A Ballet Suite by Shostakovitch, played for the first time in America, the Overture to the operetta of the hour, Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," and, finally, as the piece de resistance of the entire concert, Milhaud's "Le Carnaval d'Aix," Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra from "Salade," with that brilliant young virtuoso, Eugene List, as soloist.

The learned program annotator, Laning Humphrey, writes that nothing can be ascertained regarding the origin of this Ballet Suite. It sounds like very early Shostakovitch, being completely lacking in distinction. Of course, it might be one of the compositions written according to the dictates of the Central Soviet committee and adopted to the musical capacities of the tone-deaf.

Tongue-in-Cheek

One recalls with pleasure the music for the ballet, "The Golden Age," with its famous Polka, a very different Polka from the one heard last evening. There was nothing like that in this commonplace suite. The Milhaud, in which Mr. List shone as pianist, is the intriguing tongue-in-cheek stuff that we expect from him, though he has been more amusing on other occasions.

Having been deposited virtually in the collective lap of the orchestra, this reviewer is better informed regarding the trees than the forest. He could tell you exactly how the inside man at the third desk of the first violins played his pizzicati. But the boys seemed to be doing all right.

[277]

MUSIC

The Pops

The Boston Pops orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conductor, gave the first concert of the 66th season in Symphony Hall last night. Eugene List, pianist, was the soloist. The program:

Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes
Ballet Suite ..... Shostakovitch
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" ..... Strauss
Le Carnaval d'Aix, Fantasy for Piano Orchestra from "Salade" ..... Milhaud
Capriccio Italien ..... Tchaikovsky
"Girls of Baden" Waltz ..... Komzak
Symphonette No. 2 ..... Gould
Selection from "Call Me Madam" ..... Berlin
"The Stars and Stripes Forever" ..... Sousa

By RUDOLPH ELIE

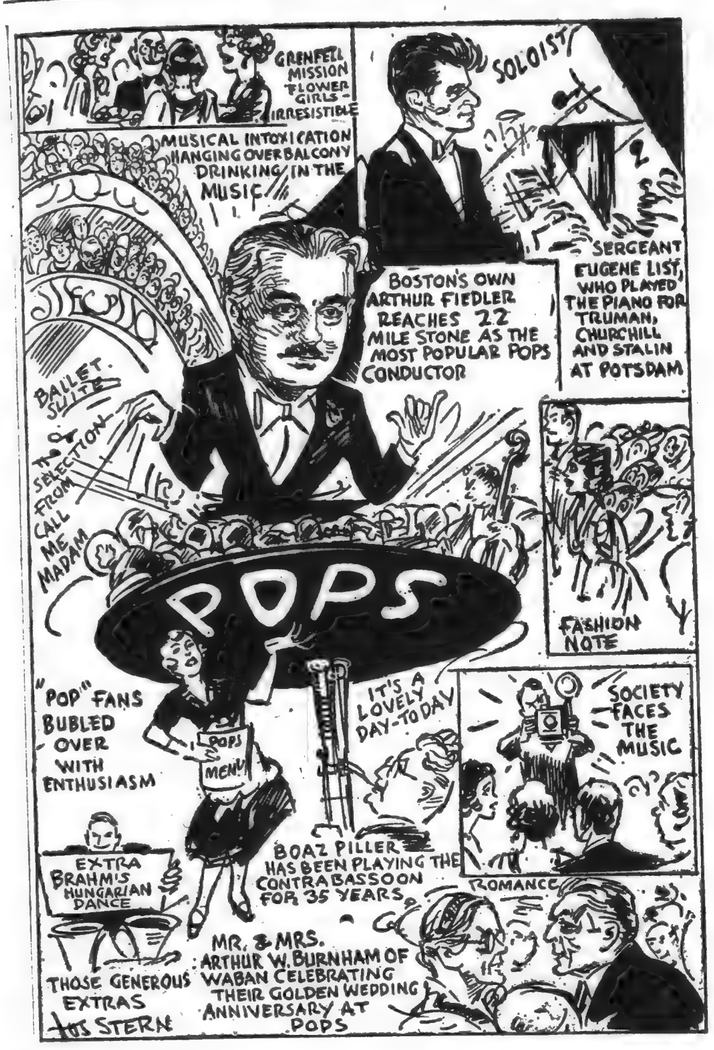
To be reckoned only with the appearance of the swan boats and tulips in the Public Garden, the prediction that both the Braves and the Red Sox will clinch their respective pennants and the change to daylight saving time is the opening of the Pops as an official pronouncment that spring, tra la, is really here.

These perennial musical pleasantries began again in Symphony Hall last night with the popping of champagne corks, the tinkle of small change, the scuffling of waitresses' feet and the murmur of conversation as an accompaniment to the music making of Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops orchestra. Everything was as before, the gladioli-banked conductor's stand, the soft green walls, the tables and chairs (which were, come to think of it, brand new), and the atmosphere of relaxed conviviality. Brand new, however, was the radio broadcast over NBC, with all its attendant apparatus.

Musically, the affair was everything it always is, which is to say it was good enough to explain the formidable reputation these concerts have achieved.

One was an odd ballet suite by Shostakovitch, obviously so busy toeing the party line doing music for the masses it was hard to recognize the hand of the master of the Fifth. The other was a Fantasy for Piano and Orchestra by Milhaud, also a ballet suite and containing some very cute and amusing music in the style of his familiar two-piano Scaramouche. It doesn't sustain very well, but Eugene List gave it a bright and engaging performance.

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 1951



MAY 1, 1951

Fiedler Opens 66th Season of Pops in Symphony Hall

By CYRUS DURGIN

Arthur Fiedler opened the 66th season of Pops at Symphony Hall last night. Once again the lower walls of the auditorium were painted their Spring green; tables and chairs covered the floor; waitresses were kept running with bottles and glasses; the orchestra played music that was mainly tuneful, and everything seemed as usual.

In fact, everything was as usual, even to the gladioli that banked the conductor's stand, and the fact probably explains why the Pops are always so popular. People like good things to remain much the same, and that goes for the Pops, which combine the appeal of music with that of conviviality.

Musically the evening started off with Delibes' Procession of Bacchus from the ballet "Sylvia," and then launched immediately into the season's first novelty. This is a Ballet Suite by Dmitri Shostakovitch.

The program said that no one seems to know anything about this music, where it came from, or what its source. Perhaps a good many won't care when or where it goes, either.

chestra "Le Carnaval d'Aix" out of Milhaud's ballet "Salade." This is a spicy kind of fantasy, in several moods but unmistakably Milhaud style. Mr. List's performance was spirited and effervescent. It would be nice to have him back again.

During the one intermission they set up the microphones for the first Monday evening Pops broadcast over N. B. C. Presently announcer Ben Grauer appeared, immaculate and soothingly-voiced, to greet the radio listeners and the Symphony Hall audience, and tell about the broadcast and the sponsorship. Then Alfred Krips, the concert master, leaving his usual role for a few moments, raised a baton and put the orchestra through the musical signature, a theme from Richard Strauss' "Don Juan."

From that point, both visible and unseen audiences heard Tchaikovsky's Italian Caprice, Komzak's old reliable "Girls of Baden" Waltz; Morton Gould's Symphonette No. 2; tunes out of "Call Me Madam," and Sousa's march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

This opening night audience ran true to Pops form. It was large, happy, cordial and at ease. The orchestra was in its usual Pops form, and so was Arthur Fiedler in his, which meant that the entire program went off with the zest of a roman candle.

List Makes Boston Debut

As first soloist of the Pops season, pianist Eugene List made his Boston debut, playing with the or-

Radio Adds Something New At Opening of Pops' 66th Year

BY ALISON ARNOLD

Something new has been added to Boston's Pops. Along with the salmon pink gladioli which always form the decorations on the opening night, microphones were set up on the stage and the audience was treated to a broadcast complete with a commercial. The second half of the concert was broadcast and the audience complied enthusiastically with the request for applause. But it couldn't take seriously the advertising from the stage of Symphony Hall and laughter drowned out the commercial.

Thus opened the 66th season of these popular concerts which began in the gay 90's and have become as much a part of the spring season as hurdy-gurdies and marbles. For the ninth consecutive year the New England Grenfell Association took over the floor for the opening night to benefit the Grenfell Mission on the coast of Labrador. Pretty girls sold flowers for the cause and posed while photographers' bulbs flashed.

PARTIES PRECEDE

Five gilt chairs are chained to each of the small tables on the floor of the hall nowadays, so rubbing elbows was more literal than figurative. Many dinner parties took place earlier in the evening so there were plenty of late arrivals and the hall was not filled when Arthur Fiedler raised his baton for the first time. Symphony Hall must have seemed a bit drab to him after the colorful showboat setting at the annual Tombola in San Francisco where he recently conducted the orchestra in a series of concerts. But the applause which greeted him was deafening.

No one wears evening clothes to the Pops now, but the audience was festive with springlike prints, flowered hats and fragrant corsages. The waitresses wore pale blue or yellow organdy aprons with their navy blue nylon uniforms as they carried pitchers of Pops punch, and the popping of champagne corks added a gay note.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur W. Burnham of Waban celebrated their golden wedding anniversary by attending the Pops and especially enjoyed the sentimental tunes from the Broadway hit, "Call Me Madam." Mrs. Margaret Lane who always goes to the opening of the Pops with her son, Thomas, and her daughter, Jean Harriet, was there again last night, and with them was the latter's fiance, John Quincy Landers.

SERVICES REPRESENTED

The Army, Navy and Marines were well represented at the 1951 opening, and groups of WAVES occupied tables on the floor. The balconies were filled, too, and many looked down with rapt attention while Sgt. Eugene List, who played the piano for Truman, Churchill and Stalin at Potsdam, appeared as soloist with the Pops orchestra.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard of Newton Center was again chairman of Grenfell Night at the Pops. She and Mr. Kennard and Miss Gertrude Peabody, who was in charge of tickets, gave a dinner at the Harvard Club. Dr. E. Parker Hayden, president of the New England Grenfell Association, and Mrs. Hayden entertained at dinner at the Tennis and Racquet Club.

Among those in the large audience were Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Mrs. Phineas S. Sprague, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Howes, Mr. and Mrs. William T. Ethridge, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. P. Storer, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Philip Clark, the Rev. Peter Blynn, Mrs. Julian T. Leonard, Gen. ad Mrs. Roger Eckfeldt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. White, Mr. and Mrs. Lea Luquer, Mr. and Mrs. Barrie M. White, Miss Mary Otis, r. and Mrs. J. Brooks Fenno, Mr. Henry C. Everett, Jr., Miss Dorothy and Miss Elizabeth Rackemann, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hawes, Mrs. A. W. K. Billings, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Harding, Mr. Asa Phillips, Mrs. Richard Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. Tarrant Cutler.

[278]

Here are the 25 all time Red Seal best sellers

MARIAN ANDERSON, Contralto
AVE MARIA; AUFENTHALT 11-9836 1.25
▽49-0136 1.10

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA, ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
GRAND MARCH (Aida); POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE MARCH IN D, Op. 39, No. 1 12-1019 1.25
▽49-0616 1.10
CHICKEN REEL; FIDDLE FADDLE 10-1397 1.10
▽49-0527 1.10
DANCE OF THE HOURS 12-1059 1.25
▽49-0676 1.10
DER ROSENKAVALIER: Waltzes 12-0762 1.25
▽49-0307 1.10
FINLANDIA Op. 26 No. 7 12-1049 1.25
▽49-0598 1.10
HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 2, IN C-SHARP 12-0763 1.25
▽49-0308 1.10
JALOUSIE; RITUAL FIRE DANCE 12-0977 1.25
▽49-0526 1.10
WARSAW CONCERTO 11-8863 1.25
▽49-0252 1.10

MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
MEDITATION; HUMORESQUE 11-8950 1.25
▽49-0316 1.10

JOSÉ ITURBI, Pianist
CLAIR DE LUNE; LIEBESTRAUM 11-8851 1.25
▽49-0176 1.10
POLONAISE IN A-FLAT, Op. 53 11-8848 1.25
▽49-0134 1.10

ALLAN JONES, Tenor
THE DONKEY SERENADE; GIANNINA MIA 4380 1.10
▽49-0201 1.10

MARIO LANZA, Tenor
BE MY LOVE; I'LL NEVER LOVE YOU 10-1561 1.10
▽49-1353 1.10

▽ Refers to 45 RPM RECORDS

JEANETTE MACDONALD, Soprano
ITALIAN STREET SONG; SUMMER SERENADE 10-1134 1.10
▽49-0140 1.10

JEANETTE MACDONALD, Soprano; NELSON EDDY, Baritone
INDIAN LOVE CALL; AH! SWEET MYSTERY OF LIFE 4323 1.10
▽49-0200 1.10

JAMES MELTON, Tenor
AVE MARIA; SERENADE 12-0153 1.25
▽49-0260 1.10

ROBERT MERRILL, Baritone
THE LORD'S PRAYER; OL' MAN RIVER 10-1513 1.10
▽49-0625 1.10
WHIFFENPOOF SONG; THE SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI 10-1313 1.10
▽49-0277 1.10

JAN PEERCE, Tenor
BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS; BECAUSE 11-9007 1.25
▽49-0135 1.10

SIGMUND ROMBERG'S ORCHESTRA
FAITHFULLY YOURS; BARCAROLLE 11-9222 1.25
▽49-0300 1.10

THE ROBERT SHAW CHORALE, ROBERT SHAW, Conductor
THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S; THE LORD'S PRAYER 11-9155 1.25
▽49-0294 1.10

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI and his Symphony Orchestra
THE BLUE DANUBE; TALES FROM THE VIENNA WOODS 12-1160 1.25
▽49-1076 1.10
CLAIR DE LUNE 10-1534 1.10
▽49-1009 1.10

ARTURO TOSCANINI and the NBC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER; TRITSCH-TRATSCH POLKA 11-9188 1.25
▽49-1082 1.10

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 9 - 1951

BOSTON AREA SCHOOLS TO RUN FM STATION

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, May 8 — The Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council, an organization of Boston area educational institutions, received permission today from the Federal Communications Commission to construct a 20,000-watt noncommercial FM radio station.

Parker Wheatley, director of the council, said that among programs planned would be broadcasts of Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The call letters WGBH have been given to the station. Its transmitter will be erected on Great Blue Hill in suburban Milton, Mass.

In addition to the symphony concerts, the station is expected to carry addresses by national and international figures speaking at the cooperating colleges and universities, lectures from classrooms, full-length performances of plays and interpretations of news and events by faculty specialists.

Members of the council, in addition to the Lowell Institute, are Boston College, Boston University, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Northeastern University and Tufts College.

The Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council is a member of the National Association of Educational Broadcasters, which recently received a $300,000 grant from the Fund for Adult Education, an adjunct of the Ford Foundation.

This Clipping From
HERALD TRIBUNE N.Y.
MAY 9 - 1951

Munch to Lead the N.B.C. On Toscanini Invitation

At Arturo Toscanini's invitation, Charles Munch will conduct the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra for the first time in a broadcast concert of next season's regular fall and winter series, on Saturday, Jan. 26, 1952. Besides the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor, the leaders who will share this series with Mr. Toscanini are Fritz Reiner, of the Metropolitan Opera, in the concert of Jan. 19, and Guido Cantelli, who is scheduled for eight concerts. As previously announced, Mr. Toscanini is to conduct twelve of the twenty-two Saturday concerts, on Nov. 3, 10, 17 and 24, and March 8, 15, 22 and 29. Mr. Cantelli will conduct Dec. 1, 8 and 15, Feb. 2, 9, 16 and 23, and March 1. The orchestra, which is on a short vacation, will resume its weekly spring and summer schedule on Saturday, June 2.

Mr. Toscanini is in Milan with his wife, who is recovering from a serious illness, and is expected to remain in Italy until next fall. He is filling no engagements before the beginning of his N. B. C. Symphony schedule, and the National Broadcasting Company hopes that he will then have fully recovered from the knee injury which forced him to limit his 1950-'51 season.

Here are the 25 all time Real best sellers

MARIAN ANDERSON, Contralto
AVE MARIA; AUFENTHALT 11-9036 1.25
▽49-0136 1.10

BOSTON POPS ORCHESTRA, ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
GRAND MARCH (Aida); POMP AND CIRCUMSTANCE MARCH IN D, Op. 39, No. 1 12-1019 1.25
▽49-0616 1.10
CHICKEN REEL; FIDDLE FADDLE
10-1397 1.10
▽49-0527 1.10
DANCE OF THE HOURS 12-1059 1.25
▽49-0676 1.10
DER ROSENKAVALIER: Waltzes 12-0762 1.25
▽49-0307 1.10
FINLANDIA Op. 26 No. 7 12-1049 1.25
▽49-0690 1.10
HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No. 2, IN C-SHARP
12-0763 1.25
▽49-0308 1.10
JALOUSIE; RITUAL FIRE DANCE
12-0977 1.25
▽49-0526 1.10
WARSAW CONCERTO 11-8963 1.25
▽49-0252 1.10

MISCHA ELMAN, Violinist
MEDITATION; HUMORESQUE 11-8950 1.25
▽49-0316 1.10

JOSÉ ITURBI, Pianist
CLAIR DE LUNE; LIEBESTRAUM
11-8851 1.25
▽49-0176 1.10
POLONAISE IN A-FLAT, Op. 53
11-8848 1.25
▽49-0134 1.10

ALLAN JONES, Tenor
THE DONKEY SERENADE; GIANNINA MIA
4380 1.10
▽49-0201 1.10

MARIO LANZA, Tenor
BE MY LOVE; I'LL NEVER LOVE YOU
10-1561 1.10
▽49-1353 1.10

▽ Refers to 45 RPM RECORDS

JEANETTE MACDONALD, Soprano
ITALIAN STREET SONG; SUMMER SERENADE
10-1134 1.10
▽49-0140 1.10

JEANETTE MACDONALD, Soprano; NELSON EDDY, Baritone
INDIAN LOVE CALL; AH! SWEET MYSTERY OF LIFE
4323 1.10
▽49-0260 1.10

JAMES MELTON, Tenor
AVE MARIA; SERENADE 12-0153 1.25
▽49-0260 1.10

ROBERT MERRILL, Baritone
THE LORD'S PRAYER; OL' MAN RIVER
10-1513 1.10
▽49-0625 1.10
WHIFFENPOOF SONG; THE SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI
10-1313 1.10
▽49-0277 1.10

JAN PEERCE, Tenor
BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS; BECAUSE
11-9007 1.25
▽49-0135 1.10

SIGMUND ROMBERG'S ORCHESTRA
FAITHFULLY YOURS; BARCAROLLE
11-9222 1.25
▽49-0300 1.10

THE ROBERT SHAW CHORALE, ROBERT SHAW, Conductor
THE BELLS OF ST. MARY'S; THE LORD'S PRAYER
11-9155 1.25
▽49-0254 1.10

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI and his Symphony Orchestra
THE BLUE DANUBE; TALES FROM THE VIENNA WOODS
12-1160 1.25
▽49-1076 1.10
CLAIR DE LUNE 10-1534 1.10
▽49-1009 1.10

ARTURO TOSCANINI and the NBC SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER; TRITSCH-TRATSCH POLKA 11-9188 1.25
▽49-1082 1.10

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y. TIMES
MAY 9 - 1951

BOSTON AREA SCHOOLS TO RUN FM STATION

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, May 8 — The Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council, an organization of Boston area educational institutions, received permission today from the Federal Communications Commission to construct a 20,000-watt noncommercial FM radio station. Parker Wheatley, director of the council, said that among programs planned would be broadcasts of Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The call letters WGBH have been given to the station. Its transmitter will be erected on Great Blue Hill in suburban Milton, Mass.

In addition to the symphony concerts, the station is expected to carry addresses by national and international figures speaking at the cooperating colleges and universities, lectures from classrooms, full-length performances of plays and interpretations of news and events by faculty specialists.

Members of the council, in addition to the Lowell Institute, are Boston College, Boston University, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Northeastern University and Tufts College.

The Lowell Institute Cooperative Broadcasting Council is a member of the National Association of Educational Broadcasters, which recently received a $300,000 grant from the Fund for Adult Education, an adjunct of the Ford Foundation.

This Clipping From
HERALD TRIBUNE N.Y.
MAY 9 - 1951

Munch to Lead the N.B.C. On Toscanini Invitation

At Arturo Toscanini's invitation, Charles Munch will conduct the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra for the first time in a broadcast concert of next season's regular fall and winter series, on Saturday, Jan. 26, 1952. Besides the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor, the leaders who will share this series with Mr. Toscanini are Fritz Reiner, of the Metropolitan Opera, in the concert of Jan. 19, and Guido Cantelli, who is scheduled for eight concerts. As previously announced, Mr. Toscanini is to conduct twelve of the twenty-two Saturday concerts, on Nov. 3, 10, 17 and 24, and March 8, 15, 22 and 29. Mr. Cantelli will conduct Dec. 1, 8 and 15, Feb. 2, 9, 16 and 23, and March 1. The orchestra, which is on a short vacation, will resume its weekly spring and summer schedule on Saturday, June 2.

Mr. Toscanini is in Milan with his wife, who is recovering from a serious illness, and is expected to remain in Italy until next fall. He is filling no engagements before the beginning of his N. B. C. Symphony schedule, and the National Broadcasting Company hopes that he will then have fully recovered from the knee injury which forced him to limit his 1950-'51 season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 6 - 1951

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

New Compilation Shows That There Are 659 Symphonic Groups in Country

By ROSS PARMENTER

FACTS often confound popular conceptions. The statistics on the nation's orchestras compiled by the American Symphony Orchestra League, for example, shake a number of widely held beliefs. For those Europeans who claim America has little musical culture there is the grand total. During the 1950-51 season the United States had at least 659 symphonic groups.

A breakdown of the figures also shows that music is perhaps not as closely centralized in New York as some people hold. More than half of these orchestras—343, to be exact—are community orchestras scattered across the country. The figures also reflect both the growth of the colleges as factors in the nation's musical life and the role they have played in decentralization. Of the ensembles, 231 are college orchestras.

Only thirty-two of the orchestras are listed as being professional. But this figure, added to the amateur groups, gives an indication of how music has developed in this country in the last fifty years. According to the league, there were only nine symphonies in 1900. The New York Philharmonic, the St. Louis Symphony, the Boston Symphony, the Chicago Symphony and the Cincinnati Symphony were the professional ones. The cities with community orchestras were St. Louis, New Haven, Bangor, Me., and Battle Creek, Mich.

"Additional orchestras come to light each week," says the league's News Letter, apologizing for the incompleteness of its figures. Probably more will be made known when the league holds its national convention in Chicago on May 25, 26 and 27. In the meantime, the organization is rallying those orchestras it knows about to write Congressmen asking for a repeal of the 20 per cent Federal admissions tax, which is increasing the financial difficulties of orchestras both large and small.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
MAY 3 - 1951

Boston FM Setup To Give Programs Of Adult Culture

BOSTON—The Lowell Institute Co-operative Broadcasting Council has applied to the Federal Communications Commission for a construction permit to erect a 20,000-watt FM non-commercial educational station with central studios and offices in Symphony Hall.

Auxiliary studios would also be operated in Boston College, Harvard, M.I.T., Northeastern and Tufts with Boston University continuing to operate its own FM station, WBUR.

Plans are under way for the station, which expects to go on the air next fall, to carry live full-length concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Symphony Hall as well as lectures from college classrooms, full-length performances of plays, addresses by prominent speakers appearing at various colleges and important public discussions.

In making the announcement of the proposed station's policy, Ralph Lowell, a trustee, stated "In the field of commercial radio, Boston has well-established stations, both AM and FM, and we shall not duplicate their offerings. We shall try, instead, to develop a full schedule of programs in the areas generally described as 'adult education'"

Engineering plans have been prepared by representatives of Harvard and M.I.T. and facilities will be equipped with three-kilowatt FM transmitters located on top of Great Blue Hill which is about 10 miles south of Boston. The station will be managed by Parker Wheatley, since 1946 a director of the Lowell Institute, and former chief of the radio programs section of the Armed Forces Radio Service.

Mr. Lowell reported that a radio survey of the five counties in Eastern Massachusetts in January, 1951 showed that more than 102,000 families had FM receivers.

May 18, 1951

House to Curb Admissions Tax

Schools, Churches Among Benefited

WASHINGTON, May 17 (AP) —The House ways and means committee voted tentatively today to lift the federal admission tax from high school athletic contests and other gatherings where all the proceeds go to nonprofit educational, charitable and religious institutions.

The tax of one cent for each five cents of admission fee would continue to apply, however, to college football games and other university sports.

The tax would not apply henceforth to opera companies not operated for the purpose of making a profit. Neither would it cover community supported symphony orchestras, non-profit cooperative or community center movies, non-profit agricultural fairs, concerts by non-profit civic organizations, national guard or reserve officer organizations, veterans organizations, police and fire departments and funds set up for the benefit of their members and dependents.

Admissions to swimming pools and other places providing facilities for physical exercise also would be exempt if operated by a governmental unit.

Not exempt would be admissions to wrestling and boxing matches, carnivals, rodeos or circuses where professionals are paid to perform or to athletic contests of any kind unless the proceeds are exclusively for the benefit of elementary or secondary (high) schools.

The net loss from the exemptions was estimated at $16,000,000 a year.

Amending one of yesterday's decisions on a new tax bill, the committee decided to tax pipes, cigar holders and cigarette holders 20 per cent. at the manufacturers' level, rather than at retail. Such smoking accessories are not now taxed.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 9 - 1951

MUNCH TO CONDUCT ON AIR

Will Be Guest Conductor of the N. B. C. Symphony in Fall

Charles Munch will make his first appearance as guest conductor of the N. B. C. Symphony next season, it was announced yesterday. He and Fritz Reiner will conduct one concert apiece during the season. Guido Cantelli, who was recommended by Arturo Toscanini to lead the orchestra three years ago, will be on the podium for three of the broadcast concerts.

Mr. Toscanini, who had to cancel some of his concerts this last season because of an old knee injury, will return to lead twelve programs. They will fall in three groups of four broadcasts at the beginning, middle and end of the season. His first concert will be Nov. 3, but the orchestra will remain on the air during the summer and fall.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER
NOV 25 1951

Pierre Monteux At Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have its second week under the direction of Pierre Monteux with concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and likewise the second concert of the Sunday series on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 2.

[280]

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 81

Tanglewood

1950 - 1951

TANGLEWOOD

1950-

1951

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
1032	72 Leaves	12¾ × 10¼
1033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
1034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
1036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
→1041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
1042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 2,329,272) (S 4,474,484)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
JUL 16 1950

Train and Bus Trips To Berkshire Music Fete

Attention music lovers! A group of three one-day, round trip Sunday excursions from New York City to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be run July 30 and Aug. 6 and 13 by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. The $6.35 fare covers all transportation, general admission to concerts and taxes.

These one-day excursions supplement the railroad's four-day, all-expense trips to see and hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform its Summer concerts in the Tanglewood Music Shed, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and guest conductors. Prices of the four-day tours start at $54.

Lawn Picnic.

Sunday morning excursion trains will leave Grand Central Terminal at 8:15 and arrive at Stockbridge at 12:10, where a bus will take tourists to Tanglewood. You can bring lunch along and picnic on the lawns surrounding the Music Shed, or purchase light snacks on the grounds.

Buses will transport excursionists to Pittsfield after the concerts in plenty of time to dine at leisure before boarding the train at 7:30 P. M. for New York. For further details consult the New Haven Railroad's Travel Bureau, main waiting room, Grand Central Terminal.

Bingler Vacation Tours is also operating "Roughing it with Music" excursions to the Berkshire Festival every weekend through Aug. 12. Priced at $19.95, the rate includes round trip transportation in de luxe motor coaches, admission to Saturday and Sunday concerts, all taxes, tours of Westchester County and the Berkshire foothills and accommodations in tents for six with bunks on a 300-acre estate at Austerlitz, N. Y., six miles from the Festival. Food is extra and lake swimming is available.

Tours leave the Consolidated Bus Terminal, 201 W. 41st St., every Saturday at 8:30 A. M. and return to New York City Sunday evening.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 130,818) (S 130,916)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES HERALD
JUL 1 1950

Festival To Give Many Bach Works

Special to The Times Herald

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 11.—The Berkshire Music Center and Festival will perform 61 compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach in 20 events this summer, it was announced today. The comprehensive program, marking the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, began yesterday with the performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of five Bach pieces, and will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the "Mass in B Minor" will be performed. The Mass is one of the two full-length program pieces included in the commemorative series, the other being "The Art of Fugue," arranged for string quartet.

All six of Bach's "Brandenburg Concertos" and all four of his orchestral suites will be performed this weekend and next in four concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The remainder of the Bach repertoire will be performed by members of the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, by the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and by Alexander Schneidar, violinist and participant at the recent Prades festival recently honoring Bach in France. Lectures on Bach will be delivered by the co-editors of the "Bach Reader," Arthur Mendel and Hans David. Julius Herford of the faculty will hold classes on the analysis of Bach's music.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 118,254) (S 159,799)
This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
JUL 9 - 1950

Bach Works On Program At Festival

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS. — The Berkshire Music Center and Festival will perform 61 compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach in 20 events this Summer.

The comprehensive program, marking the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, began yesterday with the performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of five Bach pieces, and will continue almost daily until August 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be performed.

The mass is one of two full-length program pieces included in the commemorative series, the other being the Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

All six of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites will be performed this week end and next in four concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

The remainder of the Bach repertoire will be performed by members of the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, by the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and by Alexander Schneider, violinist and participant at the recent Prades festival honoring Bach in France.

Lectures on Bach will be delivered by the co-editors of the "Bach Reader," Arthur Mendel and Hans David. Julius Herford of the faculty will hold classes on the analysis of Bach's music.

While many of the Bach programs are open to the public, others are open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only. Voluntary contributions to the friends to help support the activities of the music school directed by Dr. Koussevitzky constitute membership and entitle contributors to attend 37 musical events, including two operas.

Boston Herald 7-26

Berkshire Festival Series Opens Tomorrow

The first of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood will be given tomorrow night at 8:15 under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. With Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky will open the annual series of public concerts in the large Music Shed, and will also conduct Saturday night. Sunday afternoon Leonard Bernstein will be the guest conductor.

HT

E, THURSDAY, JUL

Mozart Opera Is Presented At Tanglewood

Sarah Caldwell Adaptation of 'Finta Giardiniera' Gets Spirited Production

By Arthur Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—The Berkshire Music Center's explorations among old neglected operas have led it to the thoroughly delightful choice of Mozart's "Finta Giardiniera" shown here at Tanglewood last night.

No protest is likely to be filed that a towering work has been allowed, except for occasional revivals, to gather dust. But as presented by a spirited and vocally endowed cast under the direction of Sarah Caldwell, who also adapted it, this opera buffa of Mozart's youth turned out to be an uncommonly worthwhile venture for the music center. Mozart's mastery at the age of eighteen, when he wrote it, is something that no longer astonishes us. But at this inexperienced stage in his dramatic career, the wit and fancy of his settings and such ability to rise to dramatic situation were an extraordinary surprise.

The pros and cons of Miss Caldwell's adaptation are being animatedly advanced here. Any tampering with an original is unfortunate. It inevitably leaves one with a sense of being deceived. But let us not underestimate what her efforts may have done to make the production so enjoyable. The original not only had to a confusing degree the dubious motivations and the tangled and improbable situations typical of opera buffa. It also juxtaposed the serious and comic in jolting fashion. If Miss Caldwell does not eliminate the basic weaknesses, she alleviates them. Perhaps she has taken an all too easy way out through condensation, rearrangement and transformation of the libretto and through the device of spreading the comic element too thickly over the whole.

The clowning was excessive and verged on the offensive in tender portions, and there was too little cantabile singing to offset these from the clipped articulation acceptable for buffa style. One aria of the original is a play on tone-painting. The singer describes the orchestration: "Now the violas are playing . . . that means danger is near," and so on. Taking her cue fro mthis, she weaves other allusions into the freely adapted text, until they become, at the expense of plot development, a fixed idea.

Great art operates on several levels, but Miss Caldwell is content with making out of this a breezy, modest piece eminently serviceable to conservatories with singers who can cope with Mozart's vocal problems.

Music Eagle July 26

Music Center Opera Students Present 'La Finta Giardiniera'

By JAY G. ROSENFIELD

TANGLEWOOD — Mozart's very early and seldom heard "La Finta Giardiniera" was the vehicle upon which the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center rode to glory last night in the theatre concert hall. The department has presented several evenings of opera excerpts to audiences of the Center's Friends already this season but this was its first major offering and it would not be possible to heap too much credit on the shoulders of Sarah Caldwell and her assistants who prepared and directed the opera. A theatre-packed audience of 1250 attended.

Miss Caldwell, herself, conducted the orchestra, 30 men strong and chosen from the Center's student body. She injected a gaiety and brisk spirit into the whole production which whirled it along in the happiest and most joyful manner.

The plot concerns itself hardly at all with credulity. In fact, it pokes obvious fun at itself at various spots of which the main ones are the aria in which the Count, Belfiore, played by Raymond Smolover, jokes with the orchestra in the pit; when Nardo, played by Julian Patrick, courts Serpetta, Miss Marni Nixon, in three languages; or again when Belfiore questions Sandrina's (Adele Addison) exhortation to silence during the most excited moment of the final scene with a "What? On a diminished seventh?"

The overture starts with a curt, animated allegro which comes soon to a natural conclusion and is followed without pause by a graceful andante before the curtain rises. Mozart himself took this overture, really two distinct movements, added a light final allegro and thus made himself another complete symphony.

The scenery for the three acts was colorful, if the third act wine cellar can so be included, imaginative and suggestive rather than realistic of the gilded feudal days when wigs, silk breeches, silver buckles and paniered dresses were appropriate.

The great success of the evening centered on the uniformly scintillating cast of seven characters, each one of whom Mozart gave ample and lavish opportunities to display his capabilities, and who acquitted themselves last night with thrilling brilliancy. The music is happy and melodious consistently. Even though it may not be very profound, it is more than agreeable and the wealth of vocal splendor which poured from the youthful, gifted voices of the stellar septet carried the audience to heights of enjoyment.

The plot's entanglements, in the briefest possible way, has to do with a buffoon magistrate's (Mac Morgan) intrigues to get his niece (Nancy Trickey) married, he hopes, to Count Belfiore. Miss Addison, a Springfield girl, in the title role which translates nearest to "the fake gardener-ess" was fascinating vocally, but her accomplishments were so adequately matched and assisted by every other member of the select cast that it is unjust to distinguish any particular one. The seventh pillar of the cast was the poet Ramiro, who was sung, as was often the operatic custom, by a female voice, in this case the very able Edith Evans.

This opera was a product of Mozart's 17th year. He revised it slightly in later years, but its first presentation was soon after its commission for the 1775 carnival in Munich. The records say that it was a local event without consequences.

Miss Caldwell in her short prefatory and explanatory remarks was careful to point out that the burlesque incidents and jokes of the play were Mozart's, and not hers.

The music just bubbles without end with arias and ensemble numbers, many of which in a florid style were dashed off as easily as though they were simple little common phrases, and the production moved forward with no suspicion that everyone involved in it from the scenic, musical or any other department, had had no contact with it less than three weeks ago. Miss Caldwell held the alert orchestra and the whole production in complete control and gave it an over-all youthful vivacity which made it not only one of the Center's high lights in its short career but one of which it could be proud under any circumstances whatsoever.

Eagle July 27

Tanglewood

Roth String Quartet Performs Tonight

TANGLEWOOD—The second of five Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts at the theatre-concert hall in Tanglewood will be presented at 8.15 tonight when the famous Roth String Quartet will perform Bach's "Art of the Fugue."

This will be the first time the Roth Quartet has played at Tanglewood and it will also be the first time the "Art of the Fugue" has been presented here.

Bach's purpose in writing this piece was to show all the ways that a fugue could be written. He took one theme and succeeded in varying the rhythms and in turning it upside down, backwards, sideways, and mirror fashion. He then did the same things over again with another theme added in what is called a double fugue, followed by a triple fugue and so on.

Bach died before he could finish this work and it ends, therefore, halfway through the quadruple fugue. The Roth Quartet is one of the few chamber groups to play this last unfinished fugue, and the performance tonight will end rather abruptly in the middle of a phrase.

As in the case of other Coolidge concerts at Tanglewood this will be for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

[2]

SEVENTY-SIX TODAY: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky had a busy schedule on his 76th birthday today, spending most of the morning rehearsing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the opening concert in the Music Shed tomorrow night at 8.15. Here the maestro is caught in a rare pose directing the orchestra. Following rehearsal Dr. Koussevitzky was presented a birthday cake which he cut in view of the 450 students at the Berkshire Music Center.

Babbitt

Music Students at Tanglewood Celebrate Maestro's Birthday

Dr. Koussevitzky, 76 Today, Feted— Music Shed Programs Open Tomorrow— Bernstein Conducts Sunday

TANGLEWOOD — Marking the halfway point of the season, Tanglewood today readied for the opening of the first of nine Music Shed concerts tomorrow, and at the same time celebrated the 76th birthday of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who have played in six concerts of the Bach-Mozart Festival here have been joined by the rest of the orchestra, fresh from the Esplanade series in Boston.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the opening Shed concert tomorrow night, consisting of Beethoven's Eroica symphony and Sibelius' second symphony.

Tonight, the Roth String Quartet will continue the presentation of music by Bach with a performance of "The Art of Fugue"; and on Friday the student orchestra at Tanglewood will commemorate the 200th anniversary of Bach's death with a concert featuring concertos for two, three, and four pianos, and for two violins.

Saturday evening's program will see Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the orchestra in Bruckner's seventh symphony, Debussy's two nocturnes ("Clouds" and "Festivals"), and "The Sea,,, also by the French composer.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct Sunday's concert, at 3 PM. The program will include Brahms' fourth symphony; Harold Shapero's "Adagio," from his symphony for classical orchestra; David Diamond's "Timon of Athens"; and Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs," with Ellabelle Davis as soprano soloist.

Saturday at 10 AM, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold the first of its three public rehearsals, the proceeds from the admission to go to the orchestra's pension fund. Admission may be secured at the box office at the Tanglewood main gate.

Approximately 43,000 persons will have attended the 28 musical events performed at Tanglewood up to the first Shed concert. More than 23,000 of these made up the audiences for the six Bach-Mozart concerts in the theatre-concert hall, the remainder having attended the Mozart opera, and other events produced by the students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, and the artists performing in the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation concert series of chamber music.

With ticket sales for the nine Shed concerts approximately even with last year's at this time, it is expected that last year's over-all attendance at Tanglewood, 181,000 will be reached again in 1950.

Eagle July 27

Four Pianos To Be Featured In Tanglewood Bach Program

Babbitt

Irwin Hoffman, right, will conduct the student orchestra at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon at 4.30 in Bach's only four-piano concerto. Rehearsing with Hoffman are the four pianists, Frances Reicher, Frances Myska, Donald Smith and Betty Lou Schade, as Leonard Bernstein, standing in the rear, looks on.

TANGLEWOOD — Two hundred years to the day after the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, students at the Berkshire Music Center will honor the composer with a performance of four of his concerti. The concert will be tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, and will include concerti for two violins, for two pianos, for three pianos, and for four pianos.

Students in Department II will be led by Charles Schiff in the playing of the only concerto for two violins that Bach wrote; Moshe Muryitz and Donna Walsh will be soloists. Bach's only four-piano concerto will be performed with Frances Reicher, Frances Myska, Donald Smith, and Betty Lou Schade as soloists. Irwin Hoffman will conduct.

The two-piano concerto will be conducted by Jurriaan Andriessen, Ralph Einstein and Joseph Rezits will be pianists. Joyce Paul, Norma Holmes, and Frank Miller will perform the concerto for three pianos, with Wolfgang Shanzer conducting.

This performance, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, continues homage being paid to Bach on the bicentennial of his death at the Berkshire Music Center. In addition to tomorrow's student program, a high light will come on Aug. 10, when Serge Koussevitsky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's B minor mass, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Eagle July 27

Full Orchestra Concerts Begin at Tanglewood

Today marks the opening of the Tanglewood Shed concerts by the entire complement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

After a highly successful series of six Bach-Mozart concerts, the Berkshire Music Center will offer the Beethoven Eroica Symphony and the Sibelius Second this evening. On Saturday, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Bruckner's Seventh Symphony and Debussy's "Clouds," "Festivals" and "The Sea." On Sunday Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Brahms' Fourth Symphony, Harold Shapero's "Adagio," David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" and Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" with Ellabelle Davis as soloist.

The student orchestra at Tanglewood will commemorate the 200th anniversary of Bach's death on Friday with a concerto program, and on Saturday morning at 10, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold the first of its three public rehearsals, with proceeds going to the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Music

Eagle July 27

Bach's Last Work Presented By Roths at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The second of the concerts being offered at Tanglewood by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and her Foundation in the Library of Congress was given by the Roth String Quartet last night in the theatre-concert hall. The Roths devoted their whole program to the "Art of the Fugue" of Bach which has been arranged for string quartet by Roy Harris and M. D. Herter Norton.

This was Bach's last work. In fact, he died with a few fragments not completed. It is professedly a work of instruction illustrating the possibilities of fugue writing in all its complexities. It centers on one single chief subject and in one tonality and leads from simple beauty to the heights of contrapuntal accumulation and emotional intensity and is a systematic demonstration of formal construction in music.

The Roths played it with profound devotion and a scrupulous attention to style and the nature of the work. Bach wrote in four-part harmony, without designating for what instruments or voices he intended it to be. It is most commonly heard on a keyboard instrument but in last night's arrangement it becomes possible, especially in such devoted hands, to hear the inner construction more clearly. In addition the Roths made it transparent by the individual excellence of each player, and by giving each voice tonal intensity rather than mere force and weight. The members of the quartet are Feri Roth and Jeno Antal, violins; Nicholas Harsanyi, viola, and Janos Starker, cello.

The size of the audience and their absorbed attention revealed the Roths' type of playing and, from the other viewpoint, the studious and scholarly interests of many of those present. It was a program for which the student body of the Berkshire Music Center can be deeply in the gratitude of Mrs. Coolidge, for such a program is not ordinarily heard on the more usual concerts.

Bach became less concerned with worldly success as he grew older, and he sought perfection by logic and consistency. In the evening-long succession of fugues he wrote on the original D minor theme, he reanimates it by imagination and invention, but the variety must come from the players themselves. That it was at times stirring is the measure of the performance.

to the cleaners . . . Reports from the informal 76th birthday party yesterday at Tanglewood for Dr. Koussevitzky are to the effect that the maestro's technique with a cake knife is allegro con brio . . . .

Eagle July 27

[3]

Letters

Mozart on the Grass

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The tender strains of Mozart penetrate the air as the summer sun throws its warm rays on the throng. Isn't that lovely? Do you see those purple socks?

The violins predominate with delicate precision. That theme is haunting. I hope I can remember it. Abbreviated shorts are rolled even higher. The pianos take the melody now and the clear-cut notes are wafted on gentle breezes to eager listeners lying prone on rug, Sunday Times or plain unadulterated terra firma.

Is that red bra glued on? Fits like molded as a clerk once said. Why didn't we wear our bathing suits? Such an exceptional opportunity for a musical sun bath.

Dear Mr. Mozart, please forgive us if our minds wander a bit. Now we have it. Just close your eyes and concentrate. What a happy blending of piano and strings.

Intermission. "Would you like a drink?" "Yes, anything wet. No, bring me some ice cream. I'm starving." "Excuse me please!" "Oh, I didn't mean to step on your foot."

"Tell Felice there's plenty of room on our robe. The more the merrier, you know." "Anybody riding to New York?" "I'd like a ride, mister. Gee, thanks!"

"The top of your head looks like a beet, Ernie. Remember, I warned you to wear a hat."

First call—second and third. The instant quiet is really amazing. Intent faces anxiously await the first notes of the B flat symphony and many smile with pleasure as if familiar with every phrase.

I can't say I like bare feet. But after all, it's a free country.

The sparkling allegro in the "Jupiter Symphony" is a stirring experience and a brilliant finale to the afternoon's performance.

"Watch your step, Jimmie! And don't step on the lady's hat. And hurry or we'll miss the bus."

MARIE SYLVESTER.
Pittsfield.

Shabby Treatment

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

This to confirm my verbal complaint to you of today that I recently wrote to one of the Lenox inns for their accommodations rates. The one I unfortunately decided on responded they had dormitory accommodations only at $58 a week and that a $15 deposit would hold it. I sent them $15. They acknowledged receipt of it in a letter by return mail which then stated that for July 21 (my date of arrival) and July 22, the rate would be $13 a day.

I arrived for the Tanglewood Festival on the morning of July 21, and on the evening of that day, was told by them that due to a misunderstanding, I could not stay there for a week at $58 a week and that they preferred that I move out immediately as they had too many other applicants, which I did.

JOHN SPANUR.
2158 Carabel Avenue,
Lakewood 7, Ohio.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 25,402)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 10 1950

Tanglewood Opening Draws Crowd, Koussevitsky Gives Up Responsibility

Ideal weather and music commemorating the bicentennial of Bach's death, brought thousands of music lovers to Tanglewood for the first two concerts of the season Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

An audience which packed the theater shed to capacity and overflowed by the hundreds on the grounds outside, rose in tribute to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he appeared on the stage for the opening program Saturday night.

On Sunday afternoon nearly 3,000 heard more Bach played by the Boston Symphony. The program [redacted] Gregor Piatigorsky, cello soloist, included Suite No. 3 in C Major for cello, the Bradenburg Concertos Nos. 2 and 5 and Suite No. 3 in D Major.

Next Saturday and Sunday the programs will again be devoted to the music of Bach with the chorus featured in several cantatas.

In an interview on the CBS radio program "Your Invitation to Music" Sunday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky criticized the trustees of the Boston Symphony for inviting a guest conductor for the Tanglewood series.

Although he did not name the guest conductor, Koussevitzky said he thought the festival should be used as a school for American conductors. Victor De Sabata, Italian conductor, has been invited by the trustees to conduct at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 and 5.

Koussevitzky, who retired last summer after 25 years of leading the Boston Symphony, retains his directorship of the Berkshire festival. In the radio interview recorded at his Lenox home, he said he would "never give up" Tanglewood because it was "my child, my creation, my blood and tears."

In a discussion of his choice of conductors who became his "active pupils" at Tanglewood, he said Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar De Carvalho, considered "the best of my pupils" had been invited to conduct festival concerts.

"But this season," he said, "the trustees, without my knowledge and without asking me, themselves invited a guest conductor. So this year, I give up any responsibility for any program of the festival other than those of my pupils or those I direct myself.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

ETHESDA, MD
EWS
7/16/50

Chester Petranek Will Study Under Serge Koussevitzky

Chester J. Petranek, director of instrumental music in the Montgomery County schools, will study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center under the eminent musician, Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Petranek has been accepted as a viola player in the advanced orchestra at the Tanglewood, Mass., center.

While there he will have intensive training in orchestra and chamber music under a faculty made up of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will be in the company of some 400 top musicians and students from the nation's finest music schools.

Mr. Petranek has been with the Montgomery County schools for the past four years. He also director of the Montgomery Symphony Orchestra, and a member of its string quartet, which has appeared in several local recitals. He makes his home at 9821 Rosensteel Avenue Forest Glen, with Mrs. Petranek and their three children.

BERSHIRE FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD, Lenox Mass.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky; part of orchestra will give four programs of Bach's music and two of Mozart's under Dr. Koussevitzky in Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall; full orchestra will give its customary nine concerts in the Music Shed, four of which will be under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky; two under Victor De Sabata and Leonard Bernstein, and one under Eleazar de Carvalho; general admission will be on sale the day of each concert.

The schedule for the month of July follows:

Saturday, July 8, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 1, 3; Cantata No. 83, Concerto No. 8 for flute, violin and piano; Suite No. 4.

Sunday, July 9, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 2, 5; Cello suite (Gregor Piatigorsky), Suite No. 3.

Saturday, July 15, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 4, 6; Cantatas Nos. 161 and 80 (Hugh Ross, conducting).

Sunday, July 16, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Bach, Suites Nos. 1, 2; Violin Concerto in E major (Ruth Posselt); Cantatas Nos. 12, 50.

Saturday, July 22, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Mozart. Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Haffner Serenade, Piano Concerto in C major, K. 467 (Lukas Foss); Symphony No. 34 in C (K. 338).

Sunday, July 23, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Mozart, Symphony No. 33 in B flat (K. 319), Concerto for two pianos (Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff), Serenade in C minor for winds, Symphony in C (Jupiter).

Series A: Thursday, July 27, 8:15, . Kussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

Saturday, July 29, 8:15 Bruckner, Symphony No. 7; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, La Mer.

Sunday, July 30, 3 p.m., Bernstein. Shapero, Adagietto; Diamond, Timon of Athens; Foss, The Song of Songs (Ellabelle Davis, soprano), Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ (S 13,721)
This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS-REGISTER
JUL 9 - 1950

Tanglewood Will Give U. S. Opera Premiere

NEW YORK — (UP) — The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Mass., this Summer by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, on August 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

"The King of Yvetot" is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique in Paris, Jan. 6, 1930, and has been given since in Dusseldorf, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

The one-act opera, "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss of the Tanglewood faculty, based on the short story of Mark Twain, also will be produced in the theater at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,002)
This Clipping From NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 10 1950

Overflow Crowd At Second Concert At Berkshire Festival

A most appreciative and for the most part obviously doting audience watched Serge Koussevitzky conduct the second concert in the Berkshire Festival Bach series at [redacted] yesterday afternoon. It was the second overflow crowd, as nearly 3,000 attended the opening concert Saturday night.

The Brandenburg Concertos which opened and closed the concert were executed delightfully, feelingly and with great affection and ability. The No. 2 in F Major for violin, flute, oboe and trumpet was amazing and notably so for the special trumpet virtuosity, which was exacting for the performer, Roger Voisin. The No. 5 in D Major for piano and flute had everyone feeling, and physically following, the compelling rhythms and beautiful harmonies. This concerto featured Lukas Foss at the piano, and the applause for this young artist and the conductor at the close was overwhelming.

The D Major Suite No. 3 was very nicely and exquisitely rendered and was outstanding from a more popular point of view, as it included the air for the G string.

Gregor Piatigorsky performed the Suite No. 3 in C Major, which is for unaccompanied 'cello. Unless one is a 'cello enthusiast or executant, it would be difficult to appreciate this effort to the extent it merits. Bach composed so intelligently and deftly for this instrument that the suite not only gave Piatigorsky a perfect vehicle for his virtuosity, but provided for artistic interpretation.

It was a beautiful summer day and a perfect background and setting for Bach's magnificence. —F. M. R.

[4]

Letters

Mozart on the Grass

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The tender strains of Mozart penetrate the air as the summer sun throws its warm rays on the throng. Isn't that lovely? Do you see those purple socks?

The violins predominate with delicate precision. That theme is haunting. I hope I can remember it. Abbreviated shorts are rolled even higher. The pianos take the melody now and the clear-cut notes are wafted on gentle breezes to eager listeners lying prone on rug, Sunday Times or plain unadulterated terra firma.

Is that red bra glued on? Fits like molded as a clerk once said. Why didn't we wear our bathing suits? Such an exceptional opportunity for a musical sun bath.

Dear Mr. Mozart, please forgive us if our minds wander a bit. Now we have it. Just close your eyes and concentrate. What a happy blending of piano and strings.

Intermission. "Would you like a drink?" "Yes, anything wet. No, bring me some ice cream. I'm starving." "Excuse me please!" "Oh, I didn't mean to step on your foot."

"Tell Felice there's plenty of room on our robe. The more the merrier, you know." "Anybody riding to New York?" "I'd like a ride, mister. Gee, thanks!"

"The top of your head looks like a beet, Ernie. Remember, I warned you to wear a hat."

First call—second and third. The instant quiet is really amazing. Intent faces anxiously await the first notes of the B flat symphony and many smile with pleasure as if familiar with every phrase.

I can't say I like bare feet. But after all, it's a free country.

The sparkling allegro in the "Jupiter Symphony" is a stirring experience and a brilliant finale to the afternoon's performance.

"Watch your step, Jimmie! And don't step on the lady's hat. And hurry or we'll miss the bus."

MARIE SYLVESTER.
Pittsfield.

Eagle July 2

Shabby Treatment

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

This to confirm my verbal complaint to you of today that I recently wrote to one of the Lenox inns for their accommodations rates. The one I unfortunately decided on responded they had dormitory accommodations only at $58 a week and that a $15 deposit would hold it. I sent them $15. They acknowledged receipt of it in a letter by return mail which then stated that for July 21 (my date of arrival) and July 22, the rate would be $13 a day.

I arrived for the Tanglewood Festival on the morning of July 21, and on the evening of that day, was told by them that due to a misunderstanding, I could not stay there for a week at $58 a week and that they preferred that I move out immediately as they had too many other applicants, which I did.

JOHN SPANUR.
2152 Carabel Avenue,
Lakewood 7, Ohio.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 25,402)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 10 1950

Tanglewood Opening Draws Crowd, Koussevitsky Gives Up Responsibility

Ideal weather and music commemorating the bicentennial of Bach's death brought thousands of music lovers to Tanglewood for the first two concerts of the season Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

An audience which packed the theater shed to capacity and overflowed by the hundreds on the grounds outside, rose in tribute to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he appeared on the stage for the opening program Saturday night.

On Sunday afternoon nearly 3,000 heard more Bach played by the Boston Symphony. The program [illegible] Gregor Piatigorsky, cello soloist, included Suite No. 3 in C Major for cello, the Bradenburg Concertos Nos. 2 and 5 and Suite No. 3 in D Major.

Next Saturday and Sunday the programs will again be devoted to the music of Bach with the chorus featured in several cantatas.

In an interview on the CBS radio program "Your Invitation to Music" Sunday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky criticized the trustees of the Boston Symphony for inviting a guest conductor for the Tanglewood series.

Although he did not name the guest conductor, Koussevitzky said he thought the festival should be used as a school for American conductors. Victor De Sabata, Italian conductor, has been invited by the trustees to conduct at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 and 5.

Koussevitzky, who retired last summer after 25 years of leading the Boston Symphony, retains his directorship of the Berkshire festival. In the radio interview recorded at his Lenox home, he said he would "never give up" Tanglewood because it was "my child, my creation, my blood and tears."

In a discussion of his choice of conductors who became his "active pupils" at Tanglewood, he said Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar De Carvalho, considered "the best of my pupils" had been invited to conduct festival concerts.

"But this season," he said, "the trustees, without my knowledge and without asking me, themselves invited a guest conductor. So this year, I give up any responsibility for any program of the festival other than those of my pupils or those I direct myself.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

BETHESDA, MD
NEWS
6/16/50

Chester Petranek Will Study Under Serge Koussevitzky

Chester J. Petranek, director of instrumental music in the Montgomery County schools, will study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center under the eminent musician, Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Petranek has been accepted as a viola player in the advanced orchestra at the Tanglewood, Mass., center.

While there he will have intensive training in orchestra and chamber music under a faculty made up of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and will be in the company of some 400 top musicians and students from the nation's finest music schools.

Mr. Petranek has been with the Montgomery County schools for the past four years. He also is director of the Montgomery Symphony Orchestra, and a member of its string quartet, which has appeared in several local recitals. He makes his home at 9821 Rosensteel Avenue Forest Glen, with Mrs. Petranek and their three children.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

WILLIAMSPORT, PA
SUN-T
7/2/50

BERSHIRE FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD, Lenox Mass.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky; part of orchestra will give four programs of Bach's music and two of Mozart's under Dr. Koussevitzky in Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall; full orchestra will give its customary nine concerts in the Music Shed, four of which will be under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky; two under Victor De Sabata and Leonard Bernstein, and one under Eleazar de Carvalho; general admission will be on sale the day of each concert.

The schedule for the month of July follows:

Saturday, July 8, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 1, 3; Cantata No. 83, Concerto No. 8 for flute, violin and piano; Suite No. 4.

Sunday, July 9, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 2, 5; Cello suite (Gregor Piatigorsky), Suite No. 3.

Saturday, July 15, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Bach, Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 4, 6; Cantatas Nos. 161 and 80 (Hugh Ross, conducting).

Sunday, July 16, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Bach, Suites Nos. 1, 2; Violin Concerto in E major (Ruth Posselt); Cantatas Nos. 12, 50.

Saturday, July 22, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Mozart. Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Haffner Serenade, Piano Concerto in C major, K. 467 (Lukas Foss); Symphony No. 34 in C (K. 338).

Sunday, July 23, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Mozart, Symphony No. 33 in B flat (K. 319), Concerto for two pianos (Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff); Serenade in C minor for winds, Symphony in C (Jupiter).

Series A: Thursday, July 27, 8:15, Kussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

Saturday, July 29, 8:15, Bruckner, Symphony No. 7; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, La Mer.

Sunday, July 30, 3 p.m., Bernstein, Shapero, Adagietto; Diamond, Timon of Athens; Foss, The Song of Songs (Ellabelle Davis, soprano), Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (S 83,721)
This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS-REGISTER
JUL 9 - 1950

Tanglewood Will Give U. S. Opera Premiere

NEW YORK — (UP) — The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Mass., this Summer by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, on August 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

"The King of Yvetot" is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique in Paris, Jan. 6, 1930, and has been given since in Dusseldorf, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

The one-act opera, "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss of the Tanglewood faculty, based on the short story of Mark Twain, also will be produced in the theater at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 12,002)
This Clipping From NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 10 1950

Overflow Crowd At Second Concert At Berkshire Festival

A most appreciative and for the most part obviously doting audience watched Serge Koussevitzky conduct the second concert in the Berkshire Festival Bach series at [illegible] yesterday afternoon. It was the second overflow crowd, as nearly 3,000 attended the opening concert Saturday night.

The Brandenburg Concertos which opened and closed the concert were executed delightfully, feelingly and with great affection and ability. The No. 2 in F Major for violin, flute, oboe and trumpet was amazing and notably so for the special trumpet virtuosity, which was exacting for the performer, Roger Voisin. The No. 5 in D Major for piano and flute had everyone feeling, and physically following, the compelling rhythms and beautiful harmonies. This concerto featured Lukas Foss at the piano, and the applause for this young artist and the conductor at the close was overwhelming.

The D Major Suite No. 3 was very nicely and exquisitely rendered and was outstanding from a more popular point of view, as it included the air for the G string.

Gregor Piatigorsky performed the Suite No. 3 in C Major, which is for unaccompanied 'cello. Unless one is a 'cello enthusiast or executant, it would be difficult to appreciate this effort to the extent it merits. Bach composed so intelligently and deftly for this instrument that the suite not only gave Piatigorsky a perfect vehicle for his virtuosity, but provided for artistic interpretation.

It was a beautiful summer day and a perfect background and setting for Bach's magnificence.
—F. M. R.

[4]

Cir. (D 79,682)
This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS SENTINEL
JUL 14 1950

20 Bach Performances Scheduled at Berkshire

NEW YORK, July 14. (UP) — A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 12 1950

"Le Roi d'Yvetot" Among 40 Offerings

Open to Friends of Music Center at Tanglewood— 34 Concerts Also Listed.

The first American performance of a modern European opera is among nearly 40 offerings by students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, that will be open this season to Friends of the Music Center, it was announced today.

The performances are given by students in the opera, choral, and orchestral sections of the advanced school at Tanglewood. They are not open to the general public but those who have become members of the Friends of the Music Center by contributing any sums to the organization, are welcomed without admission charge.

Dr. Lewis Perry, retired headmaster of Phillips Andover academy and a member of a family long intimately identified with Williams college, is chairman of the Friends group.

Jacques Ibert's comic opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is the work which will be given its American premier by students of the opera department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss, who has just resigned as pianist with the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" are other productions to be given by the opera school students. In addition there will be 34 concerts and recitals by the choral and orchestral groups. Also included will be the series of chamber music concerts made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation of the Library of Congress, with performances by Alexander Schneider, James Friskin, the Roth string quartet and the Ricci trio.

Dr. Perry said many of those who acquire membership in the Friends of the Music Center and thus become eligible to attend the Music Center offering, do so by giving modest sums. But, he said, "a growing number of full tuition, $150 scholarships are being provided by donors," to enable young musicians to study under the master teachers at Tanglewood. Dr. Perry said that last year contributions totaled $27,000.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
224 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,674) (S 4,674)
This Clipping From SARASOTA, FLA.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
JUL 12 1950

"NOW EVERYTHING is different," says Serge Koussevitzky, father of Berkshire Festival.

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The Berkshire Festival did not begin, nor will it end, with Serge Koussevitzky. But he is the Grand Seigneur of music in the hills. He has been present at the festival's burgeoning and considers it his baby.

That, no doubt, is why Koussevitzky was irked when the Boston Symphony management engaged Victor de Sabata to conduct a series of concerts in August, which he himself had declined.

"Tanglewood, it is my child," he said in a recent radio interview. "It is my creation. It is my blood and tears. Tanglewood I will never give up."

Thus, he has declined responsibility for any programs but his own and will not be listed as festival director, although he will conduct his scheduled concerts.

* * *

Koussevitzky felt, apparently, that he should have had a say in the selection of guest conductors. "Some of the guest conductors . . . like . . . Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho . . . are considered the best of my pupils. Therefore I invite them to conduct the festival concerts. And I considered always that this school is for the Americas and for America's gifted people."

To Koussevitzky, the Festival is his own creation. True enough, his vision, in part, made it a national rather than a regional affair.

* * *

Today, long before the Festival opens, long after it closes and before his Winter season begins, Koussevitzky is in residence at his mountain side home, Serenac. The spaciousness befits a man of vision. From his living room windows, Koussevitzky has one of the grandest views in all the Berkshires. Looking down the mountain he can see the Shed and main house at Tanglewood, and beyond Lake Mahkeenac nestled in the Stockbridge Bowl, the rolling hills in the distance.

In the living room of Serenac, Koussevitzky the other day looked back over 14 years.

"When I came here," he said, "the manager of the Curtis Hotel told me he would have to close the hotel. No more business."

Remember, we were just beginning to pull out of the depression.

"We give three concerts that year," Koussevitzky went on. "When they were over the same hotel man said to me, 'This and a little more will save us.' The next year, with two weeks of festival, the hotel had the business they needed.

"Now everything is different. Grounds are more expensive. (Like many Berkshire County folk, Koussevitzky speaks of "land," in the sense of real estate, as "ground.") Every house in the village has become an inn. The season is lengthened."

* * *

Having helped to make what is truly a "Salzburg in America" and founded a school of world-wide eminence, one might expect a man of Koussevitzky's attainment and age to let the school continue a natural growth. But when asked of the future, he is ready with plans.

"Tanglewood is only half way," he said, earnestly, and with the passion for an idea which only the good doctor can muster. "The rest of the way we have to work. This school should be an example to schools. I will tell you. We need to improve many things.

"Today composers are complaining they haven't subjects for opera. So we have written the universities to find their most gifted writers and poets. We give the tuition and expenses to come here. And we give them the idea of what makes a libretto for an opera. They must come to listen to words and music. They must get a feeling for staging and for music. It won't go if it's not for the theatre. And we want people to know this business.

Lukas Foss was mentioned, and the critical success of his short opera, "The Jumping Frog" (based on a Mark Twain story) this Spring in New York.

Did this success hark back to what Foss' librettist had learned at Tanglewood?

"Yes," said Koussevitzky, and his eyes lit up. "Lukas Foss is a son of Tanglewood. We will do his opera this Summer."

Cir. (D 130,828) (S 130,916)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES HERALD
JUL 16 1950

World of Music

New York, July 15 (UP).—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the "Mass in B Minor" will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental "Art of Fugue," arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
224 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 38,682)
This Clipping From
LOWELL, MASS.
SUN
JUL 14 1950

MUSIC

By ALFRED W. BURKE

LOWELL—The municipal concert series will open at the South common Sunday evening at 7.30 o'clock. The band will have as its director John J. Giblin.

With the membership of the band selected from among the best musicians in the city it is almost certain that this opening program will be an event of musical value. With such a group with which to direct, Mr. Giblin has selected a fine list of concert selections and hit tunes to play.

During the past few seasons this series has provided many moments of wholesome pleasure for everyone. With this in mind, Lowellites are expected to attend in large numbers. A successful past has made this occasion a must and it is hoped that a new attendance record will be realized.

Organ Recital

Ernest White, eminent American organist teacher, will be heard this evening in the first of two week-end recitals at the Memorial music hall in Methuen, as sponsored by the Andover Organ Institute.

This evening's program will be an all-Bach list. This will follow the planned schedule for the entire Friday series, commemorating the 200th anniversary of Bach's death. Included in this evening's program will be the Prelude and Fugue in C Major; the Prelude and Fugue in B Minor; ten Chorale Preludes selected from the "Great Eighteen," the Catechism and other sources, and the Partita on "O God, Thou Mighty God."

The concert tomorrow evening will be highlighted by the First and Fifth Concertos for Organ and Strings by Handel and two groups of Sonitas for Strings and Organ by Mozart. Also included will be the Prelude, Fugue and Chacone by Pachelbel and Chorale Preludes by Martini, Fiocco, Armstorff, Kirnberger and Walther.

The stringed orchestra will be directed by Arthur Howes, director of the Organ Institute and noted organist, teacher and conductor. This will be the initial appearance of the Institute orchestra this season.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, their chairman, and the group will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Support of School

Just as the Berkshire Music Center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends of the Center are a unique means of support for a school. The group is composed of persons who have enough interest in music and in Director Serge Koussevitzky's school to contribute financial support as they are able, and also to make up their audiences for the students, who are thus given an opportunity to be heard by many music lovers at a stage in their development when most musicians have no audience.

This summer the Friends will again comprise the audience which will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, as it has in three previous summers. Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be given two performances by the opera department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced at the Center for Friends audiences. Thirty-four other concerts and recitals will have been played for them before the end of the season in mid-August.

These will once again include a series of chamber music programs made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress with performances by Alexander Schneider, James Friskin, the Roth String Quartet, and the Ricci Trio.

Provides Scholarships

It is the financial support of the Friends which makes possible their attendance at these events. Much of this support is in the form of modest contributions, but a growing number of full-tuition, $150 scholarship, is being provided for the purpose of enabling young musicians to study under such noted personalities as Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Aaron Copland and many others, including, of course, Dr. Koussevitzky. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory; total contributions by Friends amounted to $27,000, and more than 65,000 attended. The latter figure compares with an attendance of more than 110,000 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's nine Berkshire Festival concerts. Last week-end's opening Friends' events attracted 2800 persons.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body, 400 strong, at the Berkshire Music Center; they come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty; and they perform in orchestras, ensembles, and in three operas for those who endorse their efforts by joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, in which a voluntary contribution constitutes membership.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 26,159)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 13 1950

Government Support of Arts Is Discussed at Music Forum

LENOX—"What about government support of the arts?" was discussed Monday night in the first of weekly Tanglewood music forums at Sedgwick Hall of the Lenox Library. Aaron Copland, assistant director of Tanglewood, acted as master of ceremonies with George E. Judd, manager of the BSO, Carl Zerbe, Jacques Ibert and Ture Bengz giving their views on the topic.

Mr. Judd opened the discussion by asking "Who is going to pay for this support?" Limiting his remarks to the symphonic field, he mentioned that there are foundations which grant assistance to students, but that we don't have support such as in Europe. Mr. Judd also stated that possible support will take a great deal of time and planning.

Mr. Zerbe, national director of the Artists' Equity and member of the Boston Museum School of Fine Arts stated he, as a native of Germany, received everything through government support. Because his training was all through government support, he couldn't speak on anything but this sort of assistance.

A native of France and a director of the French Academy in Rome, Mr. Ibert also experienced full support in his native country. He told the more than 350 in attendance that France supports and sponsors numerous concert orchestras throughout the country. These orchestras are under contract, so to speak, to play contemporary and young composers with the old masters, he said. Mr. Ibert stated that in Paris alone there are five government-supported symphony orchestras. "The financial support of these orchestras has doubled in the past six years," he said.

The last member of the panel to speak was Mr. Bengz, a member of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Artists' Equity and the Graphic Arts Department. A native of Finland, Mr. Bengz was unprepared to talk on the subject because he knew nothing of support, he said. As a youth he came to this country and a scholarship was handed him. At the time, he told the group, he did not know where the money came from, but knows now that it was a foundation gift.

Following the four speakers, Mr. Copland called on Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who was seated in the audience. Koussevitzky told of his travels throughout Europe where art is government supported. He urgently asked for government support of the arts stating that "if musical development is to continue, it must be under government support.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 72,071) (S 133,360)
This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 16 1950

BERKSHIRE OFFERS 61 WORKS BY BACH

Two Full-Length Program Pieces Included

NEW YORK, July 15 (U.P.) — A wealth of music by Johann Sebastain Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood [illegible] this Summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg Concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 33,609)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 18 1950

It will be a Mozart weekend at the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the Berkshires with program this Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. A picked group from the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform. Although both programs have been "sold out" for some time there will be admission to the ground tickets sold on the days of the concerts.

The program for Saturday evening will include "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," the "Haffner Serenade," the piano concerto number 467 in C major with Lukas Foss as the soloist and the Symphony number 34 in C (K.338).

The Sunday afternoon program will open with the Symphony in B flat number 33 (K. 319), the Concerto for Two Pianos with Lubo-shutz and Nemenoff as the soloists, the Serenade in C minor (Wind Octet), and the Symphony in C major, the "Jupiter."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 26,159)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 17 1950

29 Homes Offered for U.N. Visitors

Secretariat Group Coming Here July 28 Week End

Twenty-nine homes—all but one of them in Pittsfield—will receive one or more of the 50 visitors from the UN secretariat who are to spend the July 28 week end here. The Workshop for World Understanding announced today that plans for housing the group have been completed.

Mrs. Margaret R. Otis, director of the UN Volunteer Services at Lake Success, met here today with the local committee to discuss arrangements.

In addition, homes have been offered for the 15 children of secretariat members—two boys and thirteen girls—who are to be here the same week end. They will be guests of the Junior Friends of the Berkshire Athenaeum. Girls outnumber boys in the group, the Friends said, because many of the boys at Lake Success are spending the summer at camps. The week-end program for the young people will be under the direction of Miss Lucille V. Burbank, children's librarian at the Athenaeum.

The adult group of 50 will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood concerts [illegible]ning, July 29, and Sunday afternoon. The workshop, headed by K. K. Paluev, undertook to co-ordinate plans for housing the visitors over the weekend.

The plans have been approved now by the UN Volunteer Services organization, which will assign the secretariat members to certain Pittsfield homes. The pairings will be made after comparing information submitted concerning the age and nationality of guests desired and other factors. The 50 include the wives of some of the members.

The majority of local hostesses offered accommodations for two; a few will entertain one each; and two have sought three guests for the week end. When questioned about preference in nationality, Mr. Paluev said that most gave no specifications, except to inquire, in some cases, if the guests included someone of the same nationality as they.

The visitors are expected to arrive Friday evening and leave Sunday evening. The program may include, in addition to the two concerts, a picnic for hosts and guests at Tanglewood before the Sunday concert, and individual tours of Berkshire points of interest.

Mr. Paluev said that among the individuals the organizations chiefly helpful in procuring housing were the following: The Pittsfield Council of Churches and Mrs. H. T. Weeks, Mrs. John C. Russ, Miss Dorothy Heidenreich, Edward T. Wallace, Mrs. John W. Parsons and D. E. Stelzennuller.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,002)
This Clipping From NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 14 1950

MUSIC HOUSE
RECORD REVIEW

The doings at Tanglewood over yonder hill begin to get under more serious speed this coming week end. The usual second week end used to be the first up to this year. It was decided to honor the two hundredth anniversary of the great Bach's death in Germany with an additional Bach Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts in the theatre. That was the reason for the two gatherings over last week.

This week Mr. Koussevitzky and his all star cast will continue with their second Bach concerts at the same time and place. The material chosen includes the Fourth and Sixth Brandenburg Concertos the former featuring two flutes and the latter two violas. These will be followed presumably after the intermission since there is no note made there on the program by two cantatas which will be conducted by Hugh Ross and sung by a group of young people at the Berkshire Music Center who have been rehearsing very diligently these past few days. The cantatas No. 161 and 80 are seldom heard and it is a fine opportunity for Bach lovers in this area.

The Sunday concert will offer performances of the first two suites for orchestra and the E flat major violin concerto. Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct these three works again of course and the concerto soloist will be Ruth Posselt the talented wife of Richard Burgin, concert master, assistant conductor and coach of his illustrious boss when the latter was a mere neophite with the baton. The Bach part of the series will come to a close after the intermission when Mr. Ross will lead two cantatas—this time No. 12 and No. 50 with his eager young singers. The following week end will be an all Mozart in the theatre and the following Thursday night the show moves into the big Shed for the final three weeks of the Festival.—Adv.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 25,402)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 14 1950

Berkshire Friends Are Celebrating Their Fifth Year

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school at Tanglewood this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman. The group will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

The Friends are persons who contribute financial support and make up the audiences for the students.

This summer the Friends will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot," which will be given two performances by the opera department under the direction of Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be presented as well as 34 concerts and recitals before the end of the season in mid-August. Last year the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory. Total contributions by Friends amounted to $27,000, and more than 65,000 attended. The latter figure compares with an attendance of more than 110,000 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's nine Berkshire Festival concerts.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body of 400 at the music center. They come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. [illegible]
This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
[illegible] 1950

Tempest In Tanglewood.

Evidently the Berkshire Festival can have its troubles, too, if only little ones. Serge Koussevitzky, who has been the [illegible] director at Tanglewood since the beginning and who regards the festival and music center there as his creation, resents emphatically the engagement of Victor de Sabata, the Italian conductor, for two concerts.

In a recorded interview for the Columbia Broadcasting System, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his displeasure at the Board of Trustees and refused to accept any responsibility for the programs of the festival other than those conducted by himself or his pupils.

The interview has caused more of a commotion than circumstances warrant, in view of a subsequent announcement by the trustees of the festival. They point out that there are two series of concerts at Tanglewood, the A and B. Dr. Koussevitzky declined to conduct the second one this season. A "name" conductor was needed, so Victor de Sabata was engaged.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 89,944)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES
JUE 17 1950

Bach Concerts Provide Tanglewood Contrasts

On Saturday the third program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Bach Festival concerts at Tanglewood presented two Brandenburg Concerti, No. 4 and No. 6, and two cantatas, No. 161 and No. 80, all done up in a fine and skillful manner.

The two Brandenburgs, performed by the Festival Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, opened the program in a cheerful vein, incidentally providing an instructive contrast in the quality of their performances.

The Brandenburg No. 4 was played with a high sense of rhythmic precision and dramatic flourish, but also with Dr. Koussevitsky's recurrent leaning towards heaviness apparent in many of the lighter passages. It may be pertinent to observe that this is not a matter of tempo but a failing which seems to lie much deeper, perhaps in the personality of the man himself, and which produces the sense of a lack of understanding and spirit.

* * *

AND YET the Brandenburg No. 6 for strings only, as if to disprove the previous theory, seemed exquisitely played with just the proper sense of comedy and melodious feeling. Dr. Koussevitsky was ably abetted in this delightful performance by Joseph DePasquale and Jean Cauhape who played superbly the difficult but highly rewarding viola parts.

Conducted by Hugh Ross, Cantata 161 (Come, Sweet Time of Death), a gentle and movingly lyrical work, was sung with an almost total absence of feeling and expression. The performance sounded insipid and practically unrehearsed (a member of the chorus admitted that he hadn't had time to learn all of his part), and the entire ensemble seemed to display an unusual lack of interest in so fine a work.

And yet Cantata No. 80, based upon Luther's magnificent chorale "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," was stunning in its display of fire and feeling. Mr. Ross, bird-like but calm during the first work, flung himself into the spirit of this towering masterpiece and carried both the performers and the audience along with him.

* * *

THE SINGING was precise and balanced, the soloists strong and more assured than previously, and the conducting was virtually inspired. Special honors should go to David Lloyd, tenor, James Pease, bass; and Erwin Bodky, who, though he received no mention on the program, played admirably on a harpsichord Dr. Koussevitsky must have misplaced when performing the Brendenburgs.

This cantata was an experience that left the audience limp and assured that it would be a long time before they heard anything to equal it.—E. C.

UN Secretariat Group at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 28—Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this weekend to fifty members of the U.N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group. Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

U.N. Secretariat to Visit Tanglewood

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire County residents will be hosts to 50 visitors from the United Nations Secretariat this weekend. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt originated the plan and will herself be a soloist, serving as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and The Wolf" at Tanglewood on Parade on Aug. 11, which benefits the Berkshire Music Center.

Also on the benefit program will be the Haydn "Oxford" Symphony, and the Dvorak "New World" Symphony. Tickets for the Aug. 11 concert at 6 o'clock will include tours of the five music departments of the Center and waltzing on the lawn.

Mrs. Roosevelt Music Narrator

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Aug. 11 to be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the annual benefit of the orchestra's Berkshire music center.

Times July 28

MRS. ROOSEVELT WITH SYMPHONY

LENOX, July 27 (AP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire music centre annual benefit program.

A centre spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

Mrs. Roosevelt's New Role

She Will Appear With Boston Symphony—as a Narrator

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story. She will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A Center spokesman said: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a story teller."

Herald-Trib July 28 - page 1, col 1

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 89,944)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES
JUL 17 1950

Boston Symphony Presents Inspiring Bach Performance

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood — Considering the rain, a good crowd went to the fourth Berkshire Festival concert at Tanglewood Sunday. The audience was rewarded by gradually clearing skies and three hours of Bach, inspiringly played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky.

Perhaps it was the relaxed outdoor atmosphere, mixed in with the wide range of the music, that made the effect so strong.

Koussevitsky, well sunburned and informally dressed, led a smaller ensemble through two suites, and the full orchestra in the second violin concerto. The chorus joined the orchestra in the final two numbers, Cantatas 12 and 50.

* * *

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL performances came before and after intermission and featured two radically different solos. Flutist George Laurent's interpretation of the suite for flute and strings had Koussevitsky himself beating his hands as heartily as the cheering audience.

Throughout the work, the flute plays a figurative second fiddle to the excellent strings. When, in the fifth movement, Laurent leads the orchestra throughout, his playing is rapid yet dramatically restrained. The complexity and length of this solo kept the audience on the edge of their seats, waiting for the musician to prove his humanity by making a slip. Needless to say, he didn't.

The second soloist, Ruth Posselt, did an equally fine job on the second violin concerto, particularly in the vigorous and extremely beautiful first movement. The energy she put into this and the third movement made it easy to overlook occasional tonal deficiencies, which were very understandable considering the nature of the work.

Miss Posselt showed her musicianship in her near perfect timing and dexterity. Her performance of the adagio was clear and competent, if somewhat unemotional.

* * *

THE FIRST choral work, the Cantata No. 12, was a depressing change from the bright and hard perfection of the violin concerto. Through the long, repetitive, and dragging number, Contralto Eunice Alberts bore the major vocal burden. Unfortunately, her voice is pitched higher than the cantata, and she was difficult to hear at times. The Cantata No. 50, loud, short, and extremely melodic, sent the audience home in a happy mood.

The orchestra made the afternoon the success it was. The obvious enjoyment the musicians took in being there and playing Bach was fully borne out by the music they produced. Their playing was vigorous yet sensitive, and responsive to Koussevitzy's slightest command.

Next Saturday and Sunday, the Mozart festival within the festival is scheduled—eight symphonies, concerti and serenades.—J. A. M.

Dr. Koussevitzky Shares Ovation With Orchestra

By ED TOOLE

Lenox, July 27 —The Berkshire Festival launched its 16th season of concerts here tonight in the music shed at Tanglewood with an audience of 8800 music lovers from all parts of the Atlantic seaboard and Midwestern states in attendance. Although all box and reserved seats in the shed were not filled, a vast gathering was seen reclining on the spacious lawns around the shed.

At the close of the first half of the program both conductor and audience were moved by the beauty of the performance. With the first burst of the tremendous applause, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky dramatically blew kisses to his men and then motioned them to arise and share with him the three grand ovations.

With the tempo of activities here at Tanglewood now being stepped up, tomorrow's feature will be the 4.30 concert in the music shed by the students of the Berkshire Music Shed. As well as honoring the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, the program also will be unique for it will include concertos for two, three and four pianos as well as for two violins.

Today's Musicians

Leading the department in this memorial program will be Charles Schiff. The only Bach concerto for four pianos will be performed by Betty Lou Schade, Frances Reicher, Donald Smith and Frances Myska as the soloists. Conducting this feature will be Irwin Hoffman.

In addition to this homage being paid Bach, another highlight will come on the program for the opening concert of the last festival series on Aug. 10, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Bach's B Minor Mass, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The students in Department 2 orchestra at the Berkshire Music center will give their weekly Friday night concert at 8.15 in the shed tomorrow. This, in addition to their concert marking the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach, in the afternoon.

The program will include Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole," conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Gerald Kechley's "Overture" conducted by the composer, a student at Tanglewood under Aaron Copland, and Bloch's "Schelomo."

Attendance at these weekly student symphony concerts has averaged 4,000 persons. The programs are open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, as are all other student and faculty events at Tanglewood.

8800 ARE GIVEN FESTIVAL TREAT IN BERKSHIRES

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Present Beethoven and Sibelius Works

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, July 27—The Berkshire Festival opened tonight in all its unique splendor. A tremendous audience of 8800 persons, as against 8500 at the opening concert last year, was on hand to greet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It heard two magnificent performances, namely, Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Second symphony of Jan Sibelius. It was with this same program that Dr. Koussevitzky closed the 1948 season.

"Eroica" Finest

Those who attend the Berkshire Festival this season will hear many of the works, the performance of which Dr. Koussevitzky has made peculiarly his own, and should this be his final season conducting here we will have heard some of the greatest interpretations to be heard today.

It is needless to go into detail on the two symphonies or to dwell at length on Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of them. We believe the performance of the "Eroica" tonight was the finest we have ever heard. In the fullness of his stature as an interpreter, Dr. Koussevitzky kindled anew the flame which burned so brightly in his youth and which was to burn just as brightly when his Ninth symphony was written, but with the added glow of mature restraint. The funeral march of the second movement was paced just as it should be; it did not drag, neither did it race; there was dignity, strength and resignation in the reading. The Scherzo left one breathless. So swift was its pace, yet so perfectly controlled. The finale fairly lifted the audience to its feet and there were cheers and bravos for minutes after it closed.

The Second Symphony of Jan Sibelius has always had an important place beside the "Eroica," for both Beethoven and Sibelius wrote them in the first heat of their maturity, while their full-rounded maturity, while both were in their exuberant 30s. In his First Symphony Sibelius employed the economy of means and the development of fragments, a procedure he was to continue. In the Second Symphony we find this trait fully developed. There seems to be an unlimited amount of thematic material which came full-throated, perfectly rounded song.

Continued On Page 15

8800 Are Given

Continued From Page 1

Dr. Koussevitzky read the work with deep emotion. Every phrase was meaningful and the movements glowed with both the genius of the composer and the interpreter.

U.N. Group Arrives in Pittsfield for Tanglewood Holiday

Globe July 27

PITTSFIELD, July 28 — Sixty members of the United Nations secretariat at Lake Success arrived here by train tonight to spend the week-end as house guests of local residents and to attend the Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood. They will be guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon programs.

Heading the delegation was Benjamin Cohen of Chile, assistant secretary general, and Mrs. Cohen. They were met at the station by representatives of the Workshop for World Understanding, local organization which arranged the visit.

The Berkshire week-end for the U.N. secretariat was first suggested last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. She will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and will start rehearsals with him and the orchestra for her role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed on Aug. 11.

[7]

AT TANGLEWOOD TODAY—This afternoon at 4:30 Frances Reiche, Frances Myska, Donald Smith, and Betty Shade will perform the Bach Four Piano Concerto. They are pictured above in rehearsal with the orchestra and conductor Irwin Hoffman, being coached by Leonard Bernstein.

Two hundred years to the day after the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, students at the Berkshire Music Center will honor the composer with a performance of four of his concerti. The concert will be held this afternoon at 4.30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, and will include concerti for two violins, for two pianos, for three pianos, and for four pianos.

Students in Department II will be led by Charles Schiff in the playing of the only concerto for two violins that Bach ever wrote; Moshe Murvitz and Donald Walsh will be soloists. Bach's only four-piano concerto will be performed with Frances Reicher, Frances Myska, Donald Smith, and Betty Lou Schade as soloists. Irwin Hoffman will conduct.

The two-piano concerto will be conducted by Jurriaan Andriessen, and Ralph Einstein and Joseph Rezits will be pianists. Joyce Paul, Norma Holmes, and Frank Glazer will perform the concerto for Three Pianos, with Wolfgang Shanzer conducting.

This performance, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, continues homage being paid to Bach on the bicentennial of his death at the Berkshire Music Center. In addition to Friday's unusual student program, a highlight will come on Aug. 10, when Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's B-minor Mass, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky had as guests in her box last night at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival her niece, Mrs. Joseph de Pasquale, and Mr. and Mrs. Percy Musgrave of Stockbridge.

Among box occupants at the Berkshire Festival last night were Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Egremont, who had as guests Mrs. W. F. Barrett Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett of Great Barrington and Mr. and Mrs. H. Whytcliff Rose of Philadelphia; Col. Arthur D. Budd of Windsor, whose guests were Gen. and Mrs. Charles D. Herron, Col. and Mrs. John H. Stutesman and Mrs. Sumner Waite of Washington, D.C.; Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn of St. Paul, Minn., who was accompanied by Mr. Sanborn, Mrs. C. Davie Lloyd of Lee, Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Spencer of Minneapolis, Minn. Mrs. Spencer is a concert violinist. Also noted at the concert were Andre Visson, editor of Reader's Digest, and Mrs. Visson; Nemenoff and Lubishutz, duo-piano team; Albert Spalding, violinist; and Ivan Mestrovic, noted sculptor.

Berkshire Festspiele

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., 25. Juli. — Donnerstag beginnen die großen Konzerte des Boston-Symphonie Orchesters unter Leitung Serge Koussevitzkys, der am 26. Juli seinen 76. Geburtstag feiert. Außerdem eröffnet das Opern-Department die Vorstellungen mit Mozarts "La Finta Giardiniera", das Roth Streichquartett bringt die "Kunst der Fuge" von Bach zum Vortrag und das Studentenorchester begeht den Gedenktag Bachs mit einer Veranstaltung, in der die Konzerte für zwei, drei und vier Klaviere sowie für zwei Geigen zur Wiedergabe gelangen.

Das Programm des Donnerstagkonzertes enthält die "Eroica" von Beethoven sowie die zweite Symphonie von Sibelius. Samstag abend dirigiert Serge Koussevitzky die siebente Symphonie Anton Bruckners und zwei Nocturnes und die symphonische Dichtung "Das Meer" von Debussy. Sonntag nachmittags übernimmt Leonard Bernstein die Leitung des Boston Symphonie Orchesters, zur Aufführung gelangen: Brahms vierte Symphonie, Harold Shaperos "Adagio" aus seiner Symphonie für klassisches Orchester, Davis Diamonds "Timon of Athens" und Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" mit Eliabelle Davis als Sopransolistin.

Die Samstag-Probe ist allgemein zugänglich. Ungefähr 43,000 Zuhörer haben bis heute die Veranstaltungen in Tanglewood in der laufenden Saison besucht. 23,000 waren bei den Bach-Mozart-Konzerten, die anderen bei den verschiedenen Kammermusiken und Studentenkonzerten und übrigen Veranstaltungen. Nach dem Kartenvorverkauf zu schließen, dürfte die Zahl der Zuhörer zumindest die gleiche sein wie im Vorjahre (181,000). F. L.

Berkshire Throngs Hail Koussevitzky

Ovation Welcomes Conductor As 13th Festival Opens

By RUDOLPH ELIE

TANGLEWOOD, July 27 — The old Koussevitzky musical magic, unheard hereabouts since the 76-year-old conductor resigned the musical directorship of the Boston Symphony last year, drew an old fashioned ovation here tonight from the audience of 8800 people as the 13th annual Berkshire Festival got under way.

On his mettle perhaps as the result of his recent newsy differences of opinion with the trustees of the orchestra, Koussevitzky, only recently returned from his triumphal tour of such far places as Hollywood, Rio, Palestine and western Europe, managed to outdo himself in a couple of well favored symphonies. These were Beethoven's Eroica and Sibelius' Second, the pairings of which has long proved to be a sure-fire attraction.

IDEAL NIGHT

Favored by cool air, it was an ideal summer night. The audience, which overflowed the 6000 Shed in a couple of acres of music loving humanity, brought the conductor back again and again to voice its approval.

Although Koussevitzky, who never looked fitter or conducted with more verve, has presided over the series of six Bach-Mozart concerts, this concert marked the opening of the 13th season of a festival that now ranks with the most renowned in the world.

Last year it drew a total of 181,-880 people; all indications point to an even larger number this season. For the final of the chamber size Mozart concerts, nearly 6000 people turned up despite the fact that only 1200 could be seated in the opera theater.

MUCH DISCUSSION

Still exciting much discussion at Tanglewood is the Koussevitsky-Boston Symphony Orchestra management dispute, which developed when the conductor took to the air to claim that "a guest conductor" (actually the Hellen de Sabata) had been engaged without his approval. The managements claims it had Koussevitzky's approval.

In any case the de Sabata affair is but one of several episodes, Koussevitzky most strenously opposing various innovations that were made without, so he claims, his approval. One of these is the fact movies were to be shown following the concerts in an effort to hold some of the audience to allow a more leisurely dispersion of traffic, long a difficult problem. However, no movies were shown tonight; there was, it was explained, a full moon.

Aside from these slight grains of sand in the cog wheels, the Tanglewood season, represented so far by the Bach-Mozart concerts, Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera," a number of chamber music concerts, recitals and student ensembles in addition to the vast (nearly 400) music school, has been notably successful. The first night audience, officiallp announced as 8800 ran considerably ahead of last season.

COMPARISON DIFFICULT

While it is as difficult to compare the "sound" of the orchestra under its former leader as contrasted with the "sound" of the same orchestra under Munch; all the old personal persuasiveness of Koussevitzky was much in evidence. The Shed being what it is, a pie-shaped affair open save at the stage, the tonal qualities of the orchestra do not compare with those in Symphony Hall at all. The strings seem thinner, the woodwinds and brasses brighter and broader.

Koussevitzky, however, who has not changed Munch's seating plan, moulds all this into an instrument of considerable effect considering the naturally less compact, less focussed tone quality of the orchestra in this setting. In the Eroica, though he over-emphasized changes in tempo in the first movement, he gave the funeral march a slightly effective quality of sombreness and went on, thereafter, to produce marvels of clarity, especially in the variations of the finale.

What the Sibelius—which is Koussevitzky's special province—he nursed loose all his old force and dramatic intensity to bring down, at the end, the house. The conductor, in short, once again demonstrated that the years do nothing but give him more physical command and more musical intuition and authority.

Koussevitzky's next appearance is tomorrow night when he conducts two Nocturnes and "La Mer" by Debussy, and Bruckner's Seventh Symphony. He conducts again (the B Minor Mass) on August 10, and makes his final appearance of the season on Sunday, August 13, when Mrs. Roosevelt will be the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

(From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.)

KOUSSEVITZKY SETS MOOD FOR FESTIVAL

Tanglewood Finds He Is Still Master as He Leads Boston Symphony in Concert

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., July 27—Serge Koussevitzky cut a cake for his seventy-sixth birthday yesterday; and tonight he waved a baton for the first of the Berkshire Festival's concerts here by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Since life for many conductors seems to begin at 70 or later, Mr. Koussevitzky elected to conduct two of the grand and exacting symphonies of the repertory—Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Second.

This was properly heroic music with which to start the concerts in the music shed, and Tanglewood was granted a lovely evening for it. The moon hung high and full to the south, and the shed, open at the sides, was air-conditioned perfectly by a mild west wind blowing through the Berkshire hills and the green lawns of Tanglewood.

There were 8,800 persons in the audience, and some 3,000 were on the lawn behind the shed.

It is possible that, assuming that the weather is cooperative, this festival will break all records. The Bach-Mozart series drew a total of 23,500 in three week-ends, and things have started well for the concerts in the shed.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who stands and moves with all his accustomed vigor, conducted performances tonight that emphasized the grandeur and largeness of utterance of the two symphonies. One might quibble about an overstressed brass passage here or a sentimentalized tempo there, but the performance as a whole had sweep and momentum.

This is a symphony to fill spaces even grander than those of this spot in the Berkshires as well as to reach into corners of the heart open only to an epic poet. Mr. Koussevitzky's conception was designed for the wide, open spaces. His scale of sonorities was immense, and the players of the Boston Symphony responded to this conception with resourcefulness.

After the "Eroica," any symphony has a fair chance of being a letdown. The epic style of a lesser composer, even as honest a man as Sibelius, seems fustian by comparison. Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra managed to do the work persuasively and its northern song worked its spell on the large and enthusiastic audience.

Opening of the 1950 Season

While the Bach-Mozart concerts are yearly becoming more important; they still rank as preliminary and minor compared to concerts in the Shed at Tanglewood where the whole orchestra is engaged.

The 1950 Festival had an auspicious start last night, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra performing under the familiar baton of Dr. Koussevitzky. The largest opening crowd on record heard a magnificent performance of a program made up of two works the quality of which is above question and the popularity of which is established. The weather was perfect even to the extent of including a full moon; the speed with which the motorists were sent on their way proves that the work of the planners and the efforts of the police both within and outside the grounds are relieving the traffic problem. If the other concerts follow the lead of the opening one, the Festival is on the threshold of its most successful season.

ORCHESTRA VIEW: Armed with a five-inch F2 lens on his 35-millimeter Leica, Tanglewood photographer Howard F. Babbitt Jr. caught this intimate view of Dr. Koussevitzky last night through a small hole in the back of the shell.

Road Widening Possible

Dr. Koussevitzky said he felt such a move would not relieve the traffic situation, but hinted he might confer with authorities of the former Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., which turned its property at Tanglewood (the Music Shed) over to the Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc., in 1938 when the big Shed was dedicated. It is reported there is a balance of more than $40,000 in the treasury of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., which Dr. Koussevitzky feels "could help to widen some of the roads leading to Tanglewood."

The only announcement from the BSO press department last night relative to the movie was that it would not be held because "there's a full moon tonight."

Victor de Sabata, the Italian conductor, who will be the guest

Festival

Continued From First Page

conductor at two of the concerts during the second series, will arrive at Tanglewood tomorrow to start rehearsals with the Boston Symphony on Tuesday.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is also scheduled to arrive next week at Tanglewood to start rehearsals with Dr. Koussevitzy and the BSO in her role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed on Aug. 11 as part of the Tanglewood on Parade program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

By Arthur Berger

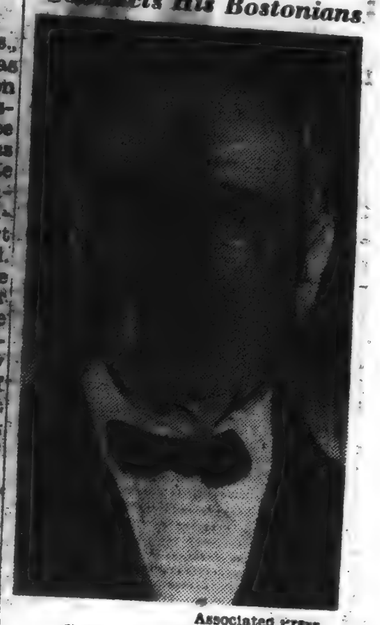
Return of the Maestro

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 27.—Serge Koussevitzky was reunited with the assembled Boston Cymphony Orchestra here Thursday night for the first time since his retirement almost a year ago as its permanent musical director. He had previously, this season, conducted a group of Boston Symphony members in a Bach-Mozart series in the Theater-Concert Hall. But Thursday night's concert in the huge music shed, opening the major series in the thirteenth Berkshire Festival, marked his first encounter with the fully massed body of musicians since the close of last year's festival when he left this country to conduct in Europe, Israel and other parts of the world.

Mr. Koussevitzky opened the program with a dramatic reading of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, and it was obvious that being once again at the head of the orchestra he had conducted for twenty-five years, put him in an expansive and emotionally heightened state. His performance was a bit uneven, but there was a strong impulse behind it, and the conception had the majesty we have associated with his style. The orchestra sounded well. My impression may have been conditioned by the fact that I sat Thursday night near the center of the shed, which was further back than where I sat last year. But felt that the brass blared somewhat less than I recall from the past.

The program also included the Second Symphony of Sibelius, a work in a romantic style in which Mr. Koussevitzky has always been at home. The two works added up to a conventional program of wide appeal, and the crowds that filled la

Conducts His Bostonians



Associated Press

Serge A. Koussevitzky

most of the music shed and occupied a good part of the lawn behind it were obviously pleased by the musical proceedings. Clear skies, a full moon, and uncommonly congenial temperature added considerably to the evening's delight. The attendance was reported to be about 8,800, slightly more than last season's opening.

BSO Concert Draws 8800 To Festival

Koussevitzky Scores Triumph—Movies Canceled

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has lost none of his drawing power at the Berkshire Music Festival despite a few skirmishes with the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since he retired as the regular conductor last year and continued as director of the Music Center here which he founded in 1940.

A crowd of 8800 music lovers turned out last night for the opening concert of the first of three series in the Music Shed with Koussevitzky conducting the BSO in compositions by Beethoven and Sibelius. It was the largest crowd to attend an opening concert in the Music Shed in the first series since the building was erected in 1938. The previous high on opening night was 8500.

The screening of the U.S. State Department's film, "Tanglewood," made last year for distribution to 40 foreign countries, was scheduled out-of-doors near the theatre-concert hall last night but was called off at the last moment. Dr. Koussevitzky, who claims he was not consulted about the showing of the film, protested the move to the board of trustees of the BSO, explaining the movie would "lower the standards of Tanglewood." He said he wanted to have the public leave Tanglewood "remembering the concert and not a movie." His protest was made to Henry B. Cabot, president of the board, who is spending the summer in Maine. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky said he received word from Mr. Cabot that the board is "respecting my wishes in calling off the movie."

The Tanglewood Advisory Committee had suggested the movie be screened in a move to hold many motorists on the grounds to relieve the traffic congestion following the concert.

Tanglewood

Bernstein To Conduct Student Orchestra

TANGLEWOOD — The students in Department II orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center will give their weekly Friday night concert at 8.15 in the Shed tonight, in addition to their concert marking the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach, in the afternoon.

The program will include Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole," conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Gerald Kechley's "Overture," conducted by the composer, a student at Tanglewood under Aaron Copland; and Bloch's "Schelomo." The cello soloist in "Schelomo" will be Robert Sayre, with Irwin Hoffman conducting.

Attendance at these weekly student sympnony concerts has averaged 2000 persons. The programs are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, as are all other student and faculty events at Tanglewood.

Composers' Forum Sunday Night

The program for composers' forum, Sunday at 8.15 PM, in the Chamber-Music Hall follows:

Robert Parris (Philadelphia)
Sonata for Two Pianos (in four movements)
Pianos, Edna Bockstein and Robert Parris
Martin Boykan (New York City)
Sonata for Flute and Piano
Flute, Robert Armer
The Composer at the Piano
Raymond Wilding-White (Boston)
Piano Sonata (1950)
Piano, Robert Parris
Theodore Snyder (New York City)
Wast Songs
[illegible], Adele Addison and Willabelle Underwood
[illegible]—Sonya Bendett
[illegible]—Jean Berg
[illegible]—Margaret Strand
[illegible]—Ross Shub
[illegible]—Catherine Barnhart
[illegible]—Parsi (Ponce, Puerto Rico)
String Quartet
Violins—John Pintavalle, Ronald Balazs
Viola—Chester Petranek
Violoncello—Paul Thomas

[9]

Camp Onota Launched Career for Bernstein

Conductor Made Debut In 1937

Musician Had Hard Road Before Hitting Big Time

By John G. W. Mahanna

Camp Onota and not Tanglewood can claim credit for giving Leonard Bernstein his start as an orchestra conductor.

Long before he ever thought of conducting a great orchestra like the Boston Symphony, young Bernstein was serving as music counselor at Camp Onota. That was in 1937 when he organized his first rhythm band composed of seven campers who played triangles, tambourines and cymbals.

"There were good too," he recalled today as he laughingly inspected an old photograph of his first orchestra which was found recently in the Camp Onota files by Lou Williams, the camp director.

"Kind of heavy then, wasn't I?" said Bernstein as he gazed closer at the photograph.

Likes To Look Back

The 32-year-old musician, who will be the guest conductor at the first two Sunday concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, likes to look back now on the days when he was a counselor at the camp on Onota Lake.

"I had no more idea then of becoming a conductor," says Bernstein, "than I had of flying a dirigible. I didn't know what I wanted to do."

Bernstein returned to Harvard at the close of the summer to complete his junior year and in the summer of 1938 he gave a few piano concerts in Boston, using his earnings—$65—to head for San Francisco. He arrived on the West Coast without a penny "but somehow I managed to return east to complete my senior year at Harvard."

In 1939 he headed for New York "to seek my fortune," but found before long that cracking the big-time was far more toilsome than he at first believed.

Looks up Friend

Broke and discouraged, Bernstein looked up an old friend, Adolph Green, whom he had met two years before at Camp Onota. Lenny, as he is known to the students around the Berkshire Music Center, recalled that Green appeared as "guest star" in "The Pirates of Penzance," which Bernstein directed for parents' week end at the Pittsfield camp.

Green and another friend took Bernstein in to their dingy apartment on East Ninth Street and the next day he started jobhunting. While Green and three other friends entertained customers of the Village Vanguard under the group name of "The Revuers," Bernstein worked at the apartment composing tunes.

"I couldn't find a publisher who was interested in anything I composed and no one would give me a job," he declared.

Bernstein soon returned to Boston and was almost so discouraged that 'I even thought of entering business with my father, who sells beauty parlor supplies."

First Break

His first break came soon after Leonard Burkat, a former school chum at Boston Latin High School and Harvard, arranged through his sister for Bernstein to meet Dimitri Mitropoulos, leading Greek conductor. Burkat is now the librarian at the Berkshire Music Center.

Mitropoulos encouraged Bernstein to take up conducting and wrote letters of recommendation for him to the Juilliard Graduate School in New York, where he found no more applications were being taken. As a last resort, Bernstein tried the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia where he was given an audition by Fritz Reiner and was accepted.

Bernstein had not yet met Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. It wasn't until a few months later that he learned the Boston Symphony Orchestra's great conductor was opening a school at Tanglewood. He gathered "all of the recommendations I could find and wrote a letter to Dr. Koussevitzky asking permission to enter his class." He was called to Boston for an audition and was accepted immediately by the founder of the Berkshire Music Center.

Koussevitzky took Bernstein under his wing, developing his musicianship and equipping him with conducting technique. Bernstein still speaks with warmth of his former master, Dr. Reiner, but is high in his praise "and proud to be a pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky." At their first meeting, Koussevitzky and Bernstein became instant friends.

Plays Boogie-Woogie Too

"I fell in love with Tanglewood the first time I visited the place," said Bernstein. A few nights during his first year he drifted from the serious conducting classes at the Music Center and was often seen playing boogie-woogie at the Log Cabin on the Lenox-Pittsfield road where he used to entertain his friends.

"I've gotten away from boogie-woogie in the last couple of years," he said smilingly, but his friends contend he still plays a little boogie-woogie when he's not under pressure preparing for a concert.

In the fall of 1941 young Bernstein went to Boston at Koussevitzky's suggestion and opened a studio.

"I didn't work at all that fall and winter," he said, explaining that at that time the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a non-union organization. He was a union musician and couldn't play a concerto as planned because of the non-union status of the orchestra.

Bernstein decided to send out cards announcing he had opened a studio, hoping his stay in Boston wouldn't be a total loss, but as things turned out it was. He didn't get a pupil but managed to do a lot of composing.

He spent the next summer back at Tanglewood. In the winter he went to New York where he got a $25-a-week job with Harms-Remick, the publishing firm that a few years before turned him down when he was seeking employment. Today the firm publishes his music.

Bernstein wrote his first symphony, "Jeremiah," in the summer of 1943 but his enthusiasm for music started to drop because, he said, "I had been rejected three times by the Army for military service because of asthma, and I felt useless." Tanglewood didn't operate on a full scale that year but he came to the Berkshires to do a few concerts with Dr. Koussevitzky for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

It was that summer he first met Dr. Artur Rodzinski, who was living at the time in Stockbridge. Rodzinski, who was then conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra invited Bernstein to be his assistant.

"Up until then," recalled Bernstein, "I was blue and ready for the river. This I thought was the beginning of a career."

Dr. Rodzinski, an Oxford Group member at the time of Bernstein's first meeting with him, got "guidance" to ask the young musician to become his assistant.

"We talked," Bernstein says, "on a kind of haystack. I didn't go through any scores, or even play for him. An hour later I was assistant conductor of the Philharmonic. Just like that."

Composed 'Fancy Free'

Bernstein's shaky living schedule was altered beyond recognition in the next few years. He joined with his old friend, Adolph Green and Betty Comden in 1944 to compose "Fancy Free," which turned out later to be the musical hit, "On the Town." He composed for piano and orchestra, "The Age of Anxiety," which was given rave notices after it was performed at the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year. Now he hopes to write "the great American opera." He served for three years as musical director of the New York City Symphony, resigning in 1947.

He has conducted orchestras in practically all of the great cities of the world and only two weeks ago interrupted his European tour to return to Tanglewood at the invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, to appear as guest conductor for two of the Festival concerts. He is becoming more than a pocket-edition of a celebrity at the Music Center. He isn't exclusively the product of Koussevitzky, but he feels "at home" when he's under the wing of the maestro at Tanglewood.

Bernstein will not remain for the third series of concerts at the Festival because he is flying back to Europe to complete his tour. It won't be many months, however, before "Lenyuska," as he is called by Koussevitzky, and the founder of the Music Center, team up again to start touring this country with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra.

BEFORE . . .: Three years before he became a pupil of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the conducting class at the Berkshire Music Center, Leonard Bernstein, then a counselor at Camp Onota in this city, organized and conducted this rhythm band among the campers. Here Bernstein is about to direct his musicians in a performance at the camp.

THE BIG TIME . . .: It wasn't long after Bernstein was taken under the wing of the retired conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that he started a great career as a conductor. Here the members of the BSO join in an ovation to the youthful conductor following one of his performances in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. He returns as guest conductor Sunday and again the following Sunday.

[10]

Festival

Continued From First Page

conductor at two of the concerts during the second series, will arrive at Tanglewood tomorrow to start rehearsals with the Boston Symphony on Tuesday.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is also scheduled to arrive next week at Tanglewood to start rehearsals with Dr. Koussevitzy and the BSO in her role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed on Aug. 11 as part of the Tanglewood on Parade program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

Thunderous Ovation Given Conductor, BSO

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — The entire Boston Symphony Orchestra made its seasonal debut at Tanglewood last night when it played the first of the Berkshire Festival concerts in the huge Music Shed. In the past three week ends a smaller ensemble from the orchestra has been playing six concerts of Bach and Mozart in the theatre concert hall but this was the first appearance of the complete orchestra and also the first time since the end last year of his memorable 25-year tenure that Serge Koussevitzky has conducted the famous orchestra.

The reception he was accorded and the vivid response the orchestra gave his inspired conducting gave no indication that they had been separated over the past year. The program consisted of two of Koussevitzky's favorite symphonies, the Beethoven third (the "Eroica") and the Sibelius second, symphonies in which he is on his most familiar ground and in which specific phrases as well as the larger plan have been perfected over many years of repetitions.

The "Eroica" was in the grand manner, full of strikingly executed details but otherwise with huge brush strokes on a tremendous canvas. In his tours in many countries the past year we suspect that Koussevitzky may not always have found the sensitive and instant response the Boston men give him and he seemed to revel in the subtle inflections and the marvelously rounded tone quality they produced for him.

The Sibelius he made one long fervent love song. One became intoxicated with the irresistible impetus he built up as he prepared for the long approaches to Sibelius's climaxes. It was as though he were searching for the limits to which the orchestra could go in their expressiveness. He drained the strings of their last ounce of tone and exhausted the potentialities of the winds, yet they gave to their utmost extent to the tremendous elation of the huge audience which overflowed the Shed.

Triumphal Ovation

The ovation at the end of the Sibelius was in the old-time tradition of Tanglewood. The conductor bade the orchestra stand with him on his numerous recalls to share the triumphal ovation.

Whether the "Eroica" warrants the spacious retards the conductor demanded or the funeral march is proper at the extremely broad pace he set are academic questions beside the indubitable effects he achieved. The articulation in the slow movement revealed details which had never been so clear before. It was as though one suddenly looked with a microscope at the works of a watch which had been serving him perfectly satisfactorily for years.

And the Sibelius is made for such a treatment. Its defiance of analysis makes it putty in the hands of one whose imagination is as fertile as Koussevitzky's. He conjures up pictures and situations end on end all of them puffed to some degree with bombast and fustian but none the less exciting on that account. The tonal balance of the orchestra was never more evident. On the other end of its palette the soft and delicate passages were as rich and round as in those where their full resources were required, and the instant mirroring of the conductor's wide-ranging demands found them alert and able to a superlative degree.

Union

JULY 29, 1950

SUNDAY CONCERT PROGRAM LISTED AT TANGLEWOOD

Chamber Music Rental in Morning, Composers Forum at Evening

Lenox, July 28—The program for Sunday morning's regular chamber music recital by students at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, is as follows:

Fourth concert of chamber music by members of Department II at 10 a. m. in Chamber Music Hall.

HAYDN Octet in F for Wind Instruments
I Allegro molto
II Adagio con variazione
III Menuetto
IV Allegro
Oboes—Elihu Thorner and John Heard
Clarinets—Jona Ettlinger and Richard Weerts
Bassoons—Mordecai Rechtmann and Leander Walker
Horns—Arthur Goldstein and Zoltan Kol
(Coached by Mr. Simeon Bellison)

RAVEL String Quartet
I Allegro moderato
II Assez vif—tres rhythme
III Tres lent
IV Vif et agite
Violins—Diana Steiner Viola—Robert Oppelt
George Bennett Cello—Robert Sayre
(Coached by Mr. Jean Bedetti)

BRAHMS String Quintet in G major, Op. 111
I Allegro non troppo, ma con brio
II Adagio
III Un poco allegretto
IV Vivace ma non troppo presto
Violins—Robert Gerle
Burton Fine
Violas—Raymond Montoni
Dorothy Holcomb
Violoncello—John Hsu
(Coached by Mr. William Kroll)

The program for the Composers Forum Sunday at 8:15 p. m. in the Chamber Music Hall is:

Robert Parris ....Sonata for Two Pianos (Philadelphia) (In four movements)
Pianos—Edna Bockstein and Robert Parris

Martin Boykan Sonata for Flute and Piano
Flute—Robert Armer
The Composer at the Piano

Raymond Wilding-White Piano Sonata (1950) (Boston)
Piano—Robert Parris

Theodore Snyder (NYC) .....Wee Songs
Soprano—Adele Addison
Wilhabelle Underwood
Flute—Sonya Bandett
Oboe—Jean Berg
Clarinet—Margaret Strand
Violin—Ross Shub
Violoncello—Catherine Barahart

Hector Campos-Parsi .....String Quartet (Ponce, Puerto Rico)
Violins—John Pintavalle, Ronald Balazs
Viola—Chester Petranek
Violoncello—Paul Thomas

60 U.N. Secretariat Visitors Arriving Here This Evening

Group From 22 Countries To Be Entertained in Local Homes—Guests Of Tanglewood for Week-End Concerts

Twenty-two countries will be represented by the 60 U.N. Secretariat visitors who are scheduled to arrive at Union Station tonight at 9.48.

The group will be house-guests of local residents and will be the guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon. Among them will be Benjamin Cohen of Chile, assistant secretary general, and Mrs. Cohen. The group will return to New York from the Stockbridge station following the Sunday concert.

At the station tonight, they will be met by the 30 or more Pittsfield persons who made housing arrangements for them through the Workshop for World Understanding. The pairings of guests and hosts were set up with the help of Mrs. Frederick M. Myers and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate.

Suggested by Mrs. Roosevelt

The Berkshire week end for the U.N. Secretariat members was first suggested last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

In addition to the adult group, 12 young people, children of other Secretariat members, will spend this week end here as guests of the Junior Friends of the Berkshire Athenaeum. They will arrive with the others on the train tonight. Arrangements for their visit are under the direction of Miss Lucille V. Burbank of the library.

The adult visitors and their local hosts will occupy a block of seats in the Tanglewood Shed for both music programs. Before the Sunday concert, a picnic will be held on the grounds at Tanglewood at 1. Besides hosts and Secretariat guests, invitations have been sent to about a dozen, including Dr. Koussevitzky and faculty members of the music school. Arrangements for the picnic have been made by the Pittsfield League of Women Voters.

About 20 of the younger set in the U.N. group will be entertained at an afternoon of sport events tomorrow on the south shore of Pontoosuc Lake. They will swim, go boating, play volley ball and other games at the "Castle," summer home of a group of GE engineers.

Tanglewood

Chamber Music Recital Tomorrow at 10 AM

The program for Sunday morning's regular chamber music recital by students at the Berkshire Music Center was announced today. It will be the fourth concert of chamber music by members of Department II and will start at 10 AM in the Chamber Music Hall.

The program follows:

Octet in F for Wind Instruments ... Haydn
I Allegro molto
II Adagio con variazione
III Menuetto
IV Allegro
Oboes —
Elihu Thorner, John Heard
Clarinets —
Jona Ettlinger, Richard Weerts
Bassoons —
Mordecai Rechtmann, Leander Walker Horns —
Arthur Goldstein, Zoltan Kol
(Coached by Simeon Bellison)
String Quartet ..... Ravel
I Allegro moderato
II Assez vif—tres rhythme
III Tres lent
IV Vif et agite
Violins —
Diana Steiner, George Bennett
Viola —
Robert Oppelt
Cello —
Robert Sayrs
(Coached by Jean Bedetti)
String Quintet in G major ..... Brahms
Opus 111
I Allegro non troppo, ma con brio
II Adagio
III Un poco allegretto
IV Vivace ma non troppo presto
Violins —
Robert Gerle, Burton Fine
Violas —
Raymond Montoni, Dorothy Holcomb
Violincello —
John Hsu
(Coached by William Kroll)

BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, JULY 30, 1950

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival continues into its second week of the season at Tanglewood under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, this week. Leonard Bernstein is the guest conductor of the concerts today and next Sunday, while Victor de Sabata will conduct Thursday and Saturday evenings. Tomorrow night Lukas Foss will conduct a performance of his new opera, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County." The complete concert programs are as follows:

TODAY AT 3:00
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Adagietto — Shapero
Timon of Athens — Diamond
The Song of Songs — Foss
(Ellabelle Davis, soloist)
Symphony No. 2 — Brahms

THURSDAY AT 8:15
Victor de Sabata conducting
"Academic Festival" Overture — Brahms
"Unfinished" Symphony — Schubert
"Pines of Rome" — Respighi
"Spirituals" — Gould
"Tristan and Isolde" Prelude and Love-Death — Wagner

SATURDAY AT 8:15
Victor de Sabata conducting
Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio — Bach
Symphony in E flat major — Mozart
"The Roman Carnival" Overture — Berlioz
Pezzo Concertante — Ghedini
Symphony No. 5 — Beethoven

SUNDAY, AUG. 6
Leonard Bernstein conducting
"Mother Goose" Suite; Alborado del Gracioso; Piano Concerto (Leonard Bernstein, soloist) — Ravel
"Romeo and Juliet" excerpts — Berlioz

VICTOR DE SABATA, Italian conductor who will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood Thursday and Saturday evenings.

Moonshine

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

In addition to its final consultation of the almanac for moon phases, I trust the symphony management concurs in Dr. Koussevitzky's taste in suggesting no movies for concert nights.

JOHN BARKER.

Pittsfield.

Globe

--Berkshire Festival

Berkshire Festival Now in Full Swing at Tanglewood

The main portion of the Berkshire Music Festival, by the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now in full swing at Tanglewood, in Lenox. The concert this afternoon at 3 in the Music Shed will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the following program:

Harold Shaperol Adagietto; David Diamond: "Timon of Athens"; Lukas Foss: "The Song of Songs" (Ellabelle Davis, soprano soloist); Brahms: Second Symphony.

The programs for series B, next week-end, will be as follows:

Thursday at 8:15, Victor De Sabata conducting. Brahms: "Academic Festival" Overture; Schubert: "Unfinished" Symphony; Respighi: "The Pines of Rome"; Morton Gould: Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra; Wagner: Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde."

Saturday at 8:15, Mr. De Sabata conducting. Bach: Sinfonia from Christmas Oratorio; Mozart: Symphony in E-flat (K. 543); Berlioz: Overture, "The Roman Carnival"; Ghedini: Pezzo Concertante; Beethoven: Fifth Symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 6, at 3, Leonard Bernstein conducting. Ravel: "Mothen Goose" Suite, Alborada del Gracioso, Piano Concerto (Mr. Bernstein, soloist); Berlioz: Excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony.

VICTOR de SABATA, noted conductor will appear at Tanglewood this week.

Victor de Sabata to Conduct At Tanglewood This Week

Italian Maestro to Lead Boston Symphony Thursday and Saturday Nights in Music Shed; Final Mozart Program Given in Theater-Concert Hall

By VICTOR PRAHL

A variety of musical events are scheduled for the coming week at Tanglewood. In this afternoon's concert Leonard Bernstein will conduct the full Boston Orchestra in a program that includes three compositions by young American composers, an Adagio by Shapiro, 'Timon of Athens" by David Diamond, and "The Song of Songs" by Lukas Foss with Ellabelle Davis as soloist. The concert will close with the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Opera Tomorrow

On Monday night the opera department will present opera scenes, including a performance of "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss: Tuesday at 4.30 the small choir will offer a program of Bach Cantatas and in the evening Alexander Schneider will play three Bach Sonatas for violin alone, completing the set of six in another recital on Wednesday night. On Thursday night the dynamic Italian conductor Victor de Sabata will make his debut in this vicinity in the following program:—

VICTOR DE SABATA

"Academic Festival Overture" ..... Brahms
"Unfinished" Symphony ..... Schubert
"Pines of Rome" ..... Respighi
"Spirituals" for strings and orchestra Gould
Prelude and Love-Death, "Tristan and Isolde" ..... Wagner

The same conductor will hold forth on Saturday night in the following works:—

Sinfonia from Christmas Oratorio ... Bach
Symphony in E flat ..... Mozart
Overture, "The Roman Carnival" .. Berlioz
Pezzo Concertante ..... Ghedini
Symphony No. 5 ..... Beethoven

Mozart Program

The last of the concerts in the theater-concert hall by members of the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky was given last Sunday afternoon. It was another all-Mozart program and opened with the rarely heard Symphony No. 33 in B flat (K. 319). Listening to this joyous work written just after the death of the composer's mother and in the midst of an unhappy love affair one was impressed anew with how little Mozart's compositions were influenced by his personal life. His was an endless well of pure inspiration that flowed on independantly of any individual suffering. Dr. Koussevitzky, in top form, gave the work a vital reading that bristled with life and gaiety.

Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff were soloists in the Concerto for Two Pianos in E flat (K. 365), and of the numerous performances we have heard this talented pair give of this work, this was by far the most distinguished. The tenderness, repose, and contemplative spirit of the lovely. Andante was really memorable in this performance. And in the first and last movements there was perfect balance, elasticity and spring of rhythm and a beautiful clarity that always bespoke the spirit of the music. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were as one with the soloists rounding out a performance that approached perfection.

Jupiter Symphony

The second half included the Overture to "Idomeneo" and the "Jupiter" Symphony. This last and probably the greatest of all Mozart's symphonies has been heard each season in this series but this performance too stood out as one to be remembered. Its intricate figuration and contrapuntal complexities were all skillfully welded into the smoothest flowing ensemble imaginable, projecting perfectly this triumphant expression of Mozart's art.

A perfect day helped attract an outdoor audience at least three times the size of the tin the Auditorium and there was a festive spirit about the whole concert.

Thursday Concert

No one could possibly quibble over the substantial matter offered in the two symposnes Dr. Koussevitzky chose for the opening concert in the big shed on Thursday night. Of heroic proportions, both Beethoven's "Eroica" and "Second" are mighty works among the most significant of the symphonic repertoire. It was a rare experience hearing a conductor in the mellow years of his maturity and a great orchestra, both perfectly at home in these compositions, project their inner and essential meaning with such a comprehensive understanding.

The performance of the "Eroica" was a revealing one. The powerful opening movement, the impressive funeral march, the shimmering electrical scherzo, and the climactic finale were delivered in turn with a majesty, nobility, vitality, and splendor that was overpowering.

The Sibelius is a weighty work but the composer's personal style afforded plenty of contract to that of Beethoven. In this symphony the great Finn really comes into his own and in expressing his national spirit the powerful starkness of his personal utterance assumes a new and powerful meaning. The authentic folk qualities which color the whole symphony surge on to the exciting grandeur and breadth of the thrilling theme for the brasses of the last movement. These passages too were delivered with a brilliance that was nothing short of overwhelming.

An audience of some 8800 reacted enthusiastically to the superb performances of these two major works, long associated with this great conductor and his orchestra both in performances and recordings.

We regret that we were unable to hear the performance of Mozart's youthful opera "La Finta Giardiniera" on Tuesday night, but from all reports we understand that Adele Addison, gifted young Springfield soprano registered a major success in the leading role.

'Scattered Showers' Forecast For Music Festival Week End

ELLABELLE DAVIS
Soloist Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD—Berkshire Festival officials have their fingers crossed today on the weather forecast for the week end, which, according to the U.S. Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport is "scattered showers" today and tomorrow. If the rain holds off for tonight's concert at 8.15 and tomorrow's program, starting at 3, Festival officials will look for huge crowds to pour into the Tanglewood grounds for both events.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in Bruckner's Symphony No. 7 and Debussy's two nocturnes ("Clouds" and "Festivals") and "The Sea."

Tomorrow afternoon Leonard Bernstein, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's pupils in his conducting class and a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will appear as guest conductor with the BSO.

The program for tomorrow's concert follows:

Adagietto ..... Shapero
Timon of Athens ..... Diamond
The Song of Songs ..... Foss
Ellabelle Davis, Soprano Soloist
Symphony No. 2 ..... Brahms

Victor deSabata, the Italian conductor, who will appear as guest conductor Thursday evening, Aug. 3, and Saturday evening, Aug. 5, arrived at Tanglewood this morning. He was met in Albany by George E. Judd, manager of the BSO, and his son, George E. Judd Jr., who is vacationing here from his duties as manager of the Oklahoma Symphony Orchestra. Mr. deSabata will start rehearsals with the orchestra on Tuesday.

David Diamond, who composed "Timon of Athens" to be performed tomorrow afternoon, is here for the week end concerts and will appear in the Music Shed tomorrow afternoon when his work will be played.

In Brief . . .

A welcome to the 60 week-end visitors from the U.N. May this practical, if brief, adventure in getting along together refresh them for the trying days that lie ahead. The Berkshires are proud to be their hosts . . . If they're looking for a hit act at Tanglewood on Parade this year, we submit Leonard Bernstein conducting Camp Onota's current rhythm band. The shorts might be optional

The Lions Club's [illegible] of nine

Bruckner's Symphony No. 7 Rare Tanglewood Pleasure

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra Give Vivid Interpretation; Shower Delays Program

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 29—Anton Bruckner's symphony No. 7 comprised the first part of the program given by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood tonight. The music of Bruckner, like that of Mahler, needs a special build-up, but in spite of this Dr. Koussevitzky succeeded in making the work interesting and at times highly vivid. His sympathetic approach enkindled with warmth the ascending, aspiring themes of the opening movement, so devotional in their expressiveness. Moving, too, were the rich organ-like sonorities of the chorale in the slow movement. The scherzo provided a welcome contrast yet here, too, a religious atmosphere pervaded the work. Most colorful of the four movements was the dynamic finale with its ingenious orchestration. Four tubas and a contrabass tuba augment the orchestra in adding a rich, organesque character to the symphony. It was a pleasure listening to this rarely played work by a neglected composer.

Debussy's Works

The second half consisted of Debussy' two nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals" and his symphonic poem, "The Sea." The subtleties of Debussy's music elude some conductors but Dr. Koussevitsky seems to have an intuitive feeling for it which is complimented by the predominantly French personnel of the orchestra. Especially in these three pieces celebrating the glories of nature did they sense the vague atmosphere of the composer's idiom, so sensitive and expressive. Brilliant was the realization of the restless, dancing rhythms of "Festivals" and as for the great tone-poem, "The Sea," it had long been associated with the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky, their fine recording setting a standard for its performance. To this its tempestuous, surging phrases carried a fresh thrill teamed with virtuosity.

The late afternoon sunshine helped attract an audience of 9000 and, unfortunately, an unexpected shower drove the outdoor [illegible] under cover just before the [illegible] movement of the Bruckner, causing somewhat of a stir and slightly delaying the progress of the symphony.

Tomorow evening at Tanglewood, the big concerts open a series of nine programs in the Music Shed. These are the high marks of the season, and to them will come music lovers from all over the nation. Those who have tickets will sit in the spacious shed. Those who have no tickets will sit on spacious lawns along with the thousands of others, and will enjoy the music, amidst beautiful surroundings, from a distance. All will come away thrilled with a magnificent performance.

Our Hilltown Neighbors

By DAVID J. MALCOLM

Summer Music

Musical enterprises usually have hard sledding. People will pay freely for entertainment of the shoddiest sort and yet be loath to part with a few dollars for the privilege of listening to a group of musicians in the performance of good music or for the guaranteed support of such organizations. So much good music is available "for free," on the radio and elsewhere, that many of those who appreciate have come to feel that they are entitled to it without cost, and that somebody else will take care of the bills.

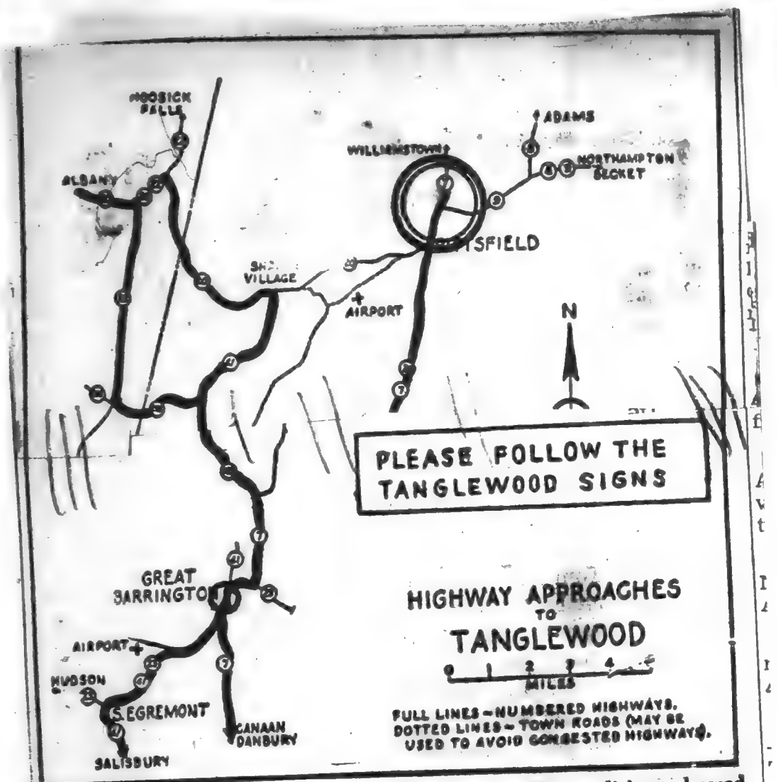
Now Boston is threatened with the loss of its Esplanade concerts because of heavy deficits. The expense of these summertime diversions on the banks of the Charles has to be covered by contributions and when those of the general public fall short, as they almost invariably do, the difference must be met by private donations. Already Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade concerts for 22 years, has gone to California for the rest of the season and guest conductors are filling in.

A similar condition exists in New York, where the Philharmonic-Symphony schedule at Lewisohn Stadium has been curtailed by a week and may have to be concluded earlier. Though admission is charged at these concerts, it has been announced that an additional $50,000 must be raised immediately to keep them going. Bad weather has been a factor in this year's slump, and an occasional crowd such as attended the annual Gershwin program (23,000) can't take up the slack. At Tanglewood financial problems are not acute.

Springfield's summer music consists mainly of the free Quadrangle concerts, of which only three are being given this season. Musical organizations like the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and the Springfield Orchestra Association which derive revenue from ticket sales also depend to a large extent on contributions from Friends of Music for their existence. Americans may be material-minded, but most of them are willing to pay for what they get, and even intangible benefits can't be enjoyed indefinitely for nothing.

---

[12]



A BIG HELP: One of the reasons the traffic conditions showed signs of improvement at Thursday night's opening Music Shed concert at Tanglewood, is this route map distributed by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, showing the best highway approaches to the Berkshire Festival.

Eagle July 29

K HERALD TRIBUNE, MONDAY, JULY

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

American Works Heard

By Arthur Berger

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 30.—Leonard Bernstein's program for this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert in the mammoth Tanglewood shed went a long way toward giving this year's Berkshire Festival its measure of freshness. It listed three of our best young American composers whose music Mr. Bernstein brings to life in a fashion no one quite equals. David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" was the news of the occasion. Harold Shapero's adagietto and (with Ellabells Davis again as the excellent soprano) Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" had both been favorably received before and were very good to hear again.

Rounding out a week-end pair of programs that began last night with Bruckner and Debussy under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, the three American works made a welcome group, with the one reservation—there was too much slow music.

"Timon of Athens," subtitled "Symphonic Portrait (After Shakespeare)," is described as a "psycho-orchestral study" of the "psychopathic," but also "noble and generous," hero of Shakespeare's play. Its over-all mood is brooding. But brilliant orchestral flashes appear suddenly and, like hallucinations, as suddenly disappear. Their presence in its consistently rich orchestral sonority is vital. Otherwise this eight-minute work would seem mainly to evoke Berlioz and other romantic tone poets.

In Romatic Vein

Romantic it is, even to the motive, which gives a new twist to those three questioning notes so fascinating to nineteenth-century masters from Bethoven with his "muss es sein" to Liszt of "Les Preludes." All in all, "Timon" is Diamond in his most tender and rhapsodic vein, weaving melodic threads in his own characteristic way.

Serge Koussevitzky has done more than his share for new music and now, at seventy-six, he seems understandably content to leave this department to his young associates. But his program last night was in no sense routine or lacking in power and ambitiousness. Bruckner's hour-long seventh symphony is not the sort of music that lends itself to frequent performances, and this was, as a matter of fact, the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has done it without cuts. His masterful reading was remarkable for its eloquence, accuracy and style. His tempos, some of them a shade fast for the Brucknerites, minimized the arid stretches and pointed up the several inspired and beautiful ones.

Weather Is Unsettled

Unsettled weather played tricks with the week-end concerts. Partly cloudy, but not unpromising skies preceded last night's event, but a light rain started to fall at about the second movement of the Bruckner. Many hardy listeners remained on the lawns, some of them without even protection of blankets or the shelter of trees. Most of the audience that overflowed the 6,000-capacity shed, however, were allowed to stand under the shed or bring in the outside benches and their own camp chairs. Conversely, very ominous clouds preceded this afternoon's concert, and a stiff downpour routed those on the lawn just before the concert began. When it did begin, however, the sun began to shine brightly, and those who had sought protection returned to their places on the lawn, and the usual afternoon, idyllic scene of listeners sprawled and relaxed under the skies was restored. But the time Mr. Bernstein reached the second half of his program, which consisted of the Brahms fourth symphony, the grounds were dry enough for comfortable reclining. The attendance at both concerts was very good, considering that both the weather and programs did not have wide popular appeal. There were almost 10,000 last night and 9,500 this afternoon.

LETTERS TO THE TRANSCRIPT: July 10

Merits Public Support

Editor of the Transcript:

The world-wide fame of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood and the superlative concerts in the big shed which attracts thousands at every performance, should not allow the public to overlook the importance of the less sensational school of music conducted as a vital factor in the festival program by the Boston symphony orchestra, the only great orchestra which sponsors a music school. The Berkshire Music center created by Serge Koussevitzky, its director, is holding its eighth session from July 3 to August 13. Last year 465 students from 36 states and 19 foreign countries, most of whom were advanced musicians, attended the school. This year approximately the same number will devote an intensive six weeks to study under a faculty composed of eminent leaders in their respective fields.

Throughout the session concerts of professional quality will be given by the talented students of the Music center. These concerts include chamber music arranged by Gregor Piatigorsky, opera directed by Boris Goldovsky, and orchestral performances under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, while the chorus trained by Hugh Ross will present programs in large and small groups. In addition to the school concerts five chamber concerts in recognition of this year's Bach anniversary have been provided through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and E. Power Biggs will present a series of three organ recitals also devoted to the works of Bach. Altogether more than 40 concerts will be given in connection with the Music Center all of which are open to voluntary subscribers to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The importance and educational significance of the Music Center as a contribution to American culture can hardly be over-estimated and it should receive the active support of the public. Enrollment blanks for members and a complete calendar of events may be obtained from the Office of the Friends Tanglewood, Lenox.

KARL E. WESTON, Williamstown.

THE BOSTON HERALD, M

Koussevitzky, Bernstein Direct Weekend Tanglewood Concert

By BEN GARDINER

TANGLEWOOD, July 30—Serge Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein, both recently returned from concert tours abroad, have completed the first series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the large music shed here in the Berkshires. Nearly 10,000 attended the week-end concerts Saturday night and this afternoon.

An unmistakable air of welcome lent unusual excitement to these idyllic surroundings and to the throngs, from those in formal dress in the boxes to the extras informally grouped on the vast lawn outside the shed itself. Except for such minor inconveniences as slight rain Saturday night and a brief cloudburst before today's concert, the events proved to be rewarding not only for the music heard but for the pleasantness of being out in the country in the company of an orchestra which is second to none in the world.

STIRS AUDIENCE

Festival Director Koussevitzky had selected a program that was bound to stir his audience to the depths of their spirits Saturday night. Leading off with Bruckner's Seventh Symphony—the one which achieved overdue recognition for this Austrian composer—he worked everybody up to a pitch of enthusiasm. When this piece, with its sombre and foreboding adagio second movement, was first performed in 1883 it was by Nikisch, a conductor who achieved the most fiery results. Koussevitzky's own rendition was of the same order—brilliant, inspired and lucid throughout even the heaviest textures.

That evening closed with Debussy's first two orchestral nocturnes and his "La Mer," and by that time the listeners were veritably in seventh heaven. The applause was nearly deafening.

The first part of today's program consisted of music by living composers, two of them present in the audience. There was the Adagio from Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra, a serious, darkly threatening piece for which the composer could not take a bow because he is away in Europe. Then followed David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" portrait based on Shakespeare's play.

'SONG OF SONGS'

But in Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs," which this orchestra has performed several times since its composition four years ago, the concert soared to great heights of lyric beauty. There is a simplicity about the second movement that is at once catching and enticing. Ellabelle Davis' singing of these words, particularly the verse beginning "Come, my beloved" was a thrilling experience long to remember.

The second half of the program was given over to Brahms' Fourth Symphony. Here Bernstein let loose and conducted in his most idiomatic style—which inclines even more this year than before to be a dance worth watching all by itself. But by whatever means he can inspire the orchestra, Bernstein is consistently able to bring out its best qualities and interpret the piece as fully as anyone could ask.

Among the many visiting notables here this weekend were Fritz Kreisler, the famous violinist, and 50 members of the United Nations secretariat.

[13]

Boston Sunday Herald Magazine July 30

Berkshire Music

High up in the Berkshire's rolling hills, music lovers turn country highways into crowded roads from early July to mid-August—time of the Berkshire Music Festival. Blue-jeaned girls and swishly gowned women, and their escorts steep themselves in the music, relaxing under trees, on the broad lawns, or indoors while the country's leading musicians present outstanding scores. And all the while Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Music Center, works with students who will probably be appearing at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, when they make their marks in the music world.

BALLERINAS RELAX—Three members of the Ballet Theater from nearby Jacobs Pillow enjoy a sunbath as well as the music.

THE SCORE is explained to string players by Mr. Jean Bedetti. This is called a sectional rehearsal.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY in conversation with friends during a [illegible] at his cottage

HARPIST REHEARSES—Colette Rushford of Salem, Mass., plays the harp out of doors in cool Tanglewood breezes.

STUDENTS RELAX on the broad lawns of Tanglewood after a concert.

EXPERT INSTRUCTION is given by Zwi Zeitlin, Palestinian guest artist. The pupil is from South Carolina.

ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

Springfield Sunday Republican

• SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS •

JULY 30 1950

Berkshire Holiday

Why must local folks journey to distant points and spend half of their vacation money on transportation? This question has been asked many times, and for our money you can do just as well right in our own territory as to journey to another section of the country for the same type of recreation. The rugged Berkshires are ideal for vacations at any time of the year. Here nature paints an ever-changing picture that makes every season a sheer delight. Berkshire County has so MUCH to offer the traveler . . . . 73,098 acres of State Forests; 13 rivers; 112 brooks and streams; 59 lakes; 17 major waterfalls; 23 camping and picnic areas; 14 golf courses; 8 ski centers; 200 miles of State Highways; 1500 miles of country roads. The mean elevation is 1500 feet above sea level, insuring cool nights in summer and ample snow in winter. The highest elevation, Mt. Greylock, is 3491 feet above sea level. Be active or lazy as your whim dictates! You'll find everything from cultural interests to the finest in every line of sports. Shown here and on Page 3 are points of interest that should favor everyone. They were taken on a recent weekend when young ladies from Springfield and Pittsfield were found vacationing in the Berkshires by Staff Photographer Paul Krause.

RELAXIN' TIME

Swimming pools dot the landscape throughout the Berkshires. Our young couples disport in the lavish pool with stainless steel slide at Oak 'n' Spruce lodge in South Lee.

BACKSTAGE

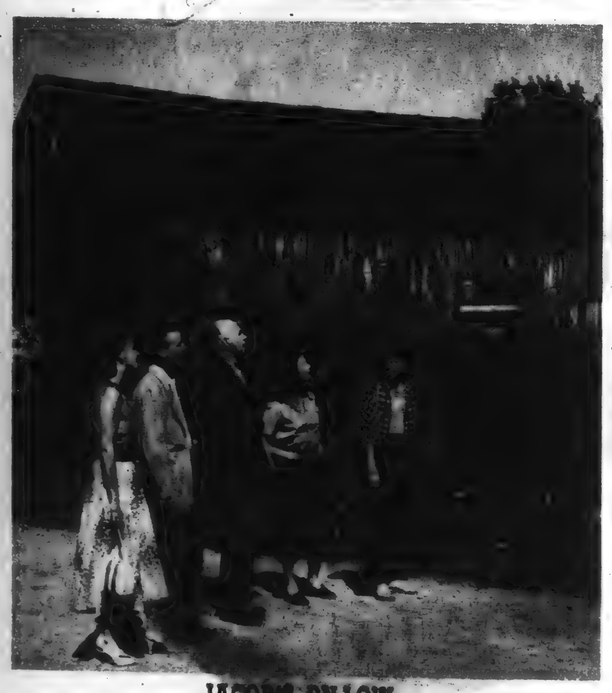
A peek at the set for "Harvey", latest production at the Berkshire Playhouse, was given the young ladies by Director William Miles. Broadway celebrities and students of the School of Drama use the Playhouse which was once a casino and an art center.

AFTERNOON OF MUSIC

— ABOVE — LEFT — The couples are shown on the lawn outside of the music shed at Tanglewood. Within Artist E. Power Biggs was playing music by Bach written for the organ.

HISTORICAL SITE

Nancy and Herb have just spent an hour or so visiting the Mission House. Once the home of John Sergeant, first missionary to the Stockbridge Indians . . . this early Colonial house was built in 1739 and is now a museum of early Americana.

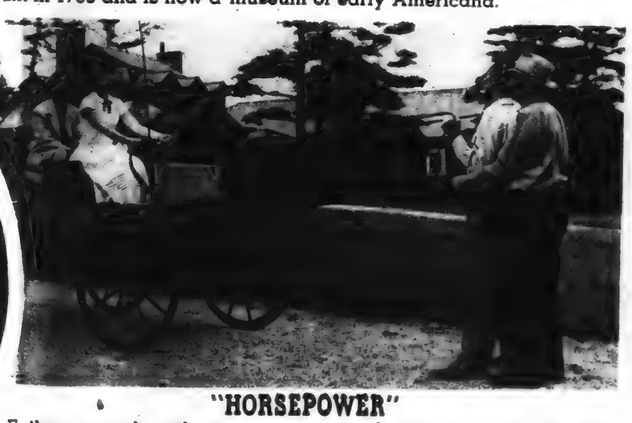


JACOB'S PILLOW

No vacation would be complete without a visit to the only theatre in this country devoted entirely to the dance. Personally conducted tour by the old master, Ted Shawn, proved an unforgettable experience.

IMPORTED BEAUTY

Main entrance at Elm Court is adorned with this marble and bronze fountain, valued at $100,000. This is but one of many fabulous appointments within and about this ornate estate. On the grounds are to be found nine greenhouses that furnish every type of flower and include tropical fruits as well.



"HORSEPOWER"

Failure to make advance reservations found the young visitors with a basket show wagon sans the horses. Messrs Prinz and Kimball were quite unaware of the photographer's intentions as they supplied the "horsepower".

SCENIC BEAUTY

Once you enter the Berkshires scenic beauty is on every side. This is the famed view of Stockbridge bowl, taken from the grounds at Tanglewood.

RARE TREAT

Ornate and expensively appointed, this dining room, symbol of a by-gone era, was selected as the spot for dinner at fabulous Elm Court. This 1000-acre estate was built by the Vanderbilts as a summer residence but is now open to resort clientele.

3 CONTEMPORARIES PERFORMED AT FETE

Bernstein Conducts Works by Shapero, Diamond and Foss at Berkshire Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 30—It was the turn of contemporary music at the Berkshire Festival this afternoon. Leonard Bernstein, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, offered music by Harold Shapero, David Diamond and Lukas Foss, as well as Brahms' Fourth Symphony. At last night's concert, which Serge Koussevitzky conducted, the program embraced Bruckner's Seventh Symphony and two nocturnes and "La Mer" by Debussy.

Though the week-end was marred by showers—they fell in the middle of last night's concert and at the start of this afternoon's—big crowds turned out for the programs in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Last night's attendance was 9,900 and today's was 9,500.

Of the three contemporary pieces today the Adagio from Mr. Shapero's symphony for classical orchestra was the most impressive to this listener. Despite the fact that it seems a bit too long, it has something to say. Mr. Shapero's writing has personal feeling, and he projects this emotion with integrity.

There is little posturing or ranting, as might be the case with some young composers who cannot resist the temptation to show how they can throw their orchestral weight around. Mr. Shapero's style is simple and direct; it is "modern" only where there is a sound reason for it.

Mr. Bernstein, who had conducted the whole symphony in Boston, did only the Adagio in New York last season. It is a pity that he did not see fit to conduct the entire composition here.

Mr. Diamond's contribution was "Timon of Athens," a symphonic portrait based on Shakespeare. The music, which had its first performance in Louisville last February, makes skillful use of the full machinery of the orchestra. Mr. Diamond's "Timon of Athens" is, at the least, a theatrical fellow. Occasionally there is a suggestion of the character's essential tragedy, but not so much as there might be.

Of Mr. Foss' Cantata, "The Song of Songs," it must be said that the composer was courageous to attempt to set the radiant biblical lines to music. If he could not quite match the ancient poet's ecstasy, he did convey something of the mood. He seemed to be happiest in the more agitated passages where unadorned, soaring lyricism seemed to be in order. His musical style was halting. But he need not feel too dejected. He was 24 when he wrote the piece four years ago, and at the age it is easier to feel ecstasy than to give it artistic form.

Ellabelle Davis, the American soprano, who has been soloist in the cantata in New York and in many other places, sang with great feeling and dignity.

Mr. Bernstein conducted these pieces with drive and precision. He was responsive to the rhythmic and coloristic devices of the music, and he and the orchestra made them alive and persuasive.

At last night's concert Mr. Koussevitzky gave performances in the grand, sonorous line. The Bruckner symphony, which has its passionate admirers, was done with breadth and spaciousness. Its climaxes were tremendous, with conductor and orchestra working themselves to a frazzle to keep everything going.

9500 ATTEND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Conducted by Leonard Bernstein

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, July 30—Approximately 9500 music lovers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Leonard Bernstein, conducting, paid tribute to three American composers and to Johannes Brahms this afternoon. It was interesting to note the devotion with which Bernstein, 32, read the works of Harold Shaperi, 30, David Diamond, 35, and Lukas Foss, 28 years old. Diamond and Foss were in the audience to acknowledge its applause.

The program opened with the Adagio from Shapiro's "Symphony For Classical Orchestra." This was written in 1947 on commission from the Koussevitsky Music Foundation. It would seem from listening to this movement that Mr. Shapiro has the soul of a melodist. He has woven some rarely beautiful melodies into the fabric of his symphony and while there are moments of dissonance, moments which are musically acidulous, the sum total adds up to extremely lovely, listenable material.

On the other hand, David Diamond's portrait of "Timon of Athens" abounds in raucous harmonies, triple fortes and every kind of ear shattering verbiage. He has attempted to reveal time on the man, but he might have well been revealing a thunder storm. It is powerful music yet it adds little to Shakespeare.

Lucas Foss, former pianist with the Boston Symphony and now a Prix De Rome winner, composed his "Song of Songs," a Biblical Cantata for soprano and orchestra, in 1946 and it had its first performance during the 1947-48 Berkshire music festival. Mr.

Continued On Page 7

9500 ATTEND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Continued from Page 1

Bernstein conducted the work, we believe, and Ellabelle Davis was the soprano, as she was today. Foss based this cantata on the text of "The Song of Solomon," King James version.

This is a sensitive, wonderfully etched work, sincere, straight-forward and intensely moving. Miss Davis, singing better than we have ever heard her, negotiated the difficult passages with notable fluency. The voice rose above the orchestra easily and her enunciation was admirable. Mr. Bernstein read the cantata for what it was, a simple manifestation of faith.

Mr. Bernstein's excursion into the music of Brahms was less exciting than we had expected. He chose to program the master's first symphony, a work which has challenged the interpretive genius of many a conductor. Bernstein's conception of the opening movement seemed intimate. It was not on the grand scale and one felt the loss. His entire reading of the work was based on this intimate style, thus the symphony was weakened in expression because of it.

The orchestra played magnificently, as it always does, but it was evident that Mr. Bernstein's metier, at the moment, is not the classics, yet give him a contemporary work to interpret and few can equal him.

Series B, the current festival opens Thursday night when Victor Di Sabata will make his initial appearance at the festival. There is much anticipation of this event, for the fiery Italian has aroused a deal of controversy wherever he has appeared in this country.

Storm Clears Away In Time for Concert

By E. P. TROTT

Lenox, July 30—The [illegible] series of Berkshire festival concerts were attended by [illegible] afternoon. For an hour or more prior to concert time, [illegible] and streaks of lightning [illegible] from the black clouds that kept circling the grounds of Tanglewood. While off in the distance the thunder increased in its crescendo, sun shone brilliantly on the music shed and the hundreds of music lovers stretched out on the lawn surrounding it. With the pealing of the final bells to call patrons to their seats the clouds overhead darkened and opened forth to let loose a downpour that sent those on the lawn scampering for the covering of a shed.

Start of the program was held up and within five minutes the sun was shining brilliantly as ever and the throngs returned to their positions on the grass and the droves of humanity again poured out of the parking area to surge through the gates. And until intermission time music lovers continued to arrive after being convinced that threatening showers had spent themselves.

One man in his middle fifties stormed out of the music shed and, tearing up his ticket, headed for the public relations department where he filed a protest over the fact that the concert was not opened with the "Star Spangled Banner" especially at a time like this when American blood was being shed in Korea. Having spoken his piece, he left the grounds.

Attending this afternoon's concert were Victor De Dabota, noted Italian conductor; David Diamond, composer of "Timon of Athens" which was played as part of today's program, and Stephen Longstreet, author and playwright who wrote "The Jolson Story" and "High Button Shoes." Following his visit to Tanglewood he left for New York from where he will return to his home in Beverly Hills, Cal.

More than 50 United Nations secretariat members, here as guests of Tanglewood for this afternoon's concert, enjoyed a picnic at the main house.

Also attending as guests were a group of foreign engineers at Massachusetts Institute of Technology who are in the United States as part of the foreign student summer project. The group represented 25 countries of the world.

The management's efforts to interest patrons in remaining on the grounds at the close of concerts in order to relieve traffic congestion were greatly assisted by Rita Laplante, concert pianist, who played Haydn's Variations and other numbers in the exhibition room. The beauty of the music attracted several hundred.

Tomorrow night the New England premiere of Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog," based on Mark Twain's short story, will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall. A former pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and now a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, Foss will also conduct his own student orchestra for the first time. On Tuesday and Wednesday evening Alexander Schneider, work-famous violinist just back from Prague where he organized the music festival honoring Bach, will give concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall also honoring Bach.

Thursday evening the second in the series of Berkshire festival concerts will open with the noted Italian conductor, Victor De Sabato, as the guest conductor.

Musi

Include Mozart, Strauss in Thornden Concert July 12;

By E. V. W.

This date in music: 1821, publication of such important Schubert songs as "Der Fischer," "Erster Verlust," "Nahe des Geliebten" and "Der Konig in Thule."

DR. JOSEPH BARONE, director of the Civic University Orchestra, will conduct a program including Mozart, Strauss, Dvorak, Jerome Kern and Weber in Thornden Park Wednesday night. Soloist will be Mildred Oakes Kingsley, lyric soprano.

DR. BARONE, who conducted his first concert last Wednesday night in Crouse auditorium (the park program having been rained out), will open the program with the "Marriage of Figaro" Overture by Mozart; Mrs. Kingsley will sing the area, "Deh Nieni Non Tardar" ("Oh, Come, Do not Delay") from that opera and songs from Jerome Kern's "Showboat." Myron Levee is concertmaster. The concert is presented by the department of parks, city of Syracuse and Syracuse University College of Fine Arts.

* * *

Noted Repertoire In Berkshires in 20 Programs

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center and Festival [illegible] perform 61 compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach in 20 events this summer, marking the 200th anniversary of the composer's death. This comprehensive program began last night with the performance by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and will continue until Aug. 10 when the Mass in B Minor will be performed. The Mass is one of two full-length program pieces included in this commemorative series, the other being "The Art of Fugue," arranged for string quartet. Numbers of the Bach programs are open to the public, with many more open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only. Voluntary contributions to the Friends to help support activities of the music school, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, constitute membership and entitle contributors to attend 37 musical events, including two operas.

INCLUDED IN works to be performed at events limited to attendance by the Friends are 15 organ compositions by Bach, to be played by E. Power Biggs, internationally known organist, the Musical Offering, piano concerti, a violin concerto, sinfonias, cantatas, and partitas for violin and others. All six of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites will be performed this week-end and next in four concerts under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The remainder of the Bach repertoire will be presented by members of the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, by the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and by Alexander Schneider, violinist, and participant in the Prades Festival recently honoring the memory of Bach in France. Lectures on Bach will be delivered by Arthur Mendel and Hans David, co-editors of the "Bach Reader." Julius Herford of the Center faculty will conduct classes on the analysis of Bach's music.

* * *

Koussevitzky Wears White as Is Custom Each Summer

IN THE GARDENS in Tanglewood, following the opening exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall of the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Koussevitzky wore white, as is his custom during the season in Tanglewood. Only touch of color was navy blue with white check in his four-in-hand tie. He carried heavy white suede gloves. There was quite a list of celebrities near the refreshment tables from time to time as the afternoon drew to a close. Jacques Ibert, noted operatic composer, only recently arrived from France; handsome and debonnair Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor, and Gregor Piatigorsky, world-famous cellist, were among the number, as were Joseph de Pasquale, principal violist, remembered for his appearance here last season with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, Choral conductor in Tanglewood. George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony greeted friends from far and near, spoke of the forthcoming fall tour of the orchestra under the baton of Charles Muench, now in Europe, but expected to return to the States in September. The orchestra will play in the Coliseum here under Famous Artists management.

* * *

Fir Ki
He
Th
Qua
ings will Higl of C of I first ized, pear
Eds
ler,

O nou
the Boh
Cha
Co.
His ber
U.
Sin
Yal
Sco
Phi gen and tra att lat in Ellabelle Davis, American soprano, will give a special recital this afternoon at 3 o'clock in Colgate University chapel in honor of delegates and speakers at the Second Annual Conference on American Foreign Policy. She will sing classical numbers, operatic arias and Negro spirituals. Leo Taubman will be at the piano.

[16]

Music

American Premiere of Opera, Bach Program in Tanglewood; Concerts Here, Elsewhere

By EMMA VAN WORMER

THIS SUMMER, the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center in "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., mark their fifth year of support of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's music school. According to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, [illegible] will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians [illegible] study their contributions make possible.

Ibert's Work to Be Sung Twice; Other Events

JAN POPPER, acting head of the opera department, will direct the American premiere—two performances of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "La Roi d'Yvetot" for Friends' audiences. "The Jumping Frog" (Mark Twain's story) set to music by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in ob-

Mozart Opera Will Be Sung July 25 In Tanglewood

FIRST FULL 1950 presentation of the opera department of Berkshire Center Music Center Tuesday night in Tanglewood will be the three-act opera buffa "La Finta Giardiniera" (The Feigned Gardener) composed by Mozart at the age of 18 and known as his boyhood opera. The major opera production of the Center's operatic season will be "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, French composer, in Tanglewood for the American premiere on Aug. 7. The operas will be sung in the Theater-Concert Hall.

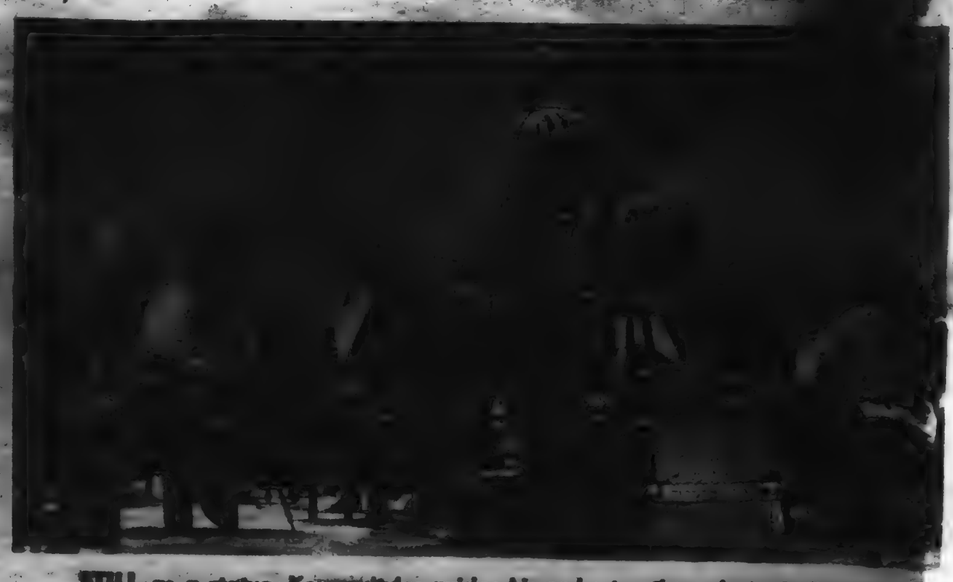
* * *

THE FIRST CONCERT by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Music Festival will be in the Music Shed in Tanglewood next Thursday night at 8:15 o'clock with other concerts in Series A set for Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, July 30, at [illegible] o'clock. Since highway approaches to Tanglewood often are overtaxed during the season, Festival visitors are asked to help in cooperating to improve the traffic situation by following Tanglewood signs, placed by State Police to show the least congested routes and to "arrive early, stay late, and have patience."

AMERICA'S MUSICAL "WORLD

AGED TANGLEWOOD TREE once shaded a [illegible] Hawthorne. Now it [illegible] moonlight off pensive listeners at a Berkshire evening concert.

STUDENTS and instruments stretch out on the lawn after a practice session



STILL as a statue, Koussevitzky guides his orchestra through a piano [illegible]

Music

American Premiere of Opera, Bach Program in Tanglewood; Concerts Here, Elsewhere

By EMMA VAN WORMER

THIS SUMMER, the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center in "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., mark their fifth year of support of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's music school. According to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, the group will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Ibert's Work to Be Sung Twice; Other Events

JAN POPPER, acting head of the opera department, will direct the American premiere—two performances of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" for Friends' audiences. "The Jumping Frog" (Mark Twain's story) set to music by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory. The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body, 400 strong in Berkshire Music Center. They come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty. They perform in orchestras and ensembles, as well as in the three operas mentioned.

THE MID-JULY program in the Theater-Concert Hall in Tanglewood, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting comprises Bach. Today the First and Second Suites will be played, along with the Violin Concerto in E Major, Ruth Posselt, soloist. Also on the program Cantata No. 12 and Cantata No. 50. There will be concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall July 22-23.

CONCERTS IN THE Music Shed will comprise three series, Thursday, July 27, Saturday, July 29, Sunday, July 30, in Series A, Thursday, Aug. 3, Saturday, Aug. 5, Sunday, Aug. 6, Series B and Thursday Aug. 10, Saturday, Aug. 12, Sunday, Aug. 13, Series C. Thursday and Saturday concerts in the Shed start at 8:15 P.M. Sunday concerts at 3 P.M. The Thursday concert, Aug. 10, will be in two parts, starting at 5 P.M. and 8:15 P.M., The Bach B Minor Mass will be sung. Leonard Bernstein will conduct July 30 and again Aug. 6. All concerts in The Shed are played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs in the Theater-Concert Hall are presented by Orchestra members.

* * *

Mozart Opera Will Be Sung July 25 In Tanglewood

FIRST FULL 1950 presentation of the opera department of Berkshire Center Music Center Tuesday night in Tanglewood will be the three-act opera buffa "La Finta Giardiniera" (The Feigned Gardener) composed by Mozart at the age of 18 and known as his boyhood opera. The major opera production of the Center's operatic season will be "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, French composer, in Tanglewood for the American premiere on Aug. 7. The operas will be sung in the Theater-Concert Hall.

* * *

THE FIRST CONCERT by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Music Festival will be in the Music Shed in Tanglewood next Thursday night at 8:15 o'clock with other concerts in Series A set for Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, July 30, at 3 o'clock. Since highway approaches to Tanglewood often are overtaxed during the season, Festival visitors are asked to help in cooperating to improve the traffic situation by following Tanglewood signs, placed by State Police to show the least congested routes and to "arrive early, stay late, and have patience."

a hall closet, had to sit the typist in the hall. office is a spacious, remodeled farm building beams, a huge fireplace, wild deer cruising over view of the Berkshire foothills. But the techeloped nine years ago is still in use.
alyze a firm's correspondence to find out what tions are involved. They then write as many s" as are necessary to cover them. The guides tters, but basic patterns which can be varied to ases.

thereafter, a sampling of the firm's letters is he head office informed of how closely its letter owing the guides.
cademic. In practice, correspondence becomes r, courteous — and effective.

How To Insult a Client var, when stores were having trouble maintaind customers grumbled, Morris wrote this guide iladelphia store:

had more customers like you. Yes, customers us know when things go wrong so we could take ps to rectify them. . . " two and a half years complaints dropped off ts letters which have an officious, suspicious urance company insisted on writing that such- nsaction would be completed only if "the bank heck." do checks bounce?" Morris asked.

y do, the transaction is automatically cancelled it?"

l Morris, "why go on, year after year, insulting er cent of your customers by implying their e phony when the situation hardly ever arises?" was dropped.
olders of another company can thank him for e head office to drop more than 100 forms

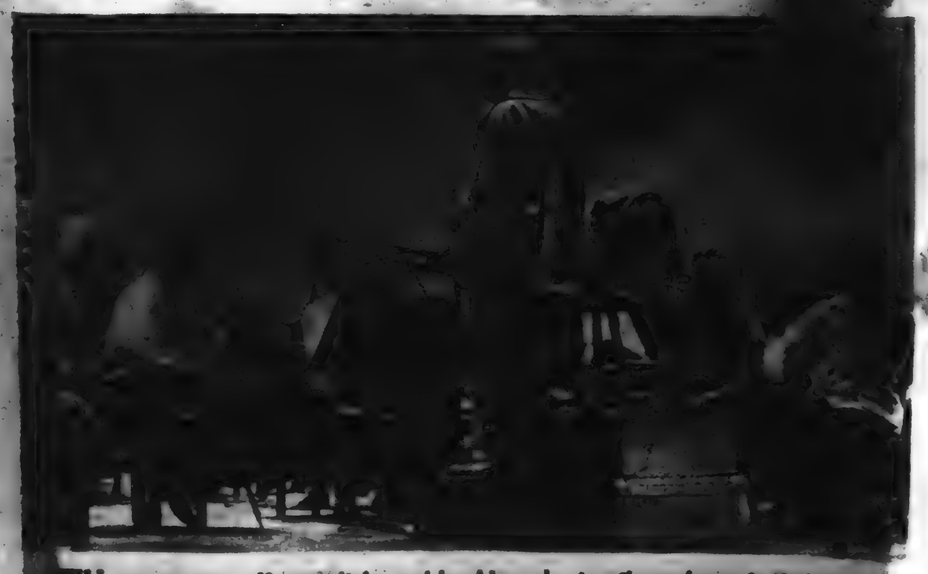
Continued on page 38

ate one of his many "friendly" letters

7

MUSICAL "WORLD

nlight off pensive listeners at a Berkshire evening concert



TILL as a statue, Koussevitzky guides his orchestra through a pianissimo

This Week
MAGAZINE
NEW YORK Herald Tribune
SECTION 8 JULY 30 1950

This Week
MAGAZINE

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
(Copyright, 1958, New York Herald Tribune Inc.)

SECTION 8 JULY 30, 1958

Babbitt

UNDAMPENED ENTHUSIASM: Despite scattered showers over the week end thousands of music lovers without reserved seats poured into Tanglewood for the week end concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This group hurries to shelter in the collonade of the Shed as rain started to fall just before the opening of yesterday afternoon's program.

Rains Fail To Stem Tanglewood Flow As Koussevitzky, Bernstein Conduct

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The first of the three major Berkshire Festival week ends came to a close with a brace of concerts conducted by Serge Koussevitzky on Saturday evening and by his distinguished disciple, Leonard Bernstein, yesterday afternoon. Two of the most interesting programs ever devised for the internationally famous music center attracted huge crowds which even the uncertain weather could not stem.

(Attendance was 9500 yesterday, 9900 Saturday for a total of 28,200 for the first series of three concerts as compared with 30,500 a year ago. Rain just before yesterday's concert and shortly after the opening of Saturday night's program sent the crowds on the lawns scurrying for cover. The threat of rain and the forecast of showers for the week end is believed to have kept many persons who planned to sit outside the Shed from attending. A year ago the weather was perfect for all three concerts in the opening series.)

For the anchor works on their respective programs, Koussevitzky chose the Bruckner seventh and Bernstein the Brahms fourth, two great symphonies which by strange coincidence were gestating in Vienna at very near the exact same moment. It is almost imperative to recall the situation and the relationship of the two composers to appreciate the two symphonies. The pathetic Bruckner suffered the involuntary lot of being born and living as a contemporary not so much of the pricipals as of the supporters of the two towering musical giants of the day, Wagner and Brahms. One just could not be an admirer of both and so the poor but gifted peasant Bruckner was catalogued without his knowledge nor consent as of the camp of one definite faction. Brahms and Bruckner were acquaintances of some intimacy; Bruckner giving his admiration to Brahms without stint; Brahms withholding his with moderate contempt, yet he went to Bruckner's funeral and was visibly affected.

First Playing of Bruckner

The Bruckner symphony had never been played at Tanglewood before and Koussevitzky gave it the full powers of his imagination and controlled the orchestra with masterful discipline. It was a touch of genius to follow the heavily orchestrated Bruckner with the ethereal and, by contrast, somewhat oriental filmy Debussy represented by two of the Nocturnes and "La Mer."

Bruckner uses a battery of brass instruments, notably tubas, to give an entirely new and unusual timbre to his symphony. There is a nobility and a pathos in his pages which Koussevitzky expressed with extremely graphic means. Bruckner is always reminding one of something else in music, a subtle condemnation, perhaps, but a continuation of the fate which hovered continually over the rustic genius.

Koussevitzky's Debussy is orchestral tone painting of peerless beauty. The various sections of the Boston orchestra produce for him masterpieces which with paint and brush would hang in the most honored galleries of the world's museums. If one bemoans the fact that music can not be permanently anthropomorphized, except for records, there is the compensation of the experience of rehearing these favorites always in seemingly new and youthful allure.

Bernstein gave the first half of

Tanglewood
Continued on Second Page

Babbitt

THE BIG THREE: Lukas Foss, left, who composed "Song of Songs," for soprano with orchestral accompaniment, shares the ovation after the performance of his composition by Ellabelle Davis, the soloist, and Leonard Bernstein, conductor, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

his program to three of his contemporaries and colleagues, all of whom, like himself, were born since World War I. It would take keener observation than ours to discern that these men of the generation which is taking over in music today are writing with an instinct or consciousness of the troubled times of the day. As a matter of fact plenty of the world's masterpieces were written at times when the world was in some such turmoil as is ours today. Therefore there is little use in scrutinizing Harold Shapero's adagietto, from his symphony for classical orchestra, for anything other than the composer's inward emotions.

Shapero's movement is long and varied and much more involved than its simple title might indicate. David Diamond's symphonic portrait, after Shakespeare, on "Timon of Athens," is a much more violent piece, expressing elemental eruptions with masses of tone. Lukas Foss has written his "Song of Songs" for soprano with orchestral accompaniment. Ellabelle Davis was the thoroughly delightful soloist.

Diamond's 'Timon'

Diamond's "Timon" is a full-blown orchestral realization of the composer's reactions to the spirit of Shakespeare's play. He attempts to depict musically the development of Shakespeare's dramatic insight of the abandonment of a man by his friends when he falls on bad times. "Timon" has always had a psychological road-block on me, I must admit, for a personal reason: I could never pass and forget the possibly harmless statement the poet utters at the outset of the play when he says, "When we for recompense have prais'd the vile."

Foss has written with especial felicity for voice in his cantata and Miss Davis sang it with complete authority. She encompassed the range with notably even ability in all registers and her breath control and tone production allowed her easily to achieve and maintain a powerful and round tone quality above Bernstein's well-subdued accompaniment, and against the intricate harmonic weaving by Foss.

For some unexplained reason a new if minor phenomenon made itself apparent at both these week-end concerts: Applause between movements of a symphony. There is no etiquette but it has been Tanglewood custom, as in practically all American concert halls, to wait until the completion of a symphony before applauding. The reasons are obvious. One may well be moved to spontaneous expression of approval by a particular movement but one bow by a conductor never suffices and before the audience quiets down sufficiently to allow the orchestra to proceed there would be long breaks and waits. Strangely enough, however, the record shows that when Richter conducted the Bruckner symphony's first Vienna performance, in 1886, the composer was "called to the stage four or five times after each section of the symphony."

Tanglewood

'The Jumping Frog' To Be Given Tonight

An opera based on the celebrated short story by Samuel Clemens, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," will be given its New England premiere tonight in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood.

The students in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will perform "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss under the direction of the composer. Mr. Foss, former pianist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this year is the winner of the Prix de Rome. He is a member of the faculty of the Center.

Although this operatic work has been presented twice, once in Indiana and once in New York, this will be the first time it has been produced under the composer's direction. "The Jumping Frog" is a short work as operas go and will close a program of scenes from grand opera also put on by the students of the Opera Department.

"Cosi Fan Tutti" by Mozart, "Cavalleria Rustican" by Mascagni, "The Telephone" by Menotti, and "La Traviata" by Verdi will be the operas from which scenes are to be taken during the first half of the evening.

Scenes from operas will begin at 8.15 PM and will be for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program follows:

THE JUMPING FROG, by Lukas Foss. Libretto by Jean Karsavina. An opera based on the short story, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County."

Scene 1
Uncle Henry's Bar in Calaveras County

Scene 2
Village Square

Conducted by the Composer
Staged by Sarah Caldwell

Characters

The Stranger	Luis Pichardo
Smiley	Nino Luciano
Uncle Henry	Carmen Caplinger
Lulu	Eunice Alberts
Guitar Player	Mac Morgan
1st crap shooter	Gene Cox
2d crap shooter	Albert Basso

D, MASS., TUESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1950

'JUMPING FROG' OPERA IS GIVEN AT MUSIC CENTER

Jan Popper Directs One-Act Work by Lukas Foss

By WILLARD CLARK

Lenox, July 31—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center under distinguished direction of Jan Popper tonight presented the one act opera by Lukas Foss, "The Jumping Frog" based on the tale by Mark Twain. The opera completely charmed the audience because of its melodic and rhythmic freshness. It is a man's opera.

One Woman Singer

There is only one woman singer. Tonight she was Eunice Alberts who since the season began here has sung everything from Bach to Foss and sung it well.

The story of the jumping frog relates to the prowess of a frog named Daniel Webster who could jump 14 [illegible].

Challenged by a stranger his owner says all he has that Daniel can beat any other frog and that he will procure a frog to compete with Daniel. While he is hunting for the frog the stranger fills Daniel Webster with buck shot so that when the competition starts Daniel just can't jump. All is discovered eventually and the stranger is ridden out of town.

In Gold Rush Country

The scene takes place in the California gold country in the 1880's. Mr. Foss has taken advantage of the era and uses some of the marvelous folk tunes and straightforward American idioms and situations. The music is fresh, vital and truly American in spirit.

The taxing role of the stranger was admirably sung and acted by Luis Pichardo, whose South-of-the-Border accent appeared to come naturally. Music words and action were expertly blended in this performance.

Mac Morgan revealed his fine baritone voice as the guitar player and Carmen Caplinger was particularly effective as the saloon keeper. Mr. Foss directed the orchestra made up of students. There were moments when the orchestration was too heavy for the spoken dialog but for the most part the accompaniment was discreet.

The work is one which will be of great value and a welcome addition to the repertory of American opera.

Jan Popper is a believer in American opera and opera in English and so we also heard tonight a charming performance of Menotti's "The Telephone," sung and acted with spirit by Joan Stafford and Robert Dunlop.

Lalli Appears

Mario Lalli of Springfield studying here, gave a brilliant performance with spirit during the fourth act of La Traviata. The Springfield tenor is singing well and is most convincing as an actor. He sang opposite Marguerite Willauer as Violetta, they won tremendous applause.

Two scenes from Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutti were sung in English and excerpts were sung in Italian as was La Travita. We were particularly impressed with the singing of Beatrice Bush Kane whose Dorabella Cosi Fan Tutti was the epitome of grace and vocal beauty.

The second of nine major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be performed tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.—Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will direct the orchestra in Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's Two Nocturnes and The Sea.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct Sunday's concert, at three o'clock. The program will include Brahm's Fourth Symphony; Harold Shapero's "Adagio," from his Symphony for Classical orchestra; David Diamond's "Timon of Athens"; and Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs," with Ellabelle Davis as soprano soloist.

On Saturday morning at ten, the Boston Symphony orchestra will hold the first of its three public rehearsals, the proceeds from the admission to go to the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Approximately 43,000 persons will have attended the 28 musical events performed at Tanglewood up to the first Shed concert. More than 23,000 of these made up the audiences for the six Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall, the remainder having attended the Mozart opera, and other events produced by the students and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, and the artists performing in the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation concert series of chamber music.

Opera

Foss' 'The Jumping Frog' Scores Hit at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — The weekly evening of opera scenes by Department 4 of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood last night included Menotti's "The Telephone," and excerpts from Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutte," Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Verdi's "La Traviata." The closing offering of the evening had the greatest interest as music because it was the premiere here of Lukas Foss' opera, "The Jumping Frog," with the composer conducting the orchestra. The one-act work had been presented twice before, in New York and at the University of Indiana, but this was the first time that the composer had controlled the production himself.

The story is based on Mark Twain's famous yarn, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," in which a stranger nearly deflates the local yokels' pride, and incidentally wins a bet, by a bit of sharp chicanery. Foss has written an overture replete with the spirit of gaiety and humor and en rapport with the character of the story. It is in swift movement and the merry mood is set at once by phrases in which one might very easily visualize the hops and leaps of the frog.

The two scenes were delightfully colorful, the costumes reminiscent of early California, and the stage direction conspicuously effective. There are seven characters, of whom six are men. The sole female voice was Eunice Alberts as Lulu; the Stranger was sung by Luis Pichardo and Smiley, the owner of the frog, was Nino Luciano. Foss gives the individual singers scant opportunities. The 40-minute work is overly weighted, in our opinion, with ensemble singing, often by the entire small ensemble. There is a continuous enthusiasm inherent in the score which permits the cast to sing with a youthful and seemingly spontaneous participation and contribute to the general spirit of good fun.

The Stranger and Lulu have a rewarding duet when he thanks her for the good dinner she has provided him. This is in conventional and sustained lines while the orchestra plays a decorative accompaniment with restless impatience. The Stranger has a long soliloquy on the front apron of the stage while the scenes are being changed in which a better diction would have enhanced the continuity. In these two opportunities Miss Alberts and Pichardo, however, sang with graphic portrayal of their roles although the stranger's diction was difficult to understand. In the Stranger's first entrance his vocal assignments were quite below his range, but the whole play moved on to hold the audience, for which the capacity was not nearly adequate, completely absorbed and enchanted. The other members of the cast were Carmon Caplinger as Uncle Henry, Mac Morgan as the guitar player, and Gene Cox and Albert Basso as the crap shooters.

The composer was called from the pit at the close of the performance and required to share the applause of the cordial audience for endless curtains with the singers and his assistants in the opera department of the Center.

Tanglewood

Schneider, Violinist, To Give Two Concerts

The violinist, Alexander Schneider, will give two concerts of solo sonatas and suites by Johann Sebastian Bach tonight and tomorrow night in the theatre-concert hall at 8.15. The two concerts will be the third and fourth of the five sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

Mr. Schneider has earned his reputation playing with the Budapest String Quartet and more recently with Ralph Kirkpatrick. He has recorded all of the works written by Bach for solo violin including those which he will perform in his two concerts here. He has also recorded extensively with Mr. Kirkpatrick sonatas written for violin and harpsichord by Mozart and Bach. Although he has never played at Tanglewood before, he has played at the Lenox Library as part of his nation-wide tour during which he performed the works of Bach. This spring he helped organize the festival at Prades honoring the 200th anniversary of Bach's death at which Pablo Casals played.

The program tonight will consist of the sonata in G minor, the partita in B minor, and the sonata in A minor. Tomorrow night Mr. Schneider will perform the partita in D minor, the sonata in C major, and the partita in E major.

As in the case of the two previous Coolidge concerts at Tanglewood this season, Mrs. Coolidge will be unable to attend due to illness.

The two concerts will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

BOSTON HERALD, WED

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD

"The Jumping Frog"

"The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," an opera in one act and two scenes by Lukas Foss, with a libretto by Jean Karsavina based on the story by Mark Twain; produced Monday night by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood as staged by Sarah Caldwell and conducted by Mr. Foss, with the following cast:

The Stranger.....Luis Pichardo
Smiley.....Nino Luciano
Uncle Henry.....Carmon Caplinger
Lulu.....Eunice Alberts
Guitar Player.....Mac Morgan
1st crap shooter.....Gene Cox
2nd crap shooter.....Albert Basso

By BEN GARDNER

Mark Twain's famous comic short story of "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" is the basis of the new opera that had its New England premiere Monday night at Tanglewood. The production was the main and final event of a program presented by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center for its Friends and financial supporters.

The new one-acter is the first opera to be composed by Lukas Foss, young pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Light in mood and raucously conceived, the show is an entertaining development of the original short story. The music adds considerable color and emphasis to the hilarious story about these Californians who take such a keen interest in the jumping prowess of their local frogs.

The presence of the frog is delightfully indicated by the way the characters on stage are watching it. With these stage doings and with the grouping of the actors, Sarah Caldwell did an excellent job. The settings and lighting by Philippe de Rosier were exceptionally good. Scenery was skeleton-wise and simple, and the color combinations were attractive.

Luis Pichardo sang the role of the Stranger in a full bass-baritone voice and acted his part well. Eunice Alberts turned out a good performance as Lulu, and Smiley was well sung by Tenor Nino Luciano. Mr. Foss conducted the full orchestra in the hidden pit of the Theater-Concert Hall, and was brought up on stage for curtain calls.

There is no other performance of this work scheduled for Tanglewood, but it will be staged at the Plymouth Rock Center of Music and Drama on Friday night, Aug. 11.

Des opéras de Mozart, Ibert et Foss seront chantés à Tanglewood

Le département d'opéra du Berkshire Music Center, à Tanglewood, présente chaque été des oeuvres lyrique d'un intérêt incontestable. L'an dernier, c'était tout d'abord le plus récent des opéras de Benjamin Britten, Albert Herring. Ce fut ensuite un opéra de Monteverdi, Le Couronnement de Poppée et Savitri, de Gustav Holst.

Cette année, l'oeuvre principale sera un opéra de Jacques Ibert, le grand compositeur français. Le Roi d'Yvetot, tel est le titre de cet opéra, n'a jamais été donné en Amérique. Plusieurs chanteurs participeront à cette représentation, dont le baryton canadien Fernand Martel.

Le 25 juillet, on présentera un opéra de Mozart très rarement joué, La Finta Giardiniera, une oeuvre de jeunesse. Cet opéra en trois actes sera chanté en anglais sous la direction de Sarah Caldwell. Les décors seront de Philippe de Rosier et les costumes de Leo van Wisten.

La Finta Giardiniera, ou Le pseudo-jardinier, fut composé par Mozart alors qu'il était âgé de 18 ans. L'oeuvre fut écrite spécialement pour la cour de Munich où elle fut jouée pour la première fois le 13 janvier 1775. Plus tard, Mozart revisa son opéra et adapta une traduction allemande du livret, avec dialogues. La partition originale du premier acte a été perdue et on l'a reconstitué à l'aide de parties d'orchestre et de documents s'y rattachant.

La distribution sera la suivante: La comtesse Violante, Adele Addison; Podesta, Mac Morgan; Arminda, Nancy Trickey; le comte Belfiore, Ray Smolover; Ramiro Edith Evans; Serpetta, Marni Nixon; Roberto, Julien Jatrick.

Le département présentera aussi un opéra-comique en un acte, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" du jeune compositeur Lukas Foss, le 31 juillet. Le libretto de cette oeuvre est dû à Jean Karsavina, qui s'est inspiré d'un conte de Mark Twain. M. Foss dirigera lui-même son oeuvre qui a été présentée à New-York au printemps par une nouvelle troupe, After Dinner Opera Group.

G. P.

Les projets du Centre Musical de Tanglewood

La Symphonie de Boston nous fait part de ses projets pour la huitième saison estivale du Centre Musical de Tanglewood. On ouvrira les portes du Berkshire, cette année, le 3 juillet et les activités se prolongeront jusu'au 13 août sous la direction de l'ex-chef d'orchestre de la Symphonie, Serge Koussevitsky.

La présence du célèbre compositeur français Jacques Ibert rehaussera, cette année, la belle liste de noms dressée par le Centre Musical de Tanglewood. M. Ibert a accepté de venir en Amérique pour la première fois enseigner la composition aux étudiants américains. Aaron Copland, le grand compositeur, lui aussi, participera à des classes de compositeurs assisté par Irving Fine.

Boris Goldovsky devant s'absenter, c'est à Jan Popper, de l'Université de Californie à Los Angeles, que le Centre Musical a demandé de s'occuper des classes d'opéra. Pour la musique de chambre, retenons les noms de quelques maîtres comme Gregor Piatigorsky, Fernand Gillet, Ruth Posselt et Simeon Bellison. Hugh Ross et Edward Barrat seront en charge des choeurs.

Serge Koussevitsky dirigera les classes de direction d'orchestre. Il sera assisté, dans sa tâche, par Leonard Berstein, Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho et Lukas Foss.

Le nombre d'étudiants, cette saison, est limité à quatre cent cinquante. Les auditions, pour l'admission, viennent de se terminer.

THE EVENING SUN, HANOVER, PA., SATURDAY, JULY 29, 1950

[20]

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

(Sonderbericht für die "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung und Herold")

Koussevitzky dirigiert Bruckners "Siebente" in Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, 30. Juli. — Der Höhepunkt des Konzertes des Boston Symphonie - Orchesters unter Leitung Serge Koussevitzkys am Sonnabend war eine hervorragende Aufführung der siebenten Symphonie Anton Bruckners. Dirigent und Orchester waren ausgezeichnet disponiert, und trotz eines kurzen Regen-Intermezzos, das eine kurze Pause zwischen dem ersten und zweiten Satz verursachte, blieb der Eindruck auf die Zuhörer gewaltig. Dem Dirigenten liegt das Feierliche dieser Symphonie besonders, er leitet das große Orchester mit unbedingter Sicherheit, die sich auch in seinen bestimmten Gebärden ausdrückt. Trotz aller Leidenschaft bleibt Koussevitzky immer maßvoll, er weiß sich zu beherrschen und beherrscht dadurch die Musiker und das Publikum.

Bruckners siebente Symphonie ist von Wagner inspiriert, die Klangfarbe des großen Orchesters erinnert immer wieder an den großen deutschen Komponisten. Er hat nach seiner fünften und sechsten Symphonie, die in Bezug auf Originalität eigene Wege gingen, wieder den Weg zur "Vierten" gefunden, die ja ebenfalls in der Gedankenwelt Wagners liegt. Das romantische Hauptthema des ersten Satzes, begleitet vom Tremolo der Geigen, leitet das romantitische Werk ein; mit diesem Thema hat es eine eigene Bewandtnis, Bruckner erzählte, daß es gar nicht seine Erfindung gewesen sei. Kapellmeister Dorn, einer seiner Linzer Freunde, habe es ihm diktiert und ihm versichert: "Paß auf mit dem wirst du dein Glück machen."

Wie immer in den Werken des österreichischen Komponisten ist auch in dieser Symphonie der Appell an Gott zu hören. Inmitten der unruhigen Durchführung erscheint plötzlich ein "Sehr feierlich", das alle Pracht des Bruckner - Orchesters erscheinen läßt. Noch mehr aber kommt dies im zweiten Satz Adagio, das der Komponist drei Wochen vor Wagners Tod skizziert hatte, zur Geltung. Max Auer, der Bruckner-Biograph, meint, daß es in der Vorahnung des Todes des von ihm so verehrten deutschen Meisters geschaffen wurde. Der Komponist schreibt in einem Brief an Felix Mottl: "Einmal kam ich nach Hause und war sehr traurig; ich dachte mir, lange kann der Meister unmöglich mehr leben, da fiel mir das Cis-Moll-Adagio ein". Einen Beweis für den Anruf Gottes kann man auch darin erblicken, daß Bruckner einen Teil des Hauptthemas in seinem Tedeum verwendet hat... Bruckner hatte das Adagio noch nicht vollendet, da kam die Kunde vom Tode Richard Wagners, und wieder entnehmen wir am besten den eigenen Worten des Komponisten seine Stimmung beim Erhalt der Todesnachricht: "...als die Depesche aus Venedig eintraf — und da habe ich geweint, o wie geweint — und dann erst schrieb ich dem Meister die eigentliche Trauermusik."

Ein Kontrast zu dem feierlichen Adagio ist das rhythmische, tanzartige Scherzo, das im Trio zu einer lyrischen Episode zurückfindet. Im Finale erscheinen wieder die Wagnerschen Klänge, das Thema der Geigen, das vom Tremolo in der höheren Lage, ganz wie bei Wagner, begleitet wird. Und dann wird ein Choral angestimmt, der im zartesten pianissimo die religiöse Stimmung des Komponisten deutlich zeigt. Ein triumphaler Schluß löst die Melodie ab, und in gewaltiger Steigerung geht es zum E-Dur-Akkord, das erste Thema erscheint wieder und stellt die Beziehung der beiden Ecksätze her.

Den Blechbläsern des Bostoner Symphonie - Orchesters gebührt ein Separatlob, sie zeichneten sich in den mächtigen Chorälen des zweiten und letzten Satzes besonders aus, die Streicher klangen wunderschön in den Melodien des Adagios und brillierten im Scherzo. Es war ein großer Erfolg für Koussevitzky und die "Bostoner".

Serge Koussevitzky hatte für den zweiten Teil des Abends Werke von Debussy gewählt, "La Mer" und die "Nocturnes"; beide Kompositionen gehören zu den meistgespieltesten des französischen Komponisten. Gerade deshalb ist die Vergleichsmöglichkeit der Interpretation geboten. In der Tondichtung "La Mer" zeigte Koussevitzky so richtig seine große Meisterschaft im Malen der Nuancen, dieser vielen kleinen Details, die Debussy gefunden hat, um ein Gesamtbild des Ozeans zu geben. Das Spiel der Wellen, das Funkeln der Sonne im Wasser, das grandiose Anschwellen der Fluten im sich erhebenden Sturm. Wenn man dieses nun fast schon klassisch zu nennende wundervolle Werk hört, kann man die Stimmen der Presse kaum verstehen, die nach der Erstaufführung in Paris zu lesen waren. Edouard Lalo, selbst ein bekannter Komponist, meinte im 'Temps": "Ich kann das Meer weder hören, noch sehen, noch fühlen," und noch interessanter, besonders in Bezug auf Amerika, die Worte des angesehenen Gaston Carraud, der in der "Liberte" schreibt: "Es ist gewiß echter Debussy — das heißt die individuellste, edelste und feinste Ausdrucksweise unserer Kunst, aber es ruft die Möglichkeit hervor, daß wir eines Tages einen "amerikanisierten" Debussy haben werden. Man muß die Umschreibung dieses geistreichen Kritikers verstehen, um den Tadel zu erblicken.

Von all diesen Worten ist nichts übrig geblieben, das Meisterwerk aber lebt und in einer solch ausgezeichneten Ausführung, wie sie Koussevitzky vermittelte, versteht man erst die hohe Kunst des französischen Komponisten. Auch die beiden Nocturnes "Nuages" und "Fetes", die eigentlich aus drei Teilen bestehen, waren vom Bostoner Orchester ausgezeichnet gespielt. Debussy hatte zu den Nocturnes eine Erklärung geschrieben, in der er darauf hinweist, daß der Titel Nocturne in freiem Sinne gebraucht sei. "Nuages" soll den Anblick des Himmels, die langsame Vorwärtsbewegung der Wolken, versinnbildlichen, und "Fetes" den Tanzrhythmus mit der Vision einer geisterhaften Prozession.

Nach Schluß des Konzertes gab es große Ovationen für Koussevitzky und die Musiker. Die große Halle war bis auf den letzten Platz besetzt, und viele tausende Hörer hatten es sich auf dem Rasen des Vorgeländes bequem gemacht, bis sie der Regen, der am Beginn der Bruckner-Symphonie einsetzte, veranlaßte, die Stehplätze der Halle einzunehmen. Doch trotz aller Unbequemlichkeit war die Stimmung des Publikums bis zum letzten Takt des Konzertes ungemein empfänglich. In der Pause bemerkte man viele bekannte Musiker, Komponisten, und als Fritz Kreisler mit seiner Gattin zu seinem Logenplatz ging, erhielt er eine Separatovation des Publikums.

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Festkonzerte in Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., 30. Juli. — Berkshire County und das Boston Symphonie Orchester waren dieses Wochenende Gastgeber für 50 Mitglieder des Sekretariats der Vereinten Nationen. Frau Roosevelt hatte im Vorjahr diese Einladung angeregt und wird selbst im Laufe der Woche nach Tanglewood als Gast von Serge Koussevitzky kommen. Frau Roosevelt wird die Rezitation in Prokofieffs "Peter und der Wolf" übernehmen, das vom Boston Symphonie Orchester am 11. August als Teil der "Tanglewood Parade" aufgeführt wird. Die Parade enthält das alljährliche Konzert zugunsten des Berkshire Music Center.

Am Wochenende haben die Mitglieder des Sekretariats der Vereinten Nationen den großen Konzerten am Samstag abend und Sonntag nachmittags beigewohnt, die Gäste waren bei Berkshire County-Bewohnern eingeladen, das Arrangement für den Besuch der Delegierten wurde unter Aufsicht des Vorsitzenden der "Workshop for World Understanding" vorgenommen. Die Ankunft Frau Roosevelts in Tanglewood diese Woche wird vor allem der Besprechung der Proben für die Aufführung des populären Werkes von Prokofieff, das mit dem Untertitel "Ein musikalisches Feenmärchen für Kinder" stattfindet, gewidmet sein. Die Tanglewood-Parade wird außerdem ein außerordentliches Konzert des Boston Symphonie Orchesters bringen mit Haydns Oxford Symphonie und Dvoraks "Neue Welt" Symphonie.

Mehr als 12,000 Hörer wohnten dem ersten großen Konzert des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters unter Leitung Serge Koussevitzkys Donnerstag abend in Tanglewood bei, 8000 Personen füllten die Halle, die anderen waren auf dem weiten Rasen des Vorgeländes, wo jedes Plätzchen ausgenützt wurde. Das Programm enthielt die dritte Symphonie (Eroica) Beethovens und die zweite Symphonie Sibelius!

Man kennt die Meisterleistung des Dirigenten in der Interpretation der Eroica; Koussevitzky dirigiert wie ein Feldherr, seine Zeichengebung ist deutlich und bestimmt, jeder Einsatz wird dem Musiker angezeigt. Die Widmung Beethovens an Napoleon, die er später durchgestrichen hat, bewundert den Helden und Koussevitzky betont das Heldische in der Eroica. Großartig der Aufbau des Trauermarsches und der Steigerung im Finale. Der Dirigent hatte als zweites Werk die Symphonie No. 2, op. 43, von Sibelius gewählt. Im ersten Satz kommen die Themen des Landlebens, die friedlichen Wiesen und Wälder in den Klängen zur plastischen Wiedergabe. Verschiedene Freunde und Musikkollegen von Sibelius haben der Symphonie den Freiheitsgedanken der Finnen als Thema gegeben. So erklärte Georg Schneevoigt, einer der Vorkämpfer für Sibelius' Musik, daß im zweiten Satz die Unterdrückung des Volkes, im dritten das Erwachen der Freiheitsidee und im Finale die Befreiung zu hören sei. Die Feststellung ist interessant, daß die Amerikaner Kompositionen von Sibelius viel öfter spielen als europäische Orchester; besonders in den letzten Jahren gehört Sibelius zu den Standard-Komponisten der amerikanischen Konzertprogramme. Das Werk wurde 1902 komponiert und im gleichen Jahr in Helsingfors erstaufgeführt. Zwei Jahre später fand die amerikanische Premiere statt. Das Eröffnungskonzert in der Halle in Tanglewood war der festliche Auftakt zu den großen Veranstaltungen, die Samstag und Sonntag mit Konzerten unter Leitung Koussevitzkys beziehungsweise Bernsteins ihre Fortsetzung finden. Wir werden über die weiteren Veranstaltungen noch berichten.

950

SOCIETY: Many Tanglewood Benefits Attract Bostonians

MRS. WAYNE THAYER MORGAN, the former Joan Patricia Morgan, who was married yesterday at the First Congregational Church in Sutton.

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Boston benefits fall off in numbers during the Summer, but Bostonians are usually on the job for one cause or another at their vacation addresses.

A number of Bostonians are interested in the benefits which are scheduled during the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this Summer. Three Saturday morning rehearsals, starting over the past week-end are being opened to the public at 10 o'clock, with all admissions going toward the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. Tickets are being sold at the main gate box office at Tanglewood.

In addition to the regular festival concerts by the full orchestra which opened on Thursday, Boston music lovers at Tanglewood have also made up a sizable share of the 23,000 who have been hearing the six Bach-Mozart concerts at the Theatre-Concert Hall, the Mozart opera "La Finta Giardiniera," and the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation concert series of chamber music.

Each year a special program is planned, with music, dancing and picnics to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. This year, "Tanglewood on Parade" will be held on Friday, Aug. 11, from early afternoon to 11 at night. Box-holders from a dozen states have already made reservations for the party, which will offer open house tours of the five teaching departments at the Berkshire Music Center early in the afternoon.

Picnic suppers on the green lawns sloping down to the lake will be the order of the day before a special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will be among the special guests at the "Tanglewood on Parade" as well as a number of members of the United Nations Secretariat, who arrived this week-end for the regular Festival concerts. Mrs. Roosevelt will be the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Also on the Aug. 11 program will be the Haydn "Oxford Symphony" and Dvorak's Symphony "From the New World."

Also planned for the benefit are games, the awarding of prizes, and waltzing on the lawn. Overall attendance at Tanglewood programs, which already number 28 separate events before the beginning of the regular week-end series, is expected to total even more than last year's 161,000 visitors.

[21]

Our Berkshires

Grand Opera and Music

By
Walter Prichard Eaton

"WHY," somebody asked me at Tanglewood the other night, "hasn't America any operas?"

"What's the matter with Oklahoma?" I answered.

This reply was obviously regarded as stupidly flippant.

"But that's only a musical comedy!" said my questioner.

"What do you call La Finta Giardiniera?" I demanded.

"But that is by Mozart!" came the reply, as if I had blasphemed the Holy Ghost.

There is little use in pursuing such arguments, so I pursued my own thoughts instead. Boy and man, I have been going to opera for more years than I like to admit, and some of my most exciting memories are of opera performances. The peak, I think, was Oscar Hammerstein's production of Don Giovanni (Oscar was the grandfather of the Hammerstein who wrote the librettos of Oklahoma and South Pacific). The Don was sung by Maurice Renaud, the best singing actor I ever saw, and Melba and Bonci were in the cast. Alas, I never saw Pinza in the role; he too must be very fine.

* * *

BUT DON GIOVANNI is the finest opera ever written, and Mozart himself, who had none of the modern idea that symphonic music is a superior product, put all his great best into it. It would, however, have amounted to little but a collection of lovely tunes if Mozart had not been lucky, or intelligent, enough to secure a good libretto, a clear story well told in theatrical terms, with emotional impact any audience could readily grasp. That his music was exactly right for every turn and mood of the story showed his genius as a musical dramatist for the stage. But to forget the libretto is to fail to understand it.

Mozart was only a boy when he wrote the score for La Finta Giardiniera, and for a boy it is no doubt remarkable. But the libretto is silly and much too long. It might do for a one-act operatic satire. That it has languished on the shelf for nearly 200 years is not surprising.

And how crowded that shelf is, with scores full of beautiful music and librettos full of blithering nonsense. There are many operas by Handel, all now museum pieces. Von Weber, whose Invitation to the Dance used to be played every season by the Boston Symphony when I was a boy, wrote lovely music for many operas now quite impossible to revive because of their footless librettos. By and large, the operas which have survived in the repertoire have done so because they fit good music to well constructed and properly operatic stories. Butterfly, Tosca, Carmen, Faust, Rigoletto—name the favorites, and you will find they all have a good theatrical libretto which builds to a readily grasped emotional climax. Many of them, like the great Don Giovanni, are based on plays.

* * *

WHICH BRINGS US back to Oklahoma, also based on a play. Oklahoma was just as popular in England as it was here, which may indicate that there is something in both nations which responds to what we loosely call musical comedy more than to "grand" opera. England gave the world Gilbert and Sullivan, and took Oklahoma to its bosom, though most Englishmen probably had no more idea where Oklahoma is than we have about the location of Little Tooting.

Now Oklahoma tells a logical story with warmth and humor, it integrates its dance interludes, or ballets, with this story to a remarkable degree, as they are never integrated in "grand" opera, and the music, if simple, is both tuneful and well fitted to the time and place of the story. In other words, it is a solidly and skillfully constructed work of art. The public are quite right in loving it, as they have been in loving The Mikado. And the musical highbrows are wrong in their lofty assumption that we have no opera because it isn't "grand," and the tenor doesn't have to project his voice above the crash and thunder of a 90-piece orchestra as, with his fat, pasty-white arms, he pretends to forge a property sword on a property anvil.

* * *

FRANK ADAMS (F.P.A.) used to refer to "grand opera and music," and there are many others who regard opera as a bastard form of art, both expensive and dreary. Luckily for us we don't call our Oklahomas and South Pacifics operas. They are just musical comedies, and we love 'em. But ever since Show Boat the best of them have been interesting and effective stage plays heightened and made delightfully lyrical by song and dance. Any of them could rise (as Brigadoon did in its wonderful ballet) to emotional dignity, and if we ever do have American "grand" operas, they will evolve naturally from our musical comedy stage, not from any imitation of European art.

As for me, I'm content to go on thinking of Oklahoma as an American opera. It may not be "grand," but it is indigenous and delightful—and you always know what everybody is talking about. It gave us a grand time, anyway.

Tanglewood

Opera Scenes
Tomorrow at 4.30

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will present scenes from "Carmen," "The Magic Flute," "Aida," "Rigoletto," "Cavalleria Rusticana" for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow afternoon at 4.30. There will be no scenery and no costumes.

Dever Coming To Tanglewood For Final Concerts

Governor Paul A. Dever will arrive in the Berkshires Thursday, Aug. 10, to attend the final series of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. He has made reservations for four days at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox. Governor Dever also plans to take in the Tanglewood on Parade benefit Aug. 11 when Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the narrator for "Peter and the Wolf."

Music

Alexander Schneider Plays Bach Sonatas at Tanglewood

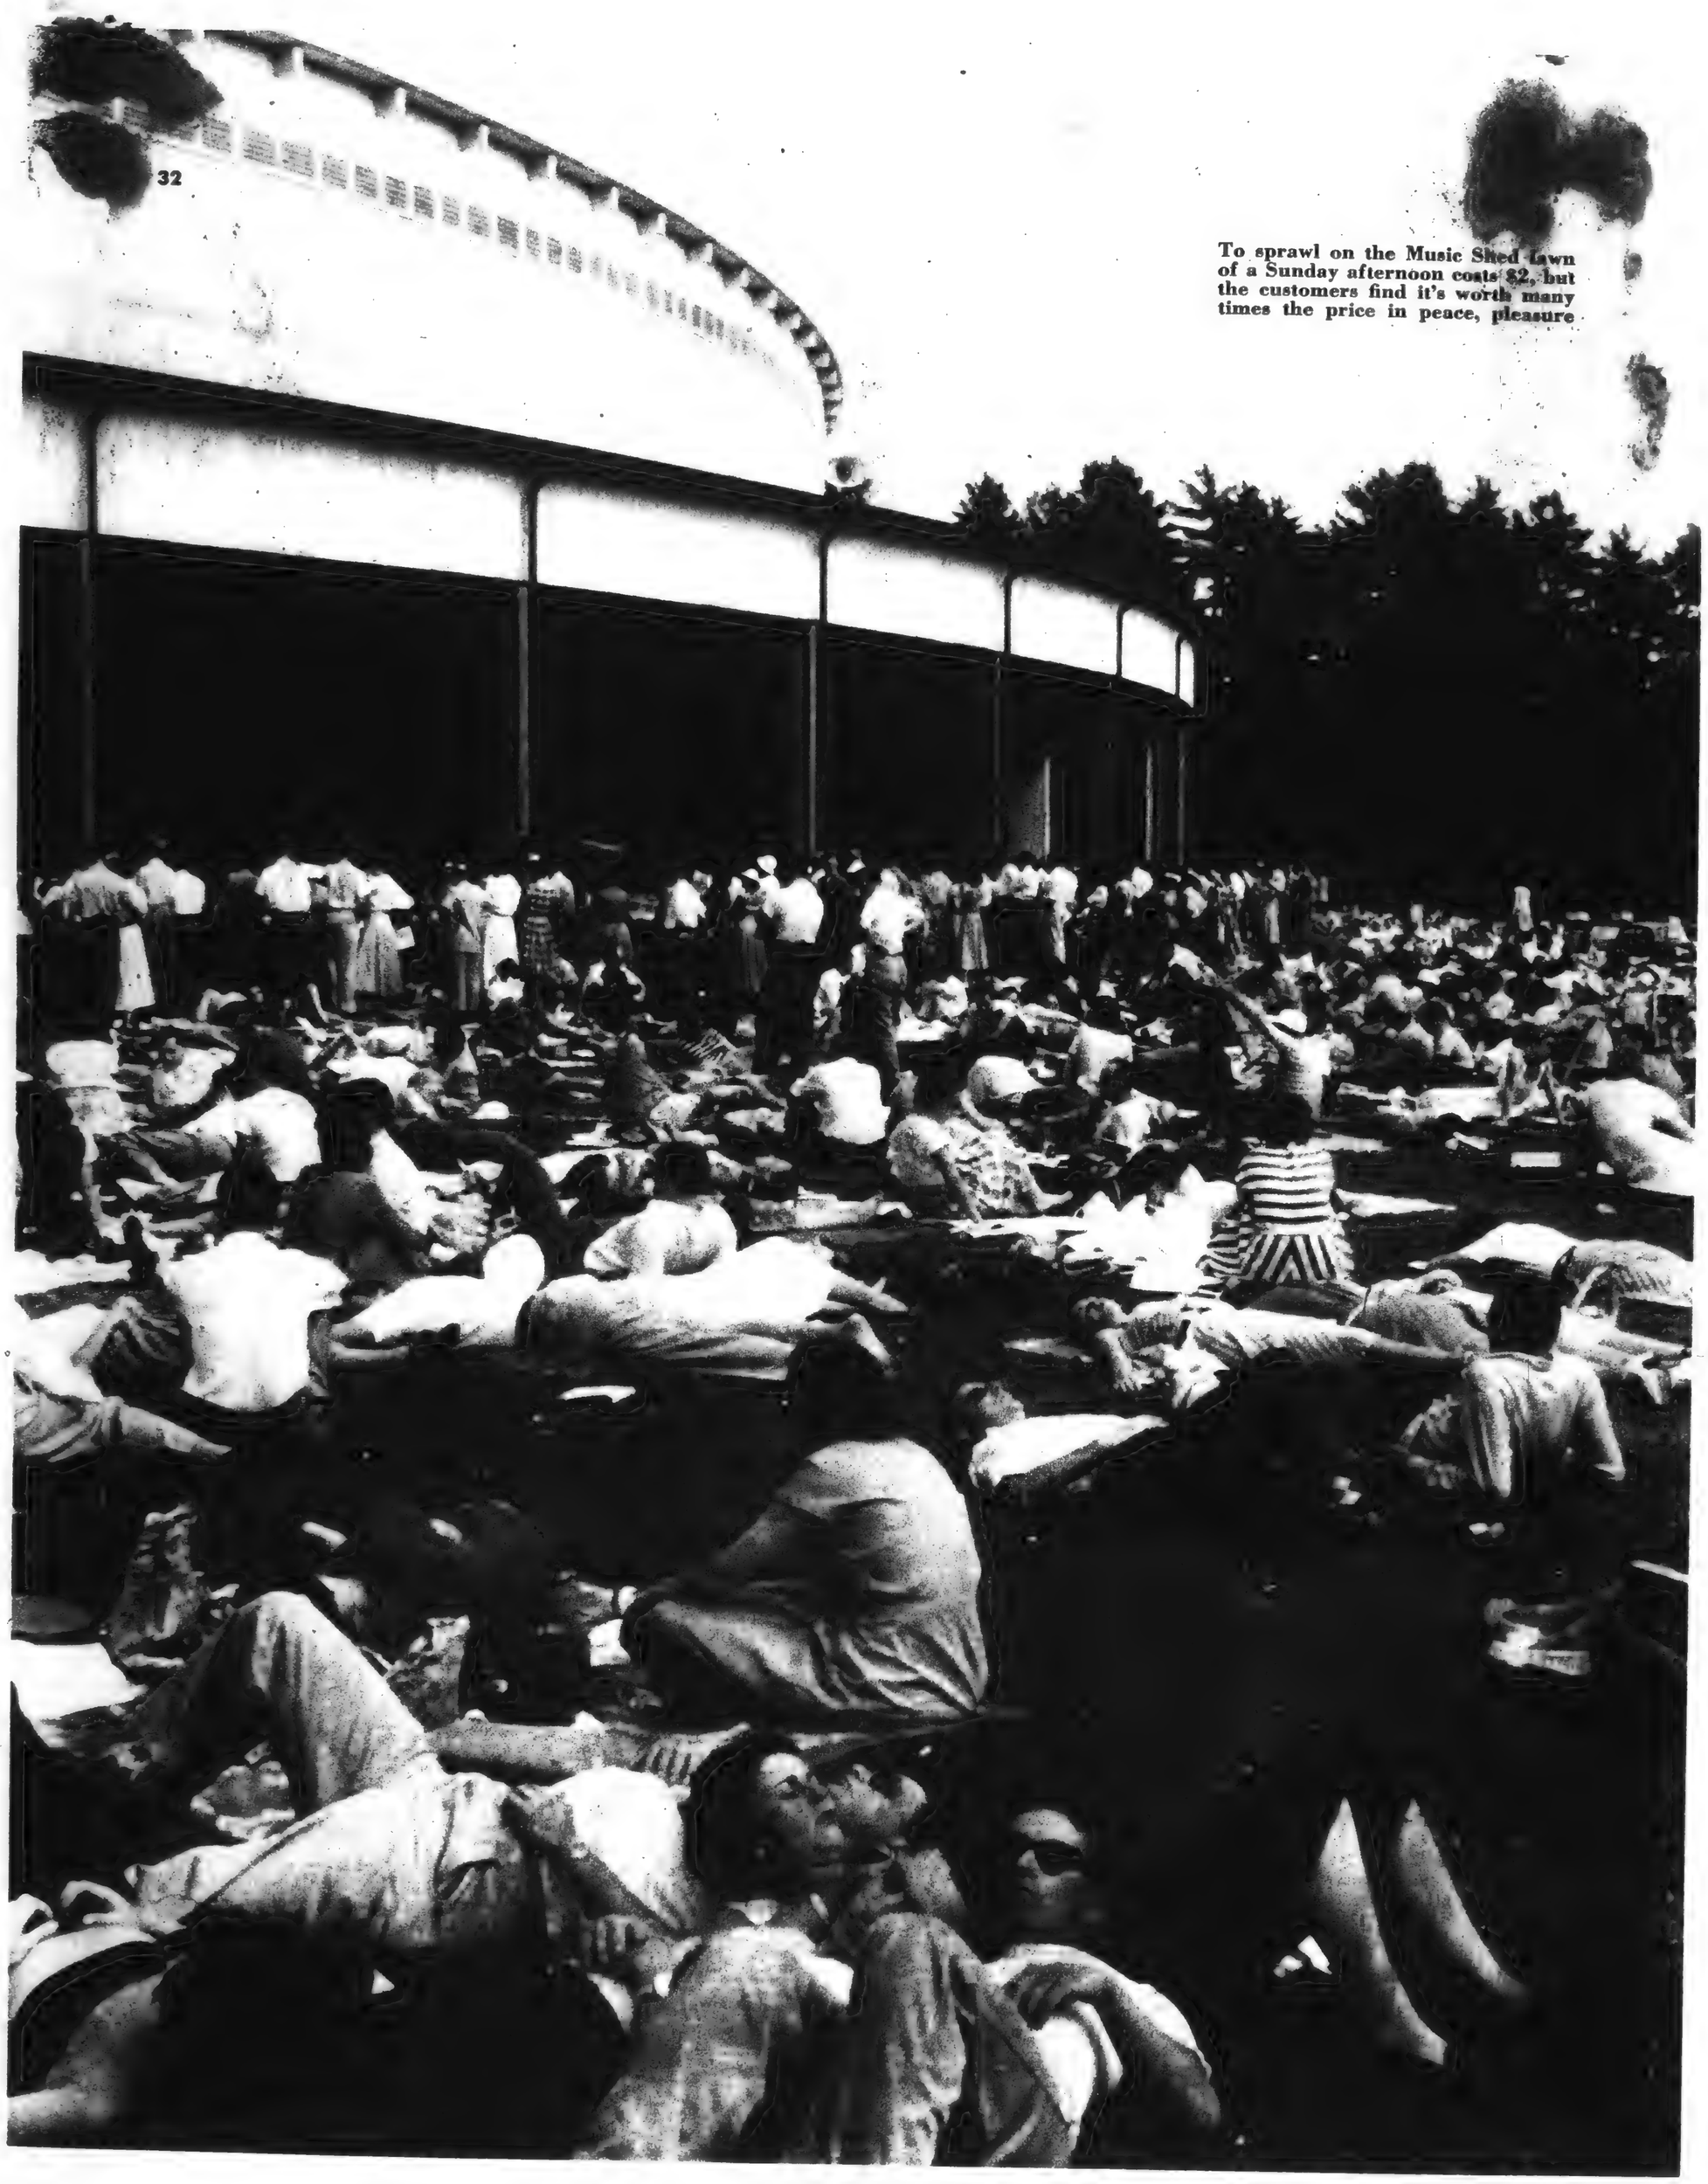
By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — Alexander Schneider played the first half of the Bach unaccompanied violin sonatas in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night under the auspices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and her foundation in the Library of Congress. He is to play the remaining three this evening.

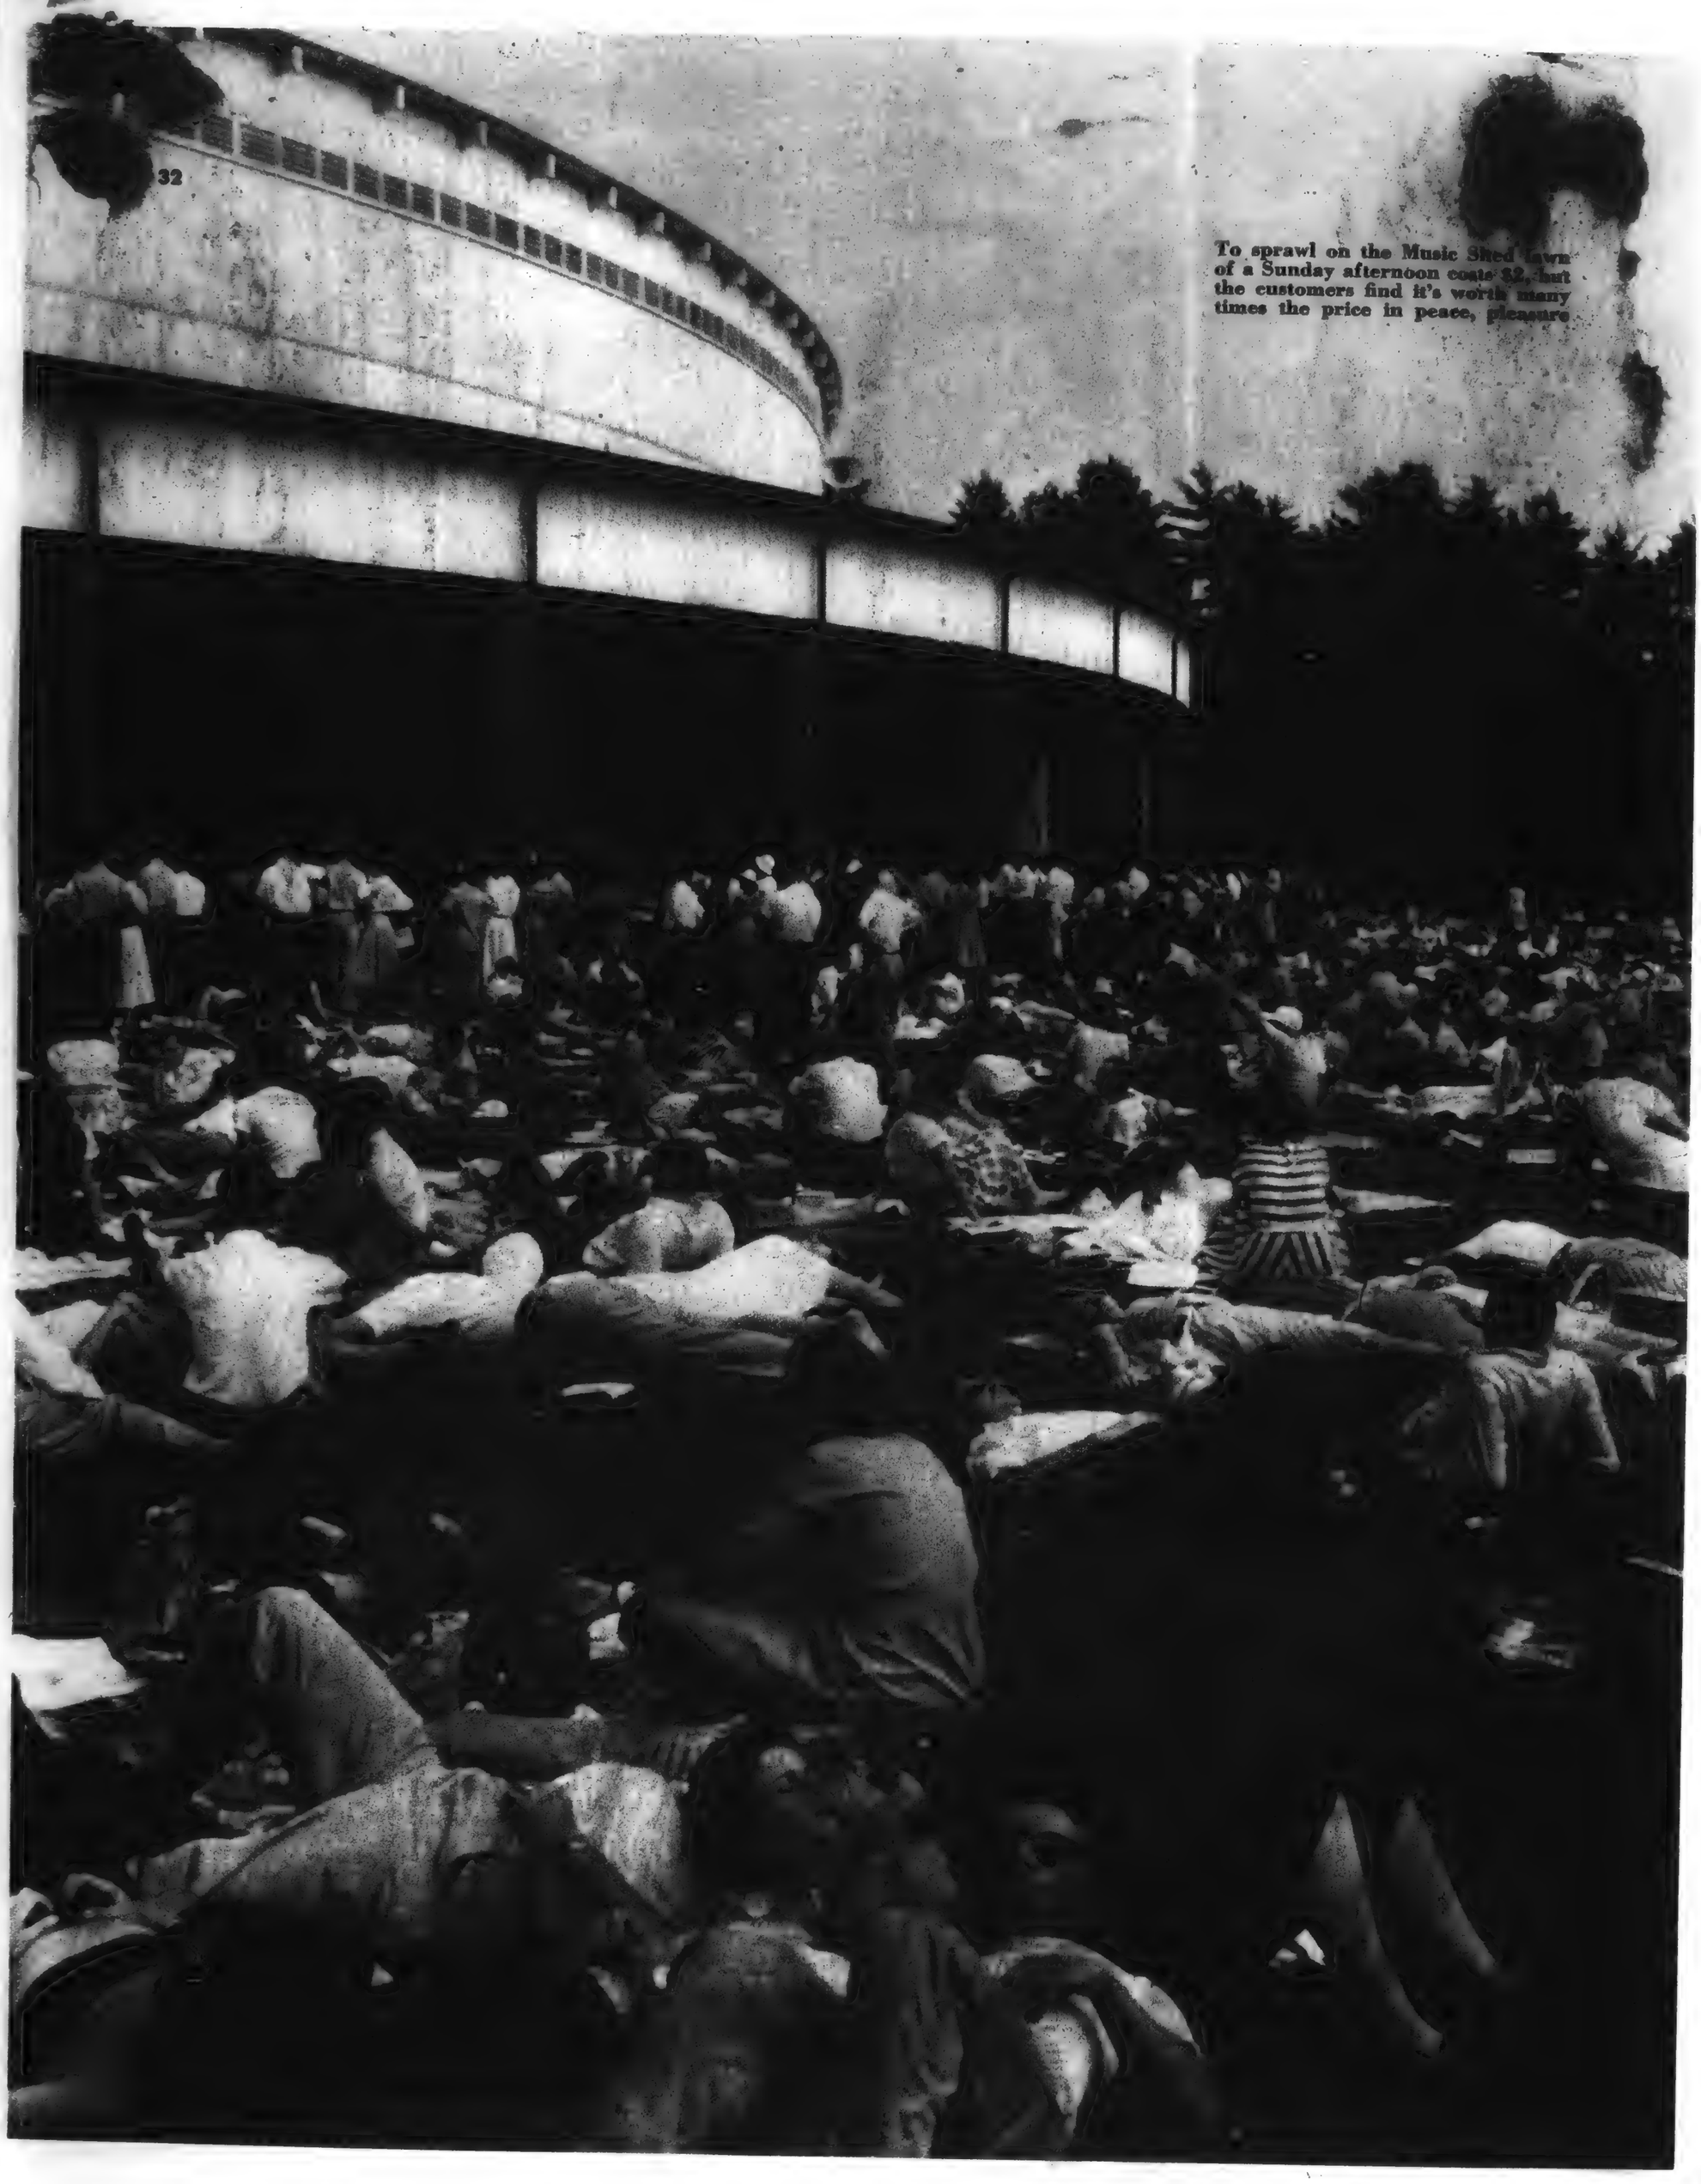
While they are commonly called sonatas, there are actually three sonatas and three partitas, or suites in varied dance rhythms. In the string playing fraternity they are universally considered as the perfect means of study to achieve proficiency on the instrument. It was only in Bach's youth that polyphonic playing on a stringed instrument had been fully developed but no one had written unaccompanied music for this type of instrument on any such scale as even one of Bach's sonatas, yet the remarkable thing about these works are that they have never become antiquated. They are as fresh today as when they were written and it may be categorically said that, with the exception of the extension of violin playing into the higher positions, Bach plumbed the resources of the instrument to a degree beyond which no one in two centuries has gone.

Schneider's performance combined a mastery of the instrument with the most profound understanding of the music. Giving his organ-like tone a consistently vivid intensity he used his thorough comprehension of style to give the music a stature and magnificence which quite defy qualifications. He made his instrument the servant of the music and never played for violinistic effect alone. The music acquired shape and line and structure before our eyes. His study and knowledge of the nature of the various movements allowed him to play certain sections with unassailable conviction concerning tempo and style, imparting not only the most complete satisfaction to his huge and wrapt audience, but establishing this as an authoritative interpretation. He clarified phrases of the utmost complexity to simple logic; he gave direction to sections which can and are so often apparently rudderless, and all this while producing from his violin a tone of vital warmth and immaculate execution, even in the most intricate and swift movements.

Specifically last night he played the G minor and the A minor sonatas and the B minor partita. The tremendous scope and variety of Bach's writing was revealed by Schneider's life-giving performances. Each of the many short movements was a gem in its own setting, and the way the audience refused to leave after the completion of the final note showed not only their appreciation of the Herculean task he had performed but also its exemplary character and mature authority. He played the whole evening without an audible shift and reduced the science of violin playing as Bach has done in his writing to absolute essentials.



To sprawl on the Music Shed lawn of a Sunday afternoon costs $2, but the customers find it's worth many times the price in peace, pleasure



To sprawl on the Music Shed lawn of a Sunday afternoon costs $2, but the customers find it's worth many times the price in peace, pleasure

Gregor Piatigorsky, famed cello soloist, rehearses with the Boston orchestra under Koussevitzky's baton on a Saturday morning. It costs $1 to listen to them practice

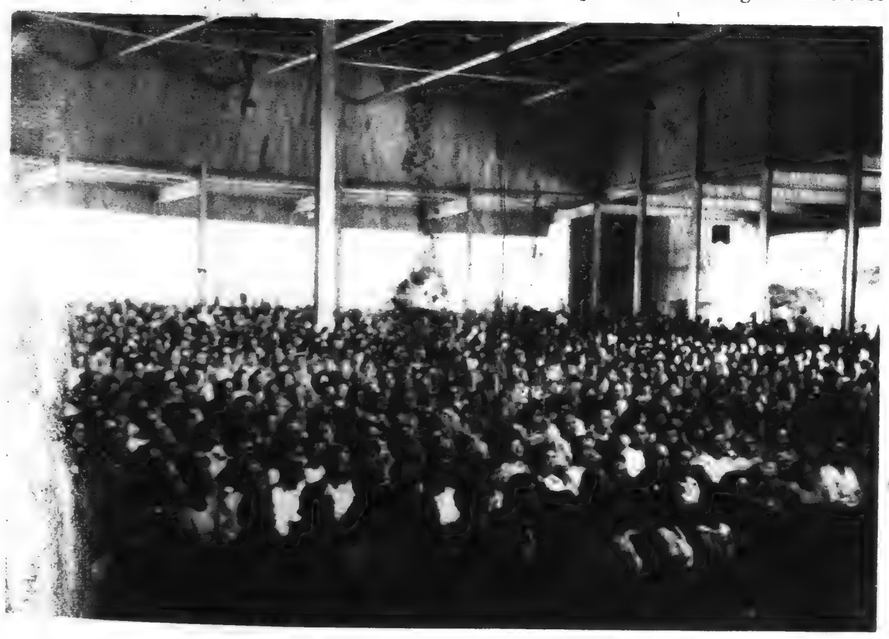
French composer Oliver Messiaen, Koussevitzky and Aaron Copland, assistant director, get laugh from impromptu student show

It's Tanglewood Time Again

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUTH ORKIN

MUSIC LOVERS from all over the nation have gathered again at lovely Tanglewood, the Massachusetts estate where the Berkshire Festival offers rare cultural pleasure. This congress of eager listeners has met annually in the Berkshires since 1934 and for the last dozen years at Tanglewood to hear concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. In the Music Shed, specially designed to afford the finest acoustics, the brilliant veteran Koussevitzky has been joined this year by Victor de Sabata, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho as guest conductors. The Boston Symphony's school of music at Tanglewood was created by Koussevitzky eight years ago to further his dream of bringing the finest instruction to aspiring young artists. About 450 come each year to this 210-acre campus for six weeks of intensive music making under world masters. The Berkshire Music Center, given a grant ten years ago by the Rockefeller Foundation, also receives support from friends throughout the world. They cherish the institution as unique in size and quality, and are proud of its positive contribution to the present and the future of American artistic life.

This rapt audience jammed the Music Shed to capacity to watch one of the popular Saturday-morning rehearsals where they get close up to the world's great maestros



Two music students stroll down a shady lane leading to the main gate. When the festival is in full swing, visitors clog the road

Gregor Piatigorsky, famed cello soloist, rehearses with the Boston orchestra under Koussevitzky's baton on a Saturday morning. It costs $1 to listen to them practice

French composer Oliver Messiaen, Koussevitzky and Aaron Copland, assistant director, get laugh from impromptu student show

Two music students stroll down a shady lane leading to the main gate. When the festival is in full swing, visitors clog the road

It's Tanglewood Time Again

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUTH ORKIN

MUSIC LOVERS from all over the nation have gathered again at lovely Tanglewood, the Massachusetts estate where the Berkshire Festival offers rare cultural pleasure. This congress of eager listeners has met annually in the Berkshires since 1934 and for the last dozen years at Tanglewood to hear concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. In the Music Shed, specially designed to afford the finest acoustics, the brilliant veteran Koussevitzky has been joined this year by Victor de Sabata, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho as guest conductors. The Boston Symphony's school of music at Tanglewood was created by Koussevitzky eight years ago to further his dream of bringing the finest instruction to aspiring young artists. About 450 come each year to this 210-acre campus for six weeks of intensive music making under world masters. The Berkshire Music Center, given a grant ten years ago by the Rockefeller Foundation, also receives support from friends throughout the world. They cherish the institution as unique in size and quality, and are proud of its positive contribution to the present and the future of American artistic life.

This rapt audience jammed the Music Shed to capacity to watch one of the popular Saturday-morning rehearsals where they get close up to the world's great maestros

Times Aug 3

MRS. ROOSEVELT READY FOR DEBUT

Will Make First Appearance on a Symphonic Program at Tanglewood Aug. 11

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who will make her first appearance as a participant in a symphonic program at Tanglewood on Aug. 11, began preparations for the task this morning.

Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood and a pianist and composer in his own right, drove to Hyde Park, N. Y., and spent two hours rehearsing with Mrs. Roosevelt at her farm.

The President's widow, who has agreed to act as narrator in a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" on the "Tanglewood-on-Parade" program, was apprehensive about the job she had undertaken when Mr. Berkowitz began to work with her.

She told him that she knew no music, and it was evident that she had not heard "Peter and the Wolf" before. Mr. Berkowitz played through the score for her, and Mrs. Roosevelt read the lines of the delightful, little children's story which Prokofieff wove into an ingenious score that also reveals the character of the individual instruments.

Mr. Berkowitz gave his distinguished collaborator cues by nodding his head and pointing a free hand. As they worked, Mrs. Roosevelt's apprehensions began to vanish. She found her lines charming. After going through the whole score, she and Mr. Berkowitz went over passages that needed more work.

Mr. Berkowitz left Mrs. Roosevelt a score and she promised to study it. She expects to arrive at Tanglewood on the morning of Aug. 11, when she will rehearse it with the full Boston Symphony and Mr. Koussevitzky. The performance will take place that evening.

Now that she has agreed to be part of a musical program, Mrs. Roosevelt has also consented to make a recording of "Peter and the Wolf" with Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. R. C. A. Victor will make the recording at Tanglewood.

Monitor Aug 1

Homage to Bach

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Here at Tanglewood where the Berkshire Music Festival is in progress, Friday, July 28, was a very special day for music lovers in general and for the students in particular. They met in the great Shed to do honor to Johann Sebastian Bach on the date of the two-hundredth anniversary of his passing.

The special Bach chamber concert was performed and conducted by some of the students themselves. In the audience was no great crowd, such as fills this outdoor hall for public concerts, but a comparatively few friends of the festival, and some notables, among them Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

First to be heard was the seldom-played Concerto for Four Pianos and Strings. As the three contrasting movements successfully flowed into the atmosphere, listeners again knew a universal quality which characterizes Bach's music.

In the following Two-Piano Concerto in A minor and the one for Two Violins in D minor there was a heightened awareness that the rhythmic patterns in the quick movements and the melodic sweep in the slow movements were expressions of a joy and beauty which transcend mere sound.

Then Dr. Koussevitzky spoke. He emphasized the significance of the commemoration and quoted the director of a festival held many years ago in Dusseldorf, Germany, who said that if there were no other music than that of Bach, we would not lack the greatest source of musical expression.

The program closed with the Concerto for Three Pianos and Strings. One had the feeling that he had participated in the highest type of memorial service, rather than in a concert of the usual order. The performers seemed aware of a commemorative participation and played with freedom and joyousness.

At the end Dr. Koussevitzky echoed the general sentiment of gratitude to the players when he said, "Let us look to the children."

P. G.

[25]

Monitor Aug 4

in the Berkshires

Koussevitzky and Bernstein In Programs at Tanglewood

By Paul Giuliana

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

It was a tremendous success—the first concert in the major series of the Berkshire Music Festival, presented here last Thursday evening in the Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The weather was ideal, and the listeners, numbering about 9,000, were treated to two of Serge Koussevitzky's favorite works — the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

The qualities of freshness and virility were outstanding during the performance of these two well-worn compositions. The conductor seemed to be at one of the peaks of inspiration to which Boston Symphony audiences have been accustomed from time to time during the past 25 years. It was the old Koussevitzky orchestra again with its tonal opulence.

In the great Shed, which seats 6,000, the orchestral sonority was overbalanced on the side of the brasses. Although the strings glistened with the Koussevitzky fire, their tone was diffused so that the balance was not what it can be and has been in an indoor hall.

In the "Eroica" the slow movement realized heights of somber grandeur in a performance which embraced artistic fullness. There was a smattering of applause after each of the first two movements that was spontaneous and did not come from an audience unaware of symphonic continuity, but it served to point up the intelligent quality of the listening.

In the Sibelius there was the familiar clarity of theme, the contrast in orchestral color, and above all, the Koussevitzky drama and bombast which at the end brought down the house and recalled the conductor again and again.

* * *

In the Bruckner Seventh Symphony on Saturday evening, again conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, the brasses commanded the orchestral fabric. The contrast between the many episodes scored for the various sections of this work made the brass section stand out with massive effectiveness.

Dr. Koussevitzky played the beautiful long melodic line with a sensuous sweep called for in the Wagner-like score. The slow movement, the finest portion of the symphony, was caressed by the conductor's persuasiveness, and at the end reached tremendous heights of dramatic and tonal force.

The beautiful weather gave way to a shower between the Bruckner symphony and the remainder of Saturday night's concert, consisting of "Nuages," "Fêtes," and "La Mer" by Debussy. Those on the grass sought shelter under a long awning and in the rear of the Shed.

In the Debussy pieces, Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation was superb. The impressionistic tonal painting emerged with exquisite finesse in "Nuages." In "Fêtes" the portion that describes a passing procession was a marvel of sound painting. Restless vitality and shimmering colors in a hundred shades highlighted the interpretation of "La Mer." The smashing waves and roaring wind brought the work to a magnificent climax.

* * *

Works by three contemporary composers made up the first half of the Sunday afternoon program: the Adagio, from a Symphony (for Classical Orchestra) by Shapero; "Timon of Athens," a symphonic portrait (after Shakespeare) by Diamond, and "The Song of Songs," Second Biblical Solo Cantata for Soprano and Orchestra, by Lukas Foss. Leonard Bernstein was on the podium.

The Shapero piece was pleasant; in its wanderings it encountered no serious situation and proved that a carefree promenade can be diverting.

Mr. Diamond's graphic portrayal of Shakespeare's character, "Timon," presents a progressive psychological study of misanthropic madness. It is program music on an emotional level rather than in a narrative style or as a pictorial review. Mr. Bernstein and the orchestra gave the difficult score a dramatic reading and succeeded in driving Mr. Diamond's demon to its assigned limbo. There were exciting sounds in the orchestra such as trilling French horns, smearing trombones, and acid dissonances.

Lukas Foss's composition with Ellebelle Davis, soprano soloist, provided the most delightful musical fare of the contemporary group. The music has a beauty and a freshness which admirably expresses the Biblical text. Mr. Foss's artistry and consummate good taste are here in full evidence.

Miss Davis sang the difficult solo part with control and musicianship. Both her high and low tones emerged clearly, except when they were here and there submerged by a too loud orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Bernstein, Miss Davis, and Mr. Foss received a merited ovation.

The concert ended with a performance of the Fourth Symphony of Brahms. Mr. Bernstein conducted the first two movements in traditional style and infused a supercharge of energy into the last two movements.

Monitor Aug 3

REHEARSING in Tanglewood's Music Shed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for tonight's concert is Victor de Sabata, this week's guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival. Mr. de Sabata, a noted Italian conductor, is making his first visit to Tanglewood.

Mr. de Sabata will conduct tonight and also on Saturday night. On Sunday, Leonard Bernstein will be the conductor.

Tonight's program includes Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, Schuberts' Unfinished Symphony, Respighi's Pines of Rome, Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra, shown above in rehearsal, and the Prelude and Love-Death from Wagner's Tristan and Isolde.

Saturday's program includes Mozart's Symphony No. 39, Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio, Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture, Ghedini's Pezzo Concertant, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Mr. Bernstein's Sunday afternoon program features works by Ravel and Berlioz, with the conductor as soloist in Ravel's Piano Concerto.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1950

Berkshire Music Festival Opens With Old Magic of Koussevitzky

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, July 27—It seemed like old times in the Music Shed at Tanglewood here tonight when Serge Koussevitzky opened the main section of the Berkshire Music Festival.

As usual on such an opening night, the audience was large and extremely enthusiastic, some of them rising for Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance on the stage, and some—no doubt not the same ones—breaking into applause between movements. The official count of the gathering was 8800, as against the official number of 8500 last year.

This was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had conducted the full numbers of the Boston Symphony since he retired as musical director of the orchestra at the beginning of May, 1949. He presented two symphonies, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and the second of Sibelius.

Had you been on a trip to Mars for two years and just arrived back you would have noticed nothing different here at Tanglewood, neither in the interpretation and appearance of Dr. Koussevitzky nor in the sound of the ochestra. Well perhaps a little in the instrumental tone, for the French influence during the first season as conductor of Charles Munch, naturally lingers. Last night the orchestra sounded something between the Boston Symphony of the Koussevitzky regime with its rich, purple intensity, and the lighter, clearer sonority of the "Munch tone."

As Splendid As Ever

Koussevitzky was at the top of his form for Beethoven, which, due to the demands of an early deadline, was all that this reviewer heard before applying fingers to typewriter keys. But it would be 100 to 1 that he was also at his best in Sibelius, a composer whom, in the past, Koussevitzky played as did no other interpreter I have heard.

The magical and fabulous virtousity of the Boston Symphony again was on triumphant parade. If anything went wrong in the way of detail, it could not be heard out front. The woodwinds were crisp and uncannily exact, the brass deep and rich, and the Boston strings—always something special—just as splendid as ever.

Of course the "Eroica," intepretively was pure Koussevitzky, which is to say romantic, throughly personal in tempo and the multitude of shadings and the "longline" subordinated to the conductor's own wealth of decorative detail.

Though he is now conductor-emeritus, it was completely natural to watch Dr. Koussevitzky up there on the stand. The mental habits of so many years are not easily broken. He is now 76, having celebrated another birthday yesterday, but in his ruddy face, the small, trim figure, and the strenuous character of his gestures nothing has changed.

It is said that Dr. Koussevitzky did not desire a big, elaborate birthday celebration so close to the opening of the main festival, but the appropriate ceremonies were not missing. They invited in the Music Center students and the members of the orchestra. A big cake was provided on a table set up on the lawns of Tanglewood, and Dr. Koussevitzky beamingly cut it and had it passed around.

An Oasis of Sanity

The feelings which his recent criticism of the Boston Symphony trustees must have aroused here seem to have died down. The report I got was that all is quiet, that Dr. Koussevitzky's grievance does not lie with conductor Vittorio De Sabata, who will direct the Thursday and Saturday concerts of Series B, but with the trustees who, it was claimed, had engaged De Sabata without advance notice to Dr. Koussevitzky. That controversy is between Koussevitzky and the board, who can air them if any further airing is necessary. In the meantime the teapot can be used for other purposes.

It has been cool, almost cold, here in the Berkshires these two weeks past, say the people engaged in work at the Berkshire Music Center. Last night's weather—always an unpredictable but very important aspect of a festival opening—was cool and dry. This was a pleasant variation on the humidity and the thunderstorms which have been unwelcome at past festival beginnings.

The crowd looked about the same last night, as it always has. Some bought admission only, and sat on the grass outside the shed—the grass which smells so fresh and newly-mown whenever you come out here.

So, whatever may be happening elsewhere in the world, late July of 1950 finds Tanglewood completely normal.

U.N. Secretariat to Visit Tanglewood

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire County residents will be hosts to 50 visitors from the United Nations Secretariat this weekend. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt originated the plan and will herself be a soloist, serving as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and The Wolf" at Tanglewood on Parade on Aug. 11, which benefits the Berkshire Music Center.

Also on the benefit program will be the Haydn "Oxford" Symphony and the Dvorak "New World" Symphony. Tickets for the Aug. 11 concert at 6 o'clock will include tours of the five music departments of the Center and waltzing on the lawn.

phase of Ken's improvement in the hospital with honesty and perception. People have long shuddered at the plight of the paraplegic; "The Men" gives the public, including this critic, a more normal attitude toward the men and women thus disabled.

Teresa Wright is appealing and sweet as the young woman who loves Ken. Her sudden revulsion on her wedding night is unfortunate but understandable, but Ken is the one who suffers most. It takes a lot of readjustment for both of them before a workable solution is reached.

"The Men" is told simply, but with power and beauty. Mr. Brando as Ken manages his many moods dynamically, whether in a screaming rage or in a cold, haughty silence. He becomes the sort of man a woman might cherish when

In Brief . . .

Though Tanglewood will be full of Republicans and people from out of the state, Governor Dever should pick up a few votes over the week end, providing he refrains from offering the Festival $10,000 via the Legislature. They're still waiting for the $10,000 James Michael Curley promised. . . . After studying

Tanglewood Concerts Tonight and Tomorrow

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct one of the most famous symphonies in his repertoire tonight when he directs the Department II orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

Both Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein will rehearse the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow. This public rehearsal, the proceeds of which benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 10 A. M.

Koussevitzky and His Students To Give Tchaikovsky's Fourth

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct one of the most famous symphonies in his repertoire tomorrow night when he directs the Department 11 orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony.

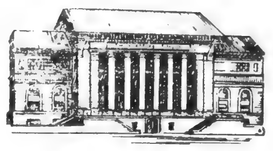
Throughout Dr. Koussevitzky's career he has gained a world-wide reputation for his interpretation of this work, having played it frequently as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His concert tomorrow night will take place in the Music Shed at 8.15.

The full-size student symphony orchestra is conducted each week by members of Dr. Koussevitzky's private conducting class and by a different member of the school's faculty. So far the major works at these concerts have been conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, Richard Burgin, Lukas Foss, and Leonard Bernstein. Tomorrow night will mark the first time Dr. Koussevitzky has actually conducted the students himself since his memorable reading of Beethoven's sixth symphony last year.

Also scheduled to be performed tomorrow night by the student orchestra are Beethoven's "Coriolanus Overture," Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and "El Amor Brujo" by Manuel de Falla. The concert will be for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

[26]

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Form 266

Main Concert Series Opens at Tanglewood

JUL 28 1950

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The Berkshire hills put on a fabulous show in technicolor last night with a sound-track by Beethoven and Sibelius. The sun went down in purple and gold to the opening proclamations of the Eroica and they poised a moon circle over the pine tops—for the living master's D major Symphony.

It is incredible that generations of people enjoyed all this natural beauty without setting it to panoramic music, for it is quite obvious that when 8,800 persons gather at Tanglewood of a Thursday night, many traveling considerable distances, the place where is just as enchanting as the manner of the music.

It is one of those times when you are glad that you, like everybody else, are a little bit daft.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY really gets off the ground with Beethoven's Third Symphony. It is a pomp and circumstance piece for him, and with it he is fond of opening a season or a festival.

Its fabric and structure are proof against his increasing flair for rhetoric—all except the funeral march which becomes less and less acceptable under his baton. It is much too sob-shaken and clamant. Its language is underscored, bold-faced and capitalized. You are a bit embarrassed to sit in the presence of such unveiled grief.

The rest was magnificent. The swift, ebullient scherzo, the trio throaty with horns; the finale as beautifully integrated as only Koussevitzky knows how to do it. Episodic in facture, there is a risk that it can become a little less noble than what has gone before. The funeral march and the release provided by the subsequent merriment are emotionally exhausting. The last movement, then, must at least be impressive as to architecture for its feelings do not run to depth.

Koussevitzky brings up at the finish with all the listeners on his side and demonstratively so.

* * *

AT THE CLOSE of the concert he drew a real Tanglewood ovation. They came to their feet shouting, ball-park fashion, at the last chord of Sibelius.

The popular Second Symphony is the ideal medium for Koussevitzky as a stylist. Here is drama, the flambuoyant phrase, the stentorian brass, the ruddy melody. It is outdoor music, although its scenery is a bit more rugged than that of the Berkshires. In the trio of its third movement is one of the loveliest melodies ever enclosed in a symphonic envelope.

The intense nationalism of this music is inescapeable. In a way it is uncontained and ingenuous but how, in the nature of things, can a patriotic utterance be objective and factual? Sibelius executed a tone painting out of deep love for his subject. It is easily translatable into universal terms by the veriest listener, certainly in such a triumphant interpretation as the Bostonians delivered up for Koussevitzky.

This was the first of the concerts to be given this season in the big shed. Two others will follow, Saturday evening at 8:15, and Sunday afternoon at 3. Then there will be two similar series of Thursday -Saturday -Sunday concerts on succeeding weekends.

—C. E. L.

Herald Aug 4

DeSabata Gets 5-Minute Ovation at Tanglewood

Globe Aug 4

LENOX, Aug. 3 (AP)—Victor DeSabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8500 tonight when he appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the festival at Tanglewood, and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagament of DeSabata as a guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's directors.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when DeSabata was given a five minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

DeSabata will return to Tanglewood Saturday for another performance.

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1950

Berkshire Music Festival Opens With Old Magic of Koussevitzky

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, July 27—It seemed like old times in the Music Shed at Tanglewood here tonight when Serge Koussevitzky opened the main section of the Berkshire Music Festival.

As usual on such an opening night, the audience was large and extremely enthusiastic, some of them rising for Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance on the stage, and some—no doubt not the same ones—breaking into applause between movements. The official count of the gathering was 8880, as against the official number of 8500 last year.

This was the first time that Dr. Koussevitzky had conducted the full numbers of the Boston Symphony since he retired as musical director of the orchestra at the beginning of May, 1949. He presented two symphonies, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and the second of Sibelius.

Had you been on a trip to Mars for two years and just arrived back you would have noticed nothing different here at Tanglewood, neither in the interpretation and appearance of Dr. Koussevitzky nor in the sound of the ochestra. Well perhaps a little in the instrumental tone, for the French influence during the first season as conductor of Charles Munch, naturally lingers. Last night the orchestra sounded something between the Boston Symphony of the Koussevitzky regime with its rich, purple intensity, and the lighter, clearer sonority of the "Munch tone."

As Splendid As Ever

Koussevitzky was at the top of his form for Beethoven, which, due to the demands of an early deadline, was all that this reviewer heard before applying fingers to typewriter keys. But it would be 100 to 1 that he was also at his best in Sibelius, a composer whom, in the past, Koussevitzky played as did no other interpreter I have heard.

The magical and fabulous virtousity of the Boston Symphony again was on triumphant parade. If anything went wrong in the way of detail, it could not be heard out front. The woodwinds were crisp and uncannily exact, the brass deep and rich, and the Boston strings—always something special—just as splendid as ever.

Of course the "Eroica," interpretively was pure Koussevitzky, which is to say romantic, throughly personal in tempo and the multitude of shadings and the "longline" subordinated to the conductor's own wealth of decorative detail.

Though he is now conductor-emeritus, it was completely natural to watch Dr. Koussevitzky up there on the stand. The mental habits of so many years are not easily broken. He is now 76, having celebrated another birthday yesterday, but in his ruddy face, the small, trim figure, and the strenuous character of his gestures nothing has changed.

It is said that Dr. Koussevitzky did not desire a big, elaborate birthday celebration so close to the opening of the main festival, but the appropriate ceremonies were not missing. They invited in the Music Center students and the members of the orchestra. A big cake was provided on a table set up on the lawns of Tanglewood, and Dr. Koussevitzky beamingly cut it and had it passed around.

An Oasis of Sanity

The feelings which his recent criticism of the Boston Symphony trustees must have aroused here seem to have died down. The report I got was that all is quiet, that Dr. Koussevitzky's grievance does not lie with conductor Vittorio De Sabata, who will direct the Thursday and Saturday concerts of Series B, but with the trustees who, it was claimed, had engaged De Sabata without advance notice to Dr. Koussevitzky. That controversy is between Koussevitzky and the board, who can air them if any further airing is necessary. In the meantime the teapot can be used for other purposes.

It has been cool, almost cold, here in the Berkshires these two weeks past, say the people engaged in work at the Berkshire Music Center. Last night's weather—always an unpredictable but very important aspect of a festival opening—was cool and dry. This was a pleasant variation on the humidity and the thunderstorms which have been unwelcome at past festival beginnings.

The crowd looked about the same last night, as it always has. Some bought admission only, and sat on the grass outside the shed—the grass which smells so fresh and newly-mown whenever you come out here.

So, whatever may be happening elsewhere in the world, late July of 1950 finds Tanglewood completely normal.

U.N. Secretariat to Visit Tanglewood

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire County residents will be hosts to 50 visitors from the United Nations Secretariat this weekend. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt originated the plan and will herself be a soloist, serving as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and The Wolf" at Tanglewood on Parade on Aug. 11, which benefits the Berkshire Music Center.

Also on the benefit program will be the Haydn "Oxford" Symphony, and the Dvorak "New World" Symphony. Tickets for the Aug. 11 concert at 8 o'clock will include tours of the five music departments of the Center and waltzing on the lawn.

phase of Ken's improvement in the hospital with honesty and perception. People have long shuddered at the plight of the paraplegic; "The Men" gives the public, including this critic, a more normal attitude toward the men and women thus disabled.

Teresa Wright is appealing and sweet as the young woman who loves Ken. Her sudden revulsion on her wedding night is unfortunate but understandable, but Ken is the one who suffers most. It takes a lot of readjustment for both of them before a workable solution is reached.

"The Men" is told simply, but with power and beauty. Mr. Brando as Ken manages his many moods dynamically, whether in a screaming rage or in a cold, haughty silence. He becomes the sort of man a woman might cherish when

In Brief . . .

Eagle Aug 3

Though Tanglewood will be full of Republicans and people from out of the state, Governor Dever should pick up a few votes over the week end, providing he refrains from offering the Festival $10,000 via the Legislature. They're still waiting for the $10,000 James Michael Curley promised. . . . After studying

Herald Aug 4

Tanglewood Concerts Tonight and Tomorrow

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct one of the most famous symphonies in his repertoire tonight when he directs the Department II orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

Both Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein will rehearse the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow. This public rehearsal, the proceeds of which benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 10 A. M.

Eagle August 3

Koussevitzky and His Students To Give Tchaikovsky's Fourth

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct one of the most famous symphonies in his repertoire tomorrow night when he directs the Department II orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony.

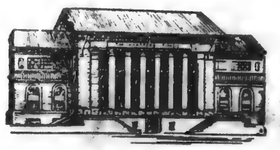
Throughout Dr. Koussevitzky's career he has gained a world-wide reputation for his interpretation of this work, having played it frequently as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His concert tomorrow night will take place in the Music Shed at 8.15.

The full-size student symphony orchestra is conducted each week by members of Dr. Koussevitzky's private conducting class and by a different member of the school's faculty. So far the major works at these concerts have been conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, Richard Burgin, Lukas Foss, and Leonard Bernstein. Tomorrow night will mark the first time Dr. Koussevitzky has actually conducted the students himself since his memorable reading of Beethoven's sixth symphony last year.

Also scheduled to be performed tomorrow night by the student orchestra are Beethoven's "Coriolanus Overture," Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and "El Amor Brujo" by Manuel de Falla. The concert will be for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

[26]

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared i today's issue of The Hartford Times enclosed. Because of your interest in th subject, we thought you might wish a extra copy of it.

Form 266

Main Concert Series Opens at Tanglewood

JUL 28 1950

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The Berkshire hills put on a fabulous show in technicolor last night with a sound-track by Beethoven and Sibelius. The sun went down in purple and gold to the opening proclamations of the Eroica and they poised a moon circle over the pine tops—for the living master's D major Symphony.

It is incredible that generations of people enjoyed all this natural beauty without setting it to panoramic music, for it is quite obvious that when 8,800 persons gather at Tanglewood of a Thursday night, many traveling considerable distances, the place where is just as enchanting as the manner of the music.

It is one of those times when you are glad that you, like everybody else, are a little bit daft.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY really gets off the ground with Beethoven's Third Symphony. It is a pomp and circumstance piece for him, and with it he is fond of opening a season or a festival.

Its fabric and structure are proof against his increasing flair for rhetoric—all except the funeral march which becomes less and less acceptable under his baton. It is much too sob-shaken and clamant. Its language is underscored, bold-faced and capitalized. You are a bit embarrassed to sit in the presence of such unveiled grief.

The rest was magnificent. The swift, ebullient scherzo, its trio throaty with horns; the finale as beautifully integrated as only Koussevitzky knows how to do it. Episodic in facture, there is a risk that it can become a little less noble than what has gone before. The funeral march and the release provided by the subsequent merriment are emotionally exhausting. The last movement, then, need at least be impressive as to architecture for its feelings do not run to depth.

Koussevitzky brings up at the finish with all the listeners on his side and demonstratively so.

AT THE CLOSE of the concert he drew a real Tanglewood ovation. They came to their feet shouting, ball-park fashion, at the last chord of Sibelius.

The popular Second Symphony is the ideal medium for Koussevitzky as a stylist. Here is drama, the flamboyant phrase, the stentorian brass, the ruddy melody. It is outdoor music, although its scenery is a bit more rugged than that of the Berkshires. In the trio of its third movement is one of the loveliest melodies ever enclosed in a symphonic envelope.

The intense nationalism of this music is inescapable. In a way it is uncontained and ingenuous but how, in the nature of things, can a patriotic utterance be objective and factual? Sibelius executed a tone painting out of deep love for his subject. It is easily translatable into universal terms by the veriest listener, certainly in such a triumphant interpretation as the Bostonians delivered up for Koussevitzky.

This was the first of the concerts to be given this season in the big shed. Two others will follow, Saturday evening at 8:15, and Sunday afternoon at 3. Then there will be two similar series of Thursday-Saturday-Sunday concerts on succeeding weekends.

—C. E. L.

Globe Aug. 4

DeSabata Gets 5-Minute Ovation at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 3 (AP)—Victor DeSabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8500 tonight when he appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the festival at Tanglewood, and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of DeSabata as a guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's directors.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when DeSabata was given a five minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

DeSabata will return to Tanglewood Saturday for another performance.

Union Aug 4

Tanglewood Audience Is Won by De Sabata

Italian Conductor Given Ovation at Berkshire Festival, Near Hysteria Prevailing After 'Pines of Rome'

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 3—I have witnessed tonight the greatest manifestation of public approval for a conductor and orchestra that I have ever witnessed during years of attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival. An audience of 8500 people roared approval, calling the conductor back no less than half a dozen times after each performance.

Conductor Makes Friends

Victor De Sabata, the eminent Italian conductor, around whom controversy has raged since his engagement here was announced, had reason to be very happy at his reception, even though the Koussevitzky box was unoccupied during this performance.

The slim, gray-haired conductor was in rapport with his audience from the moment he pressed his hand to his heart and bowed. He has a million-dollar smile and an unassuming charm which carry straight to an audience.

He is a conductor of parts. He can assume the placidity of a Buddha or put on a shoe of podium hysteria which verges on the grotesque, yet gets results and amuses the audience.

Sure-Fire Program

His program was sure-fire from the opening "Academic Festival Overture" of Brahms to the final Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde.' The Brahms overture was amazing in its breadth and vitality. It was a reading rich in color, incisive and highly polished. His gestures were broad and there was no question as to what he wanted from the orchestra. And he got it. The audience received is rapturously.

No greater contrast in conducting technique or temperament could have been found than during the reading of Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony." It was a sensitive, flowing performance. It was always vital, never oversentimental or roughly obtrusive. The orchestra played as though inspired and at its close it joined with the audience in the applause.

"Pines of Rome"

It was in the symphonic poem "Pines of Rome" by Respighi that De Sabata came into his own. Here was music of which he was truly a part. The wondrous gaity of 'The Pines of the Villa Borghese" we have never felt so fully revealed. The eerie quality of "The Pines near a Catacomb," with its chanting, hymnlike melody was utterly beautiful in its conception. The nightingale sang sweetly in the moonlight during "The Pines of the Janiculum" and the poet's fantasy of the vision of past glories, voiced by the blare of many trumpets, was thrilling in its grandeur during "The Pines of the Appian Way."

Continued From Page 1

It seemed almost miraculous that this little, gray-haired man could summon such forces. At the conclusion the audience was in near hysteria. Again and again the conductor was recalled. Again and again he shared the applause with the orchestra, throwing kisses to it, applauding it and receiving in return the applause of the players.

The second portion of the program consisted of Morton Gould's "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra and the Prelude and Love Death from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

Gould's Provocative Music

Mr. Gould has written provocative music, using the rhythms and fragments of Negro music, mixing it with the idiom of the white composers. He is a clever craftsman with a subtle sense of humor as was evidenced by his amusing use of "Shortnin' Bread" in one episode and rhythmic pleasantries throughout the five movements.

Mr. De Sabata, the Italian, caught the mood and projected each episode with perception and skill.

His performance of the magnificent music from "Tristan and Isolde" was lofty in conception, searingly lovely as to tone and poignantly beautiful in expression. One listened to a very personal unfoldment of this music and it proved a memorable experience. One cannot evaluate a conductor on one hearing, but we anticipate his leadership at the concert Saturday night.

Greek Theater To Be Erected At Tanglewood

Lenox, Aug. 3 (AP) — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky said in an interview with a Worcester Telegram reporter today that a Greek theater seating 25,000 will be erected at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center.

The retired Boston Symphony conductor told Raymond Morin that construction of the amphitheater is scheduled to begin next year.

He said the theater will be patterned after those of Ancient Greek times, adding:

"We will have our own stage-masters, composers and conductors. They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times — not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Noted Italian Actress Attends Concert

By ED TOOLE

Lenox, Aug. 3 — The 8500 patrons who attended tonight's Berkshire Festival concert here at Tanglewood witnessed a new milestone in the colorful history of the music festival as Victor De Sabata made his first appearance as guest conductor and held the audience spellbound in the huge music shed.

In the audience tonight was the noted Italian actress, Valentina Corsesa, a friend of the De Sabatas who came to Lenox to hear the orchestra under the baton of Mr. De Sabata tonight and again on Saturday.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky tomorrow night will conduct Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony. This concert will take place in the music shed at 8.15.

The full size student symphony orchestra is conducted each week by members of Dr. Koussevitzky's private conducting class and by a different member of the school's faculty. Tomorrow night will mark the first time this year that Dr. Koussevitzky has actually conducted the students himself.

Also scheduled to be performed tomorrow night by the student orchestra are Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture, Ravel's Le Tambeau de Couperin and El Amor by Manuel DeFalla. This concert will be for the friends of the Berkshire music center.

Both Victor De Sabata and Leonard Bernstein will rehearse the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the music shed at Tanglewood Saturday. This public rehearsal, the proceeds of which benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 10 a. m.

Union Aug 4

Tanglewood's Youthful Singers Are Excellent

Dr. Jan Popper Doing Splendid Job as Head of Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 3—Of the many departments which make up the Berkshire Music Center here at Tanglewood, we have always had a special fondness for the opera department, which has been managed so expertly by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. With Mr. Goldovsky taking a leave of absence, direction is now handled by Dr. Jan Popper and he is doing a splendid job and is quite as fascinating a commentator as Mr. Goldovsky.

This afternoon, we heard scenes from five operas. What is particularly interesting is the fact that these scenes were done without scenery costume and with very few props. The youthful singers were entirely on their own when it came to putting their stuff across. As Dr. Popper said, this is an added incentive and a goal which they must reach. The opera department is all inclusive. Students learn the techniques of production, scenic building, costuming, lighting and performance. The musical end of the performance is stressed and it has been evident from what we have heard that these singers know every word they are singing, no matter what language, and know as well the parts of their colleagues.

Fine Musicianship

To date, we have heard no voices in these "scenes from operas" to equal those of previous years, but there has been some extraordinary convincing acting and musicianship of a high order. Springfield's own Mario Lalli revealed this fine musicianship and flair for historionics in no small measure the other night as he sang in the final act of "La Traviata." This young tenor is refining his vocal art and sings with added ease and assurance.

This afternoon Willabelle Underwood, displayed a real operatic temperament and a voice above average in a scene from Puccini's "LaTosca" and in the Nile scene from "Aida." Nino Luciano, a tenor with a voice of fine quality, used rather roughly sang fervently in the "Tosca" except, and in the final duet of "Carmen" in which he had the collaboration of "Eunice Alberts," a contralto of potentialities.

Julina Patrick, a fine baritone, was effective in the Nile scene from "Aida" and Luis Pichardo, who sang splendidly as "The Stranger" in Lukas Foss's Opera "The Jumping Frog" was eminently successful as the villain Sparafucile in an excerpt from Verdi's "Rigoletto."

Nell Anders has a sizable voice, rich and full in the middle register, but used ineptly in the high register. She sang the great Santuzza air from "Cavalleria Rusticana" with much temperament, but she will do well to look after her high notes before they disappear entirely.

I think that Sarah Caldwell whose music and stage direction is so expert deserves a special bit of praise. She seems to have just what young singers need to give of their best.

Eagle Aug 3

Music

Final Concert by Schneider Attracts Capacity Audience

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Alexander Schneider completed the playing of the Bach unaccompanied violin sonatas last night in the Tanglewood theatre-concert hall. On the previous evening he had played the first three; last night he played the D minor partita, the C major sonata and the E major partita. These were respectively the third and fourth events in the series of five Bach concerts being given at the Berkshire Music Center through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and the Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

The theatre was again filled to capacity with apparently the entire student body of the Center on hand, many with the text in their laps to compare their edition of the sonatas with what Schneider played. He has gone back to the original manuscripts for his sources and what he played and how he played may be considered not only as authoritative but also as pinnacles of musical good taste. Various editors have tampered with the originals down through the generations to "correct" certain harmonic progressions and especially to define the decorative embellishments. Schneider's version is nearest the one Bach intended, except that Bach used a bow arched in the contrary fashion to the one we use today.

Schneider continued his playing in the same exemplary level he had established on the previous evening except that his intonation was not always so true as he had maintained at the preceding session. His sophisticated audience recalled him without end, and at the conclusion of the final sonata he was obliged to return and play them still one more little fragment. He chose the Andante from the A minor sonata. After the more familiar movements and particularly the D minor Gigue and the E major Gigue in which his rhythm was rhapsodically spirited, there was audible gasps by the audience as they were swept away by his virtuosity.

These Coolidge concerts in addition to the earlier programs by Dr. Koussevitzky with a small orchestra, the B minor mass still to come, and the various performances by the students over the school term comprise an observance of the 200th anniversary of Bach's death which is unusual and outstanding in a year of unusual festivals. The Coolidge programs, in particular, are bringing to an apparently eager audience the less familiar but major works which would not ordinarily find a place on run-of-the-season schedules because of their channeled appeal. The grade of the performances naturally has a great deal to do with it but the tremendous interest they have aroused would seem to indicate that one's estimate of the public's taste deserves continuous scrutiny and revision. The final Coolidge concert takes place Wednesday, the ninth, when Mr. Schneider directs a Bach program in which the final half will be devoted to "The Musical Offering."

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, August 3, 1950.

FESTIVAL HEADLINER: Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor, who will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tonight at 8.15 and Saturday evening, held final rehearsals this morning with the BSO for tonight's program. Babbitt

De Sabata Will Conduct Two Concerts

Guest Conductor At Tanglewood Tonight, Saturday

TANGLEWOOD—Music by Italian, German and American composers will feature the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival tonight at 8.15 when Victor de Sabata conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. de Sabata is making his first visit to Tanglewood for Series B of this 13th Festival season. He arrived in Lenox over the week end and has been rehearsing daily with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program Mr. de Sabata has chosen for tonight's concert begins with the "Academic Festival Overture," by Johannes Brahms. This work, written in 1879 for the University of Breslau, which at that time conferred an honorary degree upon the composer, includes the airs of many of the songs popular with students at the German universities, among them the well-known "Gaudeamus Igitur."

Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in B minor will follow the Brahms piece, and in turn will be followed by the symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome," by Ottorino Respighi. The four movements of this work are designed to impart some of the atmosphere of different sections of the Eternal City.

Following intermission the orchestra under Mr. de Sabata will perform Morton Gould's "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra, a work composed nine years ago and based on folk song material. The prelude and "love-death" from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" completes the Thursday night program.

The program Mr. de Sabata has chosen for Saturday night includes Beethoven's fifth symphony, Mozart's 39th symphony, Bach's sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival Overture," and Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante"; the latter featuring Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violins, and Joseph de Pasquale, viola.

Sunday afternoon's program will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. Works by Ravel and Berlioz will comprise the program. Mr. Bernstein will be soloist as well as conductor in Ravel's piano concerto, and the "Mother Goose Suite" and "Alborada del Gracioso," both also by Ravel, as well as excerpts from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" will conclude the program.

Mrs. Roosevelt Flying Here For Tanglewood Event, Aug. 11

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will arrive at the Pittsfield Airport at 10 AM on Friday, Aug. 11, for her appearance that evening as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Her appearance will be a feature of the Tanglewood on Parade program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will meet Mrs. Roosevelt at the airport and accompany her to the Music Shed at Tanglewood where she will commence rehearsals with the orchestra at 11 AM.

Yesterday Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to the director of the Berkshire Music Center, drove to Hyde Park, N.Y., to confer with Mrs. Roosevelt on the score of "Peter and the Wolf," and to explain to her the cues for the performance.

Mrs. Roosevelt will fly to the Pittsfield Airport from Grossinger, N.Y.

AUS DER MUSIKW

Von FRED LOW

Bernstein, Dirigent des Boston Symphonie Orch.

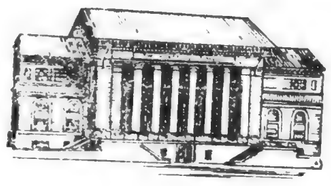
(Sonderbericht für die "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung und Herold")

TANGLEWOOD, 31. Juli. — Leonard Bernstein übernahm die Leitung des Sonntag-Nachmittagskonzertes des Bostoner Symphonie-Orchesters in einem gemischten Programm klassischer und moderner Werke. Bernstein ist einer der begabtesten Schüler Koussevitzkys, sein Element ist und bleibt die Interpretation zeitgenössischer Werke, während Zeitmaße und Nuancen in den klassischen Kompositionen sehr oft von der Tradition abweichen. Seine Zeichengebung hält nicht immer Maß, er läßt sich von der Musik mitreißen, wird von ihr zu Bewegungen verleitet, die über Dirigieren, Taktieren und Angabe der Einsätze weit hinausgehen. In den Werken zeitgenössischer Komponisten fällt dies nicht so auf wie in der Wiedergabe der vierten Brahms-Symphonie, die den Beschluß des Sonntagskonzertes bildete.

Harold Shaweros Adagio, Symphonie für klassisches Orchester eröffnete das interessante Programm. Die Komposition wurde 1947 über Auftrag der Koussevitzky Musik Foundation geschrieben und dem Andenken von Natalie Koussevitzky gewidmet. Das Werk ist ebenso wie "Song of Songs" von Lukas Foss wiederholt aufgeführt worden; das Interesse des Publikums war auch in Tanglewood außerordentlich groß, für die jungen Musikstudenten, die in der Gedankenwelt der modernen Komponisten vollkommen zu Hause sind, war es eine willkommene Gelegenheit, ihren Enthusiasmus zu zeigen. Ellabelle Davis (Sopran) war die ausgezeichnete Solistin in "Song of Songs". "Timon of Athens" von David Diamond wandelt mehr in romantischen Bahnen, moderne Klangfarben beherrschen die Partitur. Es ist ein Porträt (besser mit den eigenen Worten des Komponisten gesagt, eine psycho-orchestrale Studie) eines freigebigen Mannes, dessen falsche Großzügigkeit ihn schließlich verrät. Diese Erklärung gibt Diamond im Programmbuch, er versucht die Person des Timon von Athen in seiner Musik zu charakterisieren. Das kurze Werk wurde im Februar 1950 in Louisville uraufgeführt. Mehr als 9000 Zuhörer bereiteten dem Dirigenten, Orchester und den anwesenden Komponisten reichen Beifall.

Für das kommende Wochenende übernimmt Victor de Sabata die Leitung des Orchesters, er wird Donnerstag abend die "Unvollendete" von Schubert, Brahms Akademische Festouvertüre, "Pini di Roma" von Ottorino Respighi, sowie Werke von Gould und Wagner dirigieren und Samstag abend Kompositionen von Bach, Mozart, Berlioz, Ghedini, sowie die "Fünfte" Beethovens zur Wiedergabe bringen. Am Sonntag dirigiert Leonard Bernstein Werke von Ravel und Berlioz und wird den Klavier Solopart im Concerto Ravels ausführen.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Foss Cantata Wins Ovation In Tanglewood Offering

JUL 31 1950

COMPOSER LUKAS FOSS (left) is called to the platform at Tanglewood to receive ovation following performance of his Biblical Cantata "The Song of Songs" for orchestra and solo soprano, Ellabelle Davis (center), under direction of Leonard Bernstein (right).

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.— Leonard Bernstein, favored disciple of Koussevitzky, took over the podium at Tanglewood Sunday and interpreted three works by composers living "here and now."

All three, Lukas Foss, Harold Shapero and David Diamond, were present and received deserved recognition. For Shapero and Diamond the response was cordial; Foss was acclaimed. It was insisted that he go to the platform, and there he received resounding congratulations along with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and with Bernstein. There could have been no better proof that the public quickly recognizes the composer who has something to say and says it effectively.

It was the solo cantata of Foss, "The Song of Songs" for voice and orchestra which really lifted the audience out of a humid, threatening Sunday afternoon atmosphere to cheer for the artist whose hand Bernstein devoutly kissed at the conclusion of her interpretation of the Biblical settings.

* * *

SHAPERO'S composition was the victim of ambiguous titling. Programed in the first instance as "Adagio, Symphony (for Classical Orchestra)," the notes referred simply to a "Symphony for Classical Orchestra." Thus seemingly the slow movement of a larger work, it actually was long enough and tedious enough to be a complete one-movement symphony, so I judge that is what it was.

The program book reported that Shapero had the "benefits of distinguished instruction: Boulanger, Hindemith, Krenek, Slonimsky, Stravinsky, Piston and Copland." His work sounded as though he had too many teachers—labored and unoriginal.

There isn't much more to be said for Diamond's "Timon of Athens," except that it contains the most excruciating, deliberately raucous chord I have ever heard and one which Bernstein executed with a stupendous crescendo.

A quiet, conciliatory episode followed but it was not enough to convince you that Timon was any nobler or better understood for his symphonic experience.

ELLABELLE DAVIS has a beautiful voice, firm and even in texture, sweet, musical and implemented by a fine intelligence.

The Foss work is plausible in its references to voluptuous psalmody. The first song is antique in thematic and harmonic material; the second delightfully lissome and lilting; the third grippingly dramatic, affording opportunities for Miss Davis' darker tones. The composer gave her some bristling orchestral barriers to overcome and he also authored some writing for horns which was anything but idiomatic. Condensation would improve the cantata which is long.

Bernstein, who excels in modern interpretations, threw in for good measure the Brahms E minor Symphony, a reliable repertory item in which he confirmed the Koussevitzky tutelage.

In some respects he has gained maturity. If he hasn't the same tailor as Koussevitzky he has one just as good. His newly acquired foible of shooting the jeweled cuff will remind old-timers of Nikisch.

* * *

Saturday's Concert

Leave it to Koussevitzky to make program-mates of Bruckner and Debussy. What a pair!

The first a withdrawn, dedicated Catholic, who in his child-like simplicity occasionally found an aperture to Heaven, as in the slow movement of the hour-long Seventh Symphony; the other an urbane decadent, who painted the two nocturnes and "The Sea" with a cynical, phosphorescent impressionism — Bruckner in retreat from terrestrial realism; Debussy escaped into illusion.

It was about as antithetical as the fact that both Fritz Kreisler and Benny Goodman (individually) were seen among the 9,900 persons attracted to Tanglewood Saturday night.

Koussevitzky is sufficiently Parisian to give us a lambent Debussy. He has the reputation and he did nothing to harm it this time, except that he remained Koussevitzky; which means that he has eyes in the back of his head for the effect upon his audience.

* * *

THE STRAIN he throws upon the orchestra is not important to him. The brass choir was screechy and high-strung all evening. Ensemble was often secondary.

Of the two composers I preferred Bruckner because Koussevitzky added an element for which he was never distinguished and that was a legato quality—a flow that was almost vocal, a cohesion which enabled the composition to wear its great length becomingly

The first movement of Bruckner's E major is a protracted song, inspired and happy singing. The scherzo has its intimations of the day of wrath but it is hearsay evidence and there is no smell of brimstone. The finale, in Koussevitzky's terms, is simply a case of leaping from climax to climax.

In listening to the marvelous slow movement it was impossible not to recall the companion section of Thursday night's Eroica—great and apocalyptic both of them, but Bruckner's is redeemed music while Beethoven's despair is barely reconciled.

Of the Debussy nocturnes, the first, "Clouds," I regard as unsymphonic. It is seldom played except to the accompaniment of restless coughing and certainly not be attempted in open-air performance.

"Festivals" was a magnificent burst of orchestral virtuosity. The three panels of "The Sea" were equally sonorous and pictorial. There are some melodies here which the popular tunesmiths will seize upon some day.

* * *

A BRIEF SHOWER disturbed Saturday's night's concert and a similar threat and eventual downpour cut into Sunday afternoon's attendance. Saturday night several thousand lawn sitters managed to crowd under the rim of the big shed and few, if any, left the grounds.

There were of course some disturbing noises and I thought that Koussevitzky was needlessly impatient about it. He was also sharply peremptory about squelching applause which burst out quite spontaneously between movements of the Bruckner Symphony.

Victor de Sabata who will conduct the next three concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon was in the audience.

De Sabata Hailed At Tanglewood

8,500 at Debut Of Conductor

By RUDOLPH ELIE

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 3—Victor de Sabata—accent on the SAB, incidentally—the 57-year-old Italian firebrand, made his debut conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight as the Berkshire Festival entered its second week and brought the audience of 8500 to its feet with applause.

The Italian conductor, a man of frail appearance with a mirror-like bald head surrounded by a wisp of platinum hair, is entirely unhampered in his conductorial gyrations by the fact he has an artificial leg. On the contrary, it merely seems to lend additional surprise to his platform techniqu, which is striking to say the least.

ANGULAR STYLE

Although his basic style is angular and musclar with arms wide spread and often high above his head, he is capable of considerable poetry of motion to bring very subtle response from the orchestra with the most delicate gestures.

But he is at his best from an audience point of view when the nature of the music — say the marching Roman hosts portrayed in Respighi's "Pines of Rome"—allows him full play with clenched fists and left uppercuts to the trombone.

He is obviously more transported by the furore than anybody else, and his vast relish in the proceedings is wonderfully projected to the audience.

All this is notto say that his gifts are exclusively theatrical. As a matter of fact, Mr. De Sabata reveals on closer study one of the more sensitive and technically proficient techniques of the day. His ear for balance is extraordinary; he moulds his tonal forces with all the touch of a sculptor working in clay. And he demands, and obtains, the most severe discipline from the men of the orchestra who give him their all.

His program, not a very good one musically speaking, offered rBahms' "Academica Festival Overture," Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Morton Gould's spirituals and the prelude and love death from Wagner's "Tristan."

It was, as it was intended to be, a sure-fire offering for the informal crowds attracted to the festival, and while, in cooler weather, one might find a good many points in interpretative matters to quarrel over, it is impossible to gainsay the fact that Mr. De Sabata made the most of it.

To see and hear him once, or for that amtter several times, is decidedly a refreshing and exhilarating experience. Whether his style is too melodramatic and too italiante to weather a season-long fare of sturdier things is something else again. But there's no denying he caught the fancy of this audience.

GUEST CONDUCTOR—Victor de Sabata, Italian guest maestro, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood shed last night.

[illegible]
AUGUST 5, 1950

Berkshire Festival

Victor De Sabata Conducts the Boston Symphony

Special to the Herald Tribune

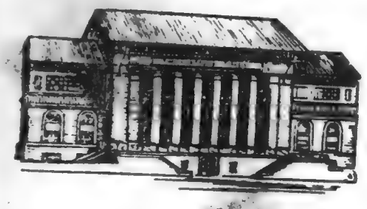
TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—Victor De Sabata conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra here for the first time Thursday night as the Berkshire Music Festival enered the second week of its series of concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood Estate.

His program listed Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Morton Gould's "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and other familiar works by Brahms and Wagner.

Mr. De Sabata has the distinction of being the first conductor outside of Serge Koussevitzky and his associates on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, who has thus far conducted the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival since its inception.

In spite of cloudy and threatening skies, the attendance at the concert was around 8,500. The shed was filled and the overflow heard the music from positions on the Tanglewood lawn. Mr. De Sabata's second and last appearance in the current series will take place Saturday evening.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Foss Cantata Wins Ovation In Tanglewood Offering

JUL 31 1950

COMPOSER LUKAS FOSS (left) is called to the platform at Tanglewood to receive ovation following performance of his Biblical Cantata "The Song of Songs" for orchestra and solo soprano, Ellabelle Davis (center), under direction of Leonard Bernstein (right).

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.— Leonard Bernstein, favored disciple of Koussevitzky, took over the podium at Tanglewood Sunday and interpreted three works by composers living "here and now."

All three, Lukas Foss, Harold Shapero and David Diamond, were present and received deserved recognition. For Shapero and Diamond the response was cordial; Foss was acclaimed. It was insisted that he go to the platform, and there he received resounding congratulations along with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and with Bernstein. There could have been no better proof that the public quickly recognizes the composer who has something to say and says it effectively.

It was the solo cantata of Foss, "The Song of Songs" for voice and orchestra which really lifted the audience out of a humid, threatening Sunday afternoon atmosphere to cheer for the artist whose hand Bernstein devoutly kissed at the conclusion of her interpretation of the Biblical settings.

* * *

SHAPERO'S composition was the victim of ambiguous titling. Programed in the first instance as "Adagio, Symphony (for Classical Orchestra)," the notes referred simply to a "Symphony for Classical Orchestra." Thus seemingly the slow movement of a larger work, it actually was long enough and tedious enough to be a complete one-movement symphony, so I judge that is what it was.

The program book reported that Shapero had the "benefits of distinguished instruction: Boulanger, Hindemith, Krenek, Slonimsky, Stravinsky, Piston and Copland." His work sounded as though he had too many teachers—labored and unoriginal.

There isn't much more to be said for Diamond's "Timon of Athens," except that it contains the most excruciating, deliberately raucous chord I have ever heard and one which Bernstein executed with a stupendous crescendo.

A quiet, conciliatory episode followed but it was not enough to convince you that Timon was any nobler or better understood for his symphonic experience.

ELLABELLE DAVIS has a beautiful voice, firm and even in texture, sweet, musical and implemented by a fine intelligence.

The Foss work is plausible in its references to voluptuous psalmody. The first song is antique in thematic and harmonic material; the second delightfully lissome and lilting; the third grippingly dramatic, affording opportunities for Miss Davis' darker tones. The composer gave her some bristling orchestral barriers to overcome and he also authored some writing for horns which was anything but idiomatic. Condensation would improve the cantata which is long.

Bernstein, who excels in modern interpretations, threw in for good measure the Brahms E minor Symphony, a reliable repertory item in which he confirmed the Koussevitzky tutelage.

In some respects he has gained maturity. If he hasn't the same tailor as Koussevitzky he has one just as good. His newly acquired foible of shooting the jeweled cuff will remind old-timers of Nikisch.

* * *

Saturday's Concert

Leave it to Koussevitzky to make program-mates of Bruckner and Debussy. What a pair!

The first a withdrawn, dedicated Catholic, who in his child-like simplicity occasionally found an aperture to Heaven, as in the slow movement of the hour-long Seventh Symphony; the other an urbane decadent, who painted the two nocturnes and "The Sea" with a cynical, phosphorescent impressionism — Bruckner in retreat from terrestrial realism; Debussy escaped into illusion.

It was about as antithetical as the fact that both Fritz Kreisler and Benny Goodman (individually) were seen among the 9,900 persons attracted to Tanglewood Saturday night.

Koussevitzky, is sufficiently Parisian to give us a lambent Debussy. He has the reputation and he did nothing to harm it this time, except that he remained Koussevitzky; which means that he has eyes in the back of his head for the effect upon his audience.

* * *

THE STRAIN he throws upon the orchestra is not important to him. The brass choir was screechy and high-strung all evening. Ensemble was often secondary.

Of the two composers I preferred Bruckner because Koussevitzky added an element for which he was never distinguished and that was a legato quality—a flow that was almost vocal, a cohesion which enabled the composition to wear its great length becomingly.

The first movement of Bruckner's E major is a protracted song, inspired and happy singing. The scherzo has its intimations of the day of wrath but it is hearsay evidence and there is no smell of brimstone. The finale, in Koussevitzky's terms, is simply a case of leaping from climax to climax.

In listening to the marvelous slow movement it was impossible not to recall the companion section of Thursday night's Eroica—great and apocalyptic both of them, but Bruckner's is redeemed music while Beethoven's despair is barely reconciled.

Of the Debussy nocturnes, the first, "Clouds," I regard as unsymphonic. It is seldom played except to the accompaniment of restless coughing and certainly not be attempted in open-air performance.

"Festivals" was a magnificent burst of orchestral virtuosity. The three panels of "The Sea" were equally sonorous and pictorial. There are some melodies here which the popular tunesmiths will seize upon some day.

* * *

A BRIEF SHOWER disturbed Saturday's night's concert and a similar threat and eventual downpour cut into Sunday afternoon's attendance. Saturday night several thousand lawn sitters managed to crowd under the rim of the big shed and few, if any, left the grounds.

There were of course some disturbing noises and I thought that Koussevitzky was needlessly impatient about it. He was also sharply peremptory about squelching applause which burst out quite spontaneously between movements of the Bruckner Symphony.

Victor de Sabata who will conduct the next three concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon was in the audience.

De Sabata Hailed At Tanglewood

00 at Debut Of Conductor

By RUDOLPH ELIE

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 3—Victor de Sabata—accent on the SAB, incidentally—the 57-year-old Italian firebrand, made his debut conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight as the Berkshire Festival entered its second week and brought the audience of 8500 to its feet with applause.

The Italian conductor, a man of frail appearance with a mirror-like bald head surrounded by a wisp of platinum hair, is entirely unhampered in his conductorial gyrations by the fact he has an artificial leg. On the contrary, it merely seems to lend additional surprise to his platform technique, which is striking to say the least.

ANGULAR STYLE

Although his basic style is angular and musclar with arms wide spread and often high above his head, he is capable of considerable poetry of motion to bring very subtle response from the orchestra with the most delicate gestures.

But he is at his best from an audience point of view when the nature of the music—say the marching Roman hosts portrayed in Respighi's "Pines of Rome"—allows him full play with clenched fists and left uppercuts to the trombone.

He is obviously more transported by the furor than anybody else, and his vast relish in the proceedings is wonderfully projected to the audience.

All this is not to say that his gifts are exclusively theatrical. As a matter of fact, Mr. De Sabata reveals on closer study one of the most sensitive and technically proficient techniques of the day. His ear for balance is extraordinary; he moulds his tonal forces with all the touch of a sculptor working in clay. And he demands, and obtains, the most severe discipline from the men of the orchestra who give him their all.

His program, not a very good one musically speaking, offered Brahms' "Academica Festival Overture," Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Morton Gould's spirituals and the prelude and love death from Wagner's "Tristan."

It was, as it was intended to be, a sure-fire offering for the informal crowds attracted to the festival, and while, in cooler weather, one might find a good many points in interpretative matters to quarrel over, it is impossible to gainsay the fact that Mr. De Sabata made the most of it.

To see and hear him once, or for that amtter several times, is decidedly a refreshing and exhilarating experience. Whether his style is too melodramatic and too italianate to weather a season-long fare of sturdier things is something else again. But there's no denying he caught the fancy of this audience.

GUEST CONDUCTOR—Victor de Sabata, Italian guest maestro, who conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Tanglewood shed last night.

Herald Tribune
AUGUST 5, 1950

Berkshire Festival

Victor De Sabata Conducts the Boston Symphony

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—Victor De Sabata conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra here for the first time Thursday night as the Berkshire Music Festival enered the second week of its series of concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood Estate.

His program listed Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Morton Gould's "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and other familiar works by Brahms and Wagner.

Mr. De Sabata has the distinction of being the first conductor outside of Serge Koussevitzky and his associates on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, who has thus far conducted the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival since its inception.

In spite of cloudy and threatening skies, the attendance at the concert was around 8,500. The shed was filled and the overflow heard the music from positions on the Tanglewood lawn. Mr. De Sabata's second and last appearance in the current series will take place Saturday evening.

De Sabata Acclaimed In Tanglewood Debut

TANGLEWOOD—Victor de Sabata, 57-year-old Italian conductor, caught the fancy of a near-hysterical crowd of 8500 music lovers in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Festival last night when he made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First Outside Conductor

The first guest conductor—outside of the "family circle" at Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center—won not only the admiration of the huge crowd that overflowed the great Shed, but also the musicians in the BSO who joined in the tremendous ovation following the opening concert of the second series at the Berkshire Festival.

Mr. de Sabata's conductorial gyrations appealed to the large audience almost as much as his musical technique. From the moment the orchestra completed the opening composition, Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," De Sabata's winning personality was reflected in the audience. He was recalled to the platform time and time again after each performance, pressing his hand to his heart, tossing kisses to the orchestra and music lovers in the Shed.

Although De Sabata and Koussevitzky exchanged pleasant greetings at rehearsals since the noted Italian conductor arrived this week at Tanglewood for the second series of concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky was conspicuous by his absence from his box in the Music Shed at last night's performance. The four seats in the Koussevitzky box remained vacant throughout the evening.

Last night's crowd of 8500 was small compared to a year ago at the opening of Series B when 12,500 turned out to hear Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A record crowd is expected for tomorrow night's program, however, when De Sabata returns to the podium for his final appearance at Tanglewood this year.

Leonard Bernstein, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's pupils in the conducting class at the Berkshire Music Center, will make his final appearance of the season Sunday afternoon when he will appear as conductor and soloist.

Following last night's concert, Mr. de Sabata returned immediately to the Curtis Hotel where he is registered for the week end and had supper with the Italian actress, Valentina Corsesa, a friend of the De Sabatas who is here for the week-end concerts.

Tonight at 8.15, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Department II orchestra in the Music Shed in Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony as part of the program for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Eleazar de Carvalho also will appear as conductor for part of the program.

when he led the first program in the series B week end here last night. Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho, who have also assisted Serge Koussevitzky on the Tanglewood podium, are considered as having come up through the ranks, so to speak, thus to Mr. de Sabata fell the honor of being the first to be invited to lead a Festival program.

De Sabata had never conducted in Boston so this was his first acquaintance with the orchestra and it may be said at the outset that he distinguished himself very definitely. He led the orchestra. In no instance did he allow the orchestra to throw its weight around and make him follow them. Nor did the men attempt any such procedure. They played for him with unsurpassed alertness and gave mirror-quick response to his decided and individual indications.

Early Programs Repeated

By a strange coincidence De Sabata played one number last night and will include another tomorrow on his other appearance with the orchestra that Henry Hadley used on the very first Berkshire Festival program, Aug. 23, 1934. Mr. de Sabata played Respighi's "Pines of Rome" last night and will do the Berlioz overture "The Roman Carnival" tomorrow, which was the curtain raiser of Berkshire outdoor orchestral music.

Last night Brahms' "Academic Festival" overture was the first number on the program and De Sabata immediately established himself as a musical personality. He was precise and exact. What was played was unquestionably his idea of the music. He was restrained and contained in the more disciplined moments. In more excited passages he allowed his limbs to go in four directions at the same time, but the orchestra reflected his sane, artistic and musicianly directions in all their variety. His Brahms was hearty and lusty and entirely in the spirit.

The Schubert "Unfinished" symphony found the orchestra playing with their utmost and unexcelled tone quality although the andante lost a bit of its natural flow because of too much insistence and a rather too measured a tempo on the conductor's part. The Respighi closed the first half of the program.

After intermission came Morton Gould's "Spirituals" and the "Prelude" and Liebestod" from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

Respighi became excitingly dramatic in its performance last night and the Wagner [illegible] was given intensity and [illegible] by evidence of the conductor's intimate knowledge of tradition and

De Sabata
Continued on Second Page

Conductor de Sabata Distinguishes Himself

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Victor de Sabata became the first guest to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Berkshire Festival concert

De Sabata
Continued on Second Page

Benefit Rehearsal Tomorrow Features Bernstein, de Sabata

TANGLEWOOD — Both Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein will rehearse the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow. This public rehearsal, the proceeds of which benefit the orchestra's pension fund, will begin at 10 AM.

It will be a rehearsal for works to be played at both the Saturday night concert under the direction of Mr. de Sabata and the Sunday afternoon concert under the direction of Mr. Bernstein. Among the pieces to be performed Sunday afternoon is Ravel's piano concerto with Leonard Bernstein as soloist, conducting the orchestra from the piano.

Mr. de Sabata, who has been heard in opera houses and concert halls throughout Europe, will be preparing for a concert which will include works by Bach, Mozart, Berlioz, Ghedini, and Beethoven. His concert appearance will be tomorrow night.

These rehearsals were started before the war. Ordinarily no one is allowed to watch a symphony orchestra except at a concert, but the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have invited the public into their three Saturday morning rehearsals of the regular Tanglewood Festival season in order to raise money for pensions. The admission charge for the public rehearsal is $1.

After the rehearsal [illegible] should end by 1 PM, the [illegible] of the estate at Tanglewood [illegible] be open for the rest of the afternoon. The public is invited to picnic or have lunch on the grounds.

De Sabata

Continued on Second Page

of the peculiar heart-breaking sense of the music. His extremely spacious pauses before entering into the "Liebestod" were awesomely impressive. Gould's "Spirituals" are a combination of pseudo-tragedy and "corny" humor. De Sabata caught the spirit of the jazz rhythms with unwonted fidelity.

Opposes Changing Policy

Without necessarily becoming members of a committee for the suppression of happiness and levity in the enjoyment of music, we question the inclusion of this Gould composition on a Berkshire Festival program. It has some of the aspects of eating strawberry shortcake; it tastes wonderful but doesn't do us much good. Have rich desserts a place on Berkshire Festival programs? We think they do not. We enjoy the Pops as much as any one and it may well be pointed out that the Boston orchestra in their post-season popular series play many of the pieces which have a justifiable place here at Berkshire Festivals. Just where the line should be drawn is not so easy to determine, but we would oppose any tendency to lighten and "popularize" the Festival programs for any motive. They have attracted almost unbelievably large audiences and have acquired international renown by an adherence to a policy set down early in the incumbency of the Boston orchestra in the Berkshires. We believe it would be ill-advised to change their basic and distinctive character.

Aug. 5

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SA

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.]

DE SABATA OFFERS PROGRAM AT LENOX

Conducts Boston Symphony in Tanglewood Concert Including Respighi 'Pines of Rome'

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—Victor De Sabata conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood tonight. He was the first guest conductor not a member of Serge Koussevitzky's staff the Berkshire symphonic festival has had in the last thirteen years.

His engagement caused a difference of opinion between Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony trustees. It was Mr. Koussevitzky's contention, made in the course of a radio interview some weeks ago, that the guest leader should have been a conductor drawn from the Americas.

Later on he said here that his comments were not to be construed as any personal reflection on Mr. De Sabata. The two men met some days ago and greeted each other cordially. Nevertheless, Mr. Koussevitzky's box was vacant tonight, and he was not seen in the audience.

Koussevitzky's Program

Mr. Koussevitzky, who was not scheduled to conduct any of the public festival concerts this week, has decided to direct part of tomorrow night's concert by the Berkshire Music Center's first string orchestra. He plans to do Tchaikovsky's Fourth, and this performance, which comes on the evening that divides Mr. De Sabata's two concerts, will be open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Regardless of the currents that stirred up official circles privately, tonight's audience of 8,500 seemed to find Mr. De Sabata's conducting to its liking. It accorded him thunderous applause on several occasions.

And the plain fact is that Mr. De Sabata knows how to make an orchestra sound. He got some gorgeous colors and sonorities out of the Boston Symphony. The grand climaxes of the Brahms "Academic Festival" overture and of Respighi's "Pines of Rome" filled the music shed with grandiose effects.

Athletic and Emotional

Whether all this added up to music is another question. Mr. De Sabata belongs to the athletic, emotional school of conductors. While a conductor's mannerisms are, as a rule, his own business, in Mr. De Sabata's case they seem to be a reflection of his musical orientation.

Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony provided a vivid illustration of his virtues and shortcomings. There were some ravishing tonal effects. The orchestra gave the conductor just what he wanted in beauty of sound. But there is more to the symphony. It needed firmer tempi; the second movement was pulled out of shape.

Mr. De Sabata also conducted Morton Gould's skillfully put together Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra and the Prelude and Liebestod from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde." It was in the literalisms of "Pines of Rome" that he made the biggest splash. Even with a symphony orchestra, one would guess that he remains at heart a man of the opera house.

BORDERS WILL CONDUCT

Eagle Aug 4

Koussevitzky Proposes Huge Greek Theatre

LENOX—Construction of a Greek theatre seating 25,000 will begin next year at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director.

The retired Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor told a reporter last night that the amphitheatre will be patterned after those of ancient Greek times.

"We will have our stage masters, composers and conductors," Koussevitzky said. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Eagle Aug 4

Customers at Tanglewood have been intrigued at the domestic scene presented at the far end of the left colonnade in the Shed. A family of birds have nested over one of the lights, and no matter what the program, go busily about feeding the little ones. Quite a few opera glasses are trained on them instead of the maestro, and reports come that the birds are disturbed only by Tchaikovsky, and not very seriously at that.

RICHARD V. HAPPEL.

[30]

Bernstein Leads Final 'A' Concert

Herald-Journal Wire

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.—Leonard Bernstein, gifted young American composer-conductor, who recently returned from a successful tour of Europe as a guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the concert at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, to mark the close of Series "A" in the Berkshire Music Festival concerts [illegible] accepted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of Berkshire Music Center in his early conducting class, has been a member of the Berkshire faculty since 1946. He is a dynamic figure on the podium. Expert musicianship and a thorough groundwork under the Koussevitzky school of prideful direction gives him a high place among American orchestra leaders and interpreters.

WHEN DR. AND MRS. Koussevitzky arrived, there was a little furry of excitement, many pressing forward to the Koussevitzky box to greet the man so largely responsible for the festival.

The first part of the program was devoted to works of contemporary composers. Included was "Timon of Athens" by Rochester-born David Diamond. Diamond has done usual study of a psychopathic figure in two phases, using two formal poles of music. He also composed the score for Margaret Webster's production of "The Tempest" and later wrote the music for "Romeo and Juliet" played by the Little Orchestra of New York.

Musician Harold Shapero's Adagio "symphony for classical orchestra," also played, is an interesting piece of modern music literature by this son of Massachusetts-born composer. It was completed in 1947 after commission by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and was dedicated to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky.

ELLABELLE DAVIS, native of New Rochelle, [illegible] here and in Europe as a singer of extraordinary gifts, was soloist in the "Song of Songs," a Biblical cantata from the Song of Solomon for soprano and [illegible] by Lukas Foss. This was the outstanding offering of [illegible].

Miss Davis [illegible] the Boston Symphony in the performance of the cantata [illegible] seasons ago. The aria is in the second movement and the [illegible] orchestra interludes in the third movement leads into the finale, which Foss defines as a prayer: "Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is as strong as death."

There was an ovation for Director Bernstein and Miss Davis was recalled to the stage.

The Brahms Fourth Symphony in E minor closed the program to the evident satisfaction of the admirers of the great classicist.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY conducted Saturday night's program in the Shed, where a capacity audience, with hundreds listening from the broad lawns, heard the Bruckner Seventh Symphony, in E Major, two Debussy of nocturnes and the three orchestral sketches which comprise his "La Mer."

Most famous of the four movements of the Bruckner symphony a long and grandiose work by the Austrian composer, is the Adagio. The first performance of the Seventh in this country was given in Chicago exactly 54 years ago.

The following February the Boston Symphony gave the first Boston performance. It is a massive work, written when Bruckner was nearly 60 years old and dedicated "in deepest reverence" to His Majesty, King Ludwig II of Barvia.

During the playing of this symphony there was a brief electrical storm, nature's own show in counter attraction to the crashing brasses from the stage. The storm sent many hurrying from the lawns to shelter for a few minutes.

Among the notables at the concert was Fritz Kreisler, world famous violinist, who, with Mrs. Kreisler is in the Berkshires on holiday. There was considerable interest in Kreisler's appearance and many in some sections stood as he entered, others applauding as he and his wife made their way to a box.

IN HIGH contrast to the Bruckner symphonic work were the Debussy selections. The sheer beauty of "Nuages" is a mood expressed as though an impressionistic painter was working with mixed colors and certain vibrations of light. The slow motions of the clouds were occasionally emphasized by the reedy, langorous tone of the English horn and the glissandos of the harps.

"Fetes" with its rich orchestration and restless dancing rythms, has certain abrupt scintillations, which makes the music now free and happy, now like the thunder of the march of the sun through the skies.

"La Mer," is a studio seascape which contains both rich detail and balanced musical symmetry. In this Director Koussevitzky gave characteristically fine reading, catching that "remoteness from realty" for which Debussy is known. The French composer wrote "La Mer" from his studio in the hills of Burgundy where he worked from his endless store of memories of the ocean.

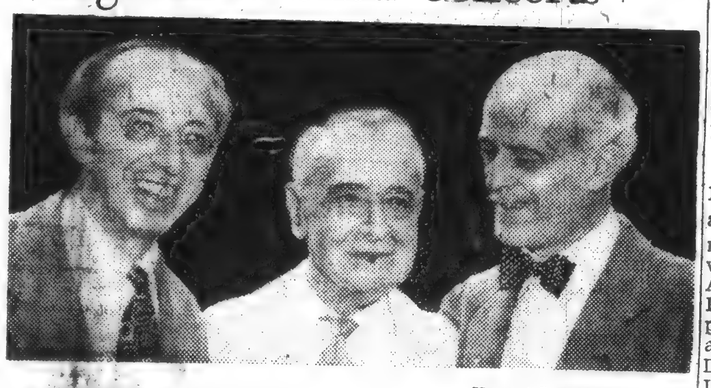
Music and Programs in Crouse College; Ann Knaus Soloist in Park, Tanglewood Shed Concerts



Howard S. Babbitt, Jr.

Aaron Copland, widely known American composer, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of Berkshire Music Center, and Jacques Ibert, French composer, pictured left to right, in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Boston Symphony Concert Today In 'Tanglewood'

THE FIRST of three series of concerts in the Music Shed in "Tanglewood," Lenox, is in progress with nine major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Certain members of the Orchestra went to Tanglewood early in July for six programs of Bach and Mozart Music in the Theater-Concert Hall. The remainder of the Orchestra, fresh from a successful Boston Esplanade series arrived in Lenox early last week for the major musical events in The Shed. Last Wednesday, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Berkshire Music Center, celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted Thursday night's concert in The Shed, the program including Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Second Symphony by Sibelius. Last night, Dr. Koussevitzky again conducted, the program including Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's Two Nocturnes—"Clouds" and "Festivals" and the French composer's "The Sea".

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, just returned from Europe, will conduct this afternoon's concert at 3 o'clock. The program: Harold Shapero's "Adagio", from his Symphony for Classical Orchestra; David Diamond's "Timon of Athens"; Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs" with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, as soloist, and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms.

* * *

Brahms, Schubert, Bach, Mozart, on Aug. 3-5 Programs

NEXT THURSDAY night, at the first Series B concert, Victor de Sabata will conduct Brahms, Schubert, Respighi, as well as Gould and Wagner compositions. He also will conduct the Saturday night, Aug 5 program which will include the Bach Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E Flat Major, K543, and the Beethoven Fifth Symphony. Bernstein will conduct the Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6 program, also playing the Ravel Piano Concerto. The symphonic numbers; The Ravel Suite, "Mother Goose" and excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

SERIES C will feature the Bach Mass in B Minor in two parts, at 5 P.M. and 8:15 P.M. Thursday night, Aug. 10, Eleazar De Carvalho conducting. Soloists: Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease. Other programs: Saturday night, Aug. 12, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, De Carvalho conducting. Berlioz, Ibert and Villa-Lobos will be represented on the Aug. 12 program; the Prokofieff Sixth Symphony and the First Symphony by Brahms will be played at the closing concert, Aug. 13.

* * *

Babbitt

THE COMPOSER WATCHES . . .: Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, conducts the student orchestra in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood during rehearsal for the comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," to be presented Monday and Tuesday evenings, as the composer, Jacques Ibert in beret looks on with Felix Wolfes, opera department coach at left, and the composer's son, at right. This American premiere of Ibert's opera will be given for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Babbitt

OPERA STUDENTS REHEARSE . . .: F. Cowles Strickland, in white shirt left, stage director in the opera department, directs a scene at rehearsal with Manfred Hecht, the king, standing on platform, Ewan Harbreacht and Beatrice Bush-Kane, at the king's right, the two female principals, and Fernard Martel, another principal, in T-shirt at right. Costumes and scenery for "The King of Yvetot," arrived today for dress rehearsals tomorrow afternoon. This is the third opera presentation by the students this season.

Fair Weather Is Predicted For Week End at Festival

Victor de Sabata To Make Final Appearance As Guest Conductor Tonight—Bernstein To Play Piano Concerto Tomorrow Afternoon

TANGLEWOOD — Victor de Sabata will make his final appearance as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tonight and tomorrow Leonard Bernstein will wind up his season at the Berkshire Festival when he will appear as conductor and soloist with the BSO at the afternoon program.

With a break from the weatherman, record crowds are expected for the week end concerts. The U.S. Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport predicts it will be "fair and cooler tonight," but warmer with sunshine tomorrow afternoon.

The two guest conductors held public rehearsals with the orchestra before a huge crowd in the Shed this morning for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Mr. de Sabata, the noted Italian conductor, who scored a great triumph in his first appearance with the orchestra Thursday night, will direct tonight, starting at 8.15, a program of compositions by Bach, Mozart, Berlioz, Ghedini and Beethoven. On the first part of the program will be Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major; Berlioz's Overture "The Roman Carnival." After intermission the program will close with Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5, in C minor.

Tomorrow afternoon at 3, Mr. Bernstein will play the piano concerto and conduct Ravel's Suite "Mother Goose," and after intermission the orchestra will play excerpts from Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet."

Demonstration for Koussevitzky

Last night more than 4000 Friends of the Berkshire Music Center attended the Department II concert in the Music Shed, the highlight of which was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's appearance as conductor of the student orchestra in Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony. The director of Tanglewood was given a great ovation at the close of the program and was recalled four times to the platform. Twice the student orchestra members declined to share the applause during the demonstration, but joined the audience in paying tribute to their leader, Koussevitzky.

Wolfgang Schanzer, a student conductor, opened the Department II program directing the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus." Charles Schiff, another pupil in the conducting class, directed the orchestra in Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and before intermission Eleazar de Carvalho, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, conducted the orchestra in de Falla's "El Amor Brujo," with Eunice Alberts as soloist.

Tomorrow morning at 10, members of the Department II orchestra will present a concert of chamber music in the chamber music hall. The program will include a trio for violin, cello and harp by Jacques Ibert, with the composer's daughter, Jacqueline, playing the harp.

Also on the program will be Mozart's piano quartet No. 1, Brahms' horn trio and Mozart's Quintet for four wind instruments and piano.

Monday afternoon at 4.30 the Department 5 orchestra—a group of non-professional musicians—will give its last concert in the Music Shed. As in their previous concert, they will play the world premier of a work dedicated especially to them. The composition, "Music for Strings," was composed by Manuel Mahler-Kalkstein, the manager of the Israel Symphony Orchestra. The two other works on the program will be the Overture to the Magic Flute by Mozart and Schumann's third symphony. This concert is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

insurance . . . With the proposal for a 25,000-seat theatre for Tanglewood, Koussevitzky must be thinking of scheduling Notre Dame . . .

Floor Collapses As Friends Greet Dr. Koussevitzky

TANGLEWOOD—The floor of the Green Room in the Music Shed—the after concert room where friends greet Dr. Koussevitzky — collapsed under the weight of a huge crowd last night following the Department II orchestra's concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky was receiving congratulations from a group of admirers when the floor dropped about 12 inches. No one was injured. The maestro and his group of friends described the incident as "quite a surprise."

Tanglewood

Tanglewood Featured In Collier's Magazine

A photographic layout depicting "Tanglewood Time," with informal snaps of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other Berkshire Music Center celebrities, plus two of the concerts, appears in the current issue of Collier's magazine.

Among the persons in the pictures are Dr. Koussevitzky, assistant director Aaron Copland, Olivier Messiaen, the French composer who taught at Tanglewood last year; and Miss Peggy Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, Boston Symphony Orchestra executive and program annotator.

The pictures were taken by Miss Ruth Orkin of New York, a frequent visitor at the Music Center last summer.

Springfield Republican Aug 6

Tanglewood's Final Week Lists Important Concerts

'Mother Goose' Suite and 'Romeo and Juliet' Today; Adele Addison to Be Thursday Soloist

By VICTOR PRAHL

The final week at Tanglewood, an exceptionally full one, will offer some of the most important concerts of the season. This afternoon's concert under the direction of Leonard Bernstein will include Ravel's "Mother Goose" Suite, Alborada del Gracioso and the same composer's piano concerto with Mr. Bernstein as soloist. The second half will consist of excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet". Monday at 4.30 there will be a concert in the large shed by the student orchestra and at 8.15 in the theater, the opera department will present its major production "Le Roi D'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert. Monsieur Ibert is the French composer in residence this season as a teacher of composition. On Tuesday at 4.30 the small choir will give a program of works by contemporary American composers and in the evening the opera will be repeated.

Coolidge Concert

The last concert in the series presented by Mrs. Coolidge will be given on Wednesday night at 8.15 and will include Bach's "Musical Offering". The Bach commorative concerts will culminate on Thursday with a performance of the master's great Mass in B Minor by the full orchestra and chorus under Dr. Koussevitzky. Of special interest to local music lovers is the fact that Adele Addison of Springfield will be the soprano soloist. The others will be Eunice Alberts, alto; David Loyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. The first part will be given at 5 and the second at 8.15.

The feature of "Tanglewood on Parade" on Friday will be the appearance of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf". The orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will play Hayden's "Oxford" Symphony and Dvorak's "New World". At 6 there will be simultaneous performances by various student groups of chamber music, opera, orchestra and chorus. On Saturday at 3 there will be an orchestra concerts by students an din the evening Eleazar de Carvalho will make his sole appearance as conductor in a program that includes Berlios' "Hariod in Italy" with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist, Jacques Ibert's "Escales" and Choros No. 10 by Villa-Lobos. In the final concert of the season on Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Prokofieff's "Sixth" and Brahms' "First".

Last Sunday's concert under direction of Leonard Bernstein was of interest in that it included three works by young American composers, the sole offerings from this contingent on the major orchestra series other than Morton Gould' "Spirituals" on Mr. de Sabata's Thursday program.

The Adagio from Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra" which opened the concert is a grateful, listenable work that sings forth fearlessly in the beauty of its clear melodic statement. Highly effective was the lyrical theme played by the strings against the staccato of the other instruments and the ingenious handling of the instrumentation throughout. It seemed a little over-long for a slow movement, almost approximating that of the Bruckner Symphony of the previous concert.

Forthright, too, was the broad thematic statement that opened David Diamond's symphonic portrait "Timon of Athens" announced in stentorian tones and richly timbred harmony by the full brasses. We did not always follow the composer in this analytical portrait nor did the music always ucceed in holding one's interest but it was written with a sure hand for the most part one felt Mr. Diamond had fulfilled well his intentions.

It was the third time we have heard Ellabelle Davis sing Lukas Foss's settings of "The Song of Songs", several years ago in this setting, at Smith College with the same orchestra and in this performance. This hearing was by far the most enjoyable of the three for these spirited, imaginative songs stand up well and gain upon repetition while Miss Davis is a greatly improved singer since last heard two years ago in recital at Smith College. Now all of her tones are firm, well timred, and carried well to back of the huge auditorium. Her enunciation, too, is admirable. One could understand most of the words without resorting to the printed text. Miss Davis has always been the artist but now with this perfect technical control she should take her rightful place in the front rank of our best singers. The audience gave her an enthusiastic reception recalling her and Mr. Foss repeatedly.

Mr. Bernstein's accompaniment for the songs were well scaled and imbued with the same sympathetic warmth and musicianly insight as the pieces by Harold Shapero and David Diamond. His conducting of Brahms "Fourth" in the second half was also that of the composer-conductor and if a little too much on the personal side was nevertheless sensitive, musical, and expressive.

SOBATA PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE AT TANGLEWOOD

Dynamic Italian Conductor Gives Bach, Mozart, Beethoven

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, Aug. 5—Victor De Cabata, dynamic Italian conductor, delighted another large audience tonight at his second Tanglewood concert. From all we had heard, we expected a more demonstrative conductor but in the first part of the program, at least, he turned out to be conservative enough. When he does resort to extravagant gestures they always have a meaning, the orchestra understands them, and tonight the results obviously pleased everyone.

Orchestra Responds

The men of the orchestra responded to his warmth of temperament, giving a glow and reverential character to the flowing phrases of Bach's Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio." The charm, restraint and continuity was entirely in keeping with its pastoral air. We found an exceptional beauty, too, in the performance of Mozart's E Flat Symphony (K. 543). There was nothing routine or casual in any of its four movements. There was a caressing tenderness in the lovely melody of the andante and exquisite beauty in the pianissimo passages of the trio of the menuetto and a joyous sparkle in the finale. It was as sensitive a performance of this familiar work as we have ever heard.

Mr. De Sabata was right at home in Berlioz' overture, "The Roman Carnival." Here his temperament had free play and he gave a festive spirit to this colorful score. The latter half of the concert consisted of Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante, with Richard Burgin and Alfred Kirps, violinists, and Joseph De Pasquale, viola, as soloists, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

An audience of 11,450 gave Mr. De Sabata a rousing reception.

Mrs. Koussevitzky's Father Dies in Nice, France

LENOX — Alexander Naoumoff, 82, father of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, died in Nice, France, this week according to word received by Mrs. Koussevitzky Thursday afternoon. Mr. Naoumoff served as minister of agriculture in Russia during World War I.

Mrs. Koussevitzky's father's memoirs, which he never wanted published while he was living, are being kept at the Hoover War Library at Leland Stanford Junior University in California.

Last Week-End of the Berkshire Festival; Other Summer Music

Next week-end will see the last of the concerts in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's current Berkshire Festival, which conductor Serge Koussevitzky will close with Brahms' First Symphony.

This afternoon at 3 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Leonard Bernstein will lead the orchestra in Ravel's "Mother Goose" Suite and Alborada del Gracioso, and will play the solo part in the Piano Concerto by the same composer. He will conclude with excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony.

The week at Tanglewood holds two occasions of further interest. The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, the French composer who has been teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center, will be performed Monday and Tuesday evenings at 8:15 in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

On Friday the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" will boast the services of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as Narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Mr. Koussevitzky will also conduct, that day, Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony, and the "New World" Symphony of Dvorak.

The last three Festival programs will be as follows:

Thursday at 5 and 8:15 (two parts). Bach: Mass in B minor; soloists; Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, baritone. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Saturday at 8:15. Berlioz: "Harold in Italy" (Joseph De Pasquale, viola soloist); Ibert: "Escales"; Villa-Lobos: Choros No. 10. Eleazar De Carvalho conducting.

Sunday, Aug. 13, at 3. Prokofieff: Sixth Symphony; Brahms: First Symphony. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood is now in its final week of concerts which will come to an end next Sunday.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct Thursday night and next Sunday afternoon, and the guest conductors this week will be Leonard Bernstein today and Eleaar de Carvalho Saturday night. A special feature of the final week will be a performance of "Peter and the Wolf" with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt the narrator. The programs, which are subject to change without notice, are as follows:

TODAY AT 3 P. M.
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
"Mother Goose" Suite; Alborada del Gracioso; Piano Concerto .....Ravel
(Leonard Bernstein, soloist)
"Romeo and Juliet," excerpts....Berlioz

THURSDAY AT 5:00 and 8:15 P. M.
Serge Koussevitzky, conducting
Mass in B minor ..... J. S. Bach
(Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease, soloists)

FRIDAY AT 6 P. M.
Tanglewood on Parade
"Peter and the Wolf" .....Prokofieff
(Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, narrator)
The program of events runs from 6 to 11 P. M.
"Oxford" Symphony.....Haydn
"New World" Symphony .....Dvorak

SATURDAY at 8:15 P. M.,
Eleazar de Carvalho, conducting
Harold in Italy ..... Berlioz
Escales ..... Ibert
Choros 10 ..... Villa-Lobos

SUNDAY, AUG. 13 at 3 P. M.
Serge Koussevitzky, conducting
Symphony No 5 .....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 1 ..... Brahms

* * *

This coming Sunday will find Tanglewood at the peak of its season with only one more week to go before the final concert on Sunday, Aug. 13. In spite of threatening showers, and some rainfall last Sunday, an amazingly great number of music lovers bought admission tickets at the gate and enjoyed the program from the spacious lawns. The performance was thrilling, but Willard Clark and Victor Prahl who are music critics, which we are not, have already gone into that. Did space permit, it would be of gowns and dresses and sportswear the girls and women wore that we would write. Gorgeous, extravagant, amazing, simple, unusual, primitive, conventional, colorful, dainty, massive exotic, daring, rustic, colossal and stupendous are but a few of the adjectives we could use.

At times we saw such lovely dresses that we were tempted to rush up to the passerby and ask if they thought we could get the same in size 18 Misses, for Our Right Supporter. We would not, however, create the impression that a Tanglewood concert is a miniature Easter parade. Just the opposite would be true, for at these concerts one dresses as one pleases and is still in style. Once, we even saw a handsome young lady, beautifully clad, in her bare feet. She walked along the sharp-cut pebbly paths all unconcerned, and methoughts that here was a youth who had left Newport, where a vacation of boating and sailing and barefeet went well together.

But what bothers us is, are the outfits that we so much admire, the things we'll see next year, or are they all the rage today, or were they the rage a year ago? Will some one tell us these things? We fear our education in dress appreciation has been neglected.

Charlemont-on-the-Deerfield
August 2, 1950

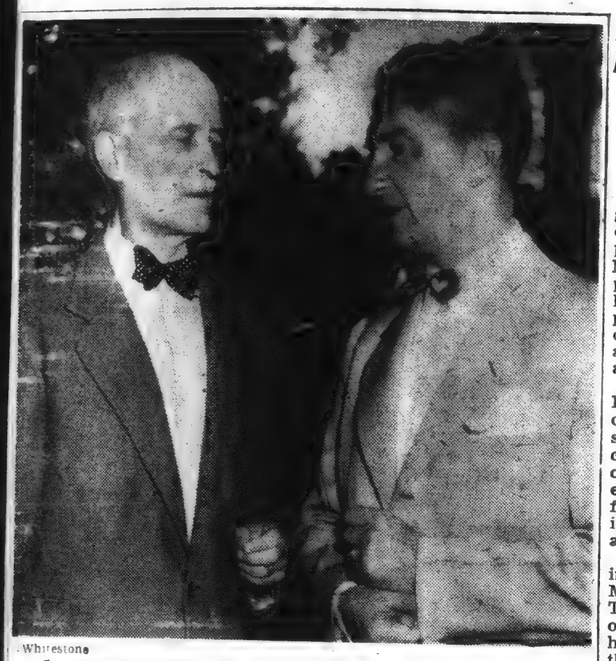
Opera

Summer centers of culture are blossoming out in the opera department this week with two premieres.

The new operas are "The Ordeal of Osbert," by Allan Davis, and "Le Roi d'Yvetot," by Jacques Ibert. "Osbert" is based on a story by P. G. Wodehouse and will have its world premiere on a bill with Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" at the Plymouth Rock Center of Music and Drama in Plymouth Friday night. "Le Roi" will have its American premiere tomorrow night at Tanglewood as the third opera event of the Berkshire Music Festival.

All three operas are short and light in mood. Both programs will have a second performance the night following the premiere.

...w-Hat Circuit — Jacques Ibert and His Opera



Whitestone

Jacques Ibert (left), composer of "The King of Yvetot," to have its American première Monday and Tuesday at Tanglewood under the direction of Jan Popper (right).

French Composer Describes His Work, 'King of Yvetot'

By Harold Rogers

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

An interview with the distinguished and witty Jacques Ibert, one of France's foremost composers, is refreshing. First of all, M. Ibert is not at all shy about expressing his opinions. And second, he speaks a fluent brand of imperfect English that has much charm. A visit with M. Ibert is an entertaining experience with a casual air.

M. Ibert is director of the French Academy in Rome. He has composed five operas, 51 film scores, several ballets, and many orchestral works in larger forms or for chamber ensembles. He is especially interested in writing for unusual combinations as, for instance, his concerto for cello and wind instruments.

This summer, M. Ibert is teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center. On Monday and Tuesday evenings his four-act opera, "The King of Yvetot," will have its American première in the Theater-Concert Hall. It will be produced by the opera department under the direction of Dr. Jan Popper, head of the department this season during Boris Goldovsky's leave of absence. Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. The stage director is F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University.

* * *

"I began writing this opera in 1931," M. Ibert explained, "and completed it the year following when it was produced at the Opéra Comique in Paris. It is in the traditional form of the French comic opera and combines spoken dialogue with singing parts. But I tried to find a different kind of recitative—one that is melodic but unaccompanied.

"'Le Roi d'Yvetot,'" he continued, "is full of many tragic effects. It is not altogether funny, like my opera, 'Angélique,' that has been produced more than 1,000 times. It takes place in the small kingdom of Yvetot, a happy Utopia that actually existed in the seventeenth century. It was free of taxes and governed by a kind of peasant king or lord mayor."

M. Ibert went on to explain the opera's satirical bent, aiming its darts at government and war. After the neighboring community steals a few Yvetotian apples, there develops a foolish war in which the king is deposed—naturally, since he was against the use of arms.

Then, with no king as conciliator, the land of Yvetot goes to ruin, the men lazy, the women doing all the work. The women, in order to restore the king and reinstate law and order, go on a general strike. They succeed. Not only is their king again on the throne, but his girl friend, as well, becomes queen.

M. Ibert threads a folk song through the score, the words of which are by the poet Beranger. At one place he gains an unusual effect by introducing a recording of a nightingale's song.

* * *

The composer said that when he attended Dr. Popper's rehearsals of the opera, he was impressed by the spirit of youth in evidence. "The singers are all animated with the same kind of feeling we had with Jacques Copeau, our great French producer who used young people in his productions," he added.

M. Ibert explained that before all he was a man of the theater and loved all people connected with the theater. His first experience with theater music began in 1912 when he took a job playing the piano in a Paris movie house that specialized in American films.

"I came to love America through those pictures," he said. "I improvised accompaniments to all the latest Charlie Chaplin and Tom Mix films!"

* * *

American mystery stories form a large part of M. Ibert's favorite reading material. When he can find a suitable libretto, he wishes to write an opera in the style of an American mystery story. He believes that chamber opera holds the answer to the continuance of the operatic form.

"The King of Yvetot" has 16 principals, chorus, and full orchestra. Manfred Hecht, baritone, will sing the title role. Ewan Harbrecht takes the part of Jeanneton, the servant girl who becomes queen.

Other principals, not all of whom will appear on both evenings, are Mario Lalli, Gene Cox, Rosalind Elias, Beatrice Bush-Kane, Farnand Martel, Thomas Holt, Sumner Crockett, Earl Ringland, Willabelle Underwood, Sara Carter, Angelica Sarris, Helen McCloskey, Arlouine Goodjohn, Joan Spafford, Marni Nixon, James Minser, Irvin Nordquist, Morton Shames, and Raymond Wolansky.

Bach Sonatas by Schneider

By Paul Giuliana

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Alexander Schneider performed the amazing feat of playing the unaccompanied sonatas of Bach for violin, three on Tuesday evening and three on Wednesday evening here in the Theater-Concert Hall. Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and her Foundation in the Library of Congress sponsored his recitals.

These works consist actually of three sonatas and three partitas or suites in contrasted dance rhythms in the finest baroque tradition. The string-playing fraternity considers these works the ultimate as a test of proficiency on the instrument. The works are as fresh today as though their inspiration had come in our time, rather than two hundred years ago.

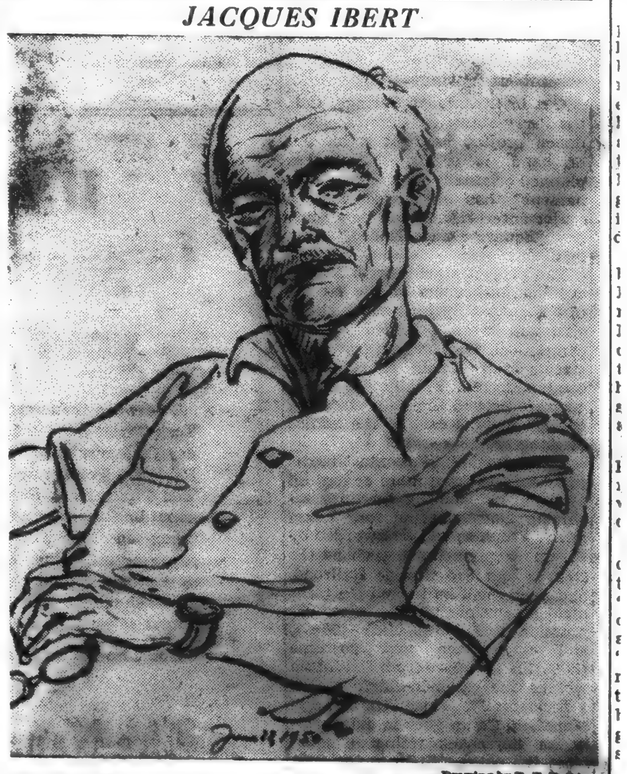
Mr. Schneider's playing combined a mastery of the violin with a thorough comprehension of the music. Employing a chaste tone in the style which he feels intimately, his performance took on a magnificence that defies qualification.

From the moment Mr. Schneider began, his rapt audience gave a hushed attention seldom accorded any artist. Phrases that are complex in notation and in technical aspect were made simple by his musical and artistic grasp. Sections that may appear shapeless and without direction in other hands took on simplicity and naturalness of meaning.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Schneider played the Sonatas in G minor and A minor, and the Partita in B minor; on Wednesday evening the full house came back to hear the Partita in D minor, the one in E major, and the sonata in C major.

Each movement, executed with immaculate technique, was a gem of artistic individuality. Students and symphony players alike were aware of the privilege of hearing these works in consecutive order.

JACQUES IBERT



Drawing by R. F. Logan

The French composer's opera, "The King of Yvetot," will receive its American première at Tanglewood tomorrow.

11,600 Hear Splendid Concert at Tanglewood

Bernstein and Boston Symphony Orchestra Present Program of Ravel and Berlioz Music

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 6—Leonard Bernstein conducted and the Boston Symphony Orchestra played to 11,600 people, some of them very wet, this afternoon, thus concluding the second of the three series of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood. Just as Mr. Bernstein mounted the podium, the heavens opened, the rain came down in torrents, and thousands of people outside the shed shrieked and tried to get under cover, with the result that, after several attempts to get going, Mr. Bernstein left the stage and did not return until quiet was restored.

The delay provided opportunity for Mr. Bernstein to shake hands with first violinist Joseph De Pasquale who today became the proud father of a

Continued On Page 9

Tanglewood Guests' Autos Encounter 600 Army Cars

Traffic Problem, Saturday Night, Somewhat Worse Than Usual; Two Minor Accidents Reported

Pittsfield, Aug. 6—Berkshire County encountered a traffic problem Saturday afternoon that was unique in many ways.

With 11,500 persons who had visited Tanglewood trying to get to their destinations, the Army complicated the situation by sending 600 Army trucks, jeeps and command cars through the area from Pine Camp, N. Y., to Pleasure Park in Lee, where the men of the 43d National Guard Division camped overnight.

The 43d, only New England division to be ordered up for active duty, was on its way home to allow the men to put their affairs in order before going on active duty.

Two slight accidents were reported in the area but only one person was injured. Miss Jane Syriat of Springfield was a passenger in a car driven by Carlton M. Leonard, also of Springfield, that was hit from the rear by a car driven by Joseph L. Le Blanc of this city. She was not hospitalized. The accident happened at the corner of Linden and Seymour Sts.

The state police made an arrest as the result of the second accident, in Lanesboro. Edward L. Rivers of New York City was charged with operating to endanger when he was unable to stop his machine when two cars running ahead of him stopped.

NORTH ADAMS

Among the distinguished guests at the Curtis Hotel this week end, were Maestro Victor DeSabata, who conducted Saturday evening's concert at the Berkshire Music Center. Also a guest was Valentine Corteza, Italian movie star, who visited the festival to see her countryman conduct. Miss Corteza flew from Hollywood, where she is making a picture.

Today's sudden downpour delayed the start of the Sunday afternoon concert, the 12th program at Tanglewood. The shower was over a short time after the scheduled time of the concert and Leonard Bernstein began his program which featured three works by Maurice Ravel and one by Hector Berlioz. About 11,600 music lovers were at Tanglewood today with an estimated 11,450 at last evening's program.

Monitor Aug. 3

4 Art—Music—Theater THE CHRIST

Operas in the Berkshires

'Jumping Frog,' 'Telephone' In Tanglewood Performance

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on a program last Monday evening which is entitled simply, "Scenes from Operas." This proved to be a good bit more than the announcement indicated, for on the bill of fare were two complete one-act operas as well as scenes from other operas.

The complete operas were "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," by Lukas Foss. There were scenes from Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutte," Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," and the last scene from "La Traviata" by Verdi.

As expected, the young singers showed exceptional talent for students, and in two or three cases they gave unusually gifted performances for anyone.

* * *

The Mozart was sung in English from an excellent translation. If all the translations of Italian opera—or any opera, for that matter—could be done as intelligently as in these two scenes from "Cosi fan Tutte," the case for opera in English would be greatly advanced. The thoroughly delightful situation was brought home to the audience, and the genius of Mozart was once again demonstrated as fine theater. The audience loved it and cheered the singers, who obviously enjoyed it too.

Menotti's "Telephone" came to life with Joan Spafford and Robert Dunlap giving fine performances. Miss Spafford's vocal facility and dramatic projection were excellent.

The tragic scenes from "Cavalleria" and "Traviata" were traditionally portrayed. Marguerite Willauer as Violetta and Mario Lalli as Alfredo have unusually beautiful voices.

Just as "Cavalleria" or "Pagliacci" or other less-known one-act operas are seldom performed alone because of their brevity, so Mr. Foss's work could not be done by itself. The libretto is based on Mark Twain's humorous story in the gold mining district of California where jumping frogs were raced for a wager.

* * *

Mr. Foss has a flair for the dramatic and has proved that he can compose music wedded to a dramatic situation. In his opera the infectious humor of Mark Twain has been watered down by an atmosphere of coarseness; in places the text borders on the vulgar. The cowboy songs have an unmistakable western flavor, though not so authentic as the folk songs heard daily on any radio network.

Luis Pichardo was seen as the stranger who filled the prize frog with buckshot to impede his jumping. The frog, of course, is not seen on the stage.

Although Mr. Pichardo sang well, his diction was not clear. This was in contrast to the other characters, whose diction was excellent. The clarity of the diction, in fact, was the outstanding feature of the evening.

P. G.

[35]

11,600 Hear Splendid Concert at Tanglewood

Continued From Page 1

daughter, (Maria Alexander, 7 pounds 4 ounces.) The audience, having heard rumors, was quick to catch on and added its applause and congratulations which Mr. De Pasquale acknowledged.

Mr. Bernstein chose as program most interesting material dividing between Ravel and Berlioz. The latter was represented by excerpts from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Ravel was represented by some of his choicest music, namely the "Mother Goose" suite; the "Alborada Del Gracioso" and the concerto for piano and orchestra which Mr. Bernstein both played and conducted.

Has Feeling for Rhythm

The music of Ravel appears to have a special appeal to Bernstein and this is not strange, for this highly gifted, sensitive, composer, pianist, conductor, has a feeling for rhythm, without which Ravel cannot be adequately interpreted. The reading of the charming "Mother Goose" stories was sensitive, five-grained and approached with charming simplicity. There was a truly atmospheric reading of the "Empress of the Pagodas and a realistic conversation between "Beauty and the Beast." The orchestra played with exquisite tones of myriad colors.

In quite different vein was the gorgeous "Alborada Del Gracioso" with its Spanish flavor. Andre Suares, writing of Ravel, noted that "his art is of the French tongue, touched with a Spanish accent." Mr. Bernstein understood, felt, and communicated, the French-Spanish atmosphere of the work. It was a superlative performance, brilliant in color, rich in rhythmic feeling.

Excellent Balance

Many of our leading conductors are Spanish and all of them, headed by Jose Iturbi, apparently desire to appear in a dual capacity at one time or another. Mr. Bernstein is no exception, but he is a bit more successful than some of his colleagues. His performance of the Ravel piano concerto was exciting, meticulous as to detail, and it went off with distinction. The balance was excellent throughout and there was notable clarity.

Bernstein was particularly effective in the hymn-like Cantilena of the adagio movement. His tone was suave, polished, and beautiful. In the cadenza in the opening movement, he played superbly, and he was quite at ease in the jazz phrases of the final movement. The orchestral balance was satisfactory throughout the performance, as the conductor made his desires known unobtusively.

Berlioz's symphonic drama "Romeo and Juliet" contains some of the most beautiful, heart-felt music ever penned. There is never a doubt of the conviction which prompted its writing. The pride, ardor and melancholy of this created a musical fabric of entrancing beauty, poignancy and bravura. Conductor and orchestra combined to give a memorable performance, one which found the audience applauding before the final notes were played.

Rain Clears Away After Concert Starts

By ED TOOLE

Lenox, Aug. 6—The second series of the Berkshire Festival concerts here at Tanglewood was concluded this afternoon as 11,600 attended the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, who a number of years back was known in the Berkshire area as the leader of the impromptu band at a summer camp on Lake Onota in Pittsfield. Today a polished conductor and protege of Serge Koussevitzky, he was late in his appearance to conduct and as rain came in torrents, causing women to shriek on the lawns in front of the music shed, he lowered his hands and finally strode off stage to his dressing room until the desired quiet was obtained.

Once the concert got underway this afternoon the rains subsided as if by magic and the sun once again shone down on the grounds as the thousands of music lovers once more took their places on the spacious lawns. Taking the combined attendance figures of this second week end series as a whole, it is found that 31,500 have passed through the gates at Tanglewood since last Thursday night.

Noted about the grounds and in the shed enjoying the concert this afternoon was the noted photographer, Margaret Bourke White. She was the guest of Alexander Snyder for both last night's program which featured the re-nowned Italian conductor, Victor De Sabata, as well as today's Ravel program.

Tomorrow night Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot" will be given its American premiere in the theater-concert hall here. And it has been emphasized by the directors of the Berkshire Music Center that this as well as the Tuesday night performance is for friends of the Berkshire Music Center by invitation only.

On Thursday night the third and final festival series will be opened in the music shed with Dr. Koussevitzky returning to the podium to conduct. Friday morning Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will fly to the Berkshires arriving at the Pittsfield Airport at 10.30 in the morning to come immediately to Tanglewood for rehearsal with the BSO on Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" of which she will be the narrator at Friday night's Tanglewood on Parade program.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

Ravel and Berlioz

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the second of its three principal Berkshire Festival series here in Tanglewood's music shed with amply attended concerts last night and this afternoon. Victor de Sabata, making his second and last appearance in the current series, was in charge yesterday; Leonard Bernstein, who devoted today's program to French music, doubled as conductor and soloist in Ravel's piano concerto. He also conducted Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" and Alborado del Gracioso and three movements from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony of Berlioz.

In his two Tanglewood programs, Mr. de Sabata has offered works by ten composers of various periods and has thus given his hearers an unusually comprehensive basis, considering the time available, for the appraisal of his talents. Saturday's list included one contemporary work not yet known in New York, the "Pezzo Concertante' by the conductor's compatriot, Georgio Federico Ghedini. The rest of the otherwise familiar program included the prelude to the second part of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio"; Mozart's thirty-ninth symphony in E flat, Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

The performances suggested that Mr. de Sabata's noteworthy interpretative talents are not limited to any particular field of music. They also modified a previous impression that he is a somewhat gesturesome leader. He has his characteristic and occasionally unusual gestures, but these are used only when he deems these necessary; not in music such as the Mozart symphony, which received an essentially classic reading.

The conductor obviously knew just what he wanted and was fully able to realize his intentions in the performance of the orchestra, which in clarity and quality of tone was at its best. He was never in a hurry; when his tempi differed from the general average, it was usually in the direction of greater deliberation. The result was happy in the Mozart symphony, whose reading had an appropriate lyric spaciousness. The finale was set forth with exceptional lightness, with momentum but not muscularity. The atmosphere of the Bach prelude or sinfonia was convincingly realized.

There were moments here and there in the Bach work and the Beethoven symphony when a nuance of pace or the careful shaping of certain phases slightly lessened a sense of spontaneity and continuity; the sounds of certain instruments at points in the Berlioz overture were brought forth with almost exaggerated prominence, but the Berlioz and Beethoven interpretations gave an impression of well proportioned contrast and climax; the demonstration which followed the Fifth symphony was of unusual warmth. The performance of the symphony had its unorthodoxies, but neither the conductor nor the orchestra seemed to regard this well worn masterpiece as something to be taken for granted.

Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante" can be regarded as a concerto grosso, with Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Joseph de Pasquale, violonist, in the solo concertino, whose music is blended and contrasted with that of the rest of the orchestra. The work seemed to be based on two contrasted principal themes: one rhythmically energetic, the other of a meditatively lyric character. The style is conservative; its ideas are not devoid of reminiscence, but the music is melodically persuasive, with sufficient contrast, although it lingers rather unduly at the end. It was well played by the soloists and their colleagues.

The attendance for the two concerts was virutally a tie, with 11,460 counted for the evening performance and 11,500 for the afternoon. The latter was the largest Tanglewood crowd of the season thus far. The weather during Saturday's concert was fine, following showers in the afternoon and evening. Showers and sunlight alternated this afternoon. The last and heaviest shower fell just as Mr. Bernstein was about to begin the performance of the Ravel suite; the more than 5,000 listeners camped about the music shed sought shelter in the generous spaces of the building at the back and sides.

Meanwhile, Mr. Bernstein, waiting for complete silence, left the stage and returned to begin the concert after the reshuffling was completed. The sun reappeared after the Alborado del Gracioso, and Tanglewood's lawn resumed its usual Sunday afternoon concert aspect.

The performance of the Mother Goose suite was admirable in tone quality and detail, if not atmospherically persuasive throughout. The Alborado was set forth with color and momentum, in the concerto, which emphasizes the element of virtuosity. Mr. Bernstein played with notable technical prowess and bravura combined with pervasive clarity; the orchestra provided well co-ordinated co-operation. The performance of the excerpts from the Berlioz Symphony reflected the devotion to this music which Mr. Bernstein exhibited last season when conducting it in New York.

'Concrete Music,' New Fad, Causes Stir at Tanglewood

By ARTHUR BERGER

One of the delights of a leisurely visit to Tanglewood is shopping around, between Berkshire Festival events, among the overwhelming number of concerts, rehearsals, lectures and formal and informal discussion groups of the Berkshire Music Center. The school, lest it be thought otherwise, is still Serge Koussevitzky's, quite distinct from the fact that the over-all artistic responsibility of the festival and its programs, as he asserted in a recent public statement, is not his. With Aaron Copland as its assistant director and Jacques Ibert as this year's distinguished foreign visitor, the Music Center has attracted as usual a cross-section of our young composers still in or just out of their student stage.

At one session, Mr. Copland presided over a tense debate on Anton Webern's Concerto for nine instruments, after a performance of it by students. It failed to produce a strong enough champion to combat a brilliant opposition by Lukas Foss. Twelve-tone music was, however, seriously being faced. On a less exalted plane, but fascinating as a piece of news, was the information we picked up from faculty members and students with regard to one of the latest Parisian vogues, "Musique Concrete." The Center is, we believe, the first large musical institution in this country where this discovery of Paul Schaeffer has been aired. The news of it was brought by Irving Fine of the faculty, in one of his lectures on current French music, which he had just investigated with the aid of a Fulbright grant. He also brought transcriptions of some examples. An etude for casseroles and a symphony for one man at phonograph controls were cited by Mr. Fine as among its best manifestations, and the mere mention of them here may give a little idea of its character.

A work of "Concrete Music" is an organized fabric of noises and sound effects. It is not "concrete" in the sense of the programmatic or descriptive music we associate with this term. Its inventor, a radio engineer and amateur musician, was intrigued by the result of isolating "the sound of the resonating substance from the percussive impact of the sounding agent"—to quote Mr. Fine. The reverberation, captured with the aid of recording mechanism after an object is struck, was found to be distinct from the sound of the object and the hammering device as they collide, and this opened up a new world of sonority.

We shall no doubt hear more of Mr. Schaeffer's experiments, which are being carried on in the studios of the "Club d'Essai" sponsored by "Radiodiffusion Francaise." Sounds, non-existent on musical instruments, have been organized into gamuts, so that they may be manipulated from central controls instead of through the unwieldy means of bringing into play all the objects themselves. Mr. Schaeffer's methods seem, on first acquaintance, to be a variant of the kind of thing our own John Cage has accomplished with the "prepared piano," or the Canadian Norman McLaren with his cuttings on a movie soundtrack. All three of these experimentalists are engaged in a field of ordered sound that sets them apart from the Italian futurists and others earlier in this century whose "modernistic" approach was primarily one of shock.

"Musique Concrete" is as yet only a matter of discussion and no little amusement among Tanglewood students. If its influence has made itself felt, we were not aware of it. Mr. Ibert told us he was more interested in discouraging the already existing preoccupation with theories, than with encouraging any new ones. Young composers here, like those abroad, he said, are much too concerned with systems. The first advice he gives them is the warning he was so delighted to read in American taxicabs: "Sit back and relax." The trouble with young creative musicians today, he remarked, is that "the bow is always stretched."

BERNSTEIN LEADS FESTIVAL CONCERT

Conducts Works by Ravel and Berlioz at Tanglewood—Three Programs Draw 31,550

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The two concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood this week drew a total of 23,050 persons. There were 11,600 here for this afternoon's program and 11,450 attended last night. With the 8,500 at Thursday night's concert, the three programs by the Boston Symphony this week attracted 31,550 persons.

Today's concert, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, was bedeviled at the start by showers, but the cheerful, holidaying overflow on the lawn took it in stride. People gathered up their blankets, camp chairs and lunch baskets and found temporary shelter under the trees and the sides of the shed. When the sun came out, they resumed their places, looking for all the world like a crowd at the beach.

Mr. Bernstein held up the start of the concert for more than fifteen minutes because of the commotion outside the shed.

Violist Congratulated

While he waited on the stage, he took the opportunity to shake the hand of Joseph di Pasquale, first violist, whose wife had given birth to a daughter early this morning. Mrs. di Pasquale is a niece of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and apparently a good many in the audience knew what the congratulations were about. There was applause, and Mr. di Pasquale took a pleased bow.

Today's program was devoted to two moderns of France—Ravel and Berlioz. The latter composer, of course, lived 100 years ago, but his music has a freshness and audacity that is contemporary in spirit. The excerpts from his "Romeo and Juliet," which Mr. Bernstein conducted with gusto, were full of bold instrumental effects and had appealing color and vitality.

The first half of the program was all Ravel. The "Mother Goose" suite was done with lightness of touch and sensitivity of nuance. The "Alborado del Gracioso," with its rhythmic variety and freedom, was fair meat for Mr. Bernstein's modern-spirited approach. Then he undertook one of his favorite stunts, being his own piano soloist. His conducting and piano-playing in the Ravel concerto were assured. He may not be the best pianist in the world, but the jazz idiom of this music in the corner movements is up his alley.

Cooperation by Orchestra

The orchestra has been playing stirringly at Tanglewood. It gave Mr. Bernstein all the cooperation he could ask for, and it did likewise last night in the second program conducted by Victor De Sabata.

That program had Mozart's E Flat Major Symphony (K. 543) and Beethoven's Fifth as its principal items. It was rounded out by the Sinfonia from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture and Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante, with Richard Burgin, Alfred Krips and Mr. di Pasquale of the orchestra playing solo passages.

Mr. De Sabata again won excited approval, and again Mr. Koussevitzky, boss man of the festival these many years, was not in attendance. This morning, however, the two men were said to have met amicably.

"Stalin Is Just Like Hitler . . . Only More Clever, Powerful"

Koussevitzky Says Red Chief Bluffs for Time

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX—Serge Koussevitzky is a miracle in more ways than one. Just now I'm not speaking of music, but of the man.

After all, he celebrated his 76th birthday within a fortnight. But he is as trim, lively and full of ginger as a man a quarter of a century younger.

It was something to watch him and listen to his conversation in his private room backstage at the Music Shed in Tanglewood, after the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival. He looked a little tired, to be sure, which was natural after the strenuous activity of conducting Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Second Symphony. His face was ruddy, his eyes a little bloodshot (they have been that way, after concerts, for years), and he had tied a handkerchief about his neck, as usual, because he was perspiring freely.

* * *

The miracle was the bounce with which he went from one group of people to another, and how he greeted them with such outgiving cordiality. He laughed and looked almost like a boy, and shook this reporter's hand with a strength that meant he was glad to see me.

He must have the faculty of putting out of his mind, once a concert is ended, the emotional pressure of the music, and the strain of mind, heart and body which it takes to direct a large symphony orchestra, no matter how great. He was talking not of this evening but of his European tour of last season, the orchestras over there, and the tragic possibilities of the war in Korea.

* * *

Mr. Koussevitzky was in raptures about three European orchestras, especially.

"The Palais Royal in Belgium, that was the best. Vunderful! And the London Philharmonic! Vunderful, and very interesting. The musicians themselves formed the orchestra and they operate it. They got a subvention from the government. Their discipline is vunderful. They know that if they do not play their best, the public will not come, and if the public does not come they know they will lose the government subvention. So they are a very fine orchestra!

"But the orchestra in Israel is the most interesting. It is very good, and everyone always does his best. They have the Israel public solidly behind them. The Israel Orchestra is coming over next season, you know. I shall conduct 15 of their 55 concerts, and my boys"—pointing to his proteges, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar De Carvalho, who were in the room—"will conduct the rest. The tour will begin in January. The Boston concert I will conduct, at Symphony Hall. I will conduct in Boston in November, also; two weeks there and a trip with the Boston Symphony.

"I only hope the war in Korea will not affect the Israel tour. If it becomes a general war, then . . . . ?" and he left the sentence unfinished.

* * *

"We musicians know little about politics, but"—and here he pointed to his head—"but sometimes we know instinctively. We should have gone straight to Moscow instead of to Korea," he declared. "Five hundred thousand people might be killed, but that is the lesser of two evils. If this becomes a general war civilization will be set back 200 years and at least 20,000,000 people will be killed.

"You know, I held a post in the Kerensky government, and each day at 4 I had to report to the Minister of Education and Culture. One day I said to him: 'You know you must kill Lenin, or he will kill you.' The Minister said: 'How can you talk that way? You know this is an ideal government!' Just two days later, on the 27th of October, 1917, that Minister was killed.

"Stalin is just like Hitler, only more clever and more powerful. He has the advantage of 30 years as a revolutionary leader, and a younger generation he has trained. All he cares about is a world revolution. He wants to rule the world, just like Hitler. He bluffs, bluffs just to gain time.

"I tell you, Stalin has the most Asiatic mind in the world. He is cruel even to those who work for him. That man, I forget his name, who suppressed music in Russia, that man got too much power, so Stalin had him killed. If Stalin should die it will not be Molotov who will succeed him, but Malenkov. But if Malenkov gets too much power before Stalin dies, then Stalin will kill him, too. I am sure of it."

This reporter, fascinated by the concise, clear and positive workings of the Koussevitzky mind, could only ask: "May I quote you?"

With a smile componded of ironic humor, sharpness and sadness, he replied: "I am only a musician. I know nothing."

Tanglewood Begins With Bach Program

By Jules Wolffers

BOSTON.—Calling for a spirit of universality in the arts, Serge Koussevitzky opened the eighth session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, on July 2 with an address which reaffirmed his belief that a department of the Fine Arts be established by the government. Students, faculty and guests were given a summary of the conductor's experiences through the past season.

There was no hint in the speech of the outburst which hit the first pages of the daily press in which Koussevitzky criticized the Boston Symphony management for engaging a guest-conductor for the Berkshire Festival without consulting him in advance. Nobody here is particularly happy about the situation, and it seems unfortunate that an association of 25 years' standing should be marred by unpleasantness of this sort.

For the chamber-orchestra series in the theatre-concert hall which precedes the large shed concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky programmed all six of the Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites. Other works in the first four all-Bach events included the Cantatas Nos. 83, 161, 80, 12 and 50. Lukas Foss was soloist in the A minor Klavier Concerto and Ruth Posselt played the E minor Violin Concerto. The soloists were excellent. Still to come were a brace of Mozart concerts in the preliminary series.

THESE DAYS

--By George E. Sokolsky

I HAD intended to invite my friend Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

CHILDREN LOVE "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt voluntered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

THIS IS A wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

At night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometimes annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude.

AS SILENT as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the thespian.

I do not share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

THE REMARKABLE thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31; it brings a lump into the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American-composed music, conducted by Americans.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussavitzky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood. This got itself into a snarl. Koussevitzky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

HE HAS BROUGHT to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Yukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

TANGLEWOOD, HOWEVER, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist, as long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

"Stalin Is Just Like Hitler . . . Only More Clever, Powerful"

Koussevitzky Says Red Chief Bluffs for Time

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX—Serge Koussevitzky is a miracle in more ways than one. Just now I'm not speaking of music, but of the man.

After all, he celebrated his 76th birthday within a fortnight. But he is as trim, lively and full of ginger as a man a quarter of a century younger.

It was something to watch him and listen to his conversation in his private room backstage at the Music Shed in Tanglewood, after the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival. He looked a little tired, to be sure, which was natural after the strenuous activity of conducting Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Second Symphony. His face was ruddy, his eyes a little bloodshot (they have been that way, after concerts, for years), and he had tied a handkerchief about his neck, as usual, because he was perspiring freely.

* * *

The miracle was the bounce with which he went from one group of people to another, and how he greeted them with such overflowing cordiality. He laughed and looked almost like a boy, and shook this reporter's hand with a strength that meant he was glad to see me.

He must have the faculty of putting out of his mind, once a concert is ended, the emotional pressure of the music, and the strain of mind, heart and body which it takes to direct a large symphony orchestra, no matter how great. He was talking not of this evening but of his European tour of last season, the orchestras over there, and the tragic possibilities of the war in Korea.

* * *

Mr. Koussevitzky was in raptures about three European orchestras, especially.

"The Palais Royal in Belgium, that was the best. Vunderful! And the London Philharmonic! Vunderful, and very interesting. The musicians themselves formed the orchestra and they operate it. They got a subvention from the government. Their discipline is vunderful. They know that if they do not play their best, the public will not come, and if the public does not come they know they will lose the government subvention. So they are a very fine orchestra!

"But the orchestra in Israel is the most interesting. It is very good, and everyone always does his best. They have the Israel public solidly behind them. The Israel Orchestra is coming over next season, you know. I shall conduct 15 of their 55 concerts, and my boys"—pointing to his proteges, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar De Carvalho, who were in the room—"will conduct the rest. The tour will begin in January. The Boston concert I will conduct, at Symphony Hall. I will conduct in Boston in November, also; two weeks there and a trip with the Boston Symphony.

"I only hope the war in Korea will not affect the Israel tour. If it becomes a general war, then ——" and he left the sentence unfinished.

* * *

"We musicians know little about politics, but"—and here he pointed to his head—"but sometimes we know instinctively. We should have gone straight to Moscow instead of to Korea," he declared. "Five hundred thousand people might be killed, but that is the lesser of two evils. If this becomes a general war civilization will be set back 200 years and at least 20,000,000 people will be killed.

"You know, I held a post in the Kerensky government, and each day at 4 I had to report to the Minister of Education and Culture. One day I said to him: 'You know you must kill Lenin, or he will kill you.' The Minister said: 'How can you talk that way? You know this is an ideal government!' Just two days later, on the 27th of October 1917, that Minister was killed.

"Stalin is just like Hitler, only more clever and more powerful. He has the advantage of 30 years as a revolutionary leader, and a younger generation he has trained. All he cares about is a world revolution. He wants to rule the world, just like Hitler. He bluffs, bluffs just to gain time.

"I tell you, Stalin has the most Asiatic mind in the world. He is cruel even to those who work for him. That man, I forget his name, who suppressed music in Russia, that man got too much power, so Stalin had him killed. If Stalin should die it will not be Molotov who will succeed him, but Malenkov. But if Malenkov gets too much power before Stalin dies, then Stalin will kill him, too. I am sure of it."

This reporter, fascinated by the concise, clear and positive workings of the Koussevitsky mind, could only ask: "May I quote you?"

With a smile componded of ironic humor, sharpness and sadness, he replied: "I am only a musician. I know nothing."

musical comies

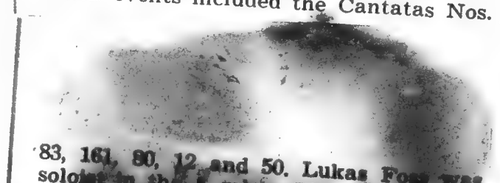
Tanglewood Begins With Bach Program

By Jules Wolffers

BOSTON.—Calling for a spirit of universality in the arts, Serge Koussevitzky opened the eighth session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, on July 2 with an address which reaffirmed his belief that a department of the Fine Arts be established by the government. Students, faculty and guests were given a summary of the conductor's experiences through the past season.

There was no hint in the speech of the outburst which hit the first pages of the daily press in which Koussevitzky criticized the Boston Symphony management for engaging a guest-conductor for the Berkshire Festival without consulting him in advance. Nobody here is particularly happy about the situation, and it seems unfortunate that an association of 25 years' standing should be marred by unpleasantness of this sort.

For the chamber-orchestra series in the theatre-concert hall which precedes the large shed concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky programmed all six of the Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites. Other works in the first four all-Bach events included the Cantatas Nos.



83, 161, 80, 12 and 50. Lukas Foss was soloist in the A minor Klavier Concerto and Ruth Posselt played the E minor Violin Concerto. The soloists were excellent. Still to come were a brace of Mozart concerts in the preliminary series.

Albany Times Union Aug 7

THESE DAYS

—By George E. Sokolsky

I HAD intended to invite my friend Westbrook Pegler up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

CHILDREN LOVE "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

THIS IS A wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

At night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometimes annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude.

AS SILENT as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the thespian.

I do not share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

THE REMARKABLE thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31, it brings a lump into the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American-composed music, conducted by Americans.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood. This got itself into a snarl. Koussevitzky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

HE HAS BROUGHT to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Yukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

TANGLEWOOD, HOWEVER, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist, as long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

musical
COURIER

AUGUST, 1950

25 CENTS

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO

musical
COURIER

AUGUST, 1950 25 CENTS

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 / 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS

Insured against fraudulent alteration PAY-O-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 / 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS

Insured against fraudulent alteration PAY-O-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

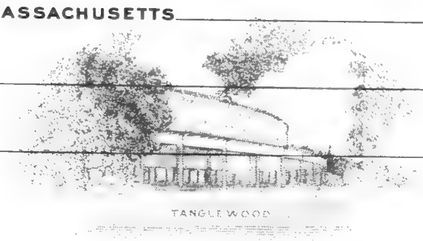
★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 / 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS



TANGLEWOOD

Insured against fraudulent alteration PAY-O-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS

220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-5860

Cir. (D 15,750) (S 15,618)

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, OHIO JOURNAL

JUL 16 1950

Record Reviews

Concert At Tanglewood Festival Conducted By Serge Koussevitsky

PEG ROSING

Journal Society Editor

Music-minded folks turn their attentions Berkshire-wise during July each year when the annual festival opens at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns for this year's month of music to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Given in concert at Tanglewood during the forthcoming Bach-Mozart series will be the Mozart Symphony No. 33 which Koussevitzky recently recorded for Victor. Forerunner to the recording was the release in May of the rarely performed Mozart "Titus" Overture and last month the Mozart "Linz" symphony, both by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

The July Koussevitzky repertoire features a felicitous combination of another Mozart symphony and an opera overture. Both the Symphony No. 33 and the Overture to "Idomeneo" were products of Mozart's youthful genius. "Idomeneo" was Mozart's first great opera and the overture is one of impressive drama.

Mozart's pastoral symphony is a spirited addition to the wealth of Kouseviztky and the Boston Symphony's recorded repertoire. It possesses the subtle and delicate craftsmanship that prevades all of the composer's works. Both of these Mozart compositions are reproduced with the skill and finesse that have won the distinguished conductor and orchestra high praise.

Berkshire Music Center Gives 'Le Roi D'Yvetot'

Opera Department Does Splendidly With First U. S. Performance; Fine Individual Characterizations Seen

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 7—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center here at Tanglewood chalked up another "first" to its already lengthy list by giving tonight the first American performance of "Le Roi D'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, noted French composer, who is here teaching advanced composition.

It was a gala affair on which the department had lavished its best efforts an dthe results were spectacular. The opera itself is a frail little tale based on a satrical ballad by Beranger, The theme is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. The libretto by Jean Limozin and Andre De La Tourrase, was translated into English by Henry Reese. The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community of Yvetot, which was once actually a part of France, against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting, and the growth of bureaucracy prevents the effective farming of crops. The women stage a counter revolution to return the king. The romance between the servant girl, Jeanneton and the king is a tender and charming epi-

Continued On Page 4

Notes and Footnotes

SOMETHING odd seems to have happened backstage with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It's not easy to define, but an example or so might do. For a dash of background; last year we had a very friendly time in the tuning room behind the Shed talking informally with the musicians. The idea was to humanize them in print, which we did. Saturday night we thought to follow it up. So we went in, introduced ourselves to whoever was in charge, who told us to get out. Period.

Well, outside we fell in with some musicians who hadn't yet gone on. Last year they chatted freely. This year there was a wary reaction to newspaper people. When they learned our identity they mostly had to go somewhere else right off, which we submit is an unfortunate by-product of the orchestra board's rift with Koussevitzky. Everyone seemed jittery over the publicity that issue has stirred up. A peace pact would certainly relieve everyone, especially the musicians who are the backbone of the symphony.

Finally we happened upon a trombone player with steady nerves. Fearing nothing, he admitted that for the musicians there is little difficulty in being directed by Mr. Munch winters and Mr. Koussevitzky summers. "After 25 years, we know just what Mr. Koussevitzky wants, and in Boston we're learned what Mr. Munch requires. And of course, we're used to having a number of guest conductors every year. It's no problem."

Mr. Munch, he added, is a wonderful artist. Concert-goers in Boston are much taken with him, and he believes the same will happen here once he appears. This, it is predicted, will happen next summer. He should be a fine, unifying influence, which is certainly needed.

—o—

The attendance figures at Tanglewood for the de Sabata concerts and the ovations given the visiting Italian conductor point to a return engagement . . . To a sode running through the opera, in sharp contrast to the zestful humor of the rebellion. The story ends happily with the servant girl becoming queen.

Berkshire Music

Continued From Page 1

The first act was splendidly set in a court yard. The women's costumes were colorful and effective and the choral singing first rate. The orchestration was over-heavy at times and the rapid delivery of the English words caused them difficult to understand.

There was expert stage direction. The theater-shed stage is small to handle some 40 people on it so that action seeming spontaneous was no small feat.

Final Individual Work

The action in the second act, as far as 'chorus was concerned, was concerned, was flexible and plausible. There were some splendid individual characterizations, Mario Lalli, Springfield tenor, had a brief but spectacular bit as the bell ringer, whose description of what he sees from his tower was splendidly sung in flawless English. Another finely sung and conceived characterization was given by Summer Crockett, whose tenor voice was one of the best we have ever heard at Tanglewood. His cry for the people to rebel against the king was sung with thrilling intensity. Beatrice Bush-King, mezzo soprano, sang and interpreted the role of Catherine expertly.

The role of the king was sung by Manfred. Hecht, whose fine appearance and sonorous voice admirably suited the role.

Ibert has written some delightful music for this comic opera. Much of the solo work is declamatory, and rhythmic speech is often employed by the chorus. An orchestral delineation of eventide seemed to us to be the finest music in the score. For the heroine, Jeanneton, Ibert has written lovely music which sounds simple but is exacting. Miss Ewan Harbrecht handled the music expertly and was charmingly girlish.

Rhythmic Pattern Varied

Considerable use has been made by Ibert of folk tunes. The rhythmic pattern of the work is varied and effective. The ensemble numbers were rich in humor, sprightly as to rhythms and expansively sung. A prayer to St. Giles, to bring the king safely back from war, was particularly affecting in its purity of line and melodic simplicity.

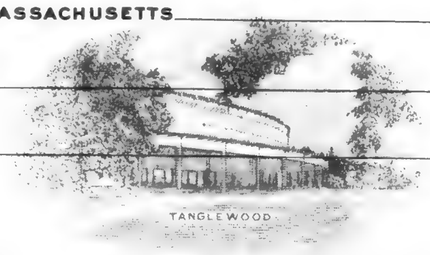
It seems doubtful that this work will have many hearings in this country, for while there are moments of humor and excitement, there are long passages which are dry and dull and devoid of action. The [illegible] audience was quick to perceive [illegible] the humor and Mr. Ibert and [illegible] cerned in the performance were called several times. Dr. Jan [illegible] head of the opera department this year, conducted and the stage direction was by F. Cowles Strickland. Philippe De Rosier was responsible for the attractive settings and clever lighting and Leo Van Witsen for the handsome, imaginative costuming. The orchestra of students handled the music discreetly most of the time.

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS



Insured against fraudulent alteration PAYD-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

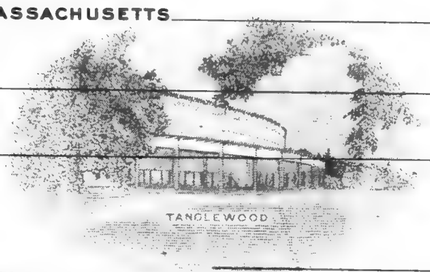
★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS



Insured against fraudulent alteration PAYD-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

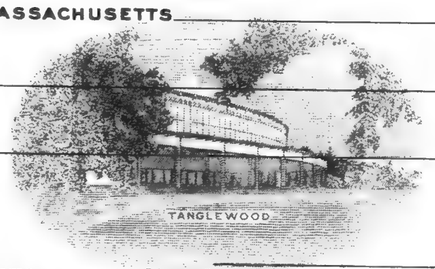
★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

The Lenox National Bank No.

LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS 19 53-538 113

PAY TO THE ORDER OF $

DOLLARS



Insured against fraudulent alteration PAYD-TODD BANKERS SUPPLY

★ ★ HOME OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ★ ★

THE ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS

220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. {D 15,750} {S 15,418}

This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUL 16 1950

Record Reviews

Concert At Tanglewood Festival Conducted By Serge Koussevitsky

PEG ROSING
Journal Society Editor

Music-minded folks turn their attentions Berkshire-wise during July each year when the annual festival opens at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns for this year's month of music to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Given in concert at Tanglewood during the forthcoming Bach-Mozart series will be the Mozart Symphony No. 33 which Koussevitzky recently recorded for Victor. Forerunner to the recording was the release in May of the rarely performed Mozart "Titus" Overture and last month the Mozart "Linz" symphony, both by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

The July Koussevitzky repertoire features a felicitous combination of another Mozart symphony and an opera overture. Both the Symphony No. 33 and the Overture to "Idomeneo" were products of Mozart's youthful genius. "Idomeneo" was Mozart's first great opera and the overture is one of impressive drama.

Mozart's pastoral symphony is a spirited addition to the wealth of Kousevizky and the Boston Symphony's recorded repertoire. It possesses the subtle and delicate craftsmanship that prevades all of the composer's works. Both of these Mozart compositions are reproduced with the skill and finesse that have won the distinguished conductor and orchestra high praise.

Berkshire Music Center Gives 'Le Roi D'Yvetot'

Opera Department Does Splendidly With First U. S. Performance; Fine Individual Characterizations Seen

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 1—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center here at Tanglewood chalked up another "first" to its already lengthy list by giving tonight the first American performance of "Le Roi D'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, noted French composer, who is here teaching advanced composition.

It was a gala affair on which the department had lavished [illegible] of forts an dthe results were spectacular. The opera itself is a frail little tale based on a satrical ballad by Beranger. The theme is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. The libretto by Jean Limozin and Andre De La Tourrase, was translated into English by Henry Reese. The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community of Yvetot, which was once actually a part of France, against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting, and the growth of bureaucracy prevents the effective farming of crops. The women stage a counter revolution to return the king. The romance between the servant girl Jeanneton and the king is a tender and charming epi-

Continued On Page 4

Notes and Footnotes

SOMETHING odd seems to have happened backstage with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It's not easy to define, but an example or so might do. For a dash of background; last year we had a very friendly time in the tuning room behind the Shed talking informally with the musicians. The idea was to humanize them in print, which we did. Saturday night we thought to follow it up. So we went in, introduced ourselves to whoever was in charge, who told us to get out. Period.

Well, outside we fell in with some musicians who hadn't yet gone on. Last year they chatted freely. This year there was a wary reaction to newspaper people. When they learned our identity they mostly had to go somewhere else right off, which we submit is an unfortunate by-product of the orchestra board's rift with Koussevitzky. Everyone seemed jittery over the publicity that issue has stirred up. A peace pact would certainly relieve everyone, especially the musicians who are the backbone of the symphony.

Finally we happened upon a trombone player with steady nerves. Fearing nothing, he admitted that for the musicians there is little difficulty in being directed by Mr. Munch winters and Mr. Koussevitzky summers. "After 25 years, we know just what Mr. Koussevitzky wants, and in Boston we're learned what Mr. Munch requires. And of course, we're used to having a number of guest conductors every year. It's no problem."

Mr. Munch, he added, is a wonderful artist. Concert-goers in Boston are much taken with him, and he believes the same will happen here once he appears. This, it is predicted, will happen next summer. He should be a fine, unifying influence, which is certainly needed.

—o—

The attendance figures at Tanglewood for the de Sabata concerts and the ovations given the visiting Italian conductor point to a return engagement . . . To a sode running through the opera, in sharp contrast to the zestful humor of the rebellion. The story ends happily with the servant girl becoming queen.

Berkshire Music

Continued From Page 1

The first act was splendidly set in a court yard. The women's costumes were colorful and effective and the choral singing first rate. The orchestration was over-heavy at times and the rapid delivery of the English words caused them difficult to understand.

There was expert stage direction. The theater-shed stage is small to handle some 40 people on it so that action seeming spontaneous was no small feat.

Final Individual Work

The action in the second act, as far as chorus was concerned, was concerned, was flexible and plausible. There were some splendid individual characterizations. Mario Lalli, Springfield tenor, had a brief but spectacular bit as the bell ringer, whose description of what he sees from his tower was splendidly sung in flawless English. Another finely sung and conceived characterization was given by Summer Crockett, whose tenor voice was one of the best we have ever heard at Tanglewood. His cry for the people to rebel against the king was sung with thrilling intensity. Beatrice Bush-King, mezzo soprano, sang and interpreted the role of Catherine expertly.

The role of the king was sung by Manfred Hecht, whose fine appearance and sonorous voice admirably suited the role.

Ibert has written some delightful music for this comic opera. Much of the solo work is declamatory, and rhythmic speech is often employed by the chorus. An orchestral delineation of eventide seemed to us to be the finest music in the score. For the heroine, Jeanneton, Ibert has written lovely music which sounds simple but is exacting. Miss Ewan Harbrecht handled the music expertly and was charmingly girlish.

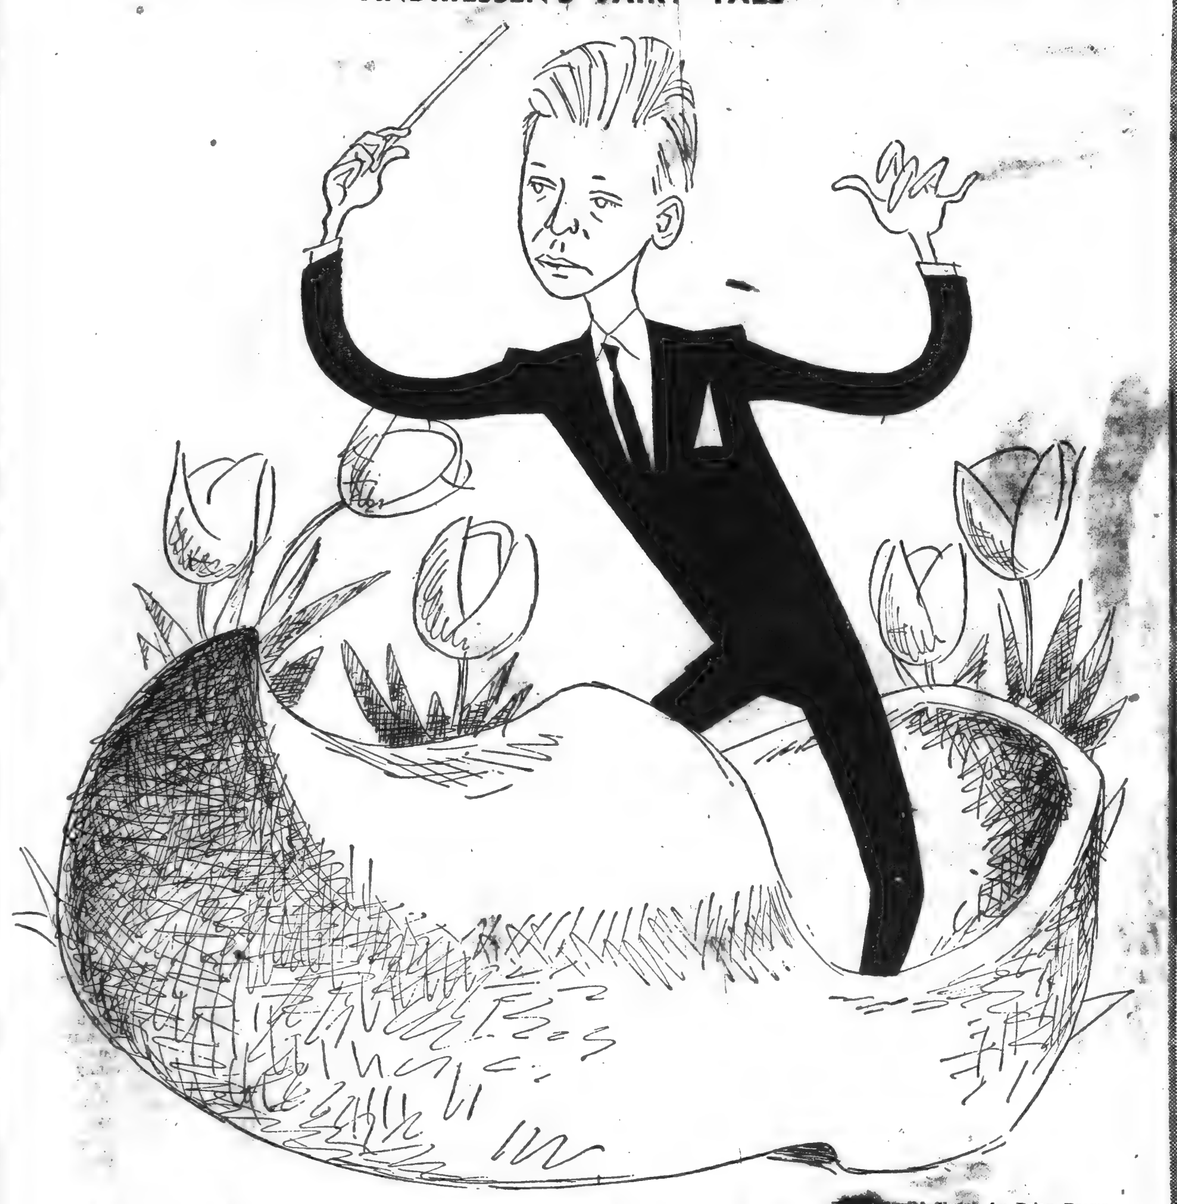
Rhythmic Pattern Varied

Considerable use has been made by Ibert of folk tunes. The rhythmic pattern of the work is varied and effective. The ensemble numbers were rich in humor, sprightly as to rhythms and expansively sung. A prayer to St. Giles, to bring the king safely back from war, was particularly affecting in its purity of line and melodic simplicity.

It seems doubtful that this work will have many hearings in this country, for while there are moments of humor and excitement, there are long passages which are dry melodically and devoid of action. The large audience was quick to perceive and enjoy the humor and Mr. Ibert and all concerned in the performance were recalled several times. Dr. Jan Popper, head of the opera department this year, conducted and the stage direction was by F. Cowles Strickland. G. Philippe De Rosier was responsible for the attractive settings and clever lighting and Leo Van Witsen for the handsome, imaginative costuming. The orchestra of students handled the music discreetly most of the time.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 274,810) (S 305,412)
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 16 1950

ANDRIESSEN'S FAIRY TALE



Sketch by Brian Brown

LAST summer a 24-year-old Dutch boy arrived in the United States, unknown, without friends or relatives and practically without funds. Jurriaan Andriessen, a pianist, had been chosen by his government to represent the Netherlands in a six-week course of study at Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky's ivy-covered music hall in the Berkshires. Jurriaan not only studied piano; he turned to composing and remained in the United States to conduct his own works. Among his American compositions are a symphony (which he wrote in a borrowed apartment and which later became the hit ballet, "Jones Beach") and "The Berkshire Symphonies," inspired by his stay at Tanglewood. Tonight the young composer reaches another milestone in his storybook career when he pays a visit to Washington. He will appear as guest conductor of the National Symphony at the Watergate, representing the Netherlands in the symphony's "international concert series."

Dutch, Italian, British Stars Will Perform

This is to be a week of guest conductors at the Watergate.

The first visitor is Holland's Jurriaan Andriessen, who conducts tonight's concert of the National Symphony. This is designed as a tribute to the art of the Netherlands. The principal symphonic work announced is not unassociated with that country.

Fania Chapiro

It is Andriessen's "Berkshire Symphonies," a tribute to his sojourn at Tanglewood and to the founder of that famous institution, Serge Koussevitzky.

This work, to be heard after the intermission tonight, was first performed at Tanglewood a year ago. Andriessen has had other American representation. He was sent to Tanglewood by the Dutch government. He enrolled in the composition classes of Aaron Copland, who, after examining his scores, said, "There is nothing I can teach you."

Pianist to Play

Andriessen's soloist tonight [illegible] Dutch pianist, Fania [illegible] has chosen to present [illegible]thoven's "Emperor" [illegible] Weber Overture [illegible] this program, which will close with the Ravel "Bolero."

Wednesday will be British night at the Watergate. The eminent London conductor, Clarence Raybould, will offer the Handel Water Music in the modern version made by Sir Hamilton Harty, Arnold Bax's "Overture to a Picaresque Comedy," William Walton's "Facades," and Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma" variations.

Raybould's soloist will be the eminent English oboist, Leon Goosens, who will set forth for the first time here the Gordon Jacobs concerto. Goosens comes from a famous musical family. His brother, Eugene, now conducting in Australia, was for many years head of the Cincinnati Symphony. His sisters are famous harpists.

Italian Concert Friday

Raybould is as well known on the European continent as at home. He is an industrious and gifted composer. His version of "The Beggars' Opera," recently completed a run of four years in London. Goosens was associated with him in this production.

Those who attend the Watergate concert of Friday will be guests of the Italian government. A group of famous Italian artists has been invited to participate. They are Giuseppe Antonicelli, of the conducting staff of the Metropolitan Opera; Herva Nelli, soprano star of Toscanini's "Otello" and "Falstaff" broadcasts; Anton Madasi, similarly associated with Toscanini; Cesare Bardelli, of the New York City Opera.

They plan an evening of Italian opera with excerpts from the standard repertoire.

tiona.
vigorous 34. Direct[illegible]
this colorful, dynamic another of the composer's ha[illegible] forts. The folksy element of its finale and the spirited manner which it was delivered aroused t[illegible] audience to a prolonged demonstration of approval.

In the choice and contrast of compositions, length, and finesse of performance, it was quite a perfect concert. It attracted an audience of some 6000, a record attendance for any concert ever given in the concert hall.

De Sabata and Bernstein Share Tanglewood Honors

Attendance for Series B Concerts Tops Mark for Opening Week by 1000—Sunday Program Delayed by Rain

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein shared the conducting honors in the last two concerts of the middle week end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. De Sabata confirmed the impression he had made at his Tanglewood debut on Thursday evening as an outstanding orchestral technician; Bernstein gave his program added interest by appearing simultaneously as conductor and soloist, the only instrumental soloist, incidentally, of the entire Festival in the Shed.

(Attendance yesterday was 11,600—highest of the season and 200 more than Saturday night's figure. The total turnout for the second week was 31,500, or 1000 more than for the opening series of three concerts.)

The concert yesterday was delayed a few minutes by a shower which fell unexpectedly and at about the same moment Bernstein was emerging from the wings for his starting number. The consequential scurrying of the thousands spread over the lawn created a disturbance which had to be waited out until everyone was properly sheltered. Then when he finally did start, the thin, naive character of the Ravel "Mother Goose" short sketches were less effective, in our opinion, than if they had followed a more energetic and decisive number. An exchange of position with the same composer's "Alborada" which followed would have been our vote, had we been consulted.

Bernstein Is Soloist

Bernstein closed the first half of his program with still more Ravel, the piano concerto which he also directed form the keyboard, duplicating his achievement in Pittsfield with the Rochester orchestra three years ago. Bernstein has an affinity for this music. Its frank imitation of the jazz idiom which European composers unashamedly sought to copy soon after the first world war is not too distant from the style of writing Bernstein uses in some of his own compositions, and this sympathetic kinship was happily noticeable at all times. The slow movement allows the greatest opportunity for the solo instrument and Bernstein played with it with poetry and a keen sense of tonal value. The piano is more fused with the orchestra in the other two movements and the soloist welded the active ingredients with brisk success. If our memory serves us well, Bernstein, whenever he had free hands, gave the orchestra more vitality and surer and more definite indications than did the composer when he conducted the premier in the Salle Pleyel in Paris in 1932.

The last half of Bernstein's program was devoted to three movements from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Berlioz has been assigned some such place in musical history as Bruckner. Their mighty worth is recognized but the weak inconsistencies which pervade them have prevented them from gaining a place in the ranks of the greater immortals. Grateful we certainly are, however, for the view of Berlioz which Bernstein gave us yesterday. The tender pathos of its quiet moments was delightfully conveyed while the episodes where Berlioz uses his complete and fortified orchestral impedimenta were stunning in its impact.

Crowd of 11,600 Sees De Pasquale, Proud Pop, Take Bow

TANGLEWOOD—When Leonard Bernstein shook hands with Joseph de Pasquale, first violist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra before the program opened in the Music Shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, only a few of the 11,600 persons in the audience realized what had taken place.

Mr. de Pasquale had become a father only a short time before the program opened. His wife, the former Princess Maria M. de Leuchtenberg de Beauharnais, niece of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, gave birth to a daughter, Maria Alexandra, at St. Luke's Hospital. The few people in the huge audience who were "in the know" applauded the Bernstein-de Pasquale handshake and the proud father bowed to the crowd.

De Sabata's Concert

De Sabata did not venture far from the well-known shelves of the literature for his major choices: The Mozart E flat major symphony and the Beethoven fifth. He opened his program with a beautifully played Sinfonia from the Bach "Christmas Oratorio" in which he reflected the spirit of the music with calm solemnity and tonal poise. For further icing of the program he relied on the Berlioz, "The Roman Carnival," overture and a Pezzo concertante of Giorgi Ghedini who thereby was introduced to Tanglewood audiences. This latter piece enlisted the services as soloists of Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Joseph de Pasquale, violist. It was a fairly conventional work, pleasantly rich in its harmonic structure, and written in a sort of dialogue between the soloists and the orchestra so that their unforced tone was always easily heard.

De Sabata's reading of the classic symphonies revealed his deep knowledge of the scores and his complete command of the orchestra, but his understanding of the style of the two composers was individual and depended on orchestral discipline more than a continuity in the composer's writing. The Mozart was kept within narrow limits of expression. By docking several desks in each of the string divisions he reduced the orchestra to approximately the size used in Mozart's day. He then proceeded to polish the details with meticulous execution without developing the larger perspective. The undeviating dilation of last two beats of the third measure of the andante was a case in point.

His Beethoven was more a credit to the orchestra than to the music. De Sabata brought out the best and all that the peerless orchestra can produce but in the process he missed some of the potentialities that the music inherently possesses. However, he built up the final climax to an apex of tonal intensity and evoked a tremendous demonstration which lasted until he and the orchestra must have become exhausted. We have a vague suspicion that Mr. de Sabata, along with his confrers Koussevitzky and Bernstein, among others, is not unaware of the evocative excitement of a loud, tumultuous and furious finale.

Tanglewood

Jacques Ibert To Be Entertained

Mr. and Mrs. F. Cowles Strickland and Dr. and Mrs. Jan Popper will entertain in honor of Jacques Ibert, composer of "L'Roi d'Yvetot," following the opening of the performance of the opera tonight at Tanglewood.

Guests who will attend the party, to be given at the Stockbridge home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Foot, will be Lucas Foss, pianist; Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor; G. Philippe de Rosier, who has designed sets for the opera; Leo VanWitson, costume designer; Mr. and Mrs. Ibert, their son, John, and daughter, Mrs. Jacqueline Gillet; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Berkowitz, Miss Sarah Caldwell, Feliz Wolfes and Mr. and Mrs. James Stagliano. Mrs. Stagliano is Marguerite Willauer.

Mr. Strickland is stage director for the opera, and Mr. Popper is acting head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 985,523) (S 1,644,847)
This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUL 16 1950

on the Aisle

by Claudia Cassidy

TIMING IS CURIOUS. Had I been at my desk the last week in May I would have read a surprising announcement. It came from Boston and it began, "Victor De Sabata, vivid figure among guest conductors in America, has cabled from Rome his acceptance of an invitation by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra to conduct at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer. He will conduct in the Music Shed on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Aug. 3 and 5."

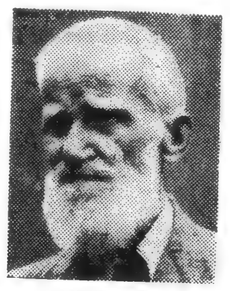
But I did not read it because I had just returned from London to Paris especially to hear the second of Serge Koussevitsky's concerts with the Orchestre National in the Theatre des Champs-Elysees, and it was so jammed I got in only because Henri Dugardin, the manager, found a place in his already bulging box. For Koussevitzky, whose tour was a succession of triumphs, had Paris clamoring to get in. Quite a chunk of Paris surged backstage after the concert, and you should have seen Koussevitzky's face when he automatically began in French, spotted the Chicago Crawfords, and burst incredulously into his own beguiling brand of the vernacular. He was having a wonderful time, and was on his way to two parties, tho Paris concerts start late and are over at a witching hour.

It now seems that Koussevitzky then knew no more than I did of De Sabata's engagement. When I heard of his sharp protest on his return I dug into the files and was stopped in my tracks by that wording, "an invitation by the Trustees." Koussevitzky is the director of that festival. He is also its founder, its lifeblood, its magnet and its inspiration. Because of him it is a festival of youth that creates from within its own ranks, and that has been its peculiar charm and its growing strength.

One account of the story noted with more courtesy than conviction Koussevitzky's insistence that his protest was no personal reflection on De Sabata, but on the procedure of his engagement. I see no reason to doubt this, for Koussevitzky spoke to me warmly about the Italian in advance of his Chicago engagement. But he must have

Serge Koussevitzky

Victor De Sabata



G. B. Shaw

been deeply shocked to discover so curious a precedent, established during his absence and apparently without his knowledge or consent. This is surely a strange homecoming for a great man of music who devoted 25 years of his life to the Boston orchestra, who created Tanglewood from the very force of his personality, and who, as I have special cause to know, does not take refuge in pious platitudes when the cause of music demands courage in high places.

Shaw Le[illegible] Lesson in Criticism

[illegible] music criticism, Ashton [illegible] music critic [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 172,548) (S 200,772)
This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
JUL 16 1950

Sell-Out Listed For Berkshire

ALL SEATS for the Berkshire Music Festival's Bach-Mozart Concert Series, which opened recently, have been sold, according to George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will play the series.

The six concerts, opening the 13th season of the Berkshire Festival, will again be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (2,077)
This Clipping From
N. Y. STATE EXHIBITOR
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JUL 5 - 1950

TANGLEWOOD. United States Information Service—Musical Short. 22m: The annual summer music festival held in the Berkshires for music lovers and students is the topic. From all over the country they come to Massachusetts to watch and study conductor Serge Koussevitsky and his assistants, Copeland, Bernstein, Carvalho, and others. The students have ample grounds for relaxation. Viewers stay in the shed or sprawl out on the lawns. This is extremely well photographed, and the mood of the music, the festival, and the Koussevitsky verve are well captured. Selections heard include Beethoven's "Egmont Overture," an excerpt from a Randall Thomson choral and orchestral work, an extemporaneous rendition of "Roll Out The Barrel," and other excerpts. The music appeal and production polish give this a regular audience appeal in addition to the class and art house value. EXCELLENT.

[41]

De Sabata and Bernstein Share Tanglewood Honors

Attendance for Series B Concerts Tops Mark for Opening Week by 1000—Sunday Program Delayed by Rain

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein shared the conducting honors in the last two concerts of the middle week end of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. De Sabata confirmed the impression he had made at his Tanglewood debut on Thursday evening as an outstanding orchestral technician; Bernstein gave his program added interest by appearing simultaneously as conductor and soloist, the only instrumental soloist, incidentally, of the entire Festival in the Shed.

(Attendance yesterday was 11,600 —highest of the season and 200 more than Saturday night's figure. The total turnout for the second week was 31,500, or 1000 more than for the opening series of three concerts.)

The concert yesterday was delayed a few minutes by a shower which fell unexpectedly and at about the same moment Bernstein was emerging from the wings for his starting number. The consequential scurrying of the thousands spread over the lawn created a disturbance which had to be waited out until everyone was properly sheltered. Then when he finally did start, the thin, naive character of the Ravel "Mother Goose" short sketches were less effective, in our opinion, than if they had followed a more energetic and decisive number. An exchange of position with the same composer's "Alborada" which followed would have been our vote, had we been consulted.

Bernstein Is Soloist

Bernstein closed the first half of his program with still more Ravel, the piano concerto which he also directed form the keyboard, duplicating his achievement in Pittsfield with the Rochester orchestra three years ago. Bernstein has an affinity for this music. Its frank imitation of the jazz idiom which European composers unashamedly sought to copy soon after the first world war is not too distant from the style of writing Bernstein uses in some of his own compositions, and this sympathetic kinship was happily noticeable at all times. The slow movement allows the greatest opportunity for the solo instrument and Bernstein played with it with poetry and a keen sense of tonal value. The piano is more fused with the orchestra in the other two movements and the soloist welded the active ingredients with brisk success. If our memory serves us well, Bernstein, when ever he had free hands, gave the orchestra more vitality and surer and more definite indications than did the composer when he conducted the premier in the Salle Pleyel in Paris in 1932.

The last half of Bernstein's program was devoted to three movements from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" symphony. Berlioz has been assigned some such place in musical history as Bruckner. Their mighty worth is recognized but the weak inconsistencies which pervade them have prevented them from gaining a place in the ranks of the greater immortals. Grateful we certainly are, however, for the view of Berlioz which Bernstein gave us yesterday. The tender pathos of its quiet moments was delightfully conveyed while the episodes where Berlioz uses his complete and fortified orchestral impedimenta were stunning in its impact.

De Sabata's Concert

De Sabata did not venture far from the well-known shelves of the literature for his major choices; The Mozart E flat major symphony and the Beethoven fifth. He opened his program with a beautifully played Sinfonia from the Bach "Christmas Oratorio" in which he reflected the spirit of the music with calm solemnity and tonal poise. For further icing of the program he relied on the Berlioz, "The Roman Carnival," overture and a Pezzo concertante of Giorgi Ghedini who thereby was introduced to Tanglewood audiences. This latter piece enlisted the services as soloists of Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Joseph de Pasquale, violist. It was a fairly conventional work, pleasantly rich in its harmonic structure, and written in a sort of dialogue between the soloists and the orchestra so that their unforced tone was always easily heard.

De Sabata's reading of the classic symphonies revealed his deep knowledge of the scores and his complete command of the orchestra, but his understanding of the style of the two composers was individual and depended on orchestral discipline more than a continuity in the composer's writing. The Mozart was kept within narrow limits of expression. By docking several desks in each of the string divisions he reduced the orchestra to approximately the size used in Mozart's day. He then proceeded to polish the details with meticulous execution without developing the larger perspective. The undeviating dilation of last two beats of the third measure of the andante was a case in point.

His Beethoven was more a credit to the orchestra than to the music. De Sabata brought out the best and all that the peerless orchestra can produce but in the process he missed some of the potentialities that the music inherently possesses. However, he built up the final climax to an apex of tonal intensity and evoked a tremendous demonstration which lasted until he and the orchestra must have become exhausted. We have a vague suspicion that Mr. de Sabata, along with his confrers Koussevitsky and Bernstein, among others, is not unaware of the evocative excitement of a loud, tumultuous and furious finale.

Crowd of 11,600 Sees De Pasquale, Proud Pop, Take Bow

TANGLEWOOD—When Leonard Bernstein shook hands with Joseph de Pasquale, first violist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra before the program opened in the Music Shed at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, only a few of the 11,600 persons in the audience realized what had taken place.

Mr. de Pasquale had become a father only a short time before the program opened. His wife, the former Princess Maria M. de Leuchtenberg de Beauharnais, niece of Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, gave birth to a daughter, Maria Alexandra, at St. Luke's Hospital. The few people in the huge audience who were "in the know" applauded the Bernstein-de Pasquale handshake and the proud father bowed to the crowd.

Tanglewood

Jacques Ibert To Be Entertained

Mr. and Mrs. F. Cowles Strickland and Dr. and Mrs. Jan Popper will entertain in honor of Jacques Ibert, composer of "L'Roi d'Yvetot," following the opening of the performance of the opera tonight at Tanglewood.

Guests who will attend the party, to be given at the Stockbridge home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Foot, will be Lucas Foss, pianist; Eleazar de Carvalho, conductor; G. Philippe de Rosier, who has designed sets for the opera; Leo VanWitson, costume designer; Mr. and Mrs. Ibert, their son, John, and daughter, Mrs. Jacqueline Gillet; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Perry; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Berkowitz, Miss Sarah Caldwell, Feliz Wolfes and Mr. and Mrs. James Stagliano. Mrs. Stagliano is Marguerite Willauer.

Mr. Strickland is stage director for the opera, and Mr. Popper is acting head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 985,523) ($ 1,644,847)
This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUL 16 1950

on the Aisle

by Claudia Cassidy

TIMING IS CURIOUS. Had I been at my desk the last week in May I would have read a surprising announcement. It came from Boston and it began, "Victor De Sabata, vivid figure among guest conductors in America, has cabled from Rome his acceptance of an invitation by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra to conduct at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer. He will conduct in the Music Shed on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Aug. 3 and 5."

But I did not read it because I had just returned from London to Paris especially to hear the second of Serge Koussevitsky's concerts with the Orchestre National in the Theatre des Champs-Elysees, and it was so jammed I got in only because Henri Dugardin, the manager, found a place in his already bulging box. For Koussevitzky, whose tour was a succession of triumphs, had Paris clamoring to get in. Quite a chunk of Paris surged backstage after the concert, and you should have seen Koussevitzky's face when he automatically began in French, spotted the Chicago Crawfords, and burst incredulously into his own beguiling brand of the vernacular. He was having a wonderful time, and was on his way to two parties, tho Paris concerts start late and are over at a witching hour.

It now seems that Koussevitzky then knew no more than I did of De Sabata's engagement. When I heard of his sharp protest on his return I dug into the files and was stopped in my tracks by that wording, "an invitation by the Trustees." Koussevitzky is the director of that festival. He is also its founder, its lifeblood, its magnet and its inspiration. Because of him it is a festival of youth that creates from within its own ranks, and that has been its peculiar charm and its growing strength.

One account of the story noted with more courtesy than conviction Koussevitzky's insistence that his protest was no personal reflection on De Sabata, but on the procedure of his engagement. I see no reason to doubt this, for Koussevitzky spoke to me warmly about the Italian in advance of his Chicago engagement. But he must have

Serge Koussevitsky

Victor De Sabata

G. B. Shaw

been deeply shocked to discover so curious a precedent, established during his absence and apparently without his knowledge or consent. This is surely a strange homecoming for a great man of music who devoted 25 years of his life to the Boston orchestra, who created Tanglewood from the very force of his personality, and who, as I have special cause to know, does not take refuge in pious platitudes when the cause of music demands courage in high places.

Shaw Leaves Lesson in Criticism

...usic criticism, Ashton ... music critic ...

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 172,548) ($ 200,772)
This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
JUL 16 1950

Sell-Out Listed For Berkshire

ALL SEATS for the Berkshire Music Festival's Bach-Mozart Concert Series, which opened recently, have been sold, according to George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will play the series.

The six concerts, opening the 13th season of the Berkshire Festival, will again be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (2,077)
This Clipping From
N. Y. STATE EXHIBITOR
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JUL 5 - 1950

TANGLEWOOD. United States Information Service—Musical Short. 22m: The annual summer music festival held in the Berkshires for music lovers and students is the topic. From all over the country they come to Massachusetts to watch and study conductor Serge Koussevitsky and his assistants, Copeland, Bernstein, Carvalho, and others. The students have ample grounds for relaxation. Viewers stay in the shed or sprawl out on the lawns. This is extremely well photographed, and the mood of the music, the festival, and the Koussevitsky verve are well captured. Selections heard include Beethoven's "Egmont Overture," an excerpt from a Randall Thomson choral and orchestral work, an extemporaneous rendition of "Roll Out The Barrel," and other excerpts. The music appeal and production polish give this a regular audience appeal in addition to the class and art house value. EXCELLENT.

[41]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,686)
This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
JUL 15

BACH PROGRAMS FOR TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Music Festival Observes Composer's Anniversary

New York, July 15 (UP)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

Boston Symphony

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

Announces Soloists

The Philadelphia Orchestra announces the selection of prominent guest soloists for next season, in addition to soloists from the orchestra personnel. Guest pianists will include, Rudolf Serkin, William Kapell, Menahem Pressler, Rudolf Firkusny, Agi Jambor, Solomon, Anna Xydis and Eugene List.

Violinists will be Zino Francescatti, Yehudi Menuhin, Nathan Milstein, Emil Telmanyi and Carroll Glenn. Astrid Varnay, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will be heard in a Wagnerian program.

Crowd Assuerd

The Sadler's Wells Ballet of London is almost assured of jammed houses for all its performances during a three-week engagement at New York's Metropolitan Opera House beginning Sept. 10. S. Hurok, who is bringing the company over for a repeat engagement and a tour of the United States and Canada, announced that $267,000 out of possible capacity of $300,000 already has been sold a the Metropolitan, two months ahead of the engagement.

At Town Hall

Alfredo Salmaggi, who has been giving his poular-priced grand opera on Randall's Island in New York's East River this summer, plans to move into Carnegie Hall after Labor Day. The company will present five operas from the Italian repertoire on successive nights beginning Sept. 6.

Music Remedy

The National Association for Music Therapy has been formed in New York. Its announced purpose is development of the use of music in medicine, aimed at patient improvement, rehabilitation and recovery.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 21 1950

EARLY MOZART OPERA SCHEDULED JULY 25

Music Center to Give "La Finta Giardiniera"

The opera department of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood will present a boyhood work of Mozart as its fifth full production of the season on July 25.

The three-act "La Finta Giardiniera", which will be produced in English, will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music center.

The department also will present the one-act comic opera, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County", based on Mark Twain's classic, on July 31, and Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot" on Aug. 7.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 43,294) (S 110,887)
This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
JUL 20 1950

Not All Music

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

NO DOUBT there are many better qualified than I to speak of the extraordinary surgical skill of Dr. Fred Douglass and of the breadth and perception of his experience, although both were facts known to laymen and professionals.

But when you come to make an accounting of the man, not of what he did but of what he was, it becomes a more and more pressing truth that not in skill or experience, singly or together, is the whole measure to be discovered.

Fred Douglass was a superb doctor. More than that he was a man whose humanity guided his practice and left an indelible impress upon all who knew him. He did not place himself in the position of a giver of life nor did he believe that it was his privilege to take life away. He never sat in cold, mechanical judgment on his patients. Medicine to him was no mere profession. It was a vocation and a sacred trust. And he guarded that trust well with an integrity that never waivered, with a constant search for a greater knowledge of the technique of his profession, and, above all, with an understanding of and a respect for the value and the worthiness of life and of mankind.

There were few like him. Sadly enough, there will be few to take his place.

* * *

WHILE I was in the happy process of vacationing last week there came to me rumors that all was not well at Tanglewood, the home of the Boston Orchestra's annual summer festival and of Koussevitzky's summer music school. Apparently there has been no dimution of the thoroughness and precision and communicative nature of Mr. Koussevitzky's conducting for all reports of the first four concerts, devoted entirely to the music of Bach, have been excellent. There was something else. And in a semi-wilderness, where news coverage is less than local, it was hard to dig out.

Conductor Victor de Sabata appears to be the unwitting cause of all the trouble—and probably the victim of it too. Last May the trustees of the Boston Orchestra hired Mr. de Sabata to conduct a series which Mr. Koussevitzky had declined. Koussevitzky was abroad at the time conducting the Israeli Philharmonic from which commitments he returned to this country in June.

There is some implication that Koussevitzky was irked because a non-American conductor was chosen. But if one reads between the lines the disagreement appears to go deeper than that. Koussevitzky had declined to conduct the two concerts of this particular series. The trustees were forced to move quickly to obtain a conductor of stature for the series was already being advertised. De Sabata was available and he was hired.

Koussevitzky's dissatisfaction seems to spring from the fact that he was not consulted in the choice of this conductor. And he has stated explicitly that he cannot be held responsible for the execution of the two concerts which de Sabata will conduct.

On the face of it this should be a dispute which concerns only the parties to it and its solution, one might guess, should be accomplished within doors by the Boston people. Unfortunately it's bigger than that. The Tanglewood School and Festival have grown tremendously in the last decade and their welfare is a matter of interest to people all over the country, musicians and

* * *

IT IS NOT correct to say that Koussevitzky was the creator of this Festival. If my memory is good—I think it is in this instance—the Berkshire people who initiated the Festival used the New York Orchestra for one year, the first season. The Boston Orchestra followed the next year and has been the orchestra in residence ever since. If Koussevitzky was not the creator, there is no doubt that he was the life giver, for in a matter of a few years after the advent of the Boston Orchestra he was the generalissimo and the Berkshire people had passed into the rather anonymous position of "friends."

Years before the school had become a reality I heard from Koussevitzky something of his plans along these lines, plans over which he had pondered and worked as far back as his Paris days. There is no doubt that the school is essentially his project. He has given it ideas, time, labor, money, and love. He has been the primary driving force behind its extent and the direction of its growth. It was natural that the Boston Orchestra should have become an integral and permanent part of the project both as executants and teachers and, once they had achieved this status, that the trustees of the orchestra should be drawn into the expanding business of the whole undertaking.

In itself the dispute is of little importance. But it points toward certain possibilities which, if allowed to run unfettered, might in due time be disastrous to the continued health of what is without question the major summer music venture of a permanent nature in our country, perhaps in the world.

* * *

IN PLAIN facts the whole project has become so large and attended with so many great responsibilities that one might wonder reasonably enough if any single person can carry the whole burden of its artistic guidance. It would not seem impudent to ask, if it is Mr. Koussevitzky's desire to choose the conductors who will aid him—an entirely understandable desire incidentally—why he had not earlier expressed his own choice of one who would fill his place in the concerts he did not wish to conduct. And on the other side it is hard to understand why the trustees allowed themselves to be put in a position in which they had to choose so quickly that Koussevitzky could not be consulted.

It would take years of mismangement to lessen the formidable artistic impact of the present application and fruition of Koussevitzky's ideas. But the heart of all his plans is not accomplishment measured only to date, but the continued building of a foundation which will be always so stable and so conscientiously devised that upon it may be safely and profitably erected a constantly broadening structure. But there can be no continued building if the members which are the basic frame do not fit precisely, if they are weakened by dispute.

To the extent that Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festival have opened their doors to the whole musical world, that they have given bountifully of artistic excellence with a promise of even finer things to come, it does not seem possible or probable that Koussevitzky and his trustees have not seen the storm warnings and already taken steps to protect their magnificent house.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/13/50

Berkshire Music Center

Music Center and Festival will perform 61 compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach in 20 events this summer, it was announced today. The comprehensive program, marking the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, began Saturday with the performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of five Bach pieces, and will continue almost daily until August 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be performed. The Mass is one of two full-length program pieces included in the commemorative series, the other being The Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

All six of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites will be performed this weekend and next in four concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The remainder of the Bach repertoire will be performed by members of the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, by the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and by Alexander Schneider, violinist and participant at the Parades festival recently honoring Bach in France. Lectures on Bach will be delivered by the co-editors of the "Bach Reader", Arthur Mendel and Hans David. Julius Herford of the Faculty will hold classes on the analysis of Bach's music.

While many of the Bach programs are open to the public, many more are open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only. Voluntary contributions to the Friends to help support the activities of the music school directed by Dr. Koussevitzky constitute membership and entitle contributors to attend 37 musical events, including two operas. Contributions should be sent to the Friends' Office at Tanglewood, which issues invitations to members subject only to limitations on seating capacity.

Included in the works to be performed at events limited to attendance by the Friends are fifteen organ compositions by Bach; to be performed by E. Power Biggs; The Musical offering; Piano concertos; a violin concerto; sinfonias, cantatas, sonatas and partitas for violin, and others.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,625) (S 264,214)
This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
JUL 23 1950

The three students from Kentucky studying at the Berkshire Music Center are, from left, Helen Grossman, John Jud, both of Louisville, and Thelma Mattox, Lexington.

Students of Opera Practice Arias Where Pilgrims Once Sang Hymns

By MARY PRIM, Associated Press Writer

PLYMOUTH, Mass., July 22.—Opera students in shorts and slacks are practicing arias where the Mayflower Pilgrims sang the Psalms.

Swinging into its fifth season, Plymouth Rock Summer Music Center already has some 85 aspiring opera singers, guest artists and instructors in tents and buildings on its seaside campus.

Former opera singer David Blair McClosky set up the project in an old warehouse on land owned by his family since Puritan times.

His idea was to give young American singers the professional experience they had to travel abroad to get.

He opened up in 1946 with six students—girls who had come from his voice class at the University of Syracuse.

"We had to start off with a production of 'Hansel and Gretel,'" he recalled, "because it had only one masculine part—the father. I sang that."

Two Premieres

In the works for the seven-week season are five complete operas, two of which will be world premieres. The center also has a 40-piece symphony orchestra of students and professionals from many of the country's leading symphonies.

Each student registered is guaranteed at least one major part before the opera season ends August 11.

The young men live in four huge tents. The girls are accommodated in the old family homestead on Kingston [illegible]. That weathered frame building overlooks Clark's [illegible] where the Mayflower passengers held their first Sunday service in the New World.

The boys under canvas insisted on having a grand piano jammed into one tent so as to lose no time getting to work. Among them are four GI students. However, some complain that early-bird girl students often grab the keyboard before the tent dwellers finish making their beds.

McClosky said the students are so thrilled at appearing with top-notch opera stars, they're practicing until midnight.

To Sing With Star

First of the guest stars to arrive was blond Ellen Faull, fresh from triumphs at the New York City Center Opera.

A dramatic soprano, she sang Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni" at the center's opening production, July 7 and 8, in Plymouth's 2,500-seat Memorial Hall.

The opera aspirants get to sing with Metropolitan Opera star Dorothee Manski August 4, 5 and 6, when the "Legend of Hex Mountain" has its world premiere.

That will be an all-Met occasion as the opera is the work of Florence Wickham, who sang with the company before World War I.

McClosky said she she is probably the first woman in history to write a complete opera—words, music and libretto. She found her material among the Amish people who live near her Philadelphia home.

The second world premiere will be "The Ordeal of Osbert" by Allan Davis of Syracuse, N. Y., to be presented August 11 as part of a double bill.

The companion piece will be "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss, a protege of former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Both composers are under 30.

McClosky had some surprises when "Don Giovanni" opened. "We moved it back from Mozart's rococo 18th Century to the high Renaissance," he said, "with all sorts of supplementary staircases and platforms."

3-Level Stage

These included [illegible] built to the stage and steps [illegible] to the auditorium. On stage was a seven-foot bridge with steps to the platform. The three levels were to point out visually the difference in the three groups—the nobility, the peasants, and entertainers. Musicians, in addition to the regular orchestra in the pit, played in balconies built on each side of the proscenium arch during the ballet and banquet scenes.

Alan Beucher, a student from Postville, Iowa, was the Don Juan, with 19-year-old New York City basso Ray Lazarus in the role of Leporello. The Dona Elvira was a real Cinderella girl, McClosky said.

She is Marcella Lee, 24, of Worthington, Minn., who received her master's degree in music at Syracuse University only this last June.

She is helping [illegible] her way in the summer [illegible] as a waitress in the school dining room.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,625) (S 264,214)
This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
JUL [illegible] 1950

3 Kentuckians Are Enrolled At Berkshire

Special to The Courier-Journal

LENOX, Mass., July 22.—Three musicians from Kentucky are enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer, school officials have announced. The Music Center, a school for advanced musicians, is under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, for 25 years until last season director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The school exists, along with the famous Berkshire Festival, on the grounds made famous in Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales." The festival is now in its 13th season, and the school in its eighth.

Among the members of the faculty, which is a group of noted musicians partly drawn from the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is Edward Barret of WHAS, Louisville, who is assistant choral director.

The Schedule

Activities for the 393 students in the school include a full schedule of classes and rehearsals attended by members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, a group whose support of the school takes the form of voluntary contributions and attendance at student concerts.

Among the three students from Kentucky is Mrs. Helen Grossman, this year's winner of the $325 Louisville Philharmonic Chorus Scholarship. She is the third person to be so honored since the scholarship was founded. She is a soprano in this season's festival chorus under the direction of Hugh Ross and Barret.

Other Kentucky students are John Jud, also of Louisville, and Miss Thelma Mattox, Lexington.

HENRY ROMEIKE THE ORIGINAL NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/13/50

Berkshire Music Center

Music Center and Festival will perform 61 compositions by Johann Sebastian Bach in 20 events this summer, it was announced today. The comprehensive program, marking the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, began Saturday with the performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of five Bach pieces, and will continue almost daily until August 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be performed. The Mass is one of two full-length program pieces included in the commemorative series, the other being The Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

All six of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos and all four of his orchestral suites will be performed this weekend and next in four concerts under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. The remainder of the Bach repertoire will be performed by members of the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, by the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and by Alexander Schneider, violinist and participant at the Parades festival recently honoring Bach in France. Lectures on Bach will be delivered by the co-editors of the "Bach Reader", Arthur Mendel and Hans David. Julius Herford of the Faculty will hold classes on the analysis of Bach's music.

While many of the Bach programs are open to the public, many more are open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only. Voluntary contributions to the Friends to help support the activities of the music school directed by Dr. Koussevitzky constitute membership and entitle contributors to attend 37 musical events, including two operas. Contributions should be sent to the Friends' Office at Tanglewood, which issues invitations to members subject only to limitations on seating capacity.

Included in the works to be performed at events limited to attendance by the Friends are fifteen organ compositions by Bach; to be performed by E. Power Biggs; The Musical offering; Piano concertos; a violin concerto; sinfonias, cantatas, sonatas and partitas for violin, and others.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,825) (S 264,214)
This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
JUL 23 1950

The three students from Kentucky studying at the Berkshire Music Center are, from left, Helen Grossman, John Jud, both of Louisville, and Thelma Mattox, Lexington.

Students of Opera Practice Arias Where Pilgrims Once Sang Hymns

By MARY PRIM, Associated Press Writer

PLYMOUTH, Mass., July 22.—Opera students in shorts and slacks are practicing arias where the Mayflower Pilgrims sang the Psalms.

Swinging into its fifth season, Plymouth Rock Summer Music Center already has some 85 aspiring opera singers, guest artists and instructors in tents and buildings on its seaside campus.

Former opera singer David Blair McClosky set up the project in an old warehouse on land owned by his family since Puritan times.

His idea was to give young American singers the professional experience they had to travel abroad to get.

He opened up in 1946 with six students—girls who had come from his voice class at the University of Syracuse.

"We had to start off with a production of 'Hansel and Gretel,'" he recalled, "because it had only one masculine part—the father. I sang that."

Two Premieres

In the works for the seven-week season are five complete operas, two of which will be world premieres. The center also has a 40-piece symphony orchestra of students and professionals from many of the country's leading symphonies.

Each student registered is guaranteed at least one major part before the opera season ends August 11.

The young men live in four huge tents. The girls are accommodated in the old family homestead on Kingston [illegible]. That weathered frame building overlooks Clark's [illegible] the Mayflower passengers held their first Sunday service in the New World.

The boys under canvas insisted on having a grand piano jammed into one tent so as to lose no time getting to work. Among them are four GI students. However, some complain that early-bird girl students often grab the keyboard before the tent dwellers finish making their beds.

McClosky said the students are so thrilled at appearing with top-notch opera stars, they're practicing until midnight.

To Sing With Star

First of the guest stars to arrive was blond Ellen Faull, fresh from triumphs at the New York City Center Opera.

A dramatic soprano, she sang Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni" at the center's opening production, July 7 and 8, in Plymouth's 2,500-seat Memorial Hall.

The opera aspirants get to sing with Metropolitan Opera star Dorothee Manski August 4, 5 and 6, when the "Legend of Hex Mountain" has its world premiere.

That will be an all-Met occasion as the opera is the work of Florence Wickham, who sang with the company before World War I.

McClosky said she she is probably the first woman in history to write a complete opera—words, music and libretto. She found her material among the Amish people who live near her Philadelphia home.

The second world premiere will be "The Ordeal of Osbert" by Allan Davis of Syracuse, N. Y., to be presented August 11 as part of a double bill.

The companion piece will be "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss, a protege of former Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Serge Koussevitzky. Both composers are under 30.

McClosky had some surprises when "Don Giovanni" opened. "We moved it back from Mozart's rococo 18th Century to the high Renaissance," he said, "with all sorts of supplementary staircases and platforms."

3-Level Stage

These included a [illegible] built to the stage and steps [illegible] to the auditorium. On stage [illegible] a seven-foot bridge with steps [illegible] the platform. The three levels were to point out visually the difference in the three groups—the nobility, the peasants, and entertainers. Musicians, in addition to the regular orchestra in the pit, played in balconies built on each side of the proscenium arch during the ballet and banquet scenes.

Alan Beucher, a student from Postville, Iowa, was the Don Juan, with 19-year-old New York City basso Ray Lazarus in the role of Leporello. The Dona Elvira was a real Cinderella girl, McClosky said.

She is Marcella Lee, 24, of Worthington, Minn., who received her master's degree in music at Syracuse University only this last June.

She is helping [illegible] her way in the summer [illegible] as a waitress in the school [illegible] room.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,825) (S 264,214)
This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
JUL 23 1950

3 Kentuckians Are Enrolled At Berkshire

Special to The Courier-Journal

LENOX, Mass., July 22.—Three musicians from Kentucky are enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer, school officials have announced. The Music Center, a school for advanced musicians, is under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, for 25 years until last season director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The school exists, along with the famous Berkshire Festival, on the grounds made famous in Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales." The festival is now in its 13th season, and the school in its eighth.

Among the members of the faculty, which is a group of noted musicians partly drawn from the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is Edward Barret of WHAS, Louisville, who is assistant choral director.

The Schedule

Activities for the 393 students in the school include a full schedule of classes and rehearsals attended by members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, a group whose support of the school takes the form of voluntary contributions and attendance at student concerts.

Among the three students from Kentucky is Mrs. Helen Grossman, this year's winner of the $325 Louisville Philharmonic Chorus Scholarship. She is the third person to be so honored since the scholarship was founded. She is a soprano in this season's festival chorus under the direction of Hugh Ross and Barret.

Other Kentucky students are John Jud, also of Louisville, and Miss Thelma Mattox, Lexington.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 421,215) (S 613,809)
This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES

Mayfair

Detroit Music Lovers Lured to Famous Berkshire Festival

By JEAN WHITEHEAD

THIS is the time of year when music fills the air at Tanglewood, Mass., where Serge Koussevitzky's famed Berkshire Festival beckons to patrons the world over.

And Detroiters make up a fine portion of the vast audience.

Besides Maestro Koussevitzky, such luminaries as conductors Victor De Sabata, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar De Carvalho spark the brilliant program.

To Charles J. Collins of Lochmoor Blvd., the Berkshire Festival is something NOT to be missed.

Attended Bach Festival

Weeks before the opening concert, he had sent for brochures on the program, followed soon by requests for tickets.

Imbued with a special appreciation for the music of Bach, he and his wife had attended the big Bach festival in Bethlehem, Pa., earlier this year.

Because this year marks the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, many of his works are being featured at the Berkshire festival.

Mass in B Minor

The magnificent Mass in B Minor will be the first offering of the third series for which the Collinses have tickets.

This will be the fourth trip to Berkshire for Mr. C.; the third for his wife; and the initial venture for daughter Jo, just graduated from the University of Michigan.

One of the most inspiring aspects of the festival to veteran Miss Marguerite Stroh is the huge Music Shed, with a seating capacity of 5,000.

Open on three sides, you take your Bach, Beethoven or Brahms against a background of unbelievably green, rolling hills, filled as far as the eye can travel with hundreds of music lovers.

Miss Stroh's 4th Trip

This also will be the fourth [illegible] Tanglewood for

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 25,402)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 17 1950

Final Bach Concerts Draw Crowds

In spite of the threatening skies Sunday afternoon an audience of nearly 3000 gathered at Tanglewood for the final all-Bach program in the theater-concert hall.

The program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, included the first and second suites, Concerto No. 2 in E Major with Ruth Posselt, violin soloist, and Cantatas No. 12 and 50. Soloists were Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, tenor.

Among the notables in the audience were Henry Morgantheau, Jr., former Secretary of the Treasury; the vice-mayor of Tel Aviv, Dr. Eliezer Peri, a weekend guest of the Koussevitzkys; Theodore Vavayannis, of Athens, Greece, and Adnan Saygun of Ankara, Turkey, both noted musicians, and their wives.

Two Bach cantatas, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" and "Come Thou Lovely Hour Of Death" were high lights of Saturday night's concert which attracted 3600. Soloists were Uta Graf, soprano, James Pease, Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd.

The fourth and sixth Brandenburg Concertos completed the program with Richard Burgin, violin soloist; Georges Laurent and George Madsen, flutists; Joseph DePasquale and Jean Cauhape, viola soloists.

The main concerts in the shed with full orchestra open on Thursday, July 27.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 41,151) (S 98,982)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 23 1950

Four Act Opera Will Be Principal Berkshire Offering

A four act comic opera by the contemporary French composer, Jacques Ibert, will be the chef d'oeuvre of the Berkshire Music Center in this field, this season.

The opera department will present this work August 7 and 8. Written on a text by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse, it was first heard at the Opera Comique, Paris, in 1930. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of a folk character.

Mr. Ibert will make his first visit to America this summer, to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

The program at the Music Center also calls for a performance of a one act opera with the story and title of one of Mark Twain's best known short stories, "The Jumping Frog." Lukas Foss is the composer. The date for this and a series of opera scene concerts will be announced.

Jan Popper will be acting head of the opera department in the absence of Boris Goldovsky. Mr. Goldovsky, who is on leave, will continue in an advisory capacity.

The operatic, as well as the orchestral, chamber and chamber music performances by the students of the Berkshire Music Center are open by invitation to those who endorse this educational project of the Boston Symphony by joining the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Friends are also invited to a cycle of four Bach concerts to be presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation and three organ recitals in the Shed by E. Power Biggs also devoted to the music of Bach.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,972) (S 36,752)
This Clipping From ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR-GAZETTE
JUL 21 1950

Three Operas To Be Given at BerkshireCenter

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — Mozart's boyhood opera, "La Finta Giardiniera" (The Feigned Gardener), will be the first full presentation of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer. The three-act opera will be produced in English by Sarah Caldwell of the Opera Departmen' under acting head Jan Popper.

Miss Caldwell will conduct, and the scenery has been designed by Phillipe de Rosier, with costumes by Leo van Witsen. The orchestra will be composed of students in Department IV.

"La Finta Giardiniera" will be performed in the Theater at Tanglewood Tuesday evening, July 25, and the performance, like all productions of the school, is open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Opera Department at Tanglewood will also produce the one-act comic opera "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" by Lukas Foss of the faculty, on Monday evening, July 31. This opera, to a libretto of Jean Karsavina, derives from a short story of Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), which in turn was taken from a tale of ancient Greece. The opera, first produced by the University of Indiana at Bloomington last May, has also been performed in New York City this year. The Tanglewood production will be the first to be conducted by the composer.

The major production of the Berkshire Music Center operatic season will be the opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot", by Jacques Ibert, which is being prepared by Jan Popper. M. Ibert is making his first visit to America and is spending the Summer at Tanglewood, where he holds composition classes with advanced students, sharing those duties with Aaron Copland. His opera will be given its initial presentation in this country at its premiere at Tanglewood on Aug. 7.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 48,307)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 24 1950

Two-Piano Team Excels In Tanglewood Concerto

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday—The playing of Mozart's Concerto in E-Flat, for two pianos and orchestra by Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, yesterday afternoon in Tanglewood's Theater Concert Hall, was of such high order that it will doubtless be remembered as one of the artistic highlights of the 13th Berkshire Festival.

This second and last Mozart concert, culminating the special events preceding the three main weekend series in the shed, was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky with remarkable vigor and interpretive deftness.

The audience of 5700 brought the weekend's figure to 11,700—an attendance record here for Mozart concerts.

We have heard the incomparable duo-pianists play this work several times—once at the Worcester Festival, where they will again appear in October—but never have they exploited its genteel qualities and beautiful symmetry with greater finesse.

Pleases Orchestra

The 35 men of the Boston Symphony, who have played these six Bach-Mozart concerts are accustomed to virtuosic demonstrations and they respond to them, as a rule, with professional restraint. Yesterday afternoon it was different. During the pianists' solo dialogues, many of them found it impossible to visually express their open admiration.

The obvious virtues of great duo-pianism are usually classified as precise rhythmic agreement, balanced tone, and integrated details. But this was playing that transcended these basic requirements.

In spite of the ovation that the audience eagerly granted, there were apparently some who have cultivated a sort of passive attitude toward Luboshutz and Nemenoff's playing of this concerto—or maybe it's toward the concerto itself. At any rate, one metropolitan writer described it as "a hackneyed performance."

Heartily Disagrees

I could not more heartily disagree with that.

On the other hand, one of the orchestra's first-desk players marveled at the "rubato" (rhythmic freedom) that they effected not only between, but within phrases. That is more to the point, because to accomplish it, each pianist must sense the other's reflexes with split-second precision—and it must come out as a vibrant, living thing, and not as a mathematical accomplishment.

This was skillfully demonstrated in the slow movements where intricate details, like ornaments and feathery runs, were executed as if produced by the same hands.

Perfect Integration

Apart from these technical considerations, Luboshutz and Nemenoff found perfect integration of spirit in all three movements. Koussevitzky, in turn, gave them a magnificent accompaniment, never relaxing the closest attention to the soloists' requirements, or trespassing upon their territory.

The orchestra made a "tour-de-force" of the "Jupiter" symphony. Tempos for the rapid movements were just right. To have decreased them would have partially robbed them of their energy, and to have hastened them would have meant a loss of detail.

The second themes of both movements made brilliant transitions from sturdy stuff to sparkling, song-like melodies. The strings exhibited admirable control over dynamic changes. One particularly brilliant moment appeared in the first movement of Symphony in B-Flat, No. 33, where a sudden change to muted quietness was instantly followed by an expansive increase of volume—all players performing in perfect unison.

Koussevitzky's baton was as thorough as it was lucid. The only instances of rhythmic instability, not necessarily attributable to the baton, were moments in the last movement of the "Jupiter" that left the strings lagging, and some of the attacks in the overture to "Idomeneo."

The Bach-Mozart concerts now completed, the full-sized Boston Symphony will occupy the shed for concerts as of Thursday night. They will be given Thursday and Saturday nights, and Sunday afternoons. In addition, will be a long list of events that are available without charge to friends of the Berkshire music center.

Thursday night's program, conducted by Koussevitzky, will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 3" ("Eroica"), and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,861) (S 102,814)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 23 1950

6000 at Mozart Concert Held at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday — The last weekend of special events, preludes to the main concerts of the Berkshire Festival, opened last night in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood, with a sharp rise in attendance to 6000. The largest previous attendance at a Mozart concert was 4800.

This was the first of two concerts of music by Mozart, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky with Richard Burgin, violinist, and Lukas Foss, pianist, as soloists. The orchestra again was composed of 35 players from the Boston Symphony.

Program Altered

The program, altered at the last minute in its order, was the "Haffner Serenade"; piano concerto in C major, K. 467; "Eine Nachtmusik (Serenade for Strings)"; and symphony in C major, No. 34, K. 338.

Having previously reviewed performances of all these works with the exception of the piano concerto, perhaps I can digress a bit and come to some conclusions by comparing Koussevitzky's approach to Bach and Mozart.

I'm not suggesting that the reviews would be repetetive because I am yet to hear two performances of the same work that sound exactly alike. It is rather that having just heard Koussevitzky's interpretations of four Bach concerts during the past two weekends, his Mozart last night was conspicuously closer to the truth.

Little Arbitrariness

There was little if any arbitrariness as to how rapidly movements were to progress — there was little over-abundance of tone or distortion of simple lyricism to emotional depths. Perhaps the most illustrative performance with the super B accompaniment given the piano concerto, although tonally the soloist made demands that even the Boston Symphony couldn't fulfill with regard to tonal balances.

I might add that such interpretive fallacies have been noted in Koussevitzky's interpretations of Beethoven, although less so. The music of Haydn and Mozart — indeed that of the distantly related Tschaikowsky—are subtly adaptable to his style.

Digital Fleetness

Mr. Foss' performance of the concerto was exemplary of digital fleetness, and every note was exactly in its place and gently stroked. Yet the concerto did not entirely come off, and as refined as the slow movement became under caressing fingers, it dragged.

It is a bucolic work, to be sure, with the exception of few interludes of severe dialogue to be found in the two rapid movements. But the extreme use of an elegant touch resulted in long passages in which the melodic lines presented in the solo instrument were partly and sometimes seriously suppressed. Running passages were models of fluent technique but too often the effect was marred by indistinction. Perhaps the orchestra could have retired even further into the background but I doubt if the overall effect would have been greatly enhanced.

Mr. Burgin's numberous solo assignments during these weekends have sometimes exacted a toll of finesse that usually identifies his playing. His performance last night in the "Haffner" was a beautiful example of interpretive perceiption and brilliant technique—in fact, it was playing of full concerto stature.

In turn, the orchestra and conductor made strong points of the salient and digressing qualities of each movement. The pompous and tonally board opening movement gave way to a slow movement that revelled in charm and warm nuances.

The surprisingly dark-hued menuetto with its firm assertions was sharply contrasted by a rhythmically spirited rondo. Among the solo distinctions was a beautifully voiced entente between violin and brasses in the trio and bristling passagework, brilliant played by the solo violin. In fact, the tempo adopted for the rondo by the conductor was a challenge in itself which Mr. Burgin met with aplomb.

This was as much as my deadline would permit me to hear. This afternoon's program: Symphony in B-Flat, No. 33, K. 319; Concerto in E-Flat Major for Two Pianos and Orchestra (Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff at the solo instruments); overture to "Idomeneo"; and Symphony in C Major ("Jupiter"), No. 41, K. 551.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 10,666) (S 20,023)
This Clipping From
PARKERSBURG, W. VA.
NEWS
JUL 16 1950

NEW YORK, July 15 (UP)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge [illegible] which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center, the Roth String Quartet, by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 36,676)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 24 1950

All-Mozart Program Given At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., July 24—Tanglewood, musical Mecca for summer visitors from every state of the nation, threatens to outgrow its own spacious limits.

Yesterday's all-Mozart program attracted an audience of 5,700 persons. Only 1,200 can be seated in the woody theater-concert hall at the periphery of the Tanglewood grounds; 4,500 others sprawled on blankets and in deck chairs on the tree-fringed lawn.

Acoustics of the little hall are not those of the girdered shed where the main festival concerts are held. It is doubtful if many of yesterday's outdoor listeners not in a direct line with the open back of the Concert Hall heard much of the delicate nuances of Mozart, yet their attention was steady, if strained.

Opening yesterday's program was the Mozart Symphony in B-flat, a gay and gracious composition for small orchestra.

Highlight of the day was the incredible rapport between orchestry and the duo-pianists, Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, in the E-flat Major concerto. The two are such polished performers that their work was as much a delight to the orchestra as to the audience. Even Dr. Serge Koussivitsky, who again conducted the Sunday program, complimented Mme. Nemenoff with a courtly kiss for their first bow. Mr. Luboshutz received a pat on the back.

The brief overture to Mozart's "Idomeneo" opened the second half of the program. This archaic work was "discovered" by the Berkshire Festival's opera department two seasons ago, and gradually is working its way into concert repertoire wth more frequent performances.

The orchestra showed the full range of Mozart's genius in its swelling interpretation of the C-Major ("Jupiter") Symphony, elegant, scholarly and melodic.

Dr. Koussevitsky will open the first in the series of Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:15 p. m. Thursday, conducting Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, and the Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius. He wil lead the group again for the Saturday night performance, while Leonard Bernstein takes over for the Sunday afternoon concert.

FZ.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,689)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 25 1950

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open Thursday evening at the Shed on the Boston Symphony grounds between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The program will be directed by Serge Koussevitzky and will include the Beethoven Symphony number 3 ("Eroica") and the Sibelius Symphony, number 2.

Series A will continue on Saturday evening with the Bruckner Symphony number 7 and Debussy's "Two Nocturnes" and "La Mer." Both the Thursday and Saturday programs begin at 8:15 o'clock.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Sunday afternoon program, which opens at 3 o'clock. It will include "Adagietto," Shapero; "Timon of Athens," Diamond; "The Song of Songs" by Foss with Ellabelle Davis as the soloist and the Brahms symphony number 2.

Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music Center will perform the world premiers of two works at concerts on July 24 and Aug. 7 under the direction of Howard Shanet.

The works are Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death" and "Music for Strings" by Manuel Mahler-Kalkstein. Both programs will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The orchestra is the 50-piece orchestra of department five and includes many persons who are only incidentally involved in symphonic music. In the group are a pianist playing 'cello, an organist playing violin, an automobile salesman, six schoolteachers, three college students and others who play more for fun than for career advancement. The principal student orchestra at Tanglewood, in contrast, is composed of highly-trained musicians and gives weekly concerts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 145,940) (S 271,500)
This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
JUL 20 1950

MAESTRO IN TEMPEST?—Nettlesome Koussevitzky, former director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is known for [illegible] developing any number of talented youngsters. But history tends to show: The instant a conductor reaches an age and eminence competitive with his own, such a musical maestro gets irked at any shadow on his glory. For the forthcoming Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that Victor de Sabata would guest-conduct August 3d and five concerts of the festival and Dr. Koussevitzky flew into a rage. He said tartly: "The festival concerts are for the Americas and America's gifted people," which undoubtedly he did not mean as he has developed any number of artists from abroad. The Italian de Sabata will conduct, notwithstanding.

However, with his usual beneficence toward youngsters, Koussevitzky put his blessing upon 14-year-old violinist, Michael Rabin, who has hit radio fame on the Telephone Hour, and is scheduled to be guest soloist with Koussy when he guest-conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Koussy enjoys the drama of introducing very young people. Among his "finds" are Leonard Bernstein, Ruth Passelt and now, Michael Rabin.

Copyright, 1950, King Feature Synd., Inc.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,351) (S 45,978)
This Clipping From UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
JUL 23 1950

Feature Is Set For Thursday At Tanglewood

Feature attraction this week at the Berkshire Music Festival will be presentations of Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, on Thursday evening at 8:15.

The concerts, which annually attract hundreds of music lovers from the Utica area, are held at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. Thursday's concert will be held in the Music Shed, which seats 6,000. Seats in the shed are reserved. But if the weather is good, additional thousands will hear the concert from surrounding lawns.

The first event this week is an all-Mozart program to be presented in the smaller theater-concert hall by the orchestra at 3 this afternoon with Koussevitzky conducting. It will include the Symphony No. 3 in B flat, Concerto for two pianos with Luboshutz and Nemenoff as soloists, and the "Jupiter" symphony.

Tomorrow at 4:30 there will be a world premier performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." It will be presented by an orchestra and chorus of amateur musicians, directed by Howard Shanet, Koussevitzy's assistant.

Tuesday at 8:15, the Opera Department will present Mozart's boyhood opera, "La Finta Giardiniera," and on Wednesday at 8:15 the Roth String Quartet will play Bach's "The Art of the Fugue." These latter three concerts are open to persons who make voluntary contributions and thereby become Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Next weekend's program will include a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to which the public is admitted, Saturday at 10 a. m., and orchestra concerts Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

On the program Saturday at 8:15 will be Bruckner's Symphony No. 7, and Debussy's Two Nocturnes, and La Mer. Koussevitsky will conduct.

Next Sunday afternoon at 3, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra in a program that will include Brahms' Symphony No. 2 and Foss' The Song of Songs, with Ellabelle Davis as soloist.

[45]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION-REPUBLICAN

Dr. Koussevitzky to Celebrate His 76th Birthday Wednesday

On Following Night He Will Conduct Boston Symphony at First of Nine Concerts in Shed

(Special to The Sunday Republican)

Lenox Hills, July 22—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be 76 years old next Wednesday, the 26th and the following night he will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the first of nine concerts in the Tanglewood shed. Many Tanglewood Music School students will help him celebrate his birthday and friends without number have issued greetings.

Vigor Is Undimmed

The conductor's vigor is undimmed. In a recent broadcast it is recalled he said he never would give up Tanglewood because the festival and the Berkshire Music Center are "my child, my creation, my blood tears."

Most of the 86 boxes have been sold for the festival. Each box has six seats and the cost is $6 for each concert. Box holders as listed by the management will include Eldon V. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Glickman of Springfield, Philip O'Brien of Holyoke, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mrs. Bayard Crane of Dalton; Col. William H. Bacon and Alan Blau of Pittsfield; James Phinney Baxter, III president of Williams College.

Also Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs. Walton Eaton Barrett, Richard L. Stockton, Jr., Robert K. Wheeler, Marion L. Straus, Great Barrington; Miss Mabel Choate, William H. Ryan, McA., Donald Ryan, Mrs. George Otis Rockwood, Mrs. David B. Karrick, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. Ramsay C. Hazard, Walter Hoving, Dr. Robert P. Knight, D. Percy Morgan, Stockbridge, Mrs. Carleton Macy, Blandford; Mrs. Bruce W. Sanborn, Elm Court, Mrs. John L. Senior, Russell Smith, Mrs. Clarence A. Warden, Lenox; Mrs. Arad Whitridge, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Salisbury Conn.

Other Box Holders

Also Mrs. Horace E. Dodge and Mrs. John S. Newberry, Grosse Pointe, Mich.; Pierrepont Van D. Davis, Ossining, N. Y., Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Radnor Pa.; Mrs. William M. Lewis, Colebrook, Pa.; Mrs. Lowell Thomas, Pawling, N.Y., Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Boston; Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, New York; John Crosby, Minneapolis; Mrs. Watson Beach Day, Pelham Manor, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Philip R. Allen, Boston; Lieut Col. Arthur D. Budd, Windsor, Norbet A. Bogdan, Tyringham.

In a statement issued by the Friends of Tanglewood, Lewis Perry of Boston and Williamstown, national president, last year this organization contributed $27,000 toward the purchase of Wheatleigh, the nearby estate of the late Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, now used as a men's dormitory. Last year's total attendance at the nine concerts of the main festival exceeded 110,000.

Tanglewood will be "on parade" Friday night, Aug. 11. Victor Gabbata of Rome, one of the festival conductors, is to be at Curtis Hotel, Lenox. Mr. and Mrs. Philip R. Allen of Walpole are arriving at the Curtis the 27th to stay until the close of the festival.

Countess deLeusse at Lenox Club

Countess Simone de Leusse of 880 Fifth Ave., New York, is at Lenox Club Lenox, for the summer, Mrs. Harry S. Hall of Beacon St., Boston, is there until after Labor Day. She generally goes to Bar Harbor for August.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Richardson Lyeth of Riverdale, N. Y., have reserved a suite at Christmas Tree Inn, Stockbridge, for three weeks from Aug. 1. Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Dennison, Framingham, are there.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Swan, Mount Vernon, N. Y., entertained at dinner at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, early in the week to help Mrs. Swan's father, William Pells, celebrate his 75th birthday. Arrivals at Berkshire Inn include Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Varnum, North Brookfield; Misses Florence and Gertrude Clements, Eleanor McGovern, just back from Rome, Madam d'Ekna of Alexandria, Egypt.

Mr. and Mrs. James D. Colt, II, of Winter Park Fla., formerly of Pittsfield, are spending the summer at Firefly Cottage, Richmond Pond, Pittsfield.

Mrs. Gammell Gross of Providence is at Red Lion, Stockbridge, for the remainder of the season. Also there for several weeks ars Mr. and Mrs. Arthur P. Washburn, New York, and Miss Mary E. Leonard, Detroit, who are Tanglewood visitors. William B. Gerould of Kenilworth, Ill., is entertaining a group of seven friends over this week end at Red Lion.

Other Arrivals

Mrs. Denison D. Dana of Mayfair House, New York, who has many friends in the Great Barrington summer colony, has opened her house on Laurel Way, Norfolk.

Misses Ethel Phelps and Alice Biester of the University of Minnesota faculty are with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ware Eaton at Brookmead, Monterey.

At Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, for the summer are Mr. and Mrs. George E. Seymour and Mr. and Mrs. Fenton Kavanaugh, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Marshall of Milnhouse, Tyringham, are leaving Aug. 1 for a month's stay in Paris.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 52,373)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Premiere Staged At Tanglewood

A new version of Moussorgsky's Songs and Dances of Death," composed by Eric Simon for voice and orchestra, had its world premiere this afternoon at Tanglewood before the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. It was performed by the amateur student orchestra of Department Five, for which it was written.

The first opera of the season will be given tomorrow night in the theater at Tanglewood, "The Feigned Gardner," an opera buffa composed by Mozart during his youth. It is being produced by the opera department and the orchestra is to be composed of students in Department Four. This also is open to Friends of the Center, which is made up of persons who make any financial contribution they can to support the study program of the Berkshire Music Center.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 330,240) (S 677,761)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 21 1950

Mozart Opera in English

"La Finta Giardiniera" To Be Given Tuesday at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera, "La Finta Giardiniera" (The Feigned Gardener) will be given in English by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood next Tuesday evening. The three-act opera will be produced by Sarah Caldwell, under acting head of the opera department, Jan Hopper. Miss Caldwell will conduct. The scenery has been designed by Phillipe de Rosier, the costumes by Leo van Witsen. The orchestra will be composed of students in Department IV.

The cast will comprise Adele Addison as Countess Violante; Mac Morgan, as the Podesta; Nancy Trickey, as Arminda; Edith Evans, as Ramiro; Ray Smolover, as Count Belfiore; Marni Nixon, as Serpetta, and Julian Patrick, as Roberto. The libretto o. Calzabigi has been revised but the musical notation of Mozart has been preserved unaltered. The original score of the first act is lost and has been restored from parts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,168) (S 38,362)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 21 1950

Amateurs To Perform At Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 20—Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music Center will perform the world premieres of two works at concerts on July 24 and Aug 7 this summer. Howard Shanet, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and conductor of the 50-piece orchestra of Department Five, said that both works had been written for presentation by his group.

Unlike the principal student orchestra at Tanglewood, which gives weekly concerts and is composed of highly-trained musicians, Mr. Shanet's orchestra includes many who are only incidentally involved in symphonic music. It was formed to give less-advanced students at the school a chance to play under direction without the pressure of public performance. In the group are a pianist playing cello, an organist playing violin, an automobile salesman, six school teachers, three college students, and others who play more for fun than for fame or career advancement.

A sample of the spirit of this orchestra, however, is apparent from the fact that three members of the violin section of the Havana Philharmonic Orchestra asked to play in it, rather than in the more professional orchestra here. These three decided to study at Tanglewood after a meeting with Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Shanet, when the former's tour brought them to Cuba.

Though their main purpose in coming was to study chamber music at Tanglewood, under the tutelage of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they volunteered for Mr. Shanet's group when the latter came to need more strings. Because of a similar shortage of topnotch violas in the principal student orchestra, the fourth Havana Philharmonic player was not able to make the same transfer.

First Concert

The first concert by this student orchestra will be performed at Tanglewood on July 24, and will feature the first performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." Manfred Hecht, who will sing the title role in Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot" at Tanglewood a week later, will be the baritone. The Moussorgsky text was translated from the Russian by Maria de Pasquale, niece of Dr. Koussevitzky, and by Alfred Weiss, a student in the libretto-writing department. Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Douglas Moore's Symphony in A will round out the program. Mr. Moore, a professor at Columbia University, has been invited to attend, and is expected to be present.

The concert on August 7, again under Howard Shanet's direction, will feature "Music for Strings," by Manual Mahler-Kalkstein. This piece was earmarked for a Tanglewood premiering by its Israeli composer last year. Handel's Royal Fireworks Music, Hindemith's Morning Music, a toccata by Bonelli, and Brahm's Second Symphony will complete the program.

These two concerts, as are all events at Tanglewood, are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and will be held in the Music Shed in the afternoons at 4:30, on July 24 and Aug. 7.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 52,373)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 26 1950

Tanglewood Concert Set Tomorrow

The first of nine major concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given in the Shed at Tanglewood at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow, starting Series A of the Berkshire Music Festival programs.

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the festival, will conduct the orchestra in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 in E Flat and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D. Dr. Koussevitzky is celebrating his 76th birthday today, after members of the Boston Symphony who played the Bach-Mozart concert series in the Theater-Concert Hall have been joined by the rest of the orchestra from Boston.

At 8:15 p. m. Saturday, again with Dr. Koussevitzky on the podium, the orchestra will play Bruckner's Symphony No. 7, Debussy's two nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals," and also the French composer's "The Sea."

For the Sunday concert, concluding Series A, Leonard Berstein will conduct at 3 p. m. The program will include Brahms' Symphony No. 4, Harold Shapero's Adagio from his Symphony for Classical Orchestra, David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" and Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" with Ellabelle Davis as soprano soloist.

Meanwhile, the music of Bach is continuing at the Berkshire Music Center, with a performance of "The Art of the Fugue" by the Roth String Quartet today and the playing Friday by the student orchestra of concertos for two, three and four pianos and for two violins.

At 10 a. m. Saturday, the first of three public rehearsals by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place in the Shed, the proceeds to be contributed to the orchestra's pension fund.

More than 23,000 persons attended the Bach-Mozart series and by the time the first main festival program starts tomorrow, some 43,000 will have attended the 28 musical events so far. Judging from the current rate of attendance and reservations, the festival management calculates that last year's overall attendance of 161,000 will be reached again this season.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 238,914) (S 178,041)
This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 23 1950

Three one-day, round-trip Sunday excursions from New York to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood have been announced by the New Haven Railroad to supplement its four-day, all-expense trips to see and hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform its Summer concerts in the Music Shed; under direction of Serge Koussevitzky and guest conductors Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho. A round-trip fare of $6.85 includes transportation, general admission and taxes. The first excursion is announced for next Sunday.

[46]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 54,383)
This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
JUL 22 1950

Comic Opera Composed by Ibert To Have American Debut August

The opera Le Roi d'Yvetot by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood this summer by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Centre, Serge Koussevitsky, director, on August 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood. The King of Yvetot is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique in Paris, January 6, 1930, and has since been given in Dusseldorf, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

The one-act opera The Jumping Frog by Lukas Foss of the Tanglewood faculty, based on the short story of Mark Twain, will also be produced in the theatre at Tanglewood.

Jan Popper will be acting head of the Opera Department this summer in the absence on leave of Boris Goldovsky, who will continue in an advisory capacity. Additions to the faculty of the Opera Department are Philipe de Rosier (stage design), F. Cowles Strickland who will join Sarah Caldwell as instructor of stage directing and Arnold Sundgaard who will instruct in the writing of librettos. Mr. Sundgaard is the librettist of Kurt Weill's Down In The Valley. Jan Meyerowitz has been reappointed to instruct in operatic repertoire; Leo van Witsen (costumes), Felix Wolfes (coaching).

The operatic, as well as the orchestral, choral and chamber music performances by the students of the Berkshire Music Centre, are open by invitation to those who endorse this educational project of this orchestra by joining the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Centre. Friends are also invited to a cycle of four Bach concerts, to be presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and three organ recitals in the Shed by E. Power Biggs, likewise devoted to the music of Bach, the 200th anniversary of whose death occurs July 29.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 9,012)
This Clipping From
ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.
TELEGRAM
JUL 16 1950

Music

At 5 o'clock this afternoon in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Henry Cook, Episcopal organist-choirmaster, will present the third in his series of summer recitals.

He will be assisted in his program by Lucy Van Martin of Tarboro, soprano, and Helen Merriam Thorp, contralto.

The final recital in the group of four will be played Sunday afternoon, July 30.

The public has been invited to hear the programs.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival is in progress. The six weeks' session under Serge Koussevitsky offers music lovers generous selections of Bach and Mozart conducted by the master himself. Guest conductors for the Music Shed concerts will be Victor De Sabata, Leonard Bernstein, and Eleazar de Carvalho.

On the summer music schedule is a production of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Roi d'Yvetot," to be presented by the Berkshire opera department in early August for the first time in the United States. Lukas Foss's "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County" is also to be given.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of Bach's death a series of concerts of Bach's music will be offered during the summer. The artists include James Friskin, pianist; Alexander Schneider, in the six suites for violin alone; the Ruth Quartet in Roy Harris's arrangement of "The Art of the Fugue," Harris and an instrumental group in "The Musical Offering;" E. Power Biggs in recital of Bach's organ music.

Two contemporary works not yet heard in New York — David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" and Giorgio Federico Ghedini's "Piano concertante" — are to be played on the festival programs.

WATER GATE SERIES

In connection with the National capital's sesquicentennial celebration, the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington is giving twelve concerts at the Water Gate this month.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 15 1950

Two Bach Concerts Listed for Week-End

Third and Fourth in Series to be Given at Tanglewood Tonight, Tomorrow.

The third and fourth in the series of six preliminary Bach-Mozart concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be presented this evening and tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox.

This evening at 8:15 o'clock in the theater-concert hall, Serge Koussevitzky will direct members of the Boston symphony orchestra in a program that includes Bach's fourth and sixth Brandenburg concertos, and Hugh Ross, head of the choral department at the Berkshire Music center, will conduct the orchestra and festival chorus in two of the cantatas by Bach, the 161st and the 80th.

Tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, the Bach program will include the first and second suites, the E major violin concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the 12th and 50th cantatas. The two concerts like those that opened the season at Tanglewood last week-end will commemorate the 200th anniversary of Bach's death. The concerts next week-end will be devoted to the works of Mozart. They will be followed, starting Thursday evening, July 27, by the nine major symphonic concerts of the 1950 season in the big Tanglewood music shed.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,441)
This Clipping From KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 21 1950

Berkshire Center Will Present Two Music Premieres

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 20 — Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music Center will perform the world premieres of two works at concerts July 24 and August 7. Howard Shanet, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and conductor of the 50-piece orchestra of Department Five, said that both works had been written for presentation by his group.

The first concert by this student orchestra will be performed at Tanglewood July 24, and will feature the first performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." Manfred Hecht, who will sing the title role in Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot" at Tanglewood a week later, will be the baritone. The Moussorgsky text was translated from the Russian by Maria de Pasquale, niece of Dr. Koussevitzky, and by Alfred Weiss, a student in the libretto-writing department. Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Douglas Moore's Symphony in A will round out the program. Mr. Moore, a professor at Columbia University, has been invited to attend, and is expected to be present.

The concert on August 7, again under Shanet's direction, will feature "Music for Strings," by Manuel Mahler-Kalkstein. This piece was earmarked for a Tanglewood unveiling by its Israeli composer last year. Handel's Royal Fireworks Music, Hindemith's Morning Music, a toccata by Bonelli, and Brahms' Second Symphony will complete the program.

These two concerts, as are all events at Tanglewood, are open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and will be held in the Music Shed at 4:30 p. m.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 36,676)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 17 1950

3,000 Attend Concert At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., July 17—Rain clouds and damp grounds failed to discourage the nearly 3,000 Bach devotees who turned out for the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Bach-Mozart cycle at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

Two all-Mozart programs next week end will conclude the annual small orchestra prelude to the three week schedule of the full ensemble in its Berkshire Festival series.

Led by the ever-sprightly Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who continues as director of the Tanglewood festival although he has retired as regular conductor for the Boston Symphony, the orchestra yesterday offered two finely-detailed dance suites, the E major violin concerto, and two choral cantatas.

Ruth Posselt was soloist in the violin concerto, setting a vigorous but precise pace for the 13 string musicians who comprised the entire orchestra for this brilliant little work.

A fabulously long and trying flute solo was carried off by Georges Laurent in the Suite No. 2 in B Minor, Bach in a light and melodic spirit. Delightful also was the opening C major Suite No. 1, in which flutes and aboe conduct a lively interplay of musical conversation.

Students Join Orchestra

The Festival Chorus, students at the Berkshire Music Center, joined the orchestra for the two cantatas closing the program.

Soloists in the sorrowful "Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen," part of an early draft of the B minor Mass, were Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass. Double chorus and orchestra were summoned for the impassioned and brassy "Nun ist das Heil and die Kraft," Bach's interpretation of the heavenly battle between St. Michael and Satan.

Hugh Ross, festival choral director, was called out to share bows with Dr. Koussevitsky as the conductor took his curtain calls. Tanned and alert, Koussevitsky still appears to appreciate his audiences as much as they do his unornamented direction of fine music.

FZ.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS
FREE PRESS
7/15/50

Fifth Year Of Berkshire Music School

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., —The friends of the Berkshire Music enter will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, their chairman, and the group will attend nearly forty musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music enter is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends of the enter are a unique means of uspport for a school. The group is composed of persons who have enough interest in music and in Director Serge Koussevitzky's school to contribute financial support as they are able, and also to make up the audiences for the students, who are thus given an opportunity to be heard by many music lovers at a stage in their development when most musicians have no audience.

This summer the Friends will again comprise the audience which will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, as it has in three previous summers. Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be given two performances by the Opera Department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced at the enter for Friends' audiences. Thirty-four other concerts and recitals will have been played for them before the end of the season in mid-August.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 19,168) (S 38,362)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 18

Bach Program Enjoyed At Tanglewood

(Special to The Republican)

Lenox, Mass., July 17—Rain clouds and damp grounds failed to discourage the nearly 3,000 Bach devotees who turned out for the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Bach-Mozart cycle at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

Two all-Mozart programs next week end will conclude the annual small orchestra prelude to the three week schedule of the full ensemble in its Berkshire Festival series.

Led by the ever-sprightly Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who continues as director of the Tanglewood festival although he has retired as regular conductor for the Boston Symphony, the orchestra yesterday offered two finely-detailed dance suites, the E major violin concerto, and two choral cantatas.

Ruth Posselt was soloist in the violin concerto, setting a vigorous but precise pace for the 13 string musicians who comprised the entire orchestra for this brilliant little work.

A fabulously long and trying flute solo was carried off by Georges Laurent in the Suite No. 2 in B Minor, Bach in a light and melodic spirit. Delightful also was the opening C major Suite No. 1, in which flutes and aboe conduct a lively interplay of musical conversation.

Students Join Orchestra

The Festival Chorus, students at the Berkshire Music Center, joined the orchestra for the two cantatas closing the program.

Soloists in the sorrowful "Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen," part of an early draft of the B minor Mass, were Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass. Double chorus and orchestra were summoned for the impassioned and brassy "Nun ist das Heil and die Kraft," Bach's interpretation of the heavenly battle between St. Michael and Satan.

Hugh Ross, festival choral director, was called out to share bows with Dr. Koussevitsky as the conductor took his curtain calls. Tanned and alert, Koussevitsky still appears to appreciate his audiences as much as they do his unornamented direction of fine music.

FZ.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,547)
This Clipping From
ROME, N. Y.
SENTINEL
8 1950

Hawthorne, Tanglewood and Lenox

Apropos of the opening of this season's music festival of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, The Boston Daily Globe has printed an amazingly garbled narrative intended to cover the history of Lenox, Mass., from the beginning; but largely dealing with the period of the great summer estates. Among the hitherto unsuspected "facts" appears the statement: "The Berkshires were one of America's first great resort sections. Tanglewood was built in 1840 and was one of the first big summer homes in the region."

When Nathaniel Hawthorne went to Lenox just a century ago, Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield already had produced or attracted men and women illustrious in a number of callings. Had it not been so the author of "The Scarlet Letter" might never have occupied the tiny red house overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, from which he declared he could "look through a dozen miles of snowflakes" and really did have a most extended and charming view down to the Connecticut hills.

It is not clearly in memory whether Hawthorne styled the cottage "Tanglewood" or the name already applied to a nearby property; but in his "Tanglewood Tales" he produced for children stories of the surrounding countryside, including October Mountain. It is, on the contrary, very clearly in mind how the little red house looked in one far-off season and then how for years afterward the stone chimney that survived the fire was regularly pointed out as a literary shrine to all visitors.

Hawthorne made the name Tanglewood famous. In a list of Lenox "cottage" owners of 1906 Richard C. Dix so styled his country home. It may have been about then or earlier that the area about the ruins of the Hawthorne house was assembled for an "estate" and the highway changed so that an oldtimer on a visit became bewildered as to his geography. However, today let no attendant at the music festival imagine that he is in anything resembling Hawthorne's [illegible]bridge Bowl is indeed down below—under the so-called Indian name of Mahkeenac—and it is doubtless possible to see past Monument Mountain to the Dome. Yet the whole atmosphere of the Lenox neighborhood has undergone a series of evolutions since Hawthorne's day—which began about 1850 and terminated only two or three years later.

From having been a county with widely scattered homes of much dignity housing numerous writers, preachers, lawyers and other celebrities, such as the famous Field family down on its hill between the Bowl and Stockbridge street, Berkshire came to figure in the big city newspapers as the seat of wealth and fashion in a setting of expensive residences built ostentatiously for entertaining that would catch the attention of the resort editors.

Such building extended over into the first years of the present century. First, as it would seem, the disinclination of sons and daughters to carry on when their parents died, threw estates upon the market to realize only a fraction of the money expended upon their development. But the newly rich of this later day did not commonly wish to buy the work of others; they preferred to take virgin or at least common farm soil and erect their own mansions.

After that came taxes and a change of social customs the country over. It is true a number of the Berkshire palaces have become schools or religious retreats. But superficially the county is the same—even though the trolley also has come and gone. The hills, the glades and the valleys are still there, and the view from Bald Head, immediately overlooking the Tanglewood music shed and Stockbridge Bowl, must be as bewitching as in olden days, though it is not known if the top can be reached by motor as was so often accomplished by the now despised horse and buggy.

—o—

Fame! As Saturday's Tanglewood concert neared its close, three soldiers from the 43d National Guard that stopped overnight at Lee strolled up to the ticket gate. They'd taxi-ed over from Lee, because someone said there was a festival going. The men thought it was a kind of carnival! When last seen, they were back-tracking toward the main gate; a kind of strategic retreat.

RICHARD V. HAPPEL.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 20,[illegible]50)
This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
NEWS
JUL 13 1950

* * *

The need for a Federal Bureau of Fine Arts has again come to the fore, this time spearheaded by that indefatigible crusader for the arts, Serge Koussevitzky.

The former conductor of the Boston Symphony, who was heard as intermission guest on last Sunday's CBS "Invitation to Music" program airwaved from New York, called upon the government to inaugurate a secretariat of fine arts, in a paper he read at the behest of program host James Fasset.

Previously, Koussevitzky had had two sessions with President Truman concerning the proposed measure, and the president had expressed great interest in it.

Koussevitzky, whose entire history has been a tireless crusade to bring musical culture to all the people, declared, in part:

"The cultural standard of a nation is judged by the development of its art, and especially its musical art. Art needs the support of the state, and the state needs art to fortify and complete its present structure.

"The artists are the leading poles of art; the state is the ground upon which art finds stability. The people of America, and we artists especially, must devote ourselves to the service of humanity. Never before in history has so vast an opportunity been offered to prove this."

In an extemporaneous interview, waxed for Fasset in Koussevitzky's Tanglewood residence, the famous conductor denied the prevalent report that he has accepted the musical director of the Israel Symphony. His heavy engagements as guest conductor throughout the entire world have persuaded him from any further interest in a permanent post.

This, nonetheless, is the man who might now be permanent conductor of our Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra if its board of directors had possessed greater musical acumen and breadth of vision.

A man to whom president listen, to whom the cause of America's musical future is as important as is his own artistic stature throughout the cultivated world.

The facts speak for themselves.

* * *

Music's role in the fie[illegible]apy has gained

Berkshire Eagle Local News
WBEC AM FM
(Monday through Saturday)
7.30 AM 10.30 AM 12.30 PM
6.00 PM 10.30 PM

Second Section

Tanglewood, Salzburg Hookup Planned by 'Voice of America'

TANGLEWOOD — Two members of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center and two musicians in Salzburg, Germany, will carry on a transoceanic conversation, under the auspices of the State Department's "Voice of America" tomorow.

The conversation, which will concern Tanglewood, will be recorded at both ends of the cable. It will be broadcast all over the world. In this country, the conversation may be heard Thursday afternoon at 2 EDT over shortwave bands at 13, 16, and 19 meters.

This broadcast is a part of the informational program carried on by the State Department through its "Voice of America" networks. In April of this year, the undersecretary of state and an assistant undersecretary carried on the first transoceanic conversation between two public officials, when they conversed with the chancellor and vice-chancellor of Austria, over a similar "Voice of America" hookup.

Tomorrow's conversation will be between men at two of the world's greatest centers of symphonic music, the Berkshire Music Center, and the Salzburg Festival. On the American end will be William Kroll, noted violinist and chamber music teacher at Tanglewood, and Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the Tanglewood Opera Department, and opera director at U.C.L.A.

They will talk about Tanglewood with the director of the Mozart Institute in Salzburg, Professor Baumgartner, and the producer and conductor of the Vienna State Opera, Professor Schuh.

Robert Bauer, language reporter for the State Department, will moderate the discussion in the broadcast, which will be made in Lenox.

The commemorative programs of music by Bach, performed at both centers of music this summer, will also be discussed. At Tanglewood, this comprehensive presentation of Bach music included 61 compositions, in honor of the composer's death just 200 years ago, and closes Thursday with the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Bach's B minor Mass, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor.

The broadcast will take the form mainly of questions from Salzburg about the programs this summer at Tanglewood, the unique character of Tanglewood as a combination of music school and summer home of the Boston Symphonk Orchestra, and of school activities here.

Tanglewood

Mrs. Coolidge To Attend Concert Tomorrow Night

TANGLEWOOD—The final Coolidge concert in the current Tanglewood season will be given tomorrow night at 8.15 in the theatre-concert hall. As in the case of the previous four that were heard this summer it will consist of chamber music composed by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Among the works to be performed tomorrow night by many well known musicians, some of whom are principals in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the "Musical Offering," based on a theme by Frederick the Great.

The concert will be under the direction of Alexander Schneider, who was heard at Tanglewood last week in two concerts of solo violin works. Playing with him will be Erwin Bodky, harpsichord, Georges Laurent, flute, Alfred Zighera, cello, Alfred Krips, violin, Joseph de Pasquale, viola, Eugen Lehner, viola, and Mischa Nieland, cello.

This will be the first time this summer that Mrs. Coolidge will have attended any concerts the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress has sponsored. Illness has kept her in her hotel.

This program and the presentation of Bach's B Minor Mass Thursday night will bring to a close the celebration of the 200th anniversary of Bach's death which has been taking place at Tanglewood throughout the summer. During the summer 61 works by Bach have been performed.

Tanglewood Traffic Problem Has Not Yet Been Solved

So far the efforts made to improve traffic conditions at Tanglewood have seemed measurably successful. Additional traffic officers, inside the grounds and out, and the strenuous attempts to keep traffic moving on most occasions have operated to empty the grounds faster than before.

Whether the methods used do not pan out when the crowd exceeds a certain number or whether special conditions prevailed we do not know. But at any rate the system seemed to fall down Sunday afternoon. Long before the concert began, people approaching from the west and south found themselves in lines creeping at a snail's pace. When finally they reached the grounds they found the western parking lot full, and had to proceed to the main more easterly one, which they found nearly empty. When the time came to leave, they were held up in a stationary line, because all the eastbound traffic which was concentrated in the western parking lot, had to be allowed to pass the gate they had to use. Some were unable to move until the west parking lot was pretty well thinned out.

Obviously the greatest waster of time, and cause of delay and congestion is cross-traffic. If all the cars heading north and east could leave exits at the easterly end, and all those going south and west by exits at their end of the ground, the dispersal after each performance would be much smoother and quicker, with no halts necessary.

Two suggestions which it seems to us could be worked out have been made to relieve this condition. One is that the cars be classified and parked according to the direction in which they were leaving, and all cars leaving by a particular exit compelled to go in the specified direction.

The second idea is a corollary to this—for a time after concerts traffic along certain roads should travel in one direction. Such a rule would undoubtedly inconvenience a number of individuals, but here is a case where the majority interest should rule.

There is no doubt that better days are ahead and that the Lenox by-pass will do much to relieve congestion and speed the parting Tanglewood guests. But it is going to be no panacea; when 8000 to 14,000 are trying to get away from a small area at the same time, nothing can prevent congestion. The thing that would do most to help would be to eliminate cross-traffic and thus allow the cars to proceed unimpeded by halts in the direction they want to go. That being the case, one cannot help wondering if a little education and a few signs in the grounds could not bring about that happy condition.

THE ECHO

THIS WEEK AT
TANGLEWOOD

Today, Tues., 4:30 at Music Hall
Small Choir
8:15 at the Theatre
Opera "Le Roi D'Yvetot"
Wed: 8:15 at Theatre
Coolidge Concert
Thurs: 5:00 and 8:15 at Shed
Mon: 4:30 at the Shed
Fri: from 6:00 to 11:00 p. m.
Tanglewood on Jarade
Sat: 3:00 at the Shed
Dept. II Orchestra
Sun: 10:00 at Theatre
Chamber Music
3:00 at the Shed

TANGLEWOOD ENTER

FINAL WEEK

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf", this Friday evening.

Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening.

THIS WEEK AT
TANGLEWOOD

Tonight, Tues., 8:15 at Theatre
Alexander Schneider, violin
Wed: 8:15 at Theatre
Alexander Schneider, violin
Thurs: 8:15 at Shed
Festival Concert
Fri: 8:15 at the Shed
Dept. II Orchestra
Sat: 8:15 at the Shed
Festival Concert
Sun: 10:00 at Music Hall
Chamber Music
3:00 at the Shed
Festival Concert
Mon: 4:30 at the Shed
Dept. V Orchestra
8:15 at Theatre
Opera "Le Roi D'Yvetot"

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

Ibert's Opera Heard

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—Jacques Ibert's third opera, "The King of Yvetot," was warmly received in its first American performance last night by the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department in the center's Theater-Concert Hall here. There were fervent plaudits for the composer, who is a member of the center's composition faculty for this summer; for the members of the student cast, and for Dr. Jan Popper, the Opera Department's acting director, who conducted.

The twenty-year-old work is entertaining, in music and text; the score also speaks highly for the craftsmanship of a composer hitherto known in this country mainly in the orchestral field. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse, has an element of amiably presented satire on war and politics. Yvetot, in Normandy, was once an independent state; its king, in Béranger's famous ballad, was an easy-going, pleasant character. In the opera, a dispute with aggressive neighbors leads the men of Yvetot to call for war; the king points out that they have no army and no arms. But the men march off, only to return, badly beaten up; one of the two rival innkeepers leads a revolt against the king, proclaiming that the citizenry was badly armed and badly led.

The third of the four acts, however, finds the women complaining against the new state of affairs; farming and domestic chores both suffer. Jeanneton, a servant girl in love with the king, figures prominently in the plan which brings the king back to the throne with little opposition, and becomes his queen.

The score is continuous, except for a few spoken passages; it is distinctly melodic, and, although the tunes are not, on the whole, readily rememberable, many passages have a distinct charm and persuasive atmosphere. The form, with no lack of arias, ariosos, concerted vocal music and lively choruses, is conservative; the same can be said of the musical ideas and harmonies, which suggest an earlier period in French opera than that of the late 1920s. The orchestral and vocal music are well balanced; the instrumental writing often has a notable descriptive effectiveness, and the element of satire appears in the music as well as the text, with one or two touches of parody. As a whole, "The King of Yvetot" serves its purpose well, although it is not one of those works which mark a milestone in operatic history or herald or carry on any new and significant musical trend. But it has coherence, tunefulness, momentum and expressive variety.

Henry Reese's translation of the French text was presented with a praiseworthy degree of intelligibility, and the production was one of the best integrated of those presented by the center's operatic forces thus far. The vocal standard was high among the members of the cast, headed by Manfred Hecht as the k' , Ewan Harbrecht as Jeanneton, Sumner Crockett and Fernand Martel as the rival innkeepers, Robert Minser as the Elder and Rosalind Elias as Gazette. The orchestra under Dr. Popper gave a polished, spirited and well co-ordinated performance, and unity and spirit also marked the choral singing. The stage director, F. Cowles Strickland, had his crowds move about the stage without giving any hint that its dimensions are limited. The opera was repeated tonight with a few changes in the cast.

For the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last program of the current Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next Sunday afternoon, Serge Koussevitsky has substituted Prokofieff's fifth symphony for his originally announced sixth symphony. Brahms' first symphony, as originally announced, completes the program.

A new Israeli work, Manuel Mahler Kalkstein's "Music for Strings" had its first performance at Tanglewood in a concert of the Berkshire Music Center's Department 5 student orchestra under Howard Shanet's direction. The composer who is business manager of the Israel Philharmonic wrote the work for Mr. Shanet, and the centers students last spring, when Shanet was in Israel as Serge Koussevitzky's assistant on his tour. In four movements, and without a descriptive title, it takes twenty minutes to play. A national flavor is apparent mainly in the last movement of a work which is often persuasive if rather over extended.

AMUSEMENTS

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES]

IBERT OPERA GIVEN AT BERKSHIRE FETE

First of Two Performances of Work by French Composer Presented by Students

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7—Jacques Ibert, who has been one of France's gifted men of music for many years, finally got one of his operas produced in America. The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on "Le Roi d'Yvetot" here tonight in the theatre Concert Hall in the first of two performances and did well enough with it to make clear that M. Ibert writes for the stage with a delicate, witty and humane voice of his own.

M. Ibert, who is this year's distinguished guest on the composition faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, has been on hand to guide the young men and women who sing and play his opera, and he was in the audience to see the outcome of their efforts.

It was a brave show the young students, abetted by a few professional artists, put on. "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is not easy to do, and the Center's opera department has been busy with other productions. The company had five weeks at the most in which to study, rehearse and mount the opera.

"Le Roi d'Yvetot," which has a book by Jean Limozin and André de la Tourrasse, and which was sung in a workable translation by Henry Reese, pokes gentle fun at man's preoccupation with affairs of state.

The king of Yvetot, a likeable soul, is deposed by his equally likable subjects in the name of liberty. When the womenfolk find that their men, now running the state, no longer have time for them or work, they rebel. The king, it seems, was a useful fellow to have around after all and he is restored. There is also a love story between the king and a serving girl to round out this simple tale.

It is not, in all conscience, much of a story, and the satire is so gentle that it all but blows away in violent times like ours. "Le Roi d'Yvetot" was written twenty years ago. Did we have more time and appetite for soft-voiced, glancing political satire in those days?

It does not matter. The story would not be enough for an evening in the theatre. The burden rests on the music, and the music carries it in gay and resourceful fashion. Ibert writes with a professional's skill. He can compose sweet tunes and rousing choruses, and his orchestra can support the action as well as weave a magical spell of its own.

The concluding scene of the third act is perhaps the loveliest thing in the comic opera. A sustained nocturne, it is both a tender love scene and an evocation of the night beside a river bank. Ibert's use of woodwinds here has a poetry that seems to be a special talent of the French.

There are places in the opera where the musical line seems dry, but the composer is apt to redeem them in the next moment with a scene that has bounce and rhythmic vitality or with another that is fresh and lyrical.

In fairness to M. Ibert, his opera must not be judged too strictly by what was, at bottom, a student performance. The young singers were full of good-will and the high spirits of youth, but the French style requires more subtlety and point than they could be expected to muster. Given a more sharply defined performance, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" might not seem thin in places at all.

Jan Popper, who is in charge of Tanglewood's opera department this season, had charge of the preparation and conducted the performance with animation. He did an expert job, as did his colleagues, F. Cowles Strickland, stage director; G. Philippe de Rosier, in charge of settings and lights; Leo Van Witsen, costume designer.

Manfred Hecht sang intelligently and musically in the title role

Opera

U.S. Premiere of Ibert Opera Presented in Tanglewood Hall

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The first American performance of Jacques Ibert's comic opera "Le Roi d'Ivetot" last night in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood was the climax of the school term of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. The eminent French composed who has been a guest faculty member of the composition department was present and was called to the stage at the conclusion to share the general applause and division of honors.

The text is by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse but it was sung in English to the translation of Henry Reese. The opera is based on a semi-legendary-historical story. While it is patently improbable and frankly burlesque and one is aware of the theatrical world of pretense, there was so little of redeeming wit or build-up of sympathy for the characters or interest in the situations that attention was retained with difficulty.

Ibert writes with animation and zest. There is but a short eight-bar introduction before the curtain rises on a brightly painted and attractively designed old French village set. The orchestral writing is especially inviting and favorable for voices. The stage is peopled with numerous principals and a large number of townsmen and women most of the time who churn in ordered seething. The stage direction was well done and the costumes were colorfully attractive, particularly those of the ladies; the men were on the grotesque side and the king went forth to battle somewhat like the captain of a degree team of a secret society.

After an early recalcitrance between orchestra and stage, the conductor, Jan Popper, regained control of his forces and the well-trained and vocally-rich chorus sang Ibert's grateful assignments with verve and amplitude. The choral writing is often involved yet the intricacies were surmounted without difficulty or mishap and gave body to the underlying character of the piece.

To Ewan Harbrecht as the heroine Jeanneton fell the best individual vocal opportunity when in the first act she has a long aria in which she used her easy and limpid voice with distinction. Manfred Hecht as the king and Robert Minser as the elder benefitted by the abundant parts Ibert had written for their roles and their vocal accomplishments were cordially appreciated by their audience but the ludicrous character of their parts could not give them even theatrical credibility.

Ibert has given a forward movement to the whole opera by writing for the most part with definite and gaily vivacious rhythms. Dr. Popper kept the production moving briskly by a spirited beat and a control of all his forces well in hand. Ibert's music is pleasantly contemporary in style, and reveals him as a mature and facile master of contemporary idiom. His orchestral writing was very apt and inviting for the vocal business of the stage.

In the third act in a scene "near the river" he takes advantage of the accidental (?) presence of an ensemble of washwomen, unusually handsome, by the way, too, to give them some happy exercises in chorale singing. With theatrical license which requires no certificate he jumps back a couple of hundred years for some excellent part-song work but doesn't hesitate to rejoin his contemporaries as soon as a male re-enters the scene. The part writing for the many occasions when the stage was densely occupied was invariably successful and was probably the most engaging single feature of the whole production. The huge cast shared the cordial approval of the audience at the end with the composer, the conductor, with F. Cowles Strickland, the stage director and their various assistants.

[49]

At Tanglewood

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature the following Berkshire Festival concerts and major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center:

"Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in an unusual program, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" on Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening the opera department at Tanglewood under Jan Popper will present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot."

On Wednesday the bicentennial celebration for Johann Sebastian Bach will continue with the performances of the last of the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B-minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 o'clock and at 8:15.

Friday evening, as part of "Tanglewood on Parade," Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony and Dvořák's "New World" Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi," in the afternoon. Other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvalho will make his only appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos's "Choros 10" will complete the program.

On Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony.

the week beginning Monday, Aug. 14.

Berkshire Music Center

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of its most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf", this Friday evening.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this 13th season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5:00 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy", Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And on next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

The Philadelphia Inquirer

MONDAY MORNING, AUGUST 7, 1950

George E. Sokolsky

Mrs. Roosevelt's Role In 'Tanglewood' Festival

I HAD intended to invite my friend, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire Hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

* * *

THIS is a wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

At night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometimes annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude.

As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the thespian.

* * *

I DO NOT share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31, it brings a lump to the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American composed music, conducted by Americans.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood. This got itself into a snarl. Koussevitzky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

* * *

HE has brought to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

[50]

Monitor

Concerts in the Berkshires

Victor de Sabata Acclaimed In Tanglewood Appearances

By Paul Giuliana

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Victor de Sabata, Italian director of opera and symphony, made the first of two guest appearances here in the Shed on Thursday evening.

He opened his program with Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture and included such perennial favorites as the "Unfinished" Symphony of Schubert and Wagner's "Prelude and Liebestod" from "Tristan und Isolde." Morton Gould's colorful "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra provided a contemporary American composition to the concert, while the feature work, le grand pièce de résistance, was Respighi's symphonic poem, "Pines of Rome."

By the time Mr. de Sabata had finished conducting the Brahms, it seemed evident that here was a man able to interpret the music as though he were playing with skill and control on a great instrument. His Schubert emerged with Toscanini-like clarity and refinement, and his startling crescendos, though charged with tremendous energy, never got out of hand.

The audience also enjoyed Mr. de Sabata's conductorial gymnastics that mounted to impassioned gyrations in the Respighi. His exercise amused the audience, especially in the jazz idiom of the Gould composition. Quite the opposite effect was created by his awesome pauses between Wagner's "Prelude" and "Liebestod." The audience rose to give the conductor an ovation.

* * *

If the first concert was received with acclaim, the second one on Saturday evening created a near frenzy of enthusiasm. After the final strains of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which ended the program, the listeners stood up, applauded, and cheered for more than 15 minutes.

In the cause of these demonstrations lies the secret of true expression manifested in sound. The E-flat Symphony of Mozart has probably been enjoyed many times by this huge eudience, yet on this cool evening there was an originality, a spontaneity, a freshness about the music that does not always appear. Many conductors present a fine reproduction of such music as Bach's Sinfonia from the "Christmas Oratorio," which opened the program; but in the Bach, the Beethoven, and especially the Mozart, Mr. de Sabata seems to have had the faculty of unveiling the original. There was less distance between composer and listener than is usually the case. Also the beauty and joyousness was not reserved for a comparatively few professional musicians, but the clear transparency made them available to everyone present.

* * *

A new composition on the program was "Pezzo Concertante" for two solo violins and viola with orchestra by the contemporary Italian composer, Giorgio Ghedini. The solo instruments were played by Messrs. Burgin, Krips, and de Pasquale of the orchestra.

Much interest was provided by the use of the solo instruments in dialogue with the main orchestra. It cannot be said that this music is great, but the structure is sound, and the most effective portion came toward the end where a chorale by the horns was contrasted with the obbligato of the first solo violin. The soloists played well.

* * *

When it was time for Sunday's concert to begin, the rain came down in a deluge. Leonard Bernstein, who was already on the podium, stepped down to allow a noisy group to seek shelter in the back of the great Shed.

After a delay of about 20 minutes, the first half of the program, devoted to music by Ravel, began with the playing of the "Mother Goose" Suite. The Concerto for Piano and Orchestra was preceded by Ravel's own orchestral transcription of one of the piano pieces from "Miroirs" entitled "Alborada del Gracioso."

Mr. Bernstein's interpretation of the "Mother Goose" was delightfully descriptive, and his playing of "Alborada del Gracioso" was charged with wit and buffoonery.

* * *

The feat of the afternoon came when Mr. Bernstein played the solo part of the Concerto while conducting from the piano. He discharged both functions with ease and mastery. The most beautiful playing came in the cantilena-like second movement when the piano has solo passages. Mr. Bernstein played with a beautiful tone; his ornaments were clear and controlled. Although the last movement is based on a jazz idiom, it presented grace and lightness entirely impressionistic in mood. It abounded in good taste, so typical of Ravel.

After intermission the program concluded with excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet," dramatic symphony by Hector Berlioz.

Mr. Bernstein gave emotional warmth and vitality to the programistic score. The treatment of the main theme, rich and romantic—so often beautifully sung by the cello section in the first portion and imitated by other sections of the orchestra in the middle portions—infused the work with life and cohesion. Mr. Bernstein and the orchestra brought the afternoon to an exciting close by a brilliant performance of the "Great Feast at the Capulets."

Mrs. FDR's Appearance Friday Is Second at Festival Benefit

TANGLEWOOD — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host for the second time to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt Friday when she appears with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," at the Tanglewood on Parade benefit for the Berkshire Music Center. The former First Lady was here before in 1941 when she spoke at a benefit show for the USO and the British War Relief. She has also attended other concerts in the Music Shed during the past few years.

After arriving at the Pittsfield Airport Friday morning at 10, Mrs. Roosevelt will rehearse at 11 with the orchestra and conductor. In the afternoon the RCA-Victor Company will make a recording of the performance and at 8:15 that evening the benefit performance will be given for the public in the Music Shed. Mrs. Roosevelt will return to her Hyde Park, N.Y., home that night.

Governor Paul A. Dever, who will spend the week end at the Curtis Hotel, will attend the benefit Friday night.

Other events at this year's Tanglewood on Parade include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky, of Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony.

Tickets are of three kinds: Box seats, seats in the reserved sections in front of the boxes, and unreserved seats. Most of the boxes have already been sold, and the ticket sale in the reserved sections is well along. Purchasers of box seats and reserved section seats in advance of the performance will also be able to see a production of Puccini's humorous opera, "Gianni Schicchi," at 4:30 PM. Other student activities also will be on tap for concert-goers, starting at 6, and waltzing on the lawn will conclude the festivities after the concert.

The door prizes this year will be headed by a first prize consisting of an acrosonic piano, donated by the Baldwin Piano Company. Second prize will be a generous package of recordings of the RCA-Victor Company, mainly of performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Those planning to penetrate the lower wave bands for the Tanglewood-Salzburg broadcast by the "Voice of America" tomorrow afternoon should be linguistically prepared, since it will all be in German . . .

Babbitt

SOLOISTS CONFER WITH KOUSSEVITZKY: The four soloists who will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow to open the final series of concerts at the Berkshire Festival, confer with the conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, before rehearsals in the Music Shed for the performance of Bach's mass in B minor which will be given in two parts tomorrow. The first part will open at 5 PM and the second at 8.15 PM. With Koussevitzky are, at left, Eunice Alberts and James Pease; at right, David Lloyd and Adele Addison.

Vets Are Guests At Tanglewood

Fourteen patients from the Northampton Veterans' Hospital attended Sunday's concert at Tanglewood as guests of the concert association. They were transported by the special Red Cross service. Kenneth Thompson and Miss Ruth Bassett, members of the Red Cross E and I corps, planned the trip with Miss Ruth Foster, Red Cross field director at the hospital and Lewis Spobert, hospital attendant.

Reserved seats were furnished for the group by George E. Judd, manager of the Festival. Miss Bassett's car, the local chapter's station wagon and a limousine from the Yellow Cab Company were used for transportation. After the concert, the veterans were given a picnic supper at Wahconah Falls. The supper was furnished by Mr. Spobert in co-operation with the hospital.

[51]

TANGLEWOOD SOLOISTS—Pictured here with Serge Koussevitzky are the soloists in Thursday's performance of Bach's B minor mass at the Berkshire Festival's last series of the season. Left to right are Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; David Lloyd, tenor, and Adele Addison, soprano; all pictured after a rehearsal in Tanglewood's Music Shed, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After the Thursday concert, which is given in two parts, at 5 o'clock and at 8.15, three major events remain on the Tanglewood schedule. On Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present "Tanglewood on Parade," featuring Mrs. Roosevelt in "Peter and the Wolf." On Saturday night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." And on Sunday, the final Berkshire Festival concert of this 13th season will find Dr. Koussevitzky conducting Brahms' first and Prokofieff's fifth symphonies.

Letters

Appreciation

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

My wife and I were most favorably impressed in our first visit to the Berkshires brought about by the attraction of Tanglewood.

We had occasion to go to the information center at Lenox to get accommodations at about 5.30 PM. We had to stand in line for about 15 minutes and overheard the attendants telephoning to the various rooming houses to get rooms. We both wondered if we would be given the kind treatment given to those ahead of us. The two ladies in attendance were just as courteous and after about five telephone calls we were placed in a lovely home.

We want to thank publicly the two efficient and courteous ladies and also the Lenox Kiwanis Club which, I understand, sponsored the center.

JAMES McGOWAN.
393 21st Street,
Whitestone, L.I.

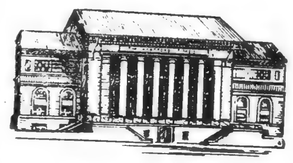
Bach's B Minor Mass At Tanglewood Today

The final week end of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begins today with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The soloists with the orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center's chorus are Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. The work will be given in two parts, the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" at 4 o'clock and the rest of the Mass at 8:15.

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center runs from 6 to 11 o'clock tomorrow night. The Center's various departments will demonstrate their activities; Dr. Koussevitzky will then conduct the orchestra in a concert including Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as the narrator. Haydn's "Oxford" symphony will complete the program. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony's regular festival program at 8:15 Saturday night, and Dr. Koussevitzy will conduct the closing program at 3 Sunday afternoon.

In the program of the Center's senior student orchestra at 3 p. m. Saturday, Howard Shanet will conduct the first performance of Jan Meyerowitz's setting of Mallarme's "Herodiade" for orchestra with soprano and contralto soloists. The Center's last concert of the season at Tanglewood is a chamber music program at 10 Sunday morning.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

THE HARTFORD TIMES, FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1950

AUG 4 1950

DeSabata Well Received at Tanglewood

Tenth program of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening, Victor de Sabata conducting.

BRAHMS, Academic Festival Overture, opus 80.
SCHUBERT, "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor.
RESPIGHI, Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome."
MORTON GOULD, "Spirituals" for String Choir and Orchestra.
WAGNER, Prelude and Love Death from Tristan and Isolde.

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The Tanglewood audience is about the most resonant you'll find anywhere. It accepts with relish any sort of music, new or old. It likes to mix a bit of lusty shouting with its applause. It wants to be pleased.

Victor de Sabata, interim conductor, was the beneficiary of this responsiveness last night. His listeners were most cordial and showed it. He got the glad hand from the orchestra. He beamed gratefully.

De Sabata, white-haired, florid of countenance, is slightly lame. Though his gestures are occasionally convulsive, he conducts for the most part in a relaxed state and always with a dignity which grows out of the fusion of man and music.

* * *

HE EXTENDED upon a quality which has been manifesting itself in the Boston Orchestra and that is its legato—a flow which has the undemarcated continuity of a quiet river. It had a natural, level-seeking urge which erased time. A piece was neither long nor short: it was inevitable and predestined. Aesthetically this was a matter of proportion; technically it was a question of producing music so fine grained that the thread of its weaving was imperceptible.

There was a newness about the Brahms Festival Overture which made it something more than a concatenation of student songs. It began slenderly but ended big without noise. Similarly the climaxes in the Repighi "Pines of Rome" were terrential but receivable as musical sound. The Brahms build-up was so exciting that the audience did not wait for the final chords to pour out an ovation.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA played as though released from tension. Both Koussevitzky and Bernstein are hard drivers and the music is apt to get edgey. In the horn performance alone the difference was marked. There was a mellowness, a radiance in tone production which this choir has not evinced in a long while. The whole orchestra breathed more naturally.

De Sabata was obviously charmed by the orchestra. His insistence upon transferring to the players the acclaim delivered to him, seemed to grow less out of mere modesty than a spontaneous admiration for the great instrument upon which he had played.

De Sabata will renew your love for music.

He conducts again Saturday evening: Mozart's B flat Symphony, K 543, Beethoven's Fifth, Bach, Berlioz and a Pezzo Concertante by Ghedini. He will not conduct Sunday afternoon, as erroneously stated here last week, but Leonard Bernstein will present a Ravel-Berlioz program.

—C. E. L.

[52]

TANGLEWOOD SOLOISTS—Pictured here with Serge Koussevitzky are the soloists in Thursday's performance of Bach's B minor mass at the Berkshire Festival's last series of the season. Left to right are Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; David Lloyd, tenor, and Adele Addison, soprano; all pictured after a rehearsal in Tanglewood's Music Shed, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After the Thursday concert, which is given in two parts, at 5 o'clock and at 8.15, three major events remain on the Tanglewood schedule. On Friday, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present "Tanglewood on Parade," featuring Mrs. Roosevelt in "Peter and the Wolf." On Saturday night, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, with Joseph de Pasquale as soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." And on Sunday, the final Berkshire Festival concert of this 13th season will find Dr. Koussevitzky conducting Brahms' first and Prokofieff's fifth symphonies.

Letters

Appreciation

To the [illegible]

My wife and I were most favorably impressed in our first visit to the Berkshires brought about by the attraction of Tanglewood.

We had occasion to go to the information center at Lenox to get accommodations at about 5.30 P.M. We had to stand in line for about 15 minutes and overheard the attendants telephoning to the various rooming houses to get rooms. We both wondered if we would be given the kind treatment given to those ahead of us. The two ladies in attendance were just as courteous and after about five telephone calls we were placed in a lovely home.

We want to thank publicly the two efficient and courteous ladies and also the Lenox Kiwanis Club which, I understand, sponsored the center.

—JAMES McGOWAN.

393 21st Street,
Whitestone, L.I.

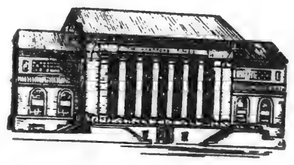
Bach's B Minor Mass At Tanglewood Today

The final week end of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begins today with a performance of Bach's Mass in B minor under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The soloists with the orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center's chorus are Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. The work will be given in two parts, the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" at 4 o'clock and the rest of the Mass at 8:15.

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center runs from 6 to 11 o'clock tomorrow night. The Center's various departments will demonstrate their activities; Dr. Koussevitzky will then conduct the orchestra in a concert including Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as the narrator. Haydn's "Oxford" symphony will complete the program. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony's regular festival program at 8:15 Saturday night, and Dr. Koussevitzy will conduct the closing program at 3 Sunday afternoon.

In the program of the Center's senior student orchestra at 3 p. m. Saturday, Howard Shanet will conduct the first performance of Jan Meyerowitz's setting of Mallarme's "Herodiade" for orchestra with soprano and contralto soloists. The Center's last concert of the season at Tanglewood is a chamber music program at 10 Sunday morning.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

THE HARTFORD TIMES, FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1950

AUG 4 1950

DeSabata Well Received at Tanglewood

Tenth program of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening, Victor de Sabata conducting.

BRAHMS, Academic Festival Overture, opus 80.
SCHUBERT, "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor.
RESPIGHI, Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome."
MORTON GOULD, "Spirituals" for String Choir and Orchestra.
WAGNER, Prelude and Love Death from Tristan and Isolde.

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The Tanglewood audience is about the most resonant you'll find anywhere. It accepts with relish any sort of music, new or old. It likes to mix a bit of lusty shouting with its applause. It wants to be pleased.

Victor de Sabata, interim conductor, was the beneficiary of this responsiveness last night. His listeners were most cordial and showed it. He got the glad hand from the orchestra. He beamed gratefully.

De Sabata, white-haired, florid of countenance, is slightly lame. Though his gestures are occasionally convulsive, he conducts for the most part in a relaxed state and always with a dignity which grows out of the fusion of man and music.

* * *

HE EXTENDED upon a quality which has been manifesting itself in the Boston Orchestra and that is its legato—a flow which has the undemarcated continuity of a quiet river. It had a natural, level-seeking urge which erased time. A piece was neither long nor short: it was inevitable and predestined. Aesthetically this was a matter of proportion; technically it was a question of producing music so fine grained that the thread of its weaving was imperceptible.

There was a newness about the Brahms Festival Overture which made it something more than a concatenation of student songs. It began slenderly but ended big without noise. Similarly the climaxes in the Repighi "Pines of Rome" were terrential but receivable as musical sound. The Brahms build-up was so exciting that the audience did not wait for the final chords to pour out an ovation.

* * *

THE ORCHESTRA played as though released from tension. Both Koussevitzky and Bernstein are hard drivers and the music is apt to get edgey. In the horn performance alone the difference was marked. There was a mellowness, a radiance in tone production which this choir has not evinced in a long while. The whole orchestra breathed more naturally.

De Sabata was obviously charmed by the orchestra. His insistence upon transferring to the players the acclaim delivered to him, seemed to grow less out of mere modesty than a spontaneous admiration for the great instrument upon which he had played.

De Sabata will renew your love for music.

He conducts again Saturday evening: Mozart's B flat Symphony, K 543, Beethoven's Fifth, Bach, Berlioz and a Pezzo Concertante by Ghedini. He will not conduct Sunday afternoon, as erroneously stated here last week, but Leonard Bernstein will present a Ravel-Berlioz program.

—C. E. L.

[52]

Bach Mass To Be Presented In Two Parts at Shed Today

Festival Program Opens at 5 This Afternoon; Evening Performance at 8.15; Three Student Events Listed Over Final Week End

TANGLEWOOD—The final series of concerts at the Berkshire Festival will open this afternoon at 5 in the Music Shed when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's Mass in B minor in two parts, featuring four soloists, Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease. The first part will be given from 5 to 6.30 and the second will open at the regular concert time, 8.15.

Tomorrow, the Tanglewood on Parade program will open at 6 for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, featuring Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the BSO in the program at 8.15, which will also include Haydn's "Oxford" symphony and Dvorak's symphony "From the New World." Mrs. Roosevelt will arrive at 10 tomorrow morning by plane at the Pittsfield Airport and will start rehearsing with the orchestra in the Music Shed at 11.

Saturday night at 8.15 Eleazar de Carvalho will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony in a program of works by Berlioz, Ibert and Villa-Lobos. Dr. Koussevitzky will wind up the Festival season Sunday afternoon at 3 when he will conduct the orchestra in Prokofieff's fifth symphony and Brahms' first symphony.

In addition to the four concerts by the BSO, there will be three student performances—a symphony concert, scenes from operas and a chamber music recital.

Student Activities

Highlighting the three student activities will be a concert given by the Department II orchestra in the Music Shed Saturday afternoon at 3. In addition to works by Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner and Ibert, the student symphony will perform the American premiere of a major work, "Herodiade," by Jan Meyerowitz, scored for soprano, contralto and orchestra. It is based on the poem of the same name by Stéphane Mallarmé. Mr. Meyerowitz, the composer, who has been a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty in the opera department since 1946, will be present Saturday at the premiere.

Howard Shanet, another faculty member, will conduct the orchestra. Sara Carter will sing the title role and Arlouine Goodjohn will sing the role of the nurse. Miss Carter appeared in the Broadway production, "Regina."

Also scheduled for presentation at the Berkshire Music Center Saturday are scenes from grand opera in the theatre concert hall at 1 PM. These scenes will be without costumes or stage sets.

Sunday morning at 10, members of the Department II orchestra will give their final music concert.

The student events are for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Babbitt

'VOICE OF TANGLEWOOD': As part of the U.S. State Department's "Voice of America" program, two representatives of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood carried on a transoceanic conversation with two officials in Salzburg, Germany, yesterday morning from the Lenox Brotherhood Club. Talking in German with the representatives abroad are: At left, Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department at Tanglewood, and at right, William Kroll of the chamber music staff. Between them are, left to right, Robert Bauer, language representative for the State Department's special events department; Lou Ross, State Department engineer, and Walter Ducloux, producer for the State Department and a former conductor at the Salzburg Festival.

Samuel Cooper

Eunice Alberts, contralto soloist in Bach's Mass in B minor, to be presented Thursday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

Music

Coolidge Concert Series Concluded at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Bach program played in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood under the direction of Alexander Schneider was the fifth and last of the series presented to the Berkshire Music Center through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and her foundation in the Library of Congress. The whole series has been of unusual interest not only because of the type of playing that has been heard but also because of the nature of the programs. Some of Bach's rarely heard masterpieces have found a place on these programs.

The last half of the program consisted of the "Musical Offering," a chain of variations Bach wrote on a theme given him by his son Emanuel's patron, King Frederick the Great. It consists of the most clever combinations and complications of his contrapuntal skill and is written for ensembles in which violinist Schneider was assisted by Alfred Krips, violin, Joseph dePasquale and Eugene Lehner, violas, Alfred Zighera and Mischa Nieland, celli, Georges Laurent, flute, and Edwin Bodky, harpsichord. The exposition of the "canon perpetuus" on the harpsichord was made effective by Bodky's spacious clarity As the theme reappears it is given to the other instruments, the assignment for dePasquale's eloquent viola being especially notable. The final cumulative "Ricercare" instead of being an example of technical research, however, became one of the most moving moments of the evening. Each one of the string players gave his last ounce of tonal energy for an effect like a mighty organ.

The concert began with the E minor partita for violin and what Bach calls a "cintinue," really the mere harmonic indications for an accompaniment. It was played last night in a realization for cello and harpsichord. The opening prelude is a fantasia which Schneider made exciting by his approach to Bach as a living art and not as an exhibit in an austere musical museum. The wonder, of course, is that Bach, when played with such stimulation, is as youthful today and as stirring as he was in his lifetime over two centuries ago. Indeed, it is probable that no one executed his works so well at that time as was done, for example, in this Coolidge series.

The G major sonata for flute and violin with the "cintinue" again played by Bodky and Zighera is another fresh and sensitive composition. Schneider's virile tone served him completely in his comprehension and mastery of his material. In the ensuing applause, he stepped to the front of the stage to pay homage to Mrs. Coolidge, who was present for the first time of the series, having been prevented by an indisposition from attending any of the preceding four. The entire audience rose en masse to join with the artists in according her an enthusiastic ovation, not alone for her generosity but for her keen musical astuteness in the selection and arrangement of the programs in which she had such a major part.

Herald Aug 11

Tanglewood Hears Bach B Minor Mass

Boston Symphony, Choral Ensemble, Soloists in Striking Performance

By RUDOLPH ELIE

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 10—Despite the intervention in the most solemn moment of Bach's B Minor Mass of a "Berkshire special," which is a sudden, swift-drenching downpour, Dr. Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a large choral ensemble and a fine quartet of soloists, gave a striking performance of this musical landmark today before an audience of about 7800 people.

The rain, virtually unheralded by a warning drop, began to descend in torrents during the crucifixus, the quietest moment in the Mass, and resulted in a noisy invasion of the Shed by those caught on the lawn. Undaunted, Dr. Koussevitzky launched into the triumphant Et Resurrexit to overcome the uproar outside, after that, as the rain slaked off, he continued with what was otherwise a notable reading of Bach's supreme accomplishment.

ADMIRABLE SOLOISTS

The soloists in this performance, which was held in two parts, afternoon and evening, were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, baritone. All of these young artists are well known to Boston Symphony audiences, all of them having attained their first notice under Dr. Koussevitzky or Boris Goldovsky, and they make an admirable quartet of soloists in this difficult work.

The chorus in the performance was that of the Berkshire Music Center, trained by Hugh Ross, and although it was capable of a good tone and a big well integrated volume, it seemed strangely lethargic in its response, seldom clearly articulating its attacks as if the members were all waiting to see how the others sounded beore letting themselves go. Nor was its ennunciation particularly good. This ,however, may well have been the Music Shed's particular contribution, for it hardly allows the sharpest focus either tonally or verbally.

The fact is the Shed is not the best location for a performance of this work, given to observe the 200th anniversary of the composer's death. In its grander moments for chorus and orchestra, it is capable of inexpressible power, but its arias, set either for solo voice or duet, are accompanied by a solo instrument obbligato with continuo. Thus much of it is of the most fragile chamber music proportion, and this offers the soloists a considerable hazard. To their great credit, they carried off their roles excellently, with especial mention for the Misses Addison and Alberts who, after all, have the most grateful parts.

The performance was additionally interesting for some exceedingly beautiful obbligato solos by Louis Speyer, oboe d'amore; Georges Laurent, flute; Richard Burgin, violin, and James Stagliano, French horn. For his part, Dr. Koussevitzky contributed all of his usual conviction and musicianship and, with the others, received the warmest applause.

Today Tanglewood is on parade, a traditional open house affair offering a concert, lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn and, as a special added attraction, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt narrating Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

SS., FRIDAY, AUGUST 11, 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT IN TANGLEWOOD BENEFIT TONIGHT

Will Narrate 'Peter and the Wolf' at Concert by Boston Symphony

Tanglewood, Aug. 10—The seventh [illegible] program staged at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented Friday and will feature the second appearance here of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. The program will last from 6 to 11 p. m., and will include Mrs. Roosevelt's narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

Tanglewood On Parade

This year's program, again known as Tanglewood on Parade, will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, at which Serge Koussevitzky is director. The R.C.A.-Victor Co., which will make a recording of the performance, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra both have decided to recognize the former First Lady's services with an amount to be given to charities of her choice. Mrs. Roosevelt in turn has allotted the honorarium equally to the Berkshire Music Center and the Wiltwyck School.

As door prizes to be awarded after the concert, the Baldwin Piano Co. has donated as first prize an acrosonic piano from Dr. Koussevitzky's [illegible] room; and second prize will be a generous package of recordings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the R. C. A.-Victor Co.

Mrs. Roosevelt will arrive Friday morning, and will rehearse the popular Profkofieff work with Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra then. She will have luncheon on the grounds with Koussevitzky and some of the trustees of the orchestra. After this, the R. C. A.-Victor Co. will supervise the recording of the work, in the Theater-Concert Hall. Until the recording is completed, at about 4:30, the grounds will be closed to visitors, as absolute quiet is necessary in the area.

At 6, purchasers of tickets to the evening's concert will be greeted on the grounds by Aaron Copland, and will be invited to inspect and hear the various student activities, such as the student orchestra, opera department, and chamber music and composition departments. Purchasers of box seats and advance reserved seats also will be able to hear, before 6, a production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi".

The concert in the Shed will begin at 8:30 and besides the performance of "Peter and the Wolf" will include the performance of Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony, both also by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. After the concert, there will be waltzing on the lawn overlooking the lake behind the main house.

Tickets are of three types: Box seats at $5, reserved section seats at $3, and unreserved section and general admission at $2.50. A few boxes and some reserved seats are still available.

Among distinguished visitors at this year's event will be Gov. Paul A. Dever, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, RCA-Victor board chairman General and Mrs. David Sarnoff, Baldwin Piano Co. vice-president and Mrs. Philip Wyman; and orchestra trustees Lewis Perry, C. D. Jackson, Edward Taft, and Francis W. Hatch.

MUSIC CENTER'S STUDENT CHORUS IN BACH HONOR

Student Chorus, Orchestra and Soloists Present 'Mass in B Minor'

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 10 — The Berkshire Music Center, here at Tanglewood paid its final tribute to Johann Sebastian Bach today, fittingly commemorating his death 200 years ago with a magnificient performance of the [illegible]nor." We are told that more than 60 concerts devoted to the music of Bach have been given during this summer session by students, faculty and orchestra of the center. No greater tribute could have been given the master than the definitive performance heard this afternoon and evening.

Student Chorus Assists

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the performance which embraced the services of the splendid student festival chorus, the orchestra and following soloists: Adel Addison of Springfield, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor and James Pease, bass. These soloists have appeared several times under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky and so a perfect accord was reached at once. The instrumental soloists, whose performances play so important a part in the whole structure of the Mass, were Richard Burgin, violin; James Stagliano, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboe, D'Amore; E. Power Biggs, organ and Erwin Body, harpsichord.

In such a revealing performance as we heard today it is difficult to pick out any particular individual or achievement, for the performance was so perfectly integrated that one listened to it as an entity, rather than to its component parts. Adel Addison's lovely soprano soared easily over the orchestra and her flawless enunciation of the Latin text was a model all might well emulate.

Continued On Page 4

Music Center's

Continued From Page 1

The soprano is given no solos in this Mass, but in the duets with alto and tenor, her fine musicianship and feeling for text and line was evident. The burden of the solo work falls upon the contralto. Eunice Alberts has accomplished some distinguished work this season, notably in the Bach programs. She sings musically and while the voice itself it not a notably beautiful organ, it serves her well. David Lloyd and James Pease are veterans of Tanglewood and may be depended upon to put over their assignments in fine style.

Chorus Deserves Praise

If honors are to be handed out, let them go to the festival chorus. Under the expert direction of Hugh Ross, the students learned this great work in a relatively short time. From the first tremendous pronouncement of the "Iyric Eleison," through the ethereal beauty of the "Qui Tollis" and the triumphant voicing of the "Cum sancto spiritu," which completed the first part of the program. The singing was buoyant, full voiced and meaningful.

During the lengthy intermission hundreds of picnic parties were in progress. There are few more beautiful places than the Tanglewood grounds for a picnic.

If possible, the singing was even more expressive in the evening than it had been in the afternoon. Fortified with food, or perhaps thrilled at the presence of Gov. Paul A. Dever in his box, the chorus accomplished seemingly impossible feats of vocalism. Incidentally, Bach must have been a bit too much for the box holders, the majority of whom did not appear at the afternoon portion of the Mass, but turned out for the evening performance.

Pease and Lloyd Fine

As in the afternoon, is was the chorus which provided the thrills. One will not soon forget the beauty of tone which came from the sopranos at the opening of the "Credo" and built up to a stupendous climax, nor will one forget the solidity of tone, the breadth and strength of the "Sanctus."

James Pease was at his finest in the air, "Et in spiritum sanctus" and Mr. Burgin's exquisite playing of the obligato to the tenor air of the "Benedictus," sung by Mr. Lloyd, was surely responsible for the single bravo and burst of spontaneous applause. Miss Alberts was heard to greater advantage in the "Agnus Dei" than in her other efforts.

This performance of the "Mass in B Minor" will surely go down in history of Tanglewood as one of the finest achievements put forth of the Berkshire Center.

Worcester Daily Telegram,

Wednesday, Aug. 9, 1950

Puerto Rican Taking Tanglewood by Storm

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Wednesday—What do you make of this? "Pi-ki-ri-cum, bam-ba-lam-ba, fua-ca-ta-ca."

It may not mean much to you or to me, but Augusto Alejandro Rodriguez can make a chorus sound like small Puerto Rican drums by teaching the singers to patter the syllables fast enough.

Remarkable Fellow

Senor Rodriguez is a most remarkable fellow; in fact, he is a constant subject of discussion at the Berkshire Music Center where he is enrolled as a special student. Hugh Ross of the choral department invited him to Tanglewood to acquaint its population with Puerto Rican folk music.

The senor has been professor of music at the University of Puerto Rico for 15 years and conductor of its chorus. Last year, the chorus made its first visit to the United States and a succession of successes was climaxed at a Carnegie Hall concert.

Rodriguez is one of those rare individuals who perseveres in his own theories of choral teaching and conducting, and I can assure you from first-hand knowledge that whatever he does, it works.

Most teachers will tell you to rehearse a slow chorus, slowly—not Rodriguez. He says: "It should be practiced rapidly and then slowed down. That way, it can be made to sound evenly."

Accurate Pitch

One of the bugaboos of unaccompanied singing is the maintenance of accurate pitch, and Rodriguez has the solution to that also—"Just imagine an 'H' before each vowel that begins a phrase, and instead of swooping up to the tone, approach it from slightly above and you will arrive exactly on pitch. Now, you musn't sing the 'H', just imagine it."

His chorus in Puerto Rico sings in 11 languages, and he teaches it to sound right in each through phonetic training. Also he sees to it that the singers know what they are singing about. He believes choruses or operas translated into other languages are educational but that they lose something.

Rodriguez is living proof that it's never too late to study music. He began his serious study at the age of 28. Before then, he had played the piano some, and for six years he led a jazz band called "The Midnight Serenaders." It specialized in Latin-American dance music and American jazz.

"I taught myself orchestration by having to write arrangements for my band," he says.

With Sanroma

Jesus Maria Sanroma was instrumental in getting him started in academic study, and of him Rodriguez says—"We are like brothers." In 1931, "Chu-Chu" Sanroma went to his native Puerto Rico for a ten-day pleasure trip.

A concert developed with Rodriguez conducting an orchestra and Sanroma performing, in a single program, Mozart's "Concerto in E-flat, for Two Pianos and Orchestra" (assisted by Elisa Tavarez), Weber's "Concertstuck," the Schumann piano concerto, and Saint-Saens' "Carnival of the Animals."

Sanroma and the Puerto Rican government got together and a $1000 scholarship was made available in 1932 (the next year it was decreased to $600) so that Rodriguez could pursue his studies at Harvard University and the New England Conservatory. His teachers were Edward Burlingame Hill, Walter Piston, G. Wallace Woodworth, Frederick S. Converse, Warren Storey Smith, and Francis Findlay.

How did he manage to live and pay tuitions on the scholarships? He explains — "My father sent me ten dollars a week!"

His present status as choral conductor is a curious twist of fate because originally he wanted to become an orchestral conductor. In fact, when he returned to Puerto Rico he took on the country's philharmonic orchestra of 54 players for two years.

Although they gave but six concerts, his duties were many. He rehearsed the players in small groups during the day, and as a complete ensemble in the evening. He also sold advertising, corrected proof, and acted as general factotum for the outfit.

An attractive little booklet has been published by the University of Puerto Rico that contains a flowery but accurate description of Rodriguez. The article is by Jose Antonio Davila and here are a few extracts:

"Somewhat short of stature, but robustly built, broad of shoulder, yet not long-armed, Augusto Rodriguez crosses the stage inconspicuously. His step is slow and silent; his head leans slightly to one side. There is an air of shyness about him in sharp contrast to his forehead, aggressive chin and vibrant strength. The general impression is that of a lion's cub about to play with a delicate music box.

"At times, his hands take hold of syruppy bass notes and thin them gently out into the delicate thread of a plaintive coloratura, then suddenly fling the whole mass of sound, from highest to lowest note, into the haunting cry of an ominous Winter wind."

Is it any wonder that Augusto Alejandro Rodriguez has taken Tanglewood by storm?

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Sonntags-Konzert in Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, 7. August. — Leonard Bernstein dirigierte das Sonntag - Nachmittagskonzert in der großen Halle; der Beginn wurde durch einen kurzen Gewitterregen um eine Viertelstunde verschoben. Alle Vorzüge und Mängel des Dirigenten kamen in dem Programm des Konzerts, das von dem Boston Symphonie-Orchester gespielt wurde, zum Vorschein. Es ist schade, daß ein derart ausgezeichneter Musiker, dessen Dirigentenbegabung außer Zweifel steht, nicht Maß halten kann. Die Nervosität seiner Bewegungen, die oft mehr an einen Tanz erinnern als an die Zeichengebung eines Orchesterleiters, hindert die Erreichung des Höhepunktes. Leonard Bernstein hat in vielen Konzerten seine eminenten musikalischen Gaben erwiesen, er lebt in den vorgetragenen Werken und sein ganzer Körper wird von der Musik ergriffen. Diese Leidenschaft kommt in Ravels "Alborado del Gracioso" sinnfälig zum Ausdruck, hier wird das Dirigieren zum Tanz, und trotz der ausgezeichneten Wiedergabe dieser prachtvollen lebenssprühenden Musik hätte man mehr Ruhe beim Dirigenten begrüßt. Im Programm des Nachmittagskonzertes war ferner die Suite "Ma Mere l'Oye" von Ravel und das Klavierkonzert, das Bernstein in seiner Doppelrolle als Pianist und Dirigent brachte. Zum Abschluß hörte man die dramatische Symphonie "Romeo und Julia" von Berlioz, vom Orchester hervorragend gespielt. Unwillkürlich wurde man an die Ouvertüre "Carneval Romain" vom gleichen Komponisten erinnert, die am Vorabend von Victor de Sabata zu triumphaler Wirkung kam. Die Musik des französischen Komponisten ist wie wenig andere geeignet, im Freien vorgetragen zu werden. Die starke Blechbläserbesetzung, die dramatischen starken Akzente, Schlagwerk und Becken und die Melodien der Streicher in glänzendem fortissimo üben immer große Wirkung auf die Massen des Publikums aus. Allerdings muß man ein Orchester in der Qualität der Bostoner zur Hand haben, um solchen Effekt zu erzielen.

Mehr als 31.000 Zuhörer hatten sich zu den letzten drei Konzerten in der Festspielhalle eingefunden, die trotz Regenunterbrechungen standhaft aushielten.

Serge Koussevitzky hatte den Konzerten Victor de Sabats nicht beigewohnt, doch verlautet, daß sich die beiden Musiker Sonntag in freundschaftlicher Weise unterhalten haben. Abgesehen von dieser kleinen Differenz, man hatte Sabata angeblich eingeladen ohne Koussevitzky als Direktor der Festspiele zu verständigen, verlief alles programmgemäß, was in diesem Fall ausgezeichnet heißen will. Die letzte Woche der Festveranstaltungen bringt nebst Opernaufführungen von Ibert und Puccini die große "Tanglewood Parade", eine gesellschaftliche Veranstaltung mit einem Festkonzert, dirigiert von Koussevitzky, und mit Frau Eleanor Roosevelt in der Rezitation Prokofieffs "Peter und der Wolf". Die beiden Schlußkonzerte finden Samstag abend und Sonntag nachmittag statt. Eleazar de Carvalho, ein Schüler Koussevitzkys, ist der Orchesterleiter Samstag abend, und Koussevitzky dirigiert Donnerstag die H-Moll-Messe von Bach und Sonntag nachmittag die sechste Symphonie Prokofieffs und die erste Symphonie Brahms.

James
Aug 11

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Grosse Ovationen für Sabata und die Bostoner

TANGLEWOOD, 6. Aug. — Im Samstagkonzert des Boston Symphonie Orchesters unter Leitung Victor de Sabatas in Tanglewood gab es stürmische Beifallskundgebungen für den Dirigenten und das Orchester, die sich nach Schluß zu großen langanhaltenden Ovationen verstärkten. Immer wieder mußten die Ausführenden für den Beifall danken und noch lange nach Beendigung des Konzertes blieben die Zuhörer auf den Plätzen und jubelten dem Dirigenten zu. Alle etwaigen Einwendungen gegen dynamische oder rhythmische Freiheiten verschwinden vor der grandiosen Wiedergabe der Mozart Symphonie Es-Dur (K. 543). Gleich die ersten Takte des einleitenden Adagio und das anschließende Allegro zeigten die durchdachte und geistreiche Interpretation Sabatas. Die Melodie des Andante trat wunderschön hervor, der Rhythmus der Begleitfiguren war bemerkenswert in seiner Regelmäßigkeit. Das Menuet kam in den Streichern und Holzbläsern bezaubernd zur Geltung, der Dirigent betont die ¾ gewichtig und läßt dann das Trio zart und graziöse erklingen. Im Allegro spielten die Musiker trotz des raschen Tempos mit unvergleichlicher Präzision.

Die Ouvertüre "Le Carnaval Romain" von Berlioz von jeher ein Paradestück Victor de Sabatas. Er nuanciert die Begleitung der Streicher zu dem Oboensolo bis ins kleinste Detail und hebt die romantische Melodie des Violathemas klar hervor. Dann aber fährt er wie der Gott des Donners drein und im gewaltigen Fortissimo erklingt das Finale in den Blechbläsern und im Schlagwerk. Diese triumphale Steigerung war auch der Höhepunkt im Vortrag der Ouvertüre, die vom Komponisten ursprünglich als Einleitung zum zweiten Akt seiner Oper "Benvenuto Cellini" gedacht war. — Nach den grandiosen Schlußakkorden blieb es erst einen Augenblick vollkommen still in der großen Halle, dann aber kam es zu solchen Beifallskundgebungen, wie sie nur sehr selten in Symphoniekonzerten zu hören sind.

Giorgio Frederico Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante" leitete die zweite Abteilung des Programms ein. Das melodiöse Stück wurde von den Solisten (die Konzertmeister der Geige und der Viola Richard Burgin, Alfred Krips und Joseph de Pasquale) und vom Orchester ausgezeichnet gespielt. Victor de Sabata hat wiederholt Kompositionen seines Landsmannes aufgeführt, er nahm sich auch des "Pezzo Concertante" liebevoll an. Das Werk stammt aus dem Jahre 1931; es ist für die Solisten sehr dankbar und weist dem Orchester nur eine begleitende Rolle zu. Den Abschluß des glanzvollen Abends bildete die trotz kleiner Abweichungen vom traditionellen Stil, großartige Wiedergabe der fünften Symphonie Beethovens; vom Anfang bis Ende bemerkenswert im Aufbau, in den Kontrasten und der Phrasierung. Das C-Dur Finale wirkte nach dem beklemmenden Triothema wie eine Befreiung. Sabata versteht es, dieses Finale jubelnd, festlich zu gestalten. Die wuchtigen Akkorde hatten eine außerordentliche Klangwirkung. Am Beginn des Programms war die Sinfonia aus dem Weihnachts-Oratorium von Bach zu hören.

Das Orchester, an dessen hervorragende Darbietungen man ja gewöhnt ist, hat sich Samstag abend selbst übertroffen. Victor de Sabata beschwört, hypnotisiert die Musiker, es macht ihm sichtlich Freude, alles aus dem Ensemble herauszuholen und mit einem derart guten Ensemble zu musizieren. Es war ein großer Abend der Festkonzerte in Tanglewood, der noch lange in der Erinnerung der Hörer fortleben wird.

MUSEMENTS

BACH B MINOR MASS FEATURED AT LENOX

Koussevitzky Leads Enormous Work at Tanglewood in Two Sections—Thousands Hear It

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—Tanglewood took on the leisurely aspect of a European festival here today, with Bach's B Minor Mass on the program. Serge Koussevitzky began the first half of the enormous, towering work at 5 P. M. The second half started at 8:15 P. M., leaving time for a two-hour intermission.

The majority of the thousands heer remained on the grounds of Tanglewood to have picnic suppers. Most people brought their own provisions, but hundreds stood on line to buy their meals at Tanglewood's outdoor cafeteria.

At places like Bayreuth and Salzburg, performances began in the late afternoon, and the intermissions were long. There the patrons would eat things like wurstls and drink beer. Here they had sandwiches and soft drinks.

Second Audience Larger

But the truth is that American festival-goers are not accustomed to long stretches of music and long pauses in between. Many chose to spend the late afternoon today at other activities, including their jobs. As a result, the audience for the second half of the Mass was many thousands larger than for the first half.

The performance of the Mass marked the culmination of the Berkshire Festival's observance of the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach this year. Earlier, there were two week-ends of Bach programs by a reduced ensemble of the Boston Symphony, with Mr. Koussevitzky conducting.

There was also a series of concerts donated by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, with the Roth Quartet presenting two programs, Alexander Schneider giving two devoted to the unaccompanied violin works and joining last night with Boston Symphony players in a third Bach concert. The student groups also played and sang Bach.

Mr. Koussevitzky conducted a performance that matched the grandeur and loftiness of this masterpiece. That the thundering, fortissimo choruses would swell out and fill the Music Shed and the grounds around it with glorious sound could be expected, but the conductor was to be admired for daring, in these surroundings and with these forces, to shape passages like the "Qui Tollis" with delicacy and subtlety. The result was that the humanity of this music came through as well as its vibrant power.

Orchestra Does Well

The orchestra, of course, was the Boston Symphony, and it played its share handsomely. Solo passages were done with style by Richard Burgin, concertmaster; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes d'amore; James Stagliano, horn, and Erwin Bodky, harpsichord.

The vocal soloists were four singers who have worked at the Berkshire Music Center in past seasons, taking part in opera performances and other musical programs. Adele Addison, a young Negro soprano, who has had less experience than her colleague, disclosed a voice of range and sweet quality. Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass, all sang with the freshness and appeal of youth. The natural gifts of these soloists are uncommonly high. In time they will find greater depths in this music, but they did well enough for now.

Credit for accomplishing the most in the shortest time must go to Hugh Ross and the festival chorus he trained. The chorus was made up of several hundred men and women enrolled as students at the Berkshire Music Center. They had never worked together, and they had other duties here. Yet in little more than five weeks they managed not only to learn their music but to sing it with authority.

Perhaps the greatest glories of the Mass are its choruses. The achievement of the festival chorus is the measure of the intensity and concentration with which music is pursued here in six short weeks.

Boston Symphony ORCHESTRA
Berkshire Festival
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
CONDUCTOR
Sat. at 8:15 (Eleazar de CARVALHO, Cond.)
Sunday at 5, Closing Concert
TONIGHT
6 to 11 P. M.
(Rain or Shine)
TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE
with the kind assistance of
MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT in "Peter and the Wolf"
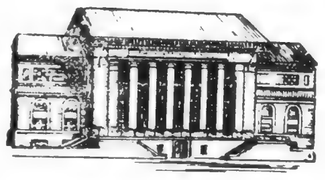
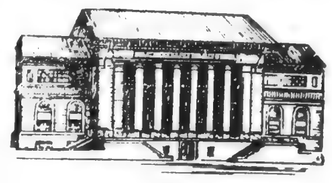
Box Seats $5—Res. Section $4—Adm. $2.50

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

GUST 8, 1950 AUG 8 1950

Ibert's New Opera Tested at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Popping up on piano programs these many years, or tossed in as an encore, has been a morceau called "The Little White Donkey."

A merry little thing, piquant, cute, it is by Ibert and that is about the only composition of his that has had much of a run in this country. Actually he is the composer of quite a few operas, some Mediterranean symphonic sketches and not a little film music but the donkey piece is about all we've ever been given.

Last night in the Theater-Concert Hall, sitting next to Koussevitsky who was hunched up with the Tanglewood chill, was Jacques Ibert watching the American premiere of his opera "The King of Yvetot." Ibert wore a black beret which combined with his pert white moustache to give him a good-humored, Parisian air. Had he not been so tall, the unprecise language of youth might have dubbed him cute.

The opera lasted through four acts. It was merry, full of color, expertly composed but when it was over you could accurately reach for any adjective that suited "Little White Donkey" and not do it any injustice—piquant, unimportant, verily cute.

In importance it was not to be compared with Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" or the consensus on "Albert Herring," its predecessors at the Tanglewood opera work shop. It was less modern without being more singable. Its dramatic impact was a gentle thud.

* * *

YVETOT WAS a fourteenth century principality which engaged in Lilliput warfare with a neighbor state and was defeated. Its king deposed, there followed a period when the women did all the work and the men "spent all their time voting." This absorption with the business of state resulted in a women's revolution followed by restoration of the king and his marriage to a peasant girl. It is opera buffa, rather than comic opera.

The entire first act which was given over to squeezing comedy out of the unpreparedness of the foolish little kingdom, its antic military preparations and the general folly of war, made you bite your lip. Remembering Korea, it could have been ten times as funny and not drawn a laugh, but this was a fortuitous circumstance.

* * *

THE STORY went on to other inconsequential business. It was played hard, as student productions are apt to be, and some of the humors might have improved with relaxation and simplicity. I got the impression that some of the stage properties were dangerously unsafe; there were some near accidents.

The stage was often overcrowded and its people not too expertly managed. There were dramatic cliches such as the description of the battle from the watch-tower.

The score contained a number of brilliant, tautly-written choruses and these were sung with gusto and style. A lyricism which would have given the opera bouyancy and a greater illusion was too frequently absent. The composer employed a parlando which was neither speaking nor singing. It did enable the cast to get across the dialogue, a virtue not to be belittled.

There were occasional moments of pure song and it was these which were relied upon for atmosphere and date, Ibert having imitated the old French folksong. The best example, sweet and melancoly, was the peasant girl's final aria in Act. I.

* * *

EWAN HARBRECHT, who had the part of Jeanneton last night, used a light soprano with charm and dramatic veracity. Manfred Hecht, baritone, was a king of stalwart voice and Beatrice Rush-Kane was fully adequate to the demands of a contralto role. These principals remain the same for tonight's performance.

Dr. Jan Popper, who conducted the student orchestra and cast, kept the production closely-meshed for the big ensembles and found a flattering pace for some of the needlessly protracted scenes.

The opera was handsomely mounted, in particular the second act which, incidentally contained some of the best music.

Other credits go to F. Cowles Strickland, stage director; G. Philippe de Rosier, settings and lighting design and Leo Van Witsen, costume design.—C. E. L.

AUG 8 1950

Tanglewood Lists Major Presentations

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season at Lenox, Mass., will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center.

In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade" the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf," Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening the opera department at Tanglewood presents the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot."

* * *

ON WEDNESDAY the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts. This concert, open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Mr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvoraks New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening.

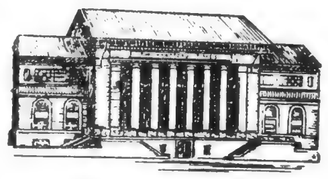
* * *

PURCHASERS of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleanor de Carvelho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And so next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Form 966

Greek Theater Plan Held in Abeyance

AUG 4 1950

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The board of trustees of Tanglewood, music center here, has made no new plans for the construction of a Greek theater, according to George E. Judd, clerk of the board of trustees and manager of the center.

Mr. Judd was asked by the Hartford Times for more information about plans for such a theater. He said he had not read a report on an interview with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and long and intimately connected with Tanglewood, in which the conductor said such a theater was planned.

* * *

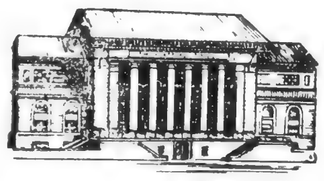
"WHERE IS A MODEL on display at Tanglewood," Mr. Judd said, "of a Greek theater proposed by Eero Saarinen, our architect who died last Spring, and made from plans he drew in 1937. The possibility of going ahead with such a theater is talked over from time to time, but the rumors are never found to have any basis in fact.

"I know of no new plans for the project. As clerk of the board, I would know of them if there were any."

The model provides for open-air seating for 3,000 persons.

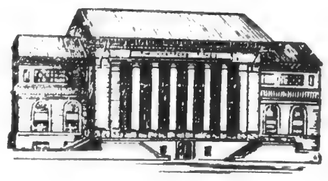
Dr. Koussevitzky was quoted in an Associated Press report as saying an amphitheater seating 25,000 would be built at Tanglewood, with construction beginning next year.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

GUST 8, 1950 AUG 8 1950

Ibert's New Opera Tested at Tanglew

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Popping up on piano programs these many years, or tossed in as an encore, has been a morceau called "The Little White Donkey."

A merry little thing, piquant, cute, it is by Ibert and that is about the only composition of his that has had much of a run in this country. Actually he is the composer of quite a few operas, some Mediterranean symphonic sketches and not a little film music but the donkey piece is about all we've ever been given.

Last night in the Theater-Concert Hall, sitting next to Koussevitsky who was hunched up with the Tanglewood chill, was Jacques Ibert watching the American premiere of his opera "The King of Yvetot." Ibert wore a black beret which combined with his pert white moustache to give him a good-humored, Parisian air. Had he not been so tall, the unprecise language of youth might have dubbed him cute.

The opera lasted through four acts. It was merry, full of color, expertly composed but when it was over you could accurately reach for any adjective that suited "Little White Donkey" and not do it any injustice—piquant, unimportant, verily cute.

In importance it was not to be compared with Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" or the consensus on "Albert Herring," its predecessors at the Tanglewood opera work shop. It was less modern, without being more singable. Its dramatic impact was a gentle thud.

* * *

YVETOT WAS a fourteenth century principality which engaged in Lilliput warfare with a neighbor state and was defeated. Its king deposed, there followed a period when the women did all the work and the men "spent all their time voting." This absorption with the business of state resulted in a women's revolution followed by restoration of the king and his marriage to a peasant girl. It is opera buffa, rather than comic opera.

The entire first act which was given over to squeezing comedy out of the unpreparedness of the foolish little kingdom, its antic military preparations and the general folly of war, made you bite your lip. Remembering Korea, it could have been ten times as funny and not drawn a laugh, but this was a fortuitous circumstance.

* * *

THE STORY went on to other inconsequential business. It was played hard, as student productions are apt to be, and some of the humors might have improved with relaxation and simplicity. I got the impression that some of the stage properties were dangerously unsafe; there were some near accidents.

The stage was often overcrowded and its people not too expertly managed. There were dramatic cliches such as the description of the battle from the watch-tower.

The score contained a number of brilliant, tautly-written choruses and these were sung with gusto and style. A lyricism which would have given the opera bouyancy and a greater illusion was too frequently absent. The composer employed a parlando which was neither speaking nor singing. It did enable the cast to get across the dialogue, a virtue not to be belittled.

There were occasional moments of pure song and it was these which were relied upon for atmosphere and date, Ibert having imitated the old French folksong. The best example, sweet and melancoly, was the peasant girl's final aria in Act. I.

* * *

EWAN HARBRECHT, who had the part of Jeanneton last night, used a light soprano with charm and dramatic veracity. Manfred Hecht, baritone, was a king of stalwart voice and Beatrice Rush-Kane was fully adequate to the demands of a contralto role. These principals remain the same for tonight's performance.

Dr. Jan Popper, who conducted the student orchestra and cast, kept the production closely-meshed for the big ens[em]ble and found a flattering pac[e] of the needlessly protrac[ted] wo[rk]

The opera was hs[an]dsomely mounted, in particular t[he] act which, incidentally [has] some of the best music. [Sup]

Other credits go to P[hilippe] Strickland, stage direc[tion] Philippe de Rosier, setti[ng] lighting design and Leo V[an] sen, costume design.—C. [Kin]

AUG 8 1950

Tanglewood Lists Major Presentations

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season at Lenox, Mass., will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center.

In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade" the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf," Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening the opera department at Tanglewood presents the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot."

* * *

ON WEDNESDAY the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts. This concert, open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Mr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvoraks New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening.

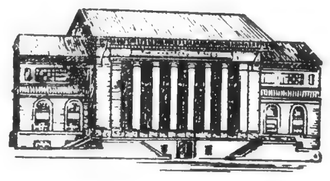
* * *

PURCHASERS of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleanor de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz's "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And so next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Form 966

Greek Theater Plan Held in Abeyance

AUG 4 1950

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The board of trustees of Tanglewood, music center here, has made no new plans for the construction of a Greek theater, according to George E. Judd, clerk of the board of trustees and manager of the center.

Mr. Judd was asked by the Hartford Times for more information about plans for such a theater. He said he had not read a report on an interview with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and long and intimately connected with Tanglewood, in which the conductor said such a theater was planned.

* * *

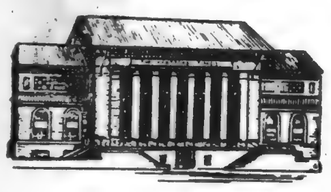
"WHERE IS A MODEL on display at Tanglewood," Mr. Judd said, "of a Greek theater proposed by Eero Saarinen, our architect who died last Spring, and made from plans he drew in 1937. The possibility of going ahead with such a theater is talked over from time to time, but the rumors are never found to have any basis in fact.

"I know of no new plans for the project. As clerk of the board, I would know of them if there were any."

The model provides for open-air seating for 3,000 persons.

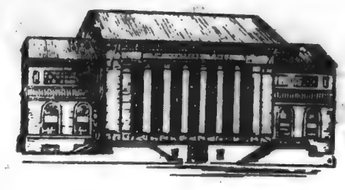
Dr. Koussevitzky was quoted in an Associated Press report as saying an amphitheater seating 25,000 would be built at Tanglewood, with construction beginning next year.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

UST 8, 1950 AUG 8 1950

Ibert's New Opera Tested at Tanglew

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Popping up on piano programs these many years, or tossed in as an encore, has been a morceau called "The Little White Donkey."

A merry little thing, piquant, cute, it is by Ibert and that is about the only composition of his that has had much of a run in this country. Actually he is the composer of quite a few operas, some Mediterranean symphonic sketches and not a little film music but the donkey piece is about all we've ever been given.

Last night in the Theater-Concert Hall, sitting next to Koussevitsky who was hunched up with the Tanglewood chill, was Jacques Ibert watching the American premiere of his opera "The King of Yvetot." Ibert wore a black beret which combined with his pert white moustache to give him a good-humored, Parisian air. Had he not been so tall, the unprecise language of youth might have dubbed him cute.

The opera lasted through four acts. It was merry, full of color, expertly composed but when it was over I could accurately reach for any adjective that suited "Little White Donkey" and not do it any injustice—piquant, unimportant, verily cute.

In importance it was not to be compared with Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" or the consensus on "Albert Herring," its predecessors at the Tanglewood opera work shop. It was less modern without being more singable. Its dramatic impact was a gentle thud.

* * *

YVETOT WAS a fourteenth century principality which engaged in Lilliput warfare with a neighbor state and was defeated. Its king deposed, there followed a period when the women did all the work and the men "spent all their time voting." This absorption with the business of state resulted in a women's revolution followed by restoration of the king and his marriage to a peasant girl. It is opera buffa, rather than comic opera.

The entire first act which was given over to squeezing comedy out of the unpreparedness of the foolish little kingdom, its gentle military preparations and the general folly of war, made you curl your lip. Remembering Kaufman, it could have been ten times as funny and not drawn a laugh, but this was a fortuitous circumstance.

* * *

THE STORY went on to other inconsequential business. It was played hard, as student productions are apt to be, and some of the humors might have improved with relaxation and simplicity. I got the impression that some of the stage properties were dangerously unsafe; there were some near accidents.

The stage was often overcrowded and its people not too expertly managed. There were dramatic cliches such as the description of the battle from the watch-tower.

The score contained a number of brilliant, tautly-written choruses and these were sung with gusto and style. A lyricism which would have given the opera bouyancy and a greater illusion was too frequently absent. The composer employed a parlando which was neither speaking nor singing. It did enable the cast to get across the dialogue, a virtue not to be belittled.

There were occasional moments of pure song and it was these which were relied upon for atmosphere and date, Ibert having imitated the old French folksong. The best example, sweet, and melancoly, was the peasant girl's final aria in Act. I.

* * *

EWAN HARBRECHT, who had the part of Jeanneton last night, uses a light soprano with charm and dramatic veracity. Manfred Hecht, baritone, has a ring of stalwart voice and Beatrice Rush-King was fully [illegible] to the demands of a comedy role. These principals remain the same for tonight's performance and [illegible] Dr. Jan Popper, who conducted the student orchestra and cast, kept the production closely-meshed for the big ens[illegible] found a flattering pac[illegible] of the needlessly protrac[illegible]

The opera was h[illegible] mounted, in particular [illegible] act which, incidentally [illegible] some of the best music.

Other credits go to [illegible] Strickland, stage dire[illegible] Philippe de Rosier, sett[illegible] lighting design and Leo [illegible] sen, costume design.—C.

priv[illegible] d in [illegible] h wo[illegible] by fo[illegible] any [illegible] has Sup[illegible] ne, [illegible] king [illegible] str[illegible]

AUG 8 1950

Tanglewood Lists Major Presentations

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season at Lenox, Mass., will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center.

In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade" the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf," Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening the opera department at Tanglewood presents the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot."

* * *

ON WEDNESDAY the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts. This concert, open to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Mr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvoraks New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening.

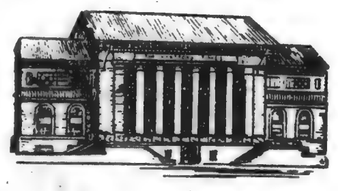
* * *

PURCHASERS of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening on Friday.

Saturday evening Eleanor de[illegible] will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola [illegible] in Berlioz's "Harold in [illegible]" Liszt's "Escales" and Villa-[illegible] Choros 10" will complete the program.

And so next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD 1, CONN.



A clipping of an article that appeared in today's issue of The Hartford Times is enclosed. Because of your interest in the subject, we thought you might wish an extra copy of it.

Form 906

Greek Theater Plan Held in Abeyance

AUG 4 1950

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The board of trustees of Tanglewood, music center here, has made no new plans for the construction of a Greek theater, according to George E. Judd, clerk of the board of trustees and manager of the center.

Mr. Judd was asked by the Hartford Times for more information about plans for such a theater. He said he had not read a report on an interview with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and long and intimately connected with Tanglewood, in which the conductor said such a theater was planned.

* * *

"WHERE IS A MODEL on display at Tanglewood," Mr. Judd said, "of a Greek theater proposed by Eero Saarinen, our architect who died last Spring, and made from plans he drew in 1937. The possibility of going ahead with such a theater is talked over from time to time, but the rumors are never found to have any basis in fact.

"I know of no new plans for the project. As clerk of the board, I would know of them if there were any."

The model provides for open-air seating for 3,000 persons.

Dr. Koussevitzky was quoted in an Associated Press report as saying [illegible] theater, seating 25,000 would be built at Tanglewood with construction beginning next year.

REDUCTION

RATIO

16x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

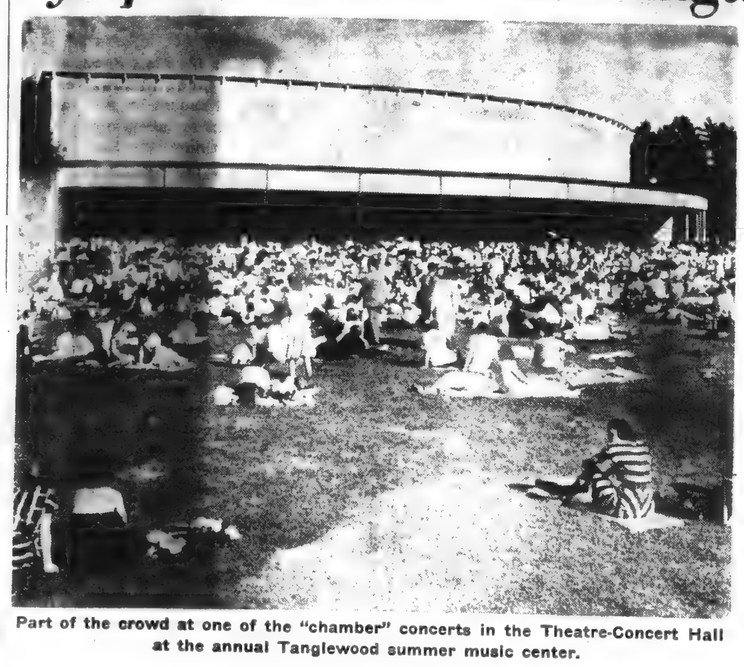
3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Traffic, Crowds and Feuds Fail to Hamper Symphonic Strains at Tanglewood Festival



Part of the crowd at one of the "chamber" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at the annual Tanglewood summer music center.

By Brenton Welling, Jr.

Berkshire County in Western Massachusetts is unique. Nowhere else in the United States are there so many colonies of artists of all kinds studying and performing within the radius of a few miles.

Centered around Pittsfield there are schools of painting and sculpture, museums, summer playhouses and drama schools. chamber music halls, and even a dance festival at Jacob's Pillow. Giant among them all, however, in both size of establishment and number of people who attend its concerts, is the Berkshire Music Festival and Center at Tanglewood.

Throughout the County the Commonwealth's Department of Public Works has put up signs in an effort to help direct the thousands of motorists who come from the entire Eastern Seaboard to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra play out of doors. Now in its thirteenth season, Tanglewood has become so popular that the few highways leading to it are occasionally blocked tight with stalled traffic.

The result has been a winter-long series of conferences with local police officials and traffic specialists.

(Continued on page four)

Tanglewood Plays On, In Spite of Traffic Jams and Civic Rivalries

(Continued from page one.)

The Berkshire Music Festival has tried hard to work out some arrangement that will please everybody. But the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not in the traffic control business; nor does it wish to get involved in the local feud that exists between the towns of Lenox, Stockbridge, and Lee over an equitable distribution of the Tanglewood tourist trade. Yet all the people who come specifically to hear the Orchestra play at Tanglewood connect every other part of their trip, including all the unpleasant delays to the Orchestra.

The Martins and the 'Coys

All these feuds between towns, and feuds between elements within towns have grown up as Tanglewood's popularity has increased, and as more and more people make a living off the festival crowds. Needless to say the management doesn't want any part of the feuds but it cannot remain in the community and avoid them.

Last year the Sheriff of Stockbridge felt that not enough Stockbridge men were being given jobs as parking attendants for the concerts. He therefore issued a warrant to arrest any parker on that part of the lot lying within the town of Stockbridge who had not been sworn in previously by him as a deputy policeman. Because not one parking attendant had been so deputized all the attendants were liable to arrest. The night of the first concert the sheriff arrived and arrested the first man he saw and took him off to jail for impersonating a policeman on Stockbridge property. The remainder of the parking men, who did wear blue uniforms, though without any badges, fled across the town line into Lenox and let the crowds in the Stockbridge half park themselves and get themselves out as best they could.

Even the Harvard "H" turns up on the lawn before a Tanglewood concert. The two Cantabrigians above are whiling away the time until the music begins at the Berkshire summer retreat.

Is Everybody Happy?

The management of the Boston Symphony does its best to keep everybody happy but there is nothing it can really do. It does not control the towns any more than it controls the prices the hotels and tourist homes or the restaurants charge.

What it can and does do is provide music by the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra to as many as 14,000 people a concert. From the profits of these recitals, a school for promising young musicians is run. This school, known as the Berkshire Music Center, has approximately 400 students, all of whom must go through rigorous auditions to enter. The students are mostly on scholarships, with the result that the whole operation at Tanglewood loses money by the end of the summer.

The Center gives its own non-professional concerts on the nights that the Boston Symphony isn't playing. This summer there will be 33 such student or faculty events, including two operas. Admittance to these events is gained by becoming a member of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization which helps to support the school.

The residents of Berkshire County started a summer music festival with the New York Philharmonic in 1934. It was all their idea and their doing. For a few short years they had it to themselves but all the time it was growing. First the Boston Symphony was substituted for the New York because it was a better drawing orchestra. Then the last remaining members of a family which had owned Tanglewood ever since Nathaniel Hawthorne had lived there and given it its name presented their home and grounds to the Orchestra so that it might permanently have a place for the festival. The following year a Shed seating 6,000 people was built with money given by these same residents, now increased in number. They never dreamed that 6,000 seats would one day account for less than half the crowd.

From then on more and more people began coming to Tanglewood from further and further away. Groups began to capitalize on the tourist trade, and other organizations started art and dance festivals for people who, once in Berkshire County, would start looking for something else to do. This was not what the residents had intended. Their private outdoor concert hall-club was being inundated with waves of people who brought picnic suppers and who wandered about the grounds in blue jeans. Complaints were heard that Tanglewood was being ruined by too many people, many of whom were not music lovers but merely curious to see the place.

It is probably true that a few of the people who come for the concerts at Tanglewood don't care about music at all. But there are plenty of those who do, and it is always possible that some who didn't care for music before they came may learn to like it because of Tanglewood. If this is true the Boston Symphony is fulfilling its function far more than it would by playing to a select group. It is hard on the people whose idea it was to start a festival and who now feel that they can't go because of the crowds. But the management can't turn people away and it certainly can't ask each person buying a ticket whether or not he is interested in serious music so that he can be refused admittance if he doesn't answer correctly. George E. Judd, the Boston Symphony's manager, can and does try to improve on the dress of concertgoers by having the men at the gate ask women in slacks and shorts to wear skirts the next time they come. But here again it is hard to make a woman sit on a dewy lawn at night in a skirt when less fashionable attire is more practical and comfortable. This is as far, however, as Judd can go in trying to appease the feelings of the "charter members" of Tanglewood.

Berkshire Still Growing

What will probably happen is that the Berkshire Music Festival will cease to be a curiosity and a drawing card for the non-musical. Right now it is still growing. Each summer the crowds grow bigger and more concerts have to be played to accommodate them. Last year, for instance, [illegible] people attended the 14 festival concerts given. This year there will be 16 concerts. But in time people will grow used to the existence of Tanglewood, and the rise of other music festivals all over the country, including the proposed Mozart Opera festival to be headed by Ezio Pinza, will draw many of the people away from the Berkshires.

When that happens the residents will settle back and be happy about Tanglewood again. The tourist trade will slacken off, but with it will go all the fuss and bother that has brought about a state of intra-county warfare. Guest houses and hotels will have to lower their rates or go out of business. And Tanglewood itself will have to rely upon creating a superior product musically to attract business—which is what it should have to do.

Summer School to Run Weekend Trips

A limited number of Summer School students, faculty and personnel can journey to the Berkshire Music Festical without worrying about traffic or lodging, according to Joseph D. Everingham, Counsellor for Men. These mundane cares will be handled by those in charge of the Summer School's two bus tours, scheduled for the weekends of August 4-6 and 11-13.

Seventy people can be accomodated each week-end, Everingham said last night. A fee of $20 entitles those taking the trip to bus transportation to and from Tanglewood, two nights' lodging, transportation directly from rooms to the concert grounds, and tickets for four concerts. These concerts will include the regular Saturday night and Sunday afternoon performances, plus a Saturday morning rehearsal and a Sunday morning presentation by chamber groups.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0

1.1

1.25

1.4

1.6

1.8

2.0

2.2

2.5

2.8

3.2

3.6

4.0

4.5

5.0

5.6

6.3

7.1

8.0

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

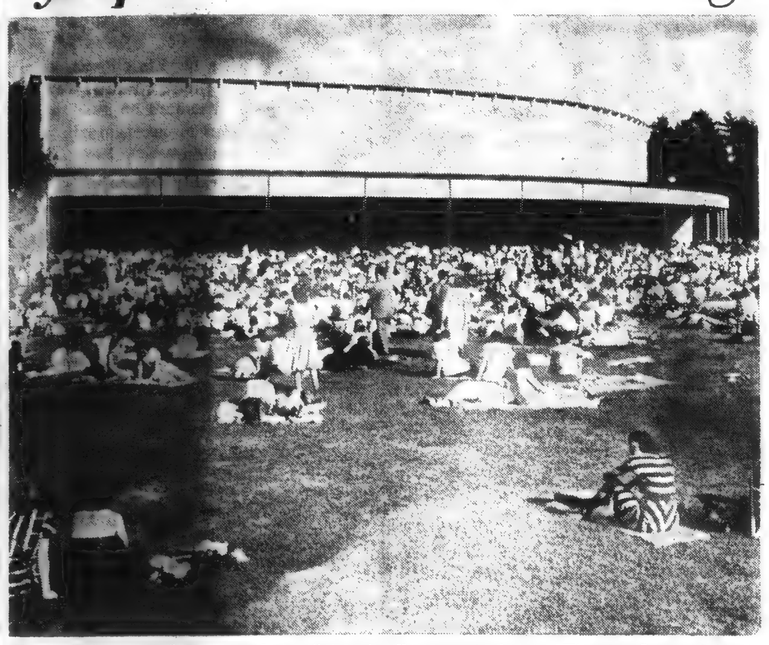
PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Traffic, Crowds and Feuds Fail to Hamper Symphonic Strains at Tanglewood Festival



Part of the crowd at one of the "chamber" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at the annual Tanglewood summer music center.

By Brenton Welling, Jr.

Berkshire County in Western Massachusetts is unique. Nowhere else in the United States are there so many colonies of artists of all kinds studying and performing within the radius of a few miles.

Centered around Pittsfield there are schools of painting and sculpture, museums, summer playhouses and drama schools. chamber music halls, and even a dance festival at Jacob's Pillow. Giant among them all, however, in both size of establishment and number of people who attend its concerts, is the Berkshire Music Festival and Center at Tanglewood.

Throughout the County the Commonwealth's Department of Public Works has put up signs in an effort to help direct the thousands of motorists who come from the entire Eastern Seaboard to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra play out of doors. Now in its thirteenth season, Tanglewood has become so popular that the few highways leading to it are occasionally blocked tight with stalled traffic.

The result has been a winter-long series of conferences with local police officials and traffic specialists.

(Continued on page four)

Tanglewood Plays On, In Spite of Traffic Jams and Civic Rivalries

(Continued from page one.)

The Berkshire Music Festival has tried hard to work out some arrangement that will please everybody. But the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not in the traffic control business; nor does it wish to get involved in the local feud that exists between the towns of Lenox, Stockbridge, and Lee over an equitable distribution of the Tanglewood tourist trade. Yet all the people who come specifically to hear the Orchestra play at Tanglewood connect every other part of their trip, including all the unpleasant delays to the Orchestra.

The Martins and the 'Coys

All these feuds between towns, and feuds between elements within towns have grown up as Tanglewood's popularity has increased, and as more and more people make a living off the festival crowds. Needless to say the management doesn't want any part of the feuds but it cannot remain in the community and avoid them.

Last year the Sheriff of Stockbridge felt that not enough Stockbridge men were being given jobs as parking attendants for the concerts. He therefore issued a warrant to arrest any parker on that part of the lot lying within the town of Stockbridge who had not been sworn in previously by him as a deputy policeman. Because not one parking attendant had been so deputized all the attendants were liable to arrest. The night of the first concert the sheriff arrived and arrested the first man he saw and took him off to jail for impersonating a policeman on Stockbridge property. The remainder of the parking men, who did wear blue uniforms, though without any badges, fled across the town line into Lenox and let the crowds in the Stockbridge half park themselves and get themselves out as best they could.

Even the Harvard "H" turns up on the lawn before a Tanglewood concert. The two Cantabrigians above are whiling away the time until the music begins at the Berkshire summer retreat.

Is Everybody Happy?

The management of the Boston Symphony does its best to keep everybody happy but there is nothing it can really do. It does not control the towns any more than it controls the prices the hotels and tourist homes or the restaurants charge.

What it can and does do is provide music by the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra to as many as 14,000 people a concert. From the profits of these recitals, a school for promising young musicians is run. This school, [illegible] drawing orchestra. Then the last remaining members of a family which had owned Tanglewood ever since Nathaniel Hawthorne had lived there and given it its name presented their home and grounds to the Orchestra so that it might permanently have a place for the festival. The following year a Shed seating 6,000 people was built with money given by these same residents, now increased in number. They never dreamed that 6,000 seats would one day account for less than half the crowd.

From then on more and more people began coming to Tanglewood from further and further away. Groups began to capitalize on the tourist trade, and other organizations started art and dance festivals for people who, once in Berkshire County, would start looking for something else to do. This was not what the residents had intended. Their private outdoor concert hall-club was being inundated with waves of people who brought picnic suppers and who wandered about the grounds in blue jeans. Complaints were heard that Tanglewood was being ruined by too many people, many of whom were not music lovers but merely curious to see the place.

It is probably true that a few of the people who come for the concerts at Tanglewood don't care about music at all. But there are plenty of those who do, and it is always possible that some who didn't care for music before they came may learn to like it because of Tanglewood. If this is true the Boston Symphony is fulfilling its function far more than it would by playing to a select group. It is hard on the people whose idea it was to start a festival and who now feel that they can't go because of the crowds. But the management can't turn people away and it certainly can't ask each person buying a ticket whether or not he is interested in serious music so that he can be refused admittance if he doesn't answer correctly. George E. Judd, the Boston Symphony's manager, can and does try to improve on the dress of concertgoers by having the men at the gate ask women in slacks and shorts to wear skirts the next time they come. But here again it is hard to make a woman sit on a dewy lawn at night in a skirt when less fashionable attire is more practical and comfortable. This is as far, however, as Judd can go in trying to appease the feelings of the "charter members" of Tanglewood.

Berkshire Still Growing

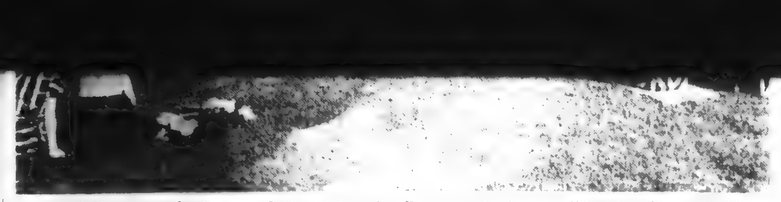
What will probably happen is that the Berkshire Music Festival will cease to be a curiosity and a drawing card for the non-musical. Right now it is still growing. Each summer the crowds grow bigger and more concerts have to be played to accommodate them. Last year, for instance, over 116,000 people attended the 14 festival concerts alone. This year there will be 16 concerts. But in time people will grow used to the existence of Tanglewood, and the rise of other music festivals all over the country, including the proposed Mozart Opera festival to be headed by Ezio Pinza, will draw many of the people away from the Berkshires.

When that happens the residents will settle back and be happy about Tanglewood again. The tourist trade will slacken off, but with it will go all the fuss and bother that has brought about a state of intra-county warfare. Guest houses and hotels will have to lower their rates or go out of business. And Tanglewood itself will have to rely upon creating a superior product musically to attract business—which is what it should have to do.

Summer School to Run Weekend Trips

A limited number of Summer School students, faculty and personnel can journey to the Berkshire Music Festical without worrying about traffic or lodging, according to Joseph D. Everingham, Counsellor for Men. These mundane cares will be handled by those in charge of the Summer School's two bus tours, scheduled for the weekends of August 4-6 and 11-13.

Seventy people can be accomodated each week-end, Everingham said last night. A fee of $20 entitles those taking the trip to bus transportation to and from Tanglewood, two nights' lodging, transportation directly from rooms to the concert grounds, and tickets for four concerts. These concerts will include the regular Saturday night and Sunday afternoon performances, plus a Saturday morning rehearsal and a Sunday morning presentation by chamber groups.



Part of the crowd at one of the "chamber" concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at the annual Tanglewood summer music center.

Tanglewood has become so popular that the few highways leading to it are occasionally blocked tight with stalled traffic.

The result has been a winter-long series of conferences with local police officials and traffic specialists.

(Continued on page four)

ugh!

Tanglewood Plays On, In Spite of Traffic Jams and Civic Rivalries

(Continued from page one.)

The Berkshire Music Festival has tried hard to work out some arrangement that will please everybody. But the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not in the traffic control business; nor does it wish to get involved in the local feud that exists between the towns of Lenox, Stockbridge, and Lee over an equitable distribution of the Tanglewood tourist trade. Yet all the people who come specifically to hear the Orchestra play at Tanglewood connect every other part of their trip, including all the unpleasant delays to the Orchestra.

The Martins and the 'Coys

All these feuds between towns, and feuds between elements within towns have grown up as Tanglewood's popularity has increased, and as more and more people make a living off the festival crowds. Needless to say the management doesn't want any part of the feuds but it cannot remain in the community and avoid them.

Last year the Sheriff of Stockbridge felt that not enough Stockbridge men were being given jobs as parking attendants for the concerts. He therefore issued a warrant to arrest any parker on that part of the lot lying within the town of Stockbridge who had not been sworn in previously by him as a deputy policeman. Because not one parking attendant had been so deputized all the attendants were liable to arrest. The night of the first concert the sheriff arrived and arrested the first man he saw and took him off to jail for impersonating a policeman on Stockbridge property. The remainder of the parking men, who did wear blue uniforms, though without any badges, fled across the town line into Lenox and let the crowds in the Stockbridge half park themselves and get themselves out as best they could.

Even the Harvard "H" turns up on the lawn before a Tanglewood concert. The two Cantabrigians above are whiling away the time until the music begins at the Berkshire summer retreat.

Is Everybody Happy?

The management of the Boston Symphony does its best to keep everybody happy but there is nothing it can really do. It does not control the towns any more than it controls the prices the hotels and tourist homes or the restaurants charge.

What it can and does do is provide music by the renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra to as many as 14,000 people a concert. From the profits of these recitals, a school for promising young musicians is run. This school, known as the Berkshire Music Center, has approximately 400 students, all of whom must go through rigorous auditions to enter. The students are mostly on scholarships, with the result that the whole operation at Tanglewood loses money by the end of the summer.

The Center gives its own non-professional concerts on the nights that the Boston Symphony isn't playing. This summer there will be 33 such student or faculty events, including two operas. Admittance to these events is gained by becoming a member of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization which helps to support the school.

The residents of Berkshire County started a summer music festival with the New York Philharmonic in 1934. It was all their idea and their doing. For a few short years they had it to themselves but all the time it was growing. First the Boston Symphony was substituted for the New York because it was a better drawing orchestra. Then the last remaining members of a family which had owned Tanglewood ever since Nathaniel Hawthorne had lived there and given it its name presented their home and grounds to the Orchestra so that it might permanently have a place for the festival. The following year a Shed seating 6,000 people was built with money given by these same residents, now increased in number. They never dreamed that 6,000 seats would one day account for less than half the crowd.

From then on more and more people began coming to Tanglewood from further and further away. Groups began to capitalize on the tourist trade, and other organizations started art and dance festivals for people who, once in Berkshire County, would start looking for something else to do. This was not what the residents had intended. Their private outdoor concert hall-club was being inundated with waves of people who brought picnic suppers and who wandered about the grounds in blue jeans. Complaints were heard that Tanglewood was being ruined by too many people, many of whom were not music lovers but merely curious to see the place.

It is probably true that a few of the people who come for the concerts at Tanglewood don't care about music at all. But there are plenty of those who do, and it is always possible that some who didn't care for music before they came may learn to like it because of Tanglewood. If this is true the Boston Symphony is fulfilling its function far more than it would by playing to a select group. It is hard on the people whose idea it was to start a festival and who now feel that they can't go because of the crowds. But the management can't turn people away and it certainly can't ask each person buying a ticket whether or not he is interested in serious music so that he can be refused admittance if he doesn't answer correctly. George E. Judd, the Boston Symphony's manager, can and does try to improve on the dress of concertgoers by having the men at the gate ask women in slacks and shorts to wear skirts the next time they come. But here again it is hard to make a woman sit on a dewy lawn at night in a skirt when less fashionable attire is more practical and comfortable. This is as far, however, as Judd can go in trying to appease the feelings of the "charter members" of Tanglewood.

Berkshire Still Growing

What will probably happen is that the Berkshire Music Festival will cease to be a curiosity and a drawing card for the non-musical. Right now it is still growing. Each summer the crowds grow bigger and more concerts have to be played to accommodate them. Last year, for instance, over 116,000 people attended the 14 festival concerts alone. This year there will be 16 concerts. But in time people will grow used to the existence of Tanglewood, and the rise of other music festivals all over the country, including the proposed Mozart Opera festival to be headed by Ezio Pinza, will draw many of the people away from the Berkshires.

When that happens the residents will settle back and be happy about Tanglewood again. The tourist trade will slacken off, but with it will go all the fuss and bother that has brought about a state of intra-county warfare. Guest houses and hotels will have to lower their rates or go out of business. And Tanglewood itself will have to rely upon creating a superior product musically to attract business—which is what it should have to do.

Summer School to Run Weekend Trips

A limited number of Summer School students, faculty and personnel can journey to the Berkshire Music Festical without worrying about traffic or lodging, according to Joseph D. Everingham, Counsellor for Men. These mundane cares will be handled by those in charge of the Summer School's two bus tours, scheduled for the weekends of August 4-6 and 11-13.

Seventy people can be accomodated each week-end, Everingham said last night. A fee of $20 entitles those taking the trip to bus transportation to and from Tanglewood, two nights' lodging, transportation directly from rooms to the concert grounds, and tickets for four concerts. These concerts will include the regular Saturday night and Sunday afternoon performances, plus a Saturday morning rehearsal and a Sunday morning presentation by chamber groups.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (205,357)
This Clipping From
HARPER'S BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL - 1950

The Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts (July 8–August 18), will this year observe the Bach Bicentennial. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the six Brandenberg concertos, the four suites and five cantatas; and the Mass in B Minor will be performed with the full Festival chorus in the Shed on August 10. There will also be two Mozart programs that will include Eine Kleine Nachtmusik and the "Jupiter" concerto. Leonard Bernstein and the Brazilian, Eleazar Carvalho, will alternate as guest conductors. The very special charm of Tanglewood lies in the chamber music, string quartets, opera and song recitals of the talented young people who study there; you can be admitted to their excellent performances by paying a small contribution to the Friends of the Berkshire Festival. Tanglewood's Wonder Book setting of vast lawns, enormous trees and hemlock hedges is incomparable—14,700 people attended one of the Sunday concerts last year and still no one was crowded. As for inns, since Lenox and Stockbridge are often booked solid, you might try the White Hart at Salisbury, Connecticut; the New Boston Inn at New Boston, Massachusetts, or the charming little Monument Inn (wonderful food) at Bennington, Vermont.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,530) (S 6,576)
This Clipping From
MEDFORD, ORE.
MAIL TRIBUNE
JUL 9 1950

Conductors Announced For Berkshire Festival

Boston —(U.P.)— Victor de Sabata, who has led other major American orchestras, will conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time at the Berkshire festival in Massachusetts this summer.

During the festival, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky also will have as guest conductors Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho.

The festival runs from July 8 to August 13. Instrumental soloists will include Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Lukas Foss, pianist-composer; Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists; Jorge Bolet, pianist, and Joseph de Pasquale, violinist. Vocal soloists will be heard in concerted numbers.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,573)
This Clipping From
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
CALLER
JUL 11 1950

MUSIC FESTIVAL

Koussevitsky Unhappy Over Trustees' Action

NEW YORK, July 10. (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, retired conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday revealed a sour note in annual Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Koussevitsky, who created the festival and still directs it, criticized the Boston Symphony's trustees for inviting a guest conductor without consulting him.

The guest is the Italian conductor, Victor De Sabata, whom Koussevitzky did not name.

Koussevitzky objected to bringing in a foreigner as a guest conductor, saying,

"I always onsidered that this school is for the Americas and for America's gifted children.

"So this year, I give up any responsibility for any program of the festival, other than those of my pupils or those I direct myself."

At his home in Lenox, Mass., where he recorded his remarks for broadcast yesterday over the CBS "Your Invitation to Music" program, Koussevitzky said De Sabata's appointment was "unexpected."

At Tanglewood, orchestra manager George E. Judd said Harry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, told him that Koussevitzky had been "very pleased to learn his close friend would appear at Tanglewood."

He said De Sabata was engaged when Koussevitzky notified the trustees he could not conduct the second series of concerts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (83,143)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
JUL 15 1950

Bach Soloist

ADELE ADDISON, brilliant young operatic soprano, who will have the honour of singing one of the solo parts for the performance of the Bach Mass in B minor at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, August 10, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other soloists for the Mass include Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 62,462) (S 64,899)
This Clipping From TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
JUL 16 1950

Tanglewood To Have 40 Events

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 15.—The Friends of the Berkshire Music center will mark their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman. The group will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose work their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends, contributing finances as they are able, are a unique means of support for a school. The group also makes up the audiences for the students.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,016) (S 20,467)
This Clipping From
YAKIMA, WASH.
MORNING HERALD
JUL 16 1950

Berkshire Festival Honors Bach

New York, July 15 (UP)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until August 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,690)
This Clipping From
GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1950

The World Of Music

Berkshire Festival Schedules 20 Performances of J. S. Bach—Philadelphia Orchestra Announces Guest Soloists.

NEW YORK, July 15 (U.P.)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass, this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (205,357)
This Clipping From
HARPER'S BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL - 1950

The Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts (July 8–August 18), will this year observe the Bach Bicentennial. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the six Brandenberg concertos, the four suites and five cantatas; and the Mass in B Minor will be performed with the full Festival chorus in the Shed on August 10. There will also be two Mozart programs that will include Eine Kleine Nachtmusik and the "Jupiter" concerto. Leonard Bernstein and the Brazilian, Eleazar Carvalho, will alternate as guest conductors. The very special charm of Tanglewood lies in the chamber music, string quartets, opera and song recitals of the talented young people who study there; you can be admitted to their excellent performances by paying a small contribution to the Friends of the Berkshire Festival. Tanglewood's Wonder Book setting of vast lawns, enormous trees and hemlock hedges is incomparable—14,700 people attended one of the Sunday concerts last year and still no one was crowded. As for inns, since Lenox and Stockbridge are often booked solid, you might try the White Hart at Salisbury, Connecticut; the New Boston Inn at New Boston, Massachusetts, or the charming little Monument Inn (wonderful food) at Bennington, Vermont.

220 W. [illegible] YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,530) (S 6,576)
This Clipping From
MEDFORD, ORE.
MAIL TRIBUNE
JUL 9 1950

Conductors Announced For Berkshire Festival

Boston —(U.P.)— Victor de Sabata, who has led other major American orchestras, will conduct the Boston Symphony for the first time at the Berkshire festival in Massachusetts this summer.

During the festival, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky also will have as guest conductors Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho.

The festival runs from July 8 to August 13. Instrumental soloists will include Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Lukas Foss, pianist-composer; Luboshutz and Nemenoff, duo-pianists; Jorge Bolet, pianist, and Joseph de Pasquale, violinist. Vocal soloists will be heard in concerted numbers.

220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,573)
This Clipping From
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
CALLER
JUL 11 1950

MUSIC FESTIVAL

Koussevitsky Unhappy Over Trustees' Action

NEW YORK, July 10 (AP) — Serge Koussevitsky, retired conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday revealed a sour note in annual Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Koussevitsky, who created the festival and still directs it, criticized the Boston Symphony's trustees for inviting a guest conductor without consulting him.

The guest is the Italian conductor, Victor De Sabata, whom Koussevitzky did not name.

Koussevitzky objected to bringing in a foreigner as a guest conductor, saying,

"I always considered that this school is for the Americas and for America's gifted children.

"So this year, I give up any responsibility for any program of the festival, other than those of my pupils or those I direct myself."

At his home in Lenox, Mass., where he recorded his remarks for broadcast yesterday over the CBS "Your Invitation to Music" program, Koussevitzky said De Sabata's appointment was "unexpected."

At Tanglewood, orchestra manager George E. Judd said Harry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, told him that Koussevitzky had been "very pleased to learn his close friend would appear at Tanglewood."

He said De Sabata was engaged when Koussevitzky notified the trustees he could not conduct the second series of concerts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 62,462) (S 64,899)
This Clipping From TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
JUL 16 1950

Tanglewood To Have 40 Events

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 15.—The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will mark their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman. The group will attend nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose work their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends, contributing finances as they are able, are a unique means of support for a school. The group also makes up the audiences for the students.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,690)
This Clipping From
GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 19 1950

The World Of Music

Berkshire Festival Schedules 20 Performances of J. S. Bach—Philadelphia Orchestra Announces Guest Soloists.

NEW YORK, July 15 (U.P.)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass, this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (83,143)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
JUL 15 1950

Bach Soloist

ADELE ADDISON, brilliant young operatic soprano, who will have the honour of singing one of the solo parts for the performance of the Bach Mass in B minor at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, August 10, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other soloists for the Mass include Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,016) (S 20,467)
This Clipping From
YAKIMA, WASH.
MORNING HERALD
JUL 16 1950

Berkshire Festival Honors Bach

New York, July 15 (UP)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until August 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 17 1950

Audience of 3,000 Attends Tanglewood

Hears Fourth of Series of Six Bach-Mozart Concerts — Koussevitzky Directs.

An audience of 3,000 attended the fourth of a series of six concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, given yesterday afternoon in the theater-shed at Tanglewood. It was the final Bach concert, and was directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The music heard yesterday included the "Suite No. 1 in C Major;" Suite No. 2 in B Minor," for flute and orchestra, with George Laurent, flautist, as soloist; the violin "Concerto in E. Major," with Ruth Posselt as violin soloist; and two contatas, with Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass; and David Lloyd, tenor, as soloists. Choruses were sung by the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center school.

Among prominent persons attending yesterday's concert were Theodore Vavayannis of Athens, conductor of the Athens Symphonic orchestra, and Mrs. Vavayannis; Adnan Saygun of Ankara, Turkey, a composer and professor at the University of Ankara, who attended with Mrs. Saygun; Henry Morgenthau, Jr., former secretary of the treasury in the Roosevelt administration; and Dr. Eliezer Peri, vice mayor of Tel-Aviv, Israel, who was a weekend guest of Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 39,169) (S 44,213)
This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES
JUL 23 1950

Ibert Opera To Be Staged

New York. (UP)—The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, on Aug. 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

"The King of Yvetot" is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique in Paris, Jan. 6, 1930, and has been given since in Dusseldrof, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

NEWTOWN, CONN
BEE
7/21/50

BERSHIRE FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD, Lenox Mass.; Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky; part of orchestra is giving four programs of Bach's music and two of Mozart's under Dr. Koussevitzky in Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall; full orchestra is giving customary nine concerts in the Music Shed, four of which are under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky; two under Victor De Sabata and Leonard Bernstein, and one under Eleazar de Carvalho; general admission will be on sale the day of each concert.

The schedule for the balance of the month follows:

Saturday, July 22, 8:15, Koussevitzky. Mozart. Eine kleine Nachtmusik; Haffner Serenade, Piano Concerto in C major, K. 467 (Lukas Foss); Symphony No. 34 in C (K. 338).

Sunday, July 23, 3 p.m., Koussevitzky. Mozart, Symphony No. 33 in B flat (K. 319), Concerto for two pianos (Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff), Serenade in C minor for winds, Symphony in C (Jupiter).

Series A: Thursday, July 27, 8:15, Koussevitsky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

Saturday, July 29, 8:15. Bruckner, Symphony No. 7; Debussy, Nuages, Fetes, La Mer.

Sunday, July 30, 3 p.m., Bernstein. Shapero, Adagietto; Diamond, Timon of Athens; Foss, The Song of Songs (Ellabelle Davis, soprano), Brahms, Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 24 1950

Bach, Mozart Concert Series Is Concluded

Sunday Tanglewood Throng Sends Series Attendance to Record 23,500.

The series of concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart closed on a successful note at Tanglewood yesterday, when the Sunday throng sent the total series attendance to a record 23,500.

Combined with the 6,000 who heard the Saturday evening performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the 5,700 present yesterday raised the week-end attendance total to 11,700, also eclipsing the previous record of 9,500 set a year ago.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the orchestra, devoted yesterday's program to Mozart music, including the overture to "Idemeneo" and three other selections.

The main section of the 1950 music festival will open Thursday night when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in a program of Beethoven and Sibelius.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 22 1950

All-Mozart Programs Listed This Week-End

Last in Theater-Concert Hall Before Nine Festival Concerts in Music Shed.

The third series of week-end concerts by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be performed tonight and Sunday in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, and will consist of all-Mozart programs. The two concerts will be the last before the nine Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music shed. These will begin next Thursday and will be performed by the entire Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

Inside seats for this week's concerts have been sold out for some time, but many hundreds of persons are again expected to hear the music from the lawns. The total attendance at four concerts of Bach programs over the last two week-ends numbered 1,500.

Soloists on this week-end's chedule include pianist Lukas oss, who will play Mozart's C ajor piano concerto, K., 467, is evening; and Luboshutz and emenoff, who tomorrow afternoon will perform Mozart's concerto for two pianos.

The remainder of tonight's concert, scheduled for 8.15 o'clock, consists of "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik;" the Haffner Serenade; and Symphony No. 34.

Sunday's concert, which will begin at 3.00, will also include Symphony No. 33; the Overture to Idomeneo; and the Jupiter Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,750) (S 15,618)
This Clipping From MIDDLETOWN, OHIO
JOURNAL
JUL 24 1950

BSO Take Note: Bach Set Tune For Communism

BERLIN (AP)—Composer Johann Sebastian Bach died 200 years ago but Russian and German Communists say he set their doctrines to music. (Dr. Serge Koussevitzky dedicated the first two week ends of the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to Bach in memory of the 200th anniversary of his death.)

The Soviet Control Commission's official newspaper, Taegliche Rundschau, welcomed Bach into the Communist fold. An editorial in the paper said he put into music "thoughts of world development which were later put in legal form by Marx and Engels and now instituted in the Soviet Union and the people's democracies."

The Russian-occupied city of Leipzig, where Bach lived much of his life and died, yesterday began an eight-day festival celebrating the 200th anniversary of his death on July 28. Moscow sent two delegations, headed by leading Soviet composer Dmitri Shostakovich, to the festival.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 54,553) (S 112,033)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 23 1950

Tanglewood

Festival To Open Thursday

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

THE Albany Metropolitan area will live up to its impressive designation when the great music shed at "Tanglewood" will be filled and overflowing with music lovers from every state in the Union, and hundreds of visitors from abroad, next Thursday night, inaugurating Series A, B and C of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernsteain and Victor de Sabata. Concerts in the big shed are held Thursday and Saturday evenings, at 8:15 and Sunday afternoons, at 3 o'clock.

The programs for the coming week-end, are as follows:

Thursday evening, July 27—Beethoven's Symphony, No. 3 ("Eroica") and Symphony No. 2 by Sibelius. On Saturday night the 110-piece orchestra will offer Bruckner's Symphony, No. 7; Debussy's "Two Nocturnes" and "La Mer," under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky. On Sunday afternoon, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the program, consisting of "Adagietto," by Shapero; "Timon of Athens" by Diamond; "The Song of Songs," by Lucas Foss, with Ellabelle Davis as soprano soloist, and Brahms' Symphony, No. 2.

Tickets for the coming week-end are priced at $2.50 and $4 with box seats at $6 each. General admission to the grounds, on sale the day of each concert, is $2. Any available tickets may be reserved by calling Lenox 600.

Those motoring to Tanglewood from Albany will encounter a minimum of traffic by taking Route 20 to Lebanon, then right on Route 22 and 295 to Richmond. After crossing the bridge, over the New York Central tracks, turn left, over a county road, plainly marked: "Tanglewood." This highway comes out directly in front of the main festival gates, after a magnificent panorama of the Stockbridge Bowl and the Berkshire hills. It is suggested that motorists arrive at the grounds an hour before concert time to insure the best parking positions.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 150,154) (S 159,533)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 24 1950

Two Premieres For Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 23.—Two premieres will be performed, at concerts Monday and Monday week, by a 50-piece ocrhestra of less advanced students at the Berkshire Music Center who wish to play, under the direction of Howard Shanet, without the pressure of public performance.

The two works are Eric Simon version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death" (to be heard Monday) and "Music for Strings" by Manuel Mahler-Kalkstein of Israel (for Monday week).

The remainder of this week's program will include Douglas Moore's Symphony in A and Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture. The Aug. 7 program will include Hindemith's "Morning Music" and works by Handel, Bonelli and Brahms.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 13,075)
This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 26 1950

1,300 Persons Enjoy Opera at Tanglewood

"La Finta Giardiniera" Plays to Overflow House — Koussevitzky Party Tonight.

A capacity audience with an overflow of standees attended the first opera of the season which was presented last evening at Tanglewood in the theater-concert hall. Approximately 1,300 persons enjoyed the seldom-heard Mozart opera, "La Finta Giardiniera," sung by members of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department.

Tonight, the center will note the 76th birthday anniversary of its director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and following a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky will cut a birthday cake which has been presented to him.

At 4.30 o'clock this afternoon, a program of Latin American choral music will be presented in the theater-concert hall by the small choir of Department 5 for the friends of the Berkshire Music center.

A Tanglewood student chorus leader, Augusto Alejandro Rodriquez, founder and director of the chorus of the University of Puerto Rico, will conduct his own arrangements of three works during the afternoon program.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 172,098)
This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN
JUL 27 1950

Classic

Back at his post as permanent director of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is highlighted this summer by a release of the Mozart Symphony No. 39 in E-Flat. Renowned as an outstanding exponent of the works of the Austrian master composer, the maestro has programmed a segment of his immense repertoire on this season's six-concert Bach-Mozart series in the famous Lenox Music Shed.

One of the three symphonies composed by Mozart in six weeks, the No. 39 is fitting testament to the great spirit of its creator, who labored to produce this master work under desperate personal circumstances. The No. 39 is a joyous work, rendered by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Red Seal records with unparalleled musical verity.

* * *

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 106,682) (S 172,832)
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
JUL 27 1950

A Woman's New York

Manhattan Again Charges Census With Short Count

BY ALICE HUGHES.

NEW YORK, July 27.—New Yorkers—accustomed to being the biggest, loudest and mostest of everything—are miffed at learning from the federal Census Bureau that our population, which we were sure was over eight million, is only 7,841,003.

We won't take that lying down, particularly since Consolidated Edison, which so profitably lights and gasses our town, counts 8,145,000 according to the meters they have installed. Also, our department of health estimates the total at 8,250,000. Both these tabulators are more reliable, New Yorkers say, than freelance census takers who have slipped up and gone to the movies instead of counting an additional million or so people.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY.

This isn't the first time New Yorkers have questioned the federal census. Back in 1890 when the federal count gave us 1,500,000, local Doubting Thomases disputed it; sent out our own sleuths to count and, sure enough, dug up a quarter million more people. This time one of the morning papers, fierce with civic pride, has a campaign asking every New York, not counted by the federal census, to fill out and send in a coupon which is printed daily. Why is an 8,000,000 plus population important? It could give us greater representation in the state Senate and Assembly and in Congress. It might also anchor businesses now considering moving to the suburbs where the rate of growth is faster.

It is estimated that the federal census figure for New York is 500,000 short. We won't know officially until two months from now. Meantime housewives, boarding house keepers, building superintendents, plus many Puerto Ricans and other foreign-speaking groups who live in congested areas, are sending in coupons asserting they were not counted. My bet is that New York is at least an 8,000,000 town. Why should the federal census short-count us by 200,000, more or less?

MAESTRO IN TEMPEST?

Nettlesome Koussevitzky, former director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is known for recognizing and developing any number of talented youngsters. But history tends to show: the instant a conductor reaches an age and eminence competitive with his own, such a musical maestro gets inked at any shadow of his glory. For the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that Victor de Sabata would guest-conduct Aug. 3 and 5 concerts of the festival and Dr. Koussevitzky flew into a rage. He said tartly: "The festival concerts are for the Americas and America's gifted people," which undoubtedly he did not mean as he has developed any number of artists from abroad. The Italian de Sabata will conduct, notwithstanding.

However, with his usual benifience toward youngsters, Koussevitzky put his blessing upon 14-year-old violinist, Michael Rabin, who has hit radio fame on the Telephone Hour, and is scheduled to be guest soloist with Koussy when he guest-conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Koussy enjoys the drama of introducing very young people. Among his "finds" are Leonard Bernstein, Ruth Rosselt and now, Michael Rabin.

There's been a recent book on beards: now one called "Noses" has been written by Dr. Harold M. Holden, M. D., issued by World Publishing Company. Things you've never known about your nose and everyone else's are included; not only its function, but the effect its shape and size have on the personality, and what it does to our mental horizon. The nose's place in literature, art, sex and plastic surgery is also included. "Noses" has universal appeal, because everyone's got one.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 46,074)
This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD
APR 28 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt In Peter And The Wolf

Lenox, Mass., July 27. (AP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former First Lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's Peter And The Wolf at the orchestra's Berkshire music center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,861) (S 102,814)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 28 1950

Boston Symphony Plays To 8800 at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Friday — The full forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took up residence last night in the Tanglewood Shed for the first in a series of nine concerts that are identified as the main events of the 13th Berkshire Music Festival.

Serge Koussevitzky conducted, and will appear for three more concerts of this group—the next tomorrow night. There was an attendance of 8800 as compared with 7300 for the similar event last Summer.

Same As Last Summer

Every good performance of a great symphony is worthy of serious listening and interest. But, isn't it more than coincidence that last night's program was identical with the festival's final concert last Summer? The works were Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major (Eroica"), and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2, in D major.

Basically, Koussevitzky has changed little in his conceptions of these two mammouth works, except that in the first, at least, one sensed an even more determined search for drama, through vitalized driving power.

Two intervening years in this, his mid-seventh decade, have not quieted the conductor's vigorous podium behavior. During the Mozart concerts last weekend, and some of the preceding Bach, one was aware of subtle changes of attitude.

He still suggests, then exhorts, and finally insists upon the effects he seeks. He still looks enthralled when he has been rewarded with a particularly well-executed phrase—and he is still a master of facial reproach (and rebuff) at tonal misdemeanor. You can sometimes hear him sing, but that is nothing now. He lingers over sensuous melody with a captivated expression.

Something New

But somehow his concept of the Beethoven had something new last night—something great, and curiously enough it wasn't as well played technically as we have heard it many times before.

It wasn't merely a question of showmanship either. It can't be said that Koussevitzky is sharing the spotlight more equally with his players, or is lessening its glare, because the order is still Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

There are few symphonies that offer more fertile speech for intense expression than the "Eroica." Briefly, it was written by rebellious Beethoven who was really soaring with symphonic wings for the first time. For those of us who were fortunate enough to hear the Bach-Mozart concerts, the transition to this defiant work was a stirring experience, in spite of its descrepancies.

'Fluffing'

Generally speaking it was not a good night for the brasses. There was considerable "fluffing" of tone that at least in the Scherzo movement was partly due to the conductors excessive tempo. Nevertheless, the powerful "two-fisted" chords set into motion a performance that tingled with nervous energy.

Even the Scherzo movement, in spite of the tempo, the strings performed with virility and brilliance, but there was a disconcerting featuring of brasses, and sometimes of timpani, that marred the overall impression by drawing attention to subordinate themes.

For the most part, the Funeral March was deep velvety sound although the conductor did not always make clear, subtle delineation in transient changes of mood, the finale remained poised in its rhythmic and melodic contours and the final climactic destination was reached with bravura and almost brazen insistence.

Concerned

Koussevitzky was shrewdly concerned with the lyrical splendor and climactic properties of the sibelius symphony without overemphasis on the latter. There was not a complete, but at least a partial abandonment of the Beethoven turmoil and concentration was placed on a more calculated type of intensity.

In the movements that we heard, there was subtle placement of accents and colume variances were ordered and fulfilled with fine precision. Again the brasses and timpani expressed themselves with marked penetration but here it was more in keeping with the next.

Saturday night's program offers likely vehicles for continued observation of changes in the Koussevitzky style. The main work is Bruckner's Symphony No. 7, in E major, also the Debussy works—"Nuages," "Fetes," and La Mere."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 89,944)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 28 1950

UN Representatives Tanglewood Guests

Lenox, Mass.—Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this weekend ot 50 members of the UN Secretariat, as a result of a request made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitzsky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

[62]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 100,098)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE & POST
JUL 28 1950

Koussevitzky Wins Tanglewood Plaudits

Special to The Evening Gazette

LENOX, July 28—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra received an ovation last night from an audience of 8800 in the Tanglewood shed, at the first concert in Series A of the 13th Berkshire Music Festival.

The program consisted of two Koussevitzky favorites conducted by him here and in Boston numerous times—Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, in E-flat major ("Eroica"), and the Second Symphony, in D Major, by Sibelius.

In spite of technical defects, the Beethoven Symphony was raised to lofty heights. The strings and woodwinds elicited rich tonal shadings, and maintained verve of spirit, consistent with the conductor's approach.

By the same token, the brasses and woodwinds occasionally trespassed beyond their dynamic requirements, placing undue emphasis upon secondary melodies. The brasses also suffered faulty intonation in lighter passages, but in the scherzo movement, at least, partial blame could well be attributed to the conductor's overly brisk tempo.

Sibelius Work Excels

Generally speaking, the Sibelius Symphony was the better sounding of the two and the more efficiently played, though it did not reach the climactic proportions of the concluding Beethoven movement.

Here, Koussevitzky placed admirable stress on lyricism and contrasted mood. The four movements were skilfully woven as component parts of a large tonal tapestry. Worthy of special comment were pizzicato passages in the low strings in the second movement, that established a firm pulse for rich melody produced by woodwinds and brasses, without strain. The work was brought to a close with magnificent sonority.

Last night's program carried the special announcement that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will be played at the festival's annual special event called "Tanglewood on Parade" Friday evening, Aug. 11, and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has accepted an invitation to appear as the narrator.

Since July 8, 40 out of a total of 61 compositions by Bach, included in 20 events, have been presented by students of the Berkshire music center and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Bach Program Varied

The preliminary Bach concerts, given in the theater concert hall and conducted by Koussevitzky, included all six of the Brandenburg concertos and the four orchestra suites. This vast literature commemorates the 200th anniversary of the composer's death. This afternoon's concert by center students is the more significant because it will mark the anniversary to the day, and because of the unusual repertory.

Bach's concertos for two pianos and orchestra are not uncommon to concert programs; however, the one for three pianos (C major) and even more so, the one for four pianos, have remained rarities because of instrumental and special requirements.

Performances of six Bach cantatas were of uneven merit, the most admirable being No. 50—"Now Has the Hope and the Strength." The 125 students who participated in these (with orchestra and guest soloists) were rehearsed by Hugh Ross, but four of them were conducted by Koussevitzky in the actual performance.

Last-minute changes in interpretive conceptions sometimes exacted a toll in spontaneity. Also, in some instances, both choral and instrumental works were obviously selected as examples of the composer's writing rather than for their intrinsic values.

Mozart Draws Well

Interpret it as you will, the weekend of Mozart concerts attracted audiences totaling 11,700 as compared to 11,500 who attended the preceding two weekends of Bach programs. The total pre-Shed concerts last Summer drew 12,400, exceeding this Summer's figure by 10,800.

Great interest is centered in the forthcoming American premier of Jacque Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" (Monday night, Aug. 7), principally because the composer is a member of the center faculty and this is his first visit to America.

Another strong motive for anticipation is the memory of the superb performance given Mozart's opera-buffa, "La Finta Giardiniera," by the same group last Tuesday night. Sarah Caldwell, assistant to Boris Goldovsky for the Worcester Festival, distinguished herself for crafty stage direction and a brilliantly translated English text—if not for her handling of the orchestra in the first act overture.

AT THE ELMS

William Bendix stars with Una Merkel in "Kill the Umpire," today at The Elms Theater in Millbury. Co-feature is "Humphrey Takes a Chance."

Detailing much of the innuendo that Mozart and Librettist Calzabigi directed at the fallacies of 18th century opera, the cast, headed by Adele Addison, kept a capacity audience chortling over the absurdities of situation and speech.

Work Well Mounted

However, far from being merely a light-headed burlesque, it offered much to be admired vocally, notably in the work of Raymond Smolover, Nancy Trickey and Mac Morgan. The three sets were skilfully and colorfully executed, and costumes were tastefully, and in some cases, amusingly styled to the period.

The other major production of the opera department will be Lukas Foss' brief vehicle, speculatively titled "The Jumping Frog."

This will be Monday night, and is available only to an invited audience of friends who have contributed financially to the center.

Attending this weekend's concerts by the Boston Symphony will be Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor whose engagement by the orchestra's trustees to direct concerts Aug. 3 and 5 vigorously was protested by Koussevitzky in a nationwide broadcast.

Koussevitzky will conduct tomorrow night's concert. A feature of Sunday afternoon's concert will be Foss' "The Song of Song," with Ellabelle Davis as soprano soloist. Leonard Bernstein will make the first of two appearances as conductor.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 700,722) (S 1,210,507)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 28 1950

Record Crowd At Music Fete

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 28. — Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the first big week end series of concerts in the Berkshire Festival here last night.

A two symphony program drew a crowd of 8,800 people, 6,000 of whom sat in the music shed and the remainder sat or draped themselves on the lawns outside. It was the largest gathering for this opening concert.

The symphonies were Beethoven" "Eroica" and Sibelius's Second. Thus paired they made a concert which carried its own overtures.

These works reflect not only the inspiration of composers who have crossed the threshold but also the strength with which they have struck out daringly on their own. Last night Sibelius stood side by side with Beethoven and held his ground admirably.

Little can be said about Koussevitzky's way with either the "Eroica" or the Sibelius that has not been said many times. The performance of the "Eroica" did not quite come off; it moved too deliberately and too heavily.

That of the Sibelius came off with deeper understanding and conviction. Perhaps the work itself gives more release. It certainly touched off more response between performers and listeners last night.

Whatever the reaction, however, there is no doubt that the Tanglewood setting creates its own atmosphere. The music always sounds just a bit different in these surroundings. This feeling might be the Berkshire air.

It is more likely a fusion of those intangible qualities of which nature and ideals form a significant part. They combine to make each concert an event which apparently more and more people wish to share.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 142,449)
This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt to Tell Of 'Peter and the Wolf'

LENOX, Mass. (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 716,451)
This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Engaged As Orchestra Narrator

Lenox, Mass., July 28—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra August 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 72,071) (S 123,360)
This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. FDR to Narrate With Boston Symphony

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston symphony orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire music center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,689)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt To Be Narrator At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 at Tanglewood to tell a story.

The former First Lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a story teller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 19,168) (S 38,362)
This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. FDR To Appear With Symphony

Lenox, Mass., July 27—(AP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
COMPASS
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. FDR to Do 'Peter and Wolf'

Lenox, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former First Lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A Center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
CINCINNATTI OHIO
ENQUIRER
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. To Narrate

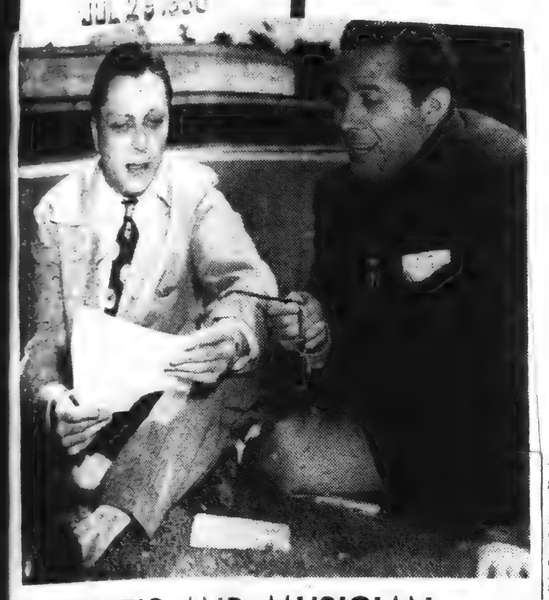
Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra August 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf" at the orchestra Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A Center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

★ ★ ★

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 47,861) (S 102,814)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 29 1950



CRITIC AND MUSICIAN

Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic (left), and Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor at Tanglewood. That's Tanglewood Shed in the background.

AT TANGLEWOOD SHED

Brazilian Conductor's Achievements Many

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Saturday—Eleazar de Carvalho is an absorbing and entertaining man to interview. He apologizes for his accent but once embarked on an idea, his English takes the Portuguese tempo—and some of its vocabulary.

The young Brazilian will conduct the Boston Symphony in a Tanglewood Shed concert, Saturday evening, Aug. 12, and as you might expect, the program will include one of his native country's works, Villa - Lobos' "Choros No. 10."

At the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on July 2, Serge Koussevitzky made a statement about which I asked Carvalho to comment. It was: "Speaking of the South American and tropical countries, I observed that the rich reserve of natural resources, talent, and the innate warm feeling and love for music were inspired by a lack of organization, discipline, and general passivity, and, particularly, by the material insecurity of the musicians."

Devoted to Country

Rather than say bluntly that Koussevitzky is right or wrong, Carvalho suggests what might have prompted these remarks. But before we go on with that I want to say that Carvalho's devotion to his country is unbounded and as for its musical future, he says — "We have the best ground for progress because it is virgin ground. When we organize we will be the best."

In no sense as an apology he points out that only 25-per cent of the Brazilian population is of the educated classes and about one per cent, or 2500 persons, are concert-goers.

He illustrates the need for muscial training with a striking example.

"Once, Heitor Villa - Lobos heard some grammar school students sing the Brazilian National Anthem, and he counted 52 errors!"

"What kind of errors?" I wanted to know.

Whereupon he correctly sang the first few bars of our "Star Spangled Banner," and then proceeded to alter them rhythmically and otherwise . . . a convincing argument that something definitely had to be done about those Brazilian students.

Established Conservatory

And it was. The government gave Villa-Lobos the authority to establish a Conservatory that would specialize in the problem.

Since Carvalho and Villa-Lobos are among Brazil's top-notch musicians, and even live on the same street in Rio de Janeiro, I was naturally interested in the conductor's opinion of the composer. Here I discovered mixed feelings.

At first Carvalho declared Villa-Lobos to be "the greatest composer" of a much vaster area, but changed it to include South America only. But he does not give Villa-Lobos an unqualified rating of supremacy.'

"Villa-Lobos should not be judged solely by his shorter works (one that he mentioned was the piano piece "Polichinelle") because many of them are trivial and will be forgotten. He will be remembered for his larger works, such as 'Mandu Carara,' 'Fantasie for Violin and Orchestra,' etc."

The "mixed feelings" apply to Carvalho's opinion of Villa-Lobos as a person. He describes him as one who "likes to be accentric," likes to call attention to himself," and he regrets that "he sometimes speaks bad words about me." Whatever the reasons they would seem to be insufficient because Carvalho has been Villa-Lobos' chief propagandist in this country.

Carvalho is completely frank about his ambitious and professional experiences in this country.

Conducted in Hub

"Four years ago, I conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time," he says. "I had ambitions to conduct one of America's leading orchestras on a permanent basis, but I have been waiting. I am now convinced that this is a place for American and European conductors."

Nevertheless he does have a genuine interest in taking on an orchestra in a smaller city that he could train and help grow. The problem that suggests itself here is that players in these smaller orchestras aspire to join the larger.

How would he solve that? Simply by providing attractive salaries for the players and raising the musical standards to win their respect and pride.

As for Koussevitzky's claim that Brazil evidences "lack of discipline" and the like, Carvalho explains that its symphony orchestras are supported by the government and players are paid on a 12-month-a-year basis.

"But the money is not enough," he adds, "therefore the players must do broadcasts and other jobs. However, they have no worry about contracts for next season because in Brazil they are employed on a long-term basis."

Music for Love

And he adds the significant remark, "We still do music for love, not for money."

Carvalho's description of his people might explain the "general passivity" that Koussevitzky mentioned.

"They don't rush around as you do here," he says. "The sun is hot and people move leisurely. There is always the siesta after lunch, for example. And in some places everything closes at noon for two hours."

Koussevitzky had reason to be pleased when he rehearsed a Brazilian orchestra on his recent tour of South America. He insisted that more rehearsal time was needed, and the players themselves decided to do an extra hour daily.

As Carvalho points out, in this country extra rehearsal time is expensive.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 33,689)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 29 1950

Koussevitzky Wins Ovation At Tanglewood Festival

By D. E. RITZ

Tanglewood devotees will agree that there is only one Boston Symphony Orchestra and one Serge Koussevitzky and that when the two are combined no finer music can be achieved. Great interpretations are the expected from this combination.

A first concert under a returned conductor—Dr. Koussevitzky has been away from the full symphony orchestra for a year—is always open to wonderment. Will the orchestra respond? Will the director's intervening conducting experiences have altered the inner bond between the conductor and the men?

But the first few bars of the Beethoven "Eroica" Symphony on Thursday evening dispelled any questions. The orchestra to a man was with its beloved conductor and responsive to his slightest wish. An evening of superb music followed and the reviewer never expects to hear any finer performance of either the "Eroica" or the Sibelius Symphony number 2.

Lovely Spot

Tanglewood itself, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires, is one of the loveliest spots imaginable. Each year its beauty comes as a fresh surprise. The lovely lake (just off the grounds), the green gardens and pools, the enormous shed with its excellent acoustics, the Theatre-Concert Hall and the buildings where classes for the summer students at the Berkshire Music Center are conducted, all fit into the picture without crowding.

But back to the orchestra's playing. In the Beethoven the structural beauty of the first movement, the funeral dirge, the Scherzo throbbing with life and the marvelous Finale became of even greater significance under the direction of the master. Delicate shading, fine precision and feeling for tone color marked the whole interpretation. Contrasts in tone volume were intoxicating, yet all fitted into the over-all plan.

The Sibelius Second Symphony has become standard repertoire but there was nothing "standard" in the interpretation given it Thursday. Had it been just freshly written it could not have come to the ears with more impact. The shimmering string tone, the double bass pizzicato passages, the ethereal quality of the high strings and the snap of the timpani had the vibrancy that only a great interpretation can give.

An ovation of many minutes followed the concert. Dr. Koussevitzky has returned to great favor with the musical public and as always shared his applause with the orchestra.

The festival programs will continue tonight and tomorrow afternoon and on Thursday, Friday and Sunday of the coming two weeks.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 24,968)
This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS
JUL 28 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt On Symphony Program

LENOX, Mass., July 27—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator of a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 12,278)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
JUL 28 1950

MRS. FDR TO APPEAR WITH BOSTON SYMPHONY

LENOX, Mass., July 27 — (AP) Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire music center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

[64]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,861) (S 102,814)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 30 1950

Koussevitzky Annoyed At Berkshire Audience

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—Last night's concert at the Berkshire Festival was heard by an audience of 9900 whose enthusiasm was equalled only by its manners.

After the first movement of Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, late-comers were permitted to go to their seats. It was several minutes before the audience could be persuaded to quiet down, to the obvious annoyance of Serge Koussevitzky, and I don't blame him.

He shrugged his shoulders once and again and the players appeared to be baffled by the racket. Finally, the conductor held up a protesting hand and that worked. The same thing happened after the second movement, with some improvement and by the end of the third, those members of the audience who apparently didn't know any better, decided to postpone their enthusiasm until the end of the symphony.

In addition to the Bruckner Symphony (the only work our deadline permitted us to hear) were Debussy's "Clouds," "Festivals," and "The Sea."

Man's Music

The Bruckner is a man's music, particularly one who is scholarly. Taking about one hour to perform, it might be considered too long by some, but that is debatable because it wastes no time saying un-important things. Each of the movements is a tone-poem in itself.

To adequately review what was a magnificent performance requires more detailed comment than usual. The first movement opens with trembling figures in violins and expressive phrases spoken by 'cellos and violas. Soon the woodwinds accept the background and the violins carry on the melody.

As it proceeds, beautiful themes of a bucolic nature are exchanged between sections. The instrumentation is brilliantly designed to give each instrument prominence without austerity.

Insistent Climaxes

Climaxes are insistent, growing to huge sonority in flashes of sound. The top layer of each climax consists of bright, brassy tone. Lyricism is generously distributed between them. The flute passages, by the way, were beautifully played by Georges Laurent.

This first movement has a curious mixture of elements — severity, and considerable turmoil. Unfortunately the blaring close was somewhat disfigured by blotched tones in the heavy brass.

The second movement mingles an abject spirit with sensuous melody that the strings last night caused to be sung with great richness. The disconsolate mood returns with insistence but at the close of the movement one is left with the impression of melodic beauty.

Scherzo Monstrous

The Scherzo is a rather monstrous one, the brasses hurling out brazen vindictives to a stealthy beat in percussion. The strings and woodwinds join in with friendlier versions of the same ideas, but the brasses are determined in their brutality. The accompanying trio turns to an opposite mood and the lighter instruments speak quietly.

The last movement is fashioned somewhat after the first. It is rugged music and makes harsh spokesmen of the brass choir. Rhythms are alert and unexpected enough to incite constant interest in their developments. The finale is like a rising peak of tone employing the full resources to their utmost capacity.

We have never heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra play with greater zeal and almost never have we heard it make more engrossing sound. This would be interpreted as surprising because Brucker, like Mahler, is one of those composers who is frequently not listed with the great, through oversight.

Both are recognized by the musician without serious qualification, and by the public with varying degrees of trepidation.

Deserve Greater Part

Such works as the Bruckner symphony deserve greater prominence on these programs. The festival is so well established as to make negligible the "risk" of such programming.

The Bruckner is one of the few "unfamiliar" works (in the sense of being unfamiliar to the general public) that is being presented at these concerts. As for American works . . . but that's another matter that can be discussed at some other date.

The fact is that the audience was highly responsive and since the work was composed in 1882-1883, that might not seem so startling. But it is still "new" music and music that underwent an epidemic of prejudice and has been calmly neglected.

This afternoon's program is promising. Leonard Bernstein will conduct Harold Shaperojns Symphony for classical orchestra: David Diamond's "Timon of Athens"; Lukas Foss' "The Song of Songs" and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. Ellabelle Davis will sing the solo soprano score for the Foss work.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 96,045) (S 140,036)
This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
JUL 28 1950

LENOX, Mass.—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11, to tell a story. The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program. A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 104,911) (S 155,723)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
JUL 29 1950

Mrs. FDR to Narrate With Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Aug. 11 to tell a story.

The former first lady will be the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

A center spokesman added: "It is said that Mrs. Roosevelt is a great success as a storyteller."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 541,269) (S 1,007,060)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 31 1950

3 CONTEMPORARIES PERFORMED AT FETE

Bernstein Conducts Works by Shapero, Diamond and Foss at Berkshire Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 30—It was the turn of contemporary music at the Berkshire Festival this afternoon. Leonard Bernstein, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, offered music by Harold Shapero, David Diamond and Lukas Foss, as well as Brahms' Fourth Symphony. At last night's concert, which Serge Koussevitzky conducted, the program embraced Bruckner's Seventh Symphony and two nocturnes and "La Mer" by Debussy.

Though the week-end was marred by showers—they fell in the middle of last night's concert and at the start of this afternoon's—big crowds turned out for the programs in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Last night's attendance was 9,900 and today's was 9,500.

Of the three contemporary pieces today the Adagio from Mr. Shapero's symphony for classical orchestra was the most impressive to this listener. Despite the fact that it seems a bit too long, it has something to say. Mr. Shapero's writing has personal feeling, and he projects this emotion with integrity.

Simple and Direct Style

There is little posturing or ranting, as might be the case with some young composers who cannot resist the temptation to show how they can throw their orchestral weight around. Mr. Shapero's style is simple and direct; it is "modern" only where there is a sound reason for it.

Mr. Bernstein, who had conducted the whole symphony in Boston, did only the Adagio in New York last season. It is a pity that he did not see fit to conduct the entire composition here.

Mr. Diamond's contribution was "Timon of Athens," a symphonic portrait based on Shakespeare. The music, which had its first performance in Louisville last February, makes skillful use of the full machinery of the orchestra. Mr. Diamond's "Timon of Athens" is, at the least, a theatrical fellow. Occasionally there is a suggestion of the character's essential tragedy, but not so much as there might be.

Of Mr. Foss' Cantata, "The Song of Songs," it must be said that the composer was courageous to attempt to set the radiant biblical lines to music. If he could not quite match the ancient poet's ecstasy, he did convey something of the mood. He seemed to be happiest in the more agitated passages where unadorned, soaring lyricism seemed to be in order. His musical style was halting. But he need not feel too dejected. He was 24 when he wrote the piece four years ago, and at the age it is easier to feel ecstasy than to give it artistic form.

Ellabelle Davis Is Soloist

Ellabelle Davis, the American soprano, who has been soloist in the cantata in New York and in many other places, sang with great feeling and dignity.

Mr. Bernstein conducted these pieces with drive and precision. He was responsive to the rhythmic and coloristic devices of the music, and he and the orchestra made them alive and persuasive.

At last night's concert Mr. Koussevitzky gave performances in the grand, sonorous line. The Bruckner symphony, which has its passionate admirers, was done with breadth and spaciousness. Its climaxes were tremendous, with conductor and orchestra working themselves to a frazzle to keep everything going.

Whether all the effort was worth while would depend on one's devotion to Bruckner. There were many last night who cared enough to give the conductor and his players a tremendous hand. There was another one after "La Mer," which was played with an elemental fire and sonority. Considering that this was a performance which had all outdoors nearby, its proportions could be justified.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION-REPUBLICAN
JUL 30 1950

Bruckner's Symphony No. 7 Rare Tanglewood Pleasure

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra Give Vivid Interpretation; Shower Delays Program

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 29—Anton Bruckner's symphony No. 7 comprised the first part of the program given by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood tonight. The music of Bruckner, like that of Mahler, needs a special build-up, but in spite of this Dr. Koussevitzky succeeded in making the work interesting and at times highly vivid. His sympathetic approach enkindled with warmth the ascending, aspiring themes of the opening movement, so devotional in their expressiveness. Moving, too, were the rich organ-like sonorities of the chorale in the slow movement. The scherzo provided a welcome contrast yet here, too, a religious atmosphere pervaded the work. Most colorful of the four movements was the dynamic finale with its ingenious orchestration. Four tubas and a contrabass tuba augment the orchestra in adding a rich, organesque character to the symphony. It was a pleasure listening to this rarely played work by a neglected composer.

Debussy's Works

The second half consisted of Debussy' two nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals" and his symphonic poem, "The Sea." The subtleties of Debussy's music elude some conductors but Dr. Koussevitsky seems to have an intuitive feeling for it which is complimented by the predominantly French personnel of the orchestra. Especially in these three pieces celebrating the glories of nature did they sense the vague atmosphere of the composer's idiom, so sensitive and expressive. Brilliant was the realization of the restless, dancing rhythms of "Festivals" and as for the great tone-poem, "The Sea," it had long been associated with the Boston Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky, their fine recording setting a standard for its performance. Tonight its tempestuous, surging phrases carried a fresh thrill teamed with virtuosity.

The late afternoon sunshine helped attract an audience of 9900 but, unfortunately, an unexpected shower drove the outdoor audience under cover just before the third movement of the Bruckner, causing somewhat of a stir and slightly delaying the progress of the symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,458) (S 52,818)
This Clipping From LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
JUL 30 1950

At Berkshire

Aaron Copland and Leonard Bernstein, composer and conductor of "Billy the Kid" are on the Berkshire Music Center faculty this summer. Gregor Piatigorsky is teaching chamber music—the other two, respectively, composition and conducting.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 700,722) (S 1,219,507)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 31 1950

Koussevitzky At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein shared the conducting assignments with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the week-end concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

Koussevitzky featured the Bruckner Seventh Symphony on the Saturday evening program heard by 9,900 people. Bernstein gave due recognition to American composers on the Sunday afternoon program heard by 9,500.

Works by Shapero, Diamond, and Foss placed native talent in a most favorable light. The audience's gracious acceptance of this music attested its quality if not its distinction. It is music to be esteemed for its accomplishment rather than to be loved for its substance.

To present only the adagio of Shapero's composition as he did in New York seemed an affectation on Bernstein's part. This presentation posed problems of length and of self-sufficiency.

The work brims over with promise not wholly realized. Perhaps several strong influences, among them that of Mahler, rob the music of real individuality.

Diamond's "Timon of Athens" achieves its end: a symphonic portrait after Shakespeare. The close delineation of the composer's intentions makes the music more programmatic than he undoutedly intended. This is a portrait to behold rather than to experience. As such, it is admirably worked out though a bit too brashly in sound.

Foss's "The Song of Songs" reveals a great deal of talent and a certain perplexing facility. It came off yesterday because of an excellent performance in which Ellabelle Davis starred.

Her exceptional singing almost eclipsed the work itself. She let her voice soar in the upper register so effortlessly and so purely that its beauty made all else pale.

Bernstein set forth these works in the fullness of his enthusiasm. He still overconducts. His accompanying almost every phrase with appropriate gestures often lapses into bad taste.

Koussevitzky's presentation of the Bruckner carried much conviction. Debussy's Nocturnes and "La Mer" completed the program. At both concerts the orchestra played impressively as usual.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 330,240) (S 677,761)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

American Works Heard

By Arthur Berger

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 30.—Leonard Bernstein's program for this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert in the mammoth Tanglewood shed went a long way toward giving this year's Berkshire Festival its measure of freshness. It listed three of our best young American composers whose music Mr. Bernstein brings to life in a fashion no one quite equals. David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" was the news of the occasion. Harold Shapero's adagietto and (with Ellabells Davis again as the excellent soprano) Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" had both been favorably received before and were very good to hear again.

Rounding out a week-end pair of programs that began last night with Bruckner and Debussy under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, the three American works made a welcome group, with the one reservation—there was too much slow music.

"Timon of Athens," subtitled "Symphonic Portrait (After Shakespeare)," is described as a "psycho-orchestral study" of the "psychopathic," but also "noble and generous," hero of Shakespeare's play. Its over-all mood is brooding. But brilliant orchestral flashes appear suddenly and, like hallucinations, as suddenly disappear. Their presence in its consistently rich orchestral sonority is vital. Otherwise this eight-minute work would seem mainly to evoke Berlioz and other romantic tone poets.

In Romatic Vein

Romantic it is, even to the motive, which gives a new twist to those three questioning notes so fascinating to nineteenth-century masters from Bethoven with his "muss es sein" to Lisst of "Les Preludes." All in all, "Timon" is Diamond in his most tender and rhapsodic vein, weaving melodic threads in his own characteristic way.

Serge Koussevitzky has done more than his share for new music and now, at seventy-six, he seems understandably content to leave this department to his young associates. But his program last night was in no sense routine or lacking in power and ambitiousness. Bruckner's hour-long seventh symphony is not the sort of music that lends itself to frequent performances, and this was, as a matter of fact, the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has done it without cuts. His masterful reading was remarkable for its eloquence, accuracy and style. His tempos, some of them a shade fast for the Brucknerites, minimized the arid stretches and pointed up the several inspired and beautiful ones.

Weather Is Unsettled

Unsettled weather played tricks with the week-end concerts. Partly cloudy, but not unpromising skies preceded last night's event, but a light rain started to fall at about the second movement of the Bruckner. Many hardy listeners remained on the lawns, some of them without even protection of blankets or the shelter of trees. Most of the audience that overflowed the 6,000-capacity shed, however, were allowed to stand under the shed or bring in the outside benches and their own camp chairs. Conversely, very ominous clouds preceded this afternoon's concert, and a stiff downpour routed those on the lawn just before the concert began. When it did begin, however, the sun began to shine brightly, and those who had sought protection returned to their places on the lawn, and the usual afternoon, idyllic scene of listeners sprawled and relaxed under the skies was restored. But the time Mr. Bernstein reached the second half of his program, which consisted of the Brahms fourth symphony, the grounds were dry enough for comfortable reclining. The attendance at both concerts was very good, considering that both the weather and programs did not have wide popular appeal. There were almost 10,000 last night and 9,500 this afternoon.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
COMPASS
AUG 1 - 1950

Ibert Comic Opera Set for Premiere

The students of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., are this week whipping into shape the production of Jacque's Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," which will be presented for the first time in the U. S. at Tanglewood next Monday and Tuesday evenings as their major production of the summer semester.

Ibert, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is teaching advance composition classes at the Center and will be on hand for the premiere. The French composer is making his first visit here this summer.

The opera, which is under the direction of Jan Popper, is described as a satire using government and warfare as its targets. The libretto is by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase and is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot. "The King of Yvetot" was first produced in 1930 by the Paris Opera Company.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 54,563) (S 112,833)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 31 1950

MUSIC STUDENT—Robert W. Perkins (above), son of Mrs. K. Leonard Perkins of Waverly place, is studying music at the Berkshire Music center, "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires. He is a member of the choral group at the center.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-3860
Cir. (D 275,045)
This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUL 31 1950

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY STAGES BRILLIANT BERKSHIRE RETURN

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Staff Reporter.

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—Mother Nature put on her most elegant dress to participate in the welcome for Serge Koussevitzky when he conducted the first concert of the 1950 Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Nearly 8900 persons, representing almost every state in the country and several foreign countries, were in the Music Shed. It was the largest number the famous Shed had sheltered since it was built in 1938. In addition, more than 3000 persons heard the concert from the spacious lawns at the rear.

Thursday evening was the first time Dr. Koussevitzky had conducted the full orchestra since last Summer's festival. Since he retired at the end of the 1949 symphony season in Boston after 25 years as music director of the orchestra, he has been garnering laurels abroad.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY chose Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius for Thursday evening. For the second concert Saturday evening his choices were the Bruckner Seventh Symphony, the Two Nocturnes — Clouds and Festivals — and "La Mer" by Debussy.

There was a tremendous elan and an almost overwhelming grandeur to all the readings. It is difficult to describe the extraordinarily beautiful sound of the orchestra. It was now molten gold, now a delicate shimmer.

* * *

PRESENT SATURDAY EVENING was Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor who will be guest director for two of the concerts of the second series next week-end. Also among the guests were about 50 members of the U. N. secretariat. Incidentally, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, U. S. delegate to the world group, who requested last year that the U. N. representatives be invited this season, will be at Tanglewood next week as guest of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Mrs. Roosevelt and the conductor will discuss the former first lady's forthcoming role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" Aug. 11.

Leonard Bernstein, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky at the Music Center, brilliantly directed the orchestra in Sunday afternoon's program of modern works by Harold Shapero, David Diamond, Lukas Foss and the Brahms Fourth Symphony.

Mrs. F.D.R. Arrives For Tanglewood Role

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was all smiles this morning when she arrived at the Pittsfield Airport for her appearance tonight at the Tanglewood on Parade program in Lenox. She is assisted from the private plane by the pilot who returned immediately to Grossinger, N.Y.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt arrived in a private plane at the Pittsfield Airport at 9.38 this morning and was hurried off to Tanglewood to start rehearsals with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," which will high light the Tanglewood on Parade benefit program in the Music Shed tonight.

Carrying a score under her arm of Prokofieff's composition, Mrs. Roosevelt was met at the airport by George E. Judd Jr., son of the manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to the director of Tanglewood. About 50 persons were on hand to greet the widow of President Roosevelt but hundreds of others were disappointed when her plane landed nearly 40 minutes earlier than scheduled.

After leaving Pittsfield, Mrs. Roosevelt went directly to Seranak, the home of Dr. Koussevitzky on Bald Head Mountain, near Shadowbrook in Lenox. After a short rest she accompanied the Tanglewood director to the Music Shed to commence rehearsals.

Grandchild Coming

Mrs. Roosevelt flew to Pittsfield from Grossinger, N.Y. She revealed that one of her grandchildren, David Roosevelt, eight-year-old son of Elliot Roosevelt, is expected to be in the audience with his father tonight for the performance. Other members of the family who will drive to Lenox from the Roosevelt home in Hyde Park will be Mrs. Roosevelt's daughter-in-law, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., and her niece, Mrs. Edward Elliott.

Making the plane trip from Grossinger with Mrs. Roosevelt this morning was Mrs. Leonard Lyons, wife of the columnist. Mrs. Lyons accompanied Mrs. Roosevelt to Tanglewood and then left for Camp Lenox in Otis to visit one of her children who is a camper at the Shaw Pond summer colony.

After the morning rehearsal Mrs. Roosevelt had lunch on the Tanglewood grounds with Dr. Koussevitzky and several trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are in the Berkshires for tonight's program which will benefit the Berkshire Music Center. This afternoon at 2 she made a recording of "Peter and the Wolf," with Dr. Koussevitzky and the BSO.

Before tonight's concert opens, Mrs. Roosevelt and members of her family will be dinner guests of Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt at Heaton Hall in Stockbridge. Following the program the Roosevelt family will return to Hyde Park by automobile.

Dever Attending Concerts

Governor Paul A. Dever, who arrived at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, last night to attend the week-end events at Tanglewood will be in a box again tonight at the Tanglewood on Parade benefit. Last night he occupied a box next to Mrs. Koussevitzky for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of the second part of Bach's mass in B minor.

With fair weather predicted for

Mrs. Roosevelt
Continued on Second Page

Mrs. Roosevelt

Continued From First Page

tonight, a record-breaking crowd is expected to turn out for the benefit performance which will include, beside the presentation of "Peter and the Wolf," a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Haydn's "Oxford Symphony," Dvorak's symphony "From the New World," student activities, the awarding of door prizes and waltzing on the lawn.

The program officially opens at 6 and will continue until 11. All seats in the box section and in front of the boxes are reserved but general admission tickets will entitle holders to sit in the unreserved section in the rear of the boxes in the huge Shed.

At 4.30 this afternoon box and reserved seat holders will be entitled to witness an opera in one act, "Gianni Schicchi," to be given in the theatre-concert hall by the opera department. At 6 PM, when the gates will be opened for the general public, the opera students will give scenes from the following operas: "The Magic Flute," "Tosca," "Fidelio," "Carmen," and "Il Trovatore."

At the same time those attending the Tanglewood on Parade program will be invited to attend a concert by students of chamber music, composition and choral singing in the chamber music hall, featuring the works of Beethoven, Schubert, Ravel, Poulenc, Wilding-White, and Druckman. Wilding-White is a student of Jacques Ibert, guest faculty member this year and Druckman is a student of Aaron Copland, assistant director of Tanglewood.

Four Student Conductors

The Department II orchestra will also give a performance at 6 in the Music Shed with the following sharing honors as conductors: Jurriaan Andriessen, Irwin Hoffman, Charles Schiff and Wolfgang Schanzer. Soloists will be Rosalind Elias, contralto, and Robert Gerle, violinist.

At 5.45 the signal for the beginning of the Tanglewood on Parade program will be given at the Music Shed where the student body will gather in front of the platform, sorting themselves out in activities in which they are to take part. Mr. Copland will explain briefly to the group the setup for the rest of the evening. At the close of his remarks the student groups will parade, followed by their audiences, to the places of their performance—orchestra in the Shed, chamber music, madrigal group and composition in the chamber music hall, opera in the theatre, and chorus in the rehearsal stage. The student programs will start as soon as the performers and audiences arrive in the various halls.

The student activities are scheduled to end at 7 when the audience will be given time to hold picnics on the lawns of Tanglewood.

At 8.15 the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will start in the Shed. Mrs. Roosevelt is scheduled to appear before intermission and is expected to complete her performance by 9.30. The concert program is scheduled to end about 10.15 when two door prizes will be awarded. The prizes are the Acrosonic piano from Dr. Koussevitzky's dressing room, which has been donated by the Baldwin Piano Company, and a set of recordings from the Tanglewood Music Store.

To conclude the program there will be waltzing on the lawn. No fireworks are scheduled this year.

The Berkshire Festival season will draw to a close this week end with the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

Bach's 'High Mass' Presented By Koussevitzky at Tanglewood

Audience of 7600 Attends Opening Of Final Concert Series—Heavy Shower Fails To Halt Evening Program

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The final week end of the Berkshire Festival began last night at Tanglewood when the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a chorus of 150 voices from the student body of the Berkshire Music Center gave "The High Mass" of Bach. Serge Koussevitzky conducted and divided it into two equal parts, each of about an hour and a quarter duration, the first being sung at 5 and the final half at 8.15.

Fortunate pleasant weather permitted the audience of 7600 to spend the interval on the broad ample lawns, either with picnics of their own confection or purchased at the commissary of the Center by taking one's place in dragon-like queues. A sudden short shower, certainly unexpected so far as the audience within the Shed was concerned, blew up during the evening program. It came just as the lovely chorus "He was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate," was being sung, during one of the few instances of the evening where Koussevitzky was holding his forces in quiet restraint.

Bach uses an orchestra of strings, of which Koussevitzky used the full Boston complement, a small representation of wind instruments, and also the organ and a harpsichord, played by E. Power Biggs and Erwin Bodky, respectively. The quality of the resultant sound is not only gratifying in itself but makes an especially favorable background for voices, permitting the broadest possible canvas for vocal color and design.

Chorus, Soloists in Form

Koussevitzky chose tempi in several sections which were particularly happy and by contrast which served to stimulate the whole evening. The chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, sang with confidence a great share of the time and the various soloists acquitted themselves with high and uniform distinction.

Bach conceived his B minor mass on a larger scale than any earlier one and gave it the maximum extension of material consistent with perfect coherence. This mass also serves to show a new musical development of Bach's day in which a new aim of music came into being, namely the expression of moods and emotions. Their faithful reproduction last night by Koussevitzky is a further tribute to the composer and the conductor.

The whole production was on a high plane although there were many majestic moments. The tempo Koussevitzky provided in the "Glory to God" paved the way for some of the firmest entrances and most impressive choruses of the evening. The "Et Incarnatus est" of the Credo also had profound character and was an example of the generally more effective choral work of the second half of the mass, of which the "Holy, Holy," of the Sanctus was especially well done in the difficult vocal figures. The orchestral accompaniment was consistently held in beautiful control and the orchestral seniority in the Agnus Dei was exceptionally glowing. Here, too, Eunice Alberts did some of the best singing she has done in her various appearances at the Festival this year as she had done in a previous aria with a beautifully-played oboe obbligato by Louis Speyer.

Adele Addison's first participation came in the Kyrie duet with Miss Alberts, when her superb soprano was heard in all its glory. James Pease's best solo was the "Thou alone art holy" in the Credo where Stagliano's horn obbligato made it doubly effective. David Lloyd's "Benedictus" in the Sanctus was beautiful singing as was Burgin's violin obbligato. Koussevitzky brought choral director Ross to the stage at the close to share the mighty expression of approval the audience was so eager to show all who took part.

Berkshire Festival

Bach's B-Minor Mass Given by Dr. Koussevitzky

Special to the Herald Tribune

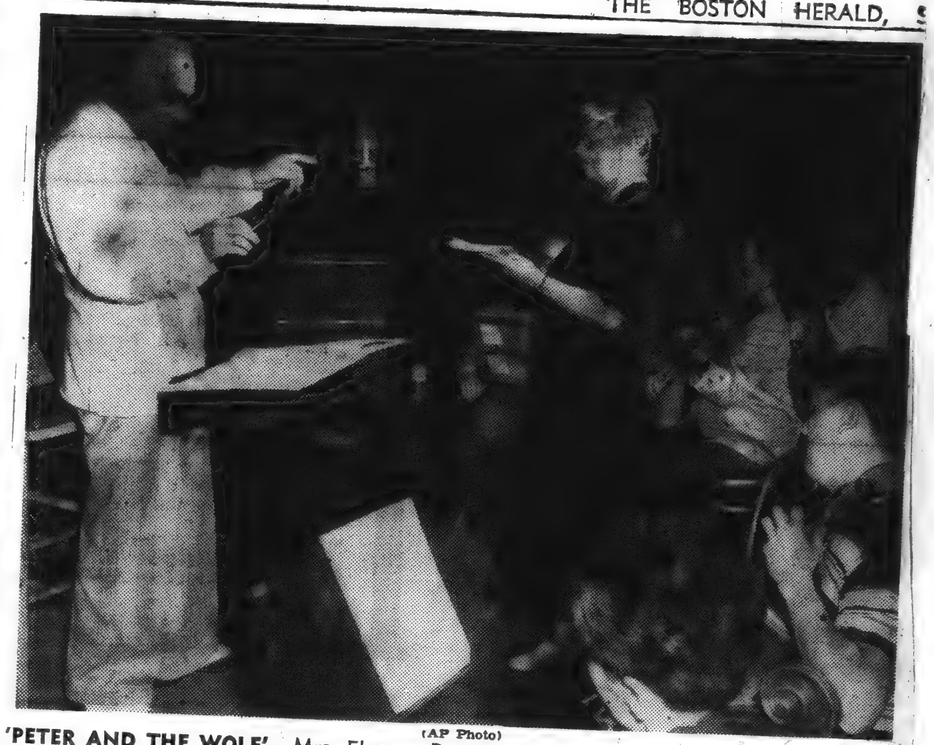
LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—A comparatively small crowd gathered Thursday at Tanglewood to hear Dr. Koussevitzky direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's B-Minor Mass.

The long program started at 5 p. m., and listeners straggled in during the late afternoon, many skipping the first half entirely. By the time the second portion opened at 8:15, 7,800 were seated in the shed or lounging on the lawn outside. Governor Paul A. Dever of Massachusetts occupied a box.

This is the second time the B-minor work of Bach has been heard at Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky directed it in 1940, just ten years ago, and the first year of the Berkshire Music Center. Students from the center comprised the chorus on that occasion, supplemented by singers from the Harvard and Radcliffe chorus. Thursday's singers were entirely Music Center students, prepared by Hugh Ross. Vocal soloists with the festival chorus of 160 voices were Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease.

The B-Minor Mass was the 61st composition of Bach to be played this season at Tanglewood, and was the last of his works programmed for Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky arranged the heavy Bach schedule, a record number of Tanglewood, as a tribute during the 200th anniversary year of the composer's death.

Soon after the evening portion of the program opened, a mild twenty-minute thunderstorm with heavy rain broke over Tanglewood. The music shed colonnade lights were switched on, and 2,000 listeners crowded in from the lawn for shelter. The orchestra and chorus continued the program, undisturbed by the people moving inside.



(AP Photo)

'PETER AND THE WOLF'—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt rehearses with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox as Serge Koussevitzky conducts. The former first lady was the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" last night at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program.

Eleanor Roosevelt in Triumph With Symphony at Tanglewood

By RUDOLPH ELIE

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 11—Eleanor Roosevelt, invading one of the few fields left open to her, scored a triumph tonight before an audience of 9000 people as the narrator in Prokofieff's musical fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf."

The former First Lady's appearance on the stage of the 6000-seat music shed was the signal for an ovation silenced only by Koussevitzky's sudden downbeat for a performance of the national anthem in which the audience, beckoned by the conductor, joined.

Putting on her tortoise shell glasses, Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in a blue silk gown, stood at the conductor's side as he raised his hand for silence. The audience hushed instantly and remained in a sort of suspended state throughout the performance of this favorite work, introduced to America by Plokofieff himself in Boston 12 years ago.

While the balance between the orchestral tone and Mrs. Roosevelt's husky voice was not at first proper, the adjusts were quickly made, and as she progressed in this musical tale of a little boy who captures the big bad wolf with a lasso, it became evident that the qualities she reflected, that is the naivete of anybody's grandmother reading a bedtime story, were exactly suited to the piece.

She was at her best in the narrative sections during the orchestral silences, occasionally, in the tuttis dealing with the more lively moments of the tale. Her voice was slightly covered, but never enough to harm the continuity of the narrative. She made no effort to melodramatize the piece, speaking simply and straight forwardly with only infrequent emphasis, but she drew many mass chuckles by the singularly grandmotherly emphases she did make.

Her appearance was the culminating event in a miscellaneous program of events called Tanglewood on Parade that began in the late afternoon with a performance by the opera department of Puccini's one act comic opera "Gianni Schicchi."

This did not begin until nearly six o'clock as a result of a prolonged Victor recording session of "Peter and the Wolf" with Mrs. Roosevelt.

The hour's delay was filled by an impromptu recital by such members of the student body as Adele Addison and Sumner Crockett, an affair that found great favor with the amiably disposed audience.

OTHER EVENTS

Other events, all beginning at six o'clock and going on simultaneously, were a concert by the student orchestra under various student conductors in the shed, a concert of chamber music by student composers in the chamber music hall, and a demonstration chorus rehearsal under the direction of Hugh Ross in the orchard. The weather could not have been more ideal for the event, with bright sunshine and spectacular cloud formations, but the threatening character of the morning and early afternoon hours, when many prospective visitors make their plans. Was probably responsible for a less than record crowd.

In Brief . . .

Approaching Tanglewood last night from the southeast, the governor missed colliding with his highway improvement program, which yesterday afternoon featured blacktopping the stretch of cement between Church Hill and the western end of the new bypass. The Festival, getting ready for the marathon Bach mass, was wondering just what Mr. Dever's highway department had against it . . . Coach Eddie Hickey's Junior

Rooms in Lenox Filled to Capacity With Festival Guests

LENOX—With the exception of one large party which was sent to Pittsfield, the town was able to furnish adequate rooming facilities for all its week-end guests, Mrs. James H. Pelton of the Kiwanis Club information center reported today.

Last week Mrs. Pelton said that, for the first time, there were not enough accommodations for everyone, and some had to be sent to Lee, Stockbridge and Pittsfield to find rooms.

Mrs. Pelton said because about 50 additional persons had registered rooms at the information center everyone was taken care of.

Globe, August 12, 1950

(Acme Photo)

"AND IF YOU LISTEN VERY CAREFULLY YOU CAN HEAR THE VOICE OF THE DUCK QUACKING INSIDE"—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who made her debut as a symphony narrator last night at the Tanglewood Music Center, Lenox, is shown as she went over script of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." With her is Serge Koussevitsky, leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MRS. ROOSEVELT CHEERED BY 8700 AT TANGLEWOOD

And Ovation Follows Work as Narrator for 'Peter and the Wolf'

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 11—Tanglewood home of the Berkshire Center and Berkshire Music Festival, was on parade in a great, big way today with its focal point, not music, but the appearance of Eleanor Roosevelt in the role of narrator in Prokofieff's charming musical tale of "Peter and the Wolf."

Given Warm Welcome

Some 8700 persons rose to their feet as the former first lady, accompanied by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, came on the stage, and when Koussevitzky started the orchestra on a rousing performance of "The Star Spangled Banner," sang as though inspired. It was all a bit on the grotesque side, but the audience loved it. Quite naturally, Mrs. Roosevelt's performance was less sensational than her entrance—it could hardly have been otherwise—but she gave a workmanlike performance and when the public address system permitted, one could hear something of what was said.

Continued On Page 6

Mrs. Roosevelt

Continued From Page 1

To climax it all, the audience again rose to its feet after the performance was over and provided an ovation to beat anything we have ever seen here or anywhere else. There was a deal of hand-kissing, hand-waving and innumerable recalls for both narrator and conductor. The orchestra did get a chance to acknowledge the applause, but its place was secondary.

This may be a good place to note that the Berkshire Music Center benefited by $19,000 through this Tanglewood on parade."

She Cuts a Record

It was a busy day for Mrs. Roosevelt, for this afternoon, with Koussevitzky and the orchestra, she made a recording of "Peter and the Wolf" for RCA Victor. We were told that the work was recorded three times before declared satisfactory. Be that as it may, the student performance of Puccini's "Schicchi"; was over an hour late in starting.

It was quite the finest performance the opera department has given this season. Mario Lalli, Springfield tenor, had the romantic lead and sang splendidly. He sang opposite soprano Nancy Tricky, who has sung in Springfield. Mac Morgan was admirable in the title role. A group of opera department students gave a short recital of arias while the stage was being set. Among these was Adele Addison.

Evening Concert

At the evening concert Dr. Koussevitzky programmed along with the Prokofieff Opus, the "Oxford" Symphony by Haydn and Dvorak's "New World" symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky has seldom conducted a more illuminating performance of the Dvorak Symphony, nor a more meticulous, finely integrated performance of the Haydn Symphony.

During the afternoon the huge crowd had the opportunity to hear the student symphony, the chorus, members of the opera department and chamber music group in short concerts and between the afternoon and evening activities literally thousands of people picnicked on the lawns. "Tanglewood on Parade" is a Berkshire Center tradition which is growin importance with the years, bring to the grounds hundreds of people who would not otherwise attend the regular concerts.

Behind the Success At Tanglewood

ALL reports from Tanglewood indicate that the great center of music in the beauty of the Berkshires is flourishing this Summer. It is astonishing that this enterprise should have become, in a few short years, one of the principal music festivals in the world.

There are several reasons for the success. The setting is incomparable. The tremendous Music Shed and other buildings on what was once a magnificent private estate are admirably appointed for thorough enjoyment of concerts. The activity of thousands of patrons, rich and not rich, has been indispensable. The Boston Symphony is superb. But the main reason for Tanglewood, and its concerts which sometimes draw upwards of 10,000 listeners of an afternoon or evening, is unquestionably the vision and genius of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky combined with the sense and practical acumer of the trustees.

It is true that this year there was a flurry between the eminent music director and the trustees over the latter's designation of a couple of foreign guest conductors. But the controversy has not been fundamental, and there is full mutual appreciation by both sides of each one's part in the Tanglewood accomplishment.

THERE was an arresting remark in Dr. Koussevitzky's interview given Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic. He said, "Tanglewood today, it is but the beginning."

"The beginning," he said! Here is a man in his late seventies, who in 26 years as its conductor led the Boston Symphony to the heights, and who inspired this Tanglewood achievement with its hundreds of students and overflowing audiences. Yet he dreams of still greater things ahead.

Candidly, we cannot see how a vast Greek amphitheater at Tanglewood, seating 25,000 persons and playing music drama in the classic mode, will ever fit the practical limits of space and human demand. As it is, the thousands who attend Tanglewood tax Berkshire transport and housing. And even art must heed the arithmetic of investment and budget. Perhaps Dr. Koussevitzky, suggesting the plan in his talk with Mr. Morin, was setting his sights purposely high.

But that Tanglewood is going forward, Greek theater or no Greek theater, is evident. There is imagination and venture in it. And that should be a stimulus to every music festival of any pretensions in the country—including Worcester's.

Bach Workshop Greatly Enjoyed At Tanglewood

Hugh Ross and Julius Herford Lead Symposium on Two Cantatas. Festival Program Tonight

A Bach worshop demonstration at Tanglewood Tuesday afternoon was perfectly delightful in a charming informal way. Hugh Ross and Julius Herford, both experts on Bach and his music and most enthusiastically so, led a symposium on the two cantatas, played and sung by the small choir and instrumentalists of departments two and four.

Mr. Herford, in a most disarming manner, briefed us on important features of the Cantata 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekummernis," part 1 and "O ewiges, Feuer, o Ursprung de liebe," part 34.

He explained that No. 31 was written when Bach was only 21 whereas No. 34 was composed only nine years before his death. He made a distinction between our ideas of secular and sacred music and those of Bach's day. We now would separate the two types of music, and performance of each would be confined to the concert hall and church, respectively. But in Bach's day, a change of title or choice of words could make the music interchangeable. He pointed out that the Cantata 34 was written for a wedding celebration, but converted into a sacred Lenten Sunday Cantata.

Miss Margaret Hillis did unusually well, as conductor of the Cantata 21 and evinced much feeling and nice restraint into its beautiful phrases.

Owen Brady conducted Cantata 34 very capably, but with less grace and fluid motion than Miss Hillis. The oboe solos and obligatos in both cantatas were notably done by Woodford Garrigus and the incidental arias and recitatives were ably handled by Soprano Patricia Peterson, Alto Mary McMurray, Bass Richard Riddell and Tenor John Patterson. Particularly impressive were the performances of Miss McMurray and Mr. Riddell for their richness of tone and assured poise.

Anyone who has the time and inclination should not miss these student concerts at Tanglewood. They are a rare treat and an opportunity to hear the more personal and smaller forms of music by the greatest and coming great composers in a less hectic and far less crowded atmosphere than one often finds in a large festival concert.—F. M. R.

[69]

Victor de Sabata Is Spectacular At Tanglewood Concert

His Conducting of Boston Symphony Orchestra Dominates Whole Evening at Tanglewood. Dramatically Unfolds All Musical Lines, Rhythms and Intent of Composers

A superlative conducting performance was witnessed when Victor de Sabata led the Boston Symphony orchestra through a magnificently varied program at Tanglewood Thursday night before a good crowd. Mr. de Sabata completely dominated the whole evening with an exhibition of conducting which in some would doubtless seem gymnastics or an eccentric exhibitionism, but in him a remarkable unfolding of the musical lines, rhythms and intent of each composer represented.

So forceful this man was so graphically outlining the music that the orchestra was under a loving compulsion to follow him with their best musicianship. The audience reaction was completely consonant with de Sabata's interpretation. He was called back repeatedly. Even the orchestra applauded him and its superb manifestation of, and oneness with the music.

After the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms, which incidentally was played as this overture should be played, giving it its true stature and breadth as an independently complete opus, de Sabata himself was so pleased he threw kisses to his musicians and faced an applauding audience almost overcome with delight and enthusiasm.

Schubert's Unfinished Symphony would have elated its maker. One hears this work so often done more or less academically that it is a rare treat to hear it performed as one just feels the composer would have it accomplished. Beautiful, restrained pianissimo cellos exquisitely drawn out by de Sabata's eloquent fingers delineated the second melody.

Respighi's Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome", was the outstanding work of the evening. One felt, if possible, that the conductor was even more perfectly familiar and in accord with the composer's intent. De Sabata made the audience see the children playing in the Pines of the Villa Borghese. He enjoyed their play and games. The recorded nightingale song in the third section of the poem was intriguing. The climax of this work is one of the most remarkably thunderous and thrilling ever composed.

The de Sabata who conducted Morton Gould's "Spirtuals" seemed to be a minister, a Puck and an eloquently inspired section of humanity. The audience was alternately whimsically delighted and majestically awed.

King Of Yvetot Operatic Success At Tanglewood

A clash of cymbals, followed by gay, lilting music, promised an exciting evening for those who attended the second and final opera given by students of the opera department of the Music Center at Tanglewood this week.

Its first American performance, The King of Yvetot, a comic opera based on a satirical ballad by Beranger, is a sharp and witty satire on war and politics. Written by Jacques Ibert, French composer, and faculty member of the center this summer, the music cleverly projects the moods of its characters, and follows the deceptively simple libretto written by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourasse. The restiveness of the first two acts, by contrast, made more enjoyable the earthy humor and lyrical beauty of the third act. Here a movingly tender aria by Jeannetot, the heroine, was easily and beautifully sung by Ewan Harbrecht, whose whole performance was restrained and capable. In this woodland scene, two English horn solos, played with good musical feeling by Woodford Garrigus, were both unusual and pervasive. A humorous song about a miller gave one opportunity to enjoy the rich voice of Rosalind Elias, playing Gazette. Throughout the opera, the robust voice of Manfred Hecht, the hero-king was warmly evident and enjoyed. The fourth and final act, with its many ariosas and lively chorus effects, brought a joyous climax to the opera.

Superbly directed on stage by F. Cowles Strickland, and in the pit by Dr. Jan Popper, with colorful costumes and whimsical scenery pointed up by well-conceived lighting effects, the whole production was finely coordinated through what must have been endless and untiring efforts of all concerned.

Though it may entail many difficulties in translation and transcription, the continuous presentation of the operas in English certainly makes for more complete enjoyment. Henry Reese's translation was ably understandable.

Dr. Koussevitzky must continue to feel well rewarded for conceiving the idea of the Berkshire Music Center, and those who, along with the Boston Symphony orchestra, are perpetuating and enriching his aims, are to be congratulated on their progressive contributions to its success.

Anyone who is interested in encouraging the future of its young musicians would do well to inquire into the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. A token contribution enables one to attend all the numerous and varied performances by students and faculty members of the Center.

—M. deB. Beaver.

TANGLEWOOD CONDUCTOR—Pictured above is Eleazar DeCarvalho, composer-conductor, who is appearing at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. The musician is noted for his long hikes while he studies his scores. This is DeCarvalho in action.

Tanglewood Genius Studies Best While On Long Hikes

Eleazar DeCarvalho Is Familiar Figure to Berkshirites; Has Walked 38 Miles in Day

Lenox, Aug. 11—The concert and opera world know Maestro Eleazar DeCarvalho for his superb musical genius. The residents and visitors of Southern Berkshire know this youthful composer and conductor for his tireless and intrepid habit of walking.

Familiar Hiking Figure

In a county and country where hiking is a pastime, DeCarvalho has made a name for himself as a genius. In fact, the young man has made himself a familiar figure to countless Berkshirites who have become accustomed to seeing his studious figure striding along the highways and byways, perusing a sheaf of opera and concert scores.

Some people do their work best outdoors under a shady tree—others curled up beside a cosy fireplace. Eleazar DeCarvalho concentrates best on his music plans in his long walks about the Berkshires. A walk of between 15 and 20 miles is not uncommon while he studies his scores. Recently he started out at half past six in the morning and made a round-trip hike to Sheffield, which if the road maps are correct makes a total of at least 38 miles. No mean walk for a man and his music.

It seems that walking is a habit with the distinguished conductor and if the habit is reflected in the quality of the finished product on the concert platform, it might be a good plan for every musician to secure a stout pair of walking shoes, he believes.

A native of South America, DeCarvalho was born in Iguatu in the state of Ceara, Brazil. He spent his childhood on the farm of his parents, who were of Dutch extraction on his father's side and pure Indian on his mother's side.

The composer's first opera, "The Discovery of Brazil" was produced at Rio de Janiero in 1939, and in 1941, his next, "Tiradentes" was performed. Completely immersed in his love of music, DeCarvalho has authored countless symphonic works and chamber pieces in various combinations. Besides the creation of music, he has lectured extensively and written articles for literary and musical publications in his own country.

He came to the Berkshires in 1946 to join Dr. Koussevitzky's class in conducting at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. His talent for musical expression soon made itself apparent and he was subsequently appointed to the conducting class as assistant to the famous doctor.

Eleazar DeCarvalho will conduct the two closing concerts at the Shed Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Tomorrow evening's program will include Hector Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" in which Joseph de Pasquale will be featured, "Eascales-Ports of Call," by the eminent French composer-conductor, Jacques Ibert, and "Choros 10" by Villa-Lobos. The closing program on Sunday, will feature Prokofieff's Symphony No. 6 and Brahm's Symphony No. 1.

T. S. H.

Every Saturday

Governor Dever Does Hidden Ball Trick While 'In Berkshires'

By A. A. Michelson

FOR a big man, Governor Paul A. Dever has shown himself to be quite a broken field runner for the past two days "in the Berkshires." Thursday night, the chief executive duly presented himself at the clerk's desk at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, a good handy base of operations for the Tanglewood concerts and, possibly a meaningful "hello" for Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt who spent all of yesterday at Tanglewood wrestling with Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." However, since the final strains of Bach's "High Mass" Thursday night, few city and county politicians who had hoped to appropriate the governor's ear for a few minutes have seen hide nor hair of the chief executive. Unless, of course, they happened to stop over with mine host William Monahan of The Pillars, New Lebanon, where the governor was also a registered guest. Most of the day yesterday politicians, who tried to pretend to casually read newspapers in the lobby of the Curtis, hoping the governor would pop in any minute, had a good long wait because Mr. Dever was over in the clubhouse of the Saratoga Racing Association. And Mrs. Roosevelt came and went. The governor failed to show last night at Tanglewood.

Saturday, August 12, 195

Tanglewood Tales

Newspapermen covering the Tanglewood on Parade program in Lenox last night were besieged with reports that several notables were in the audience to hear Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as the narrator for "Peter and the Wolf," but they turned out to be only Tanglewood Tales. Westbrook Pegler and George Sokolsky, the columnists, couldn't be found. Neither could General Eisenhower, former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, Governor Thomas F. Dewey nor Governor Paul A. Dever.

If the rest of his Boston Symphony colleagues get as fond of the Berkshires as retiring trumpeter Georges Mager, perhaps they should move the winter series here. . . . If a decibel count had been taken last night at Tanglewood to determine the most popular composer of the evening, Haydn, Prokofieff and Dvorak would have come in three laps behind John Philip Sousa . . .

less hectic ed atmos-finds in a
F. M. R.

[70]

Tanglewood on Parade Observes Its 10th Anniversary

The delighted audience nearly climbed up on the stage as Dr. Koussevitsky gave his Boston Symphony musicians the word to give out on John Philip Sousa's, "Stars and Stripes Forever." Babbitt Benches held the overflow at the chamber-music hall for a concert of orchestral, choral and solo work by students of the Center. Babbitt

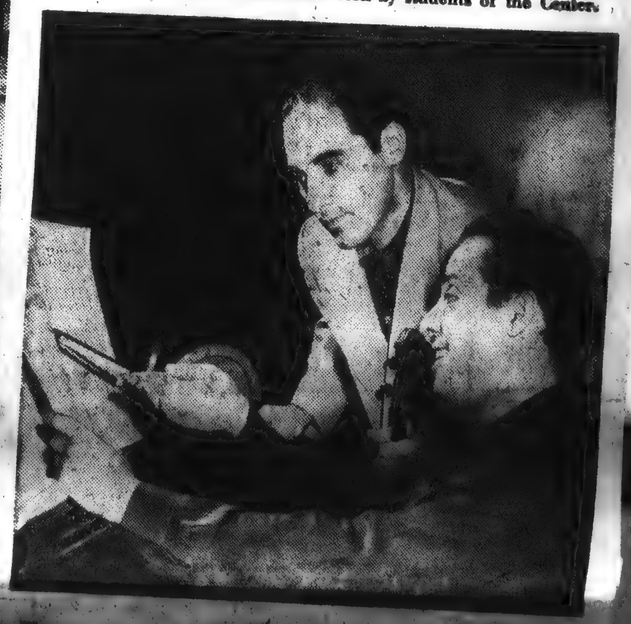
Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the executive secretary of the Center, at left, looks over the door prize piano with the lucky winner, Miss Betty Oppenheim of Philadelphia Babbitt

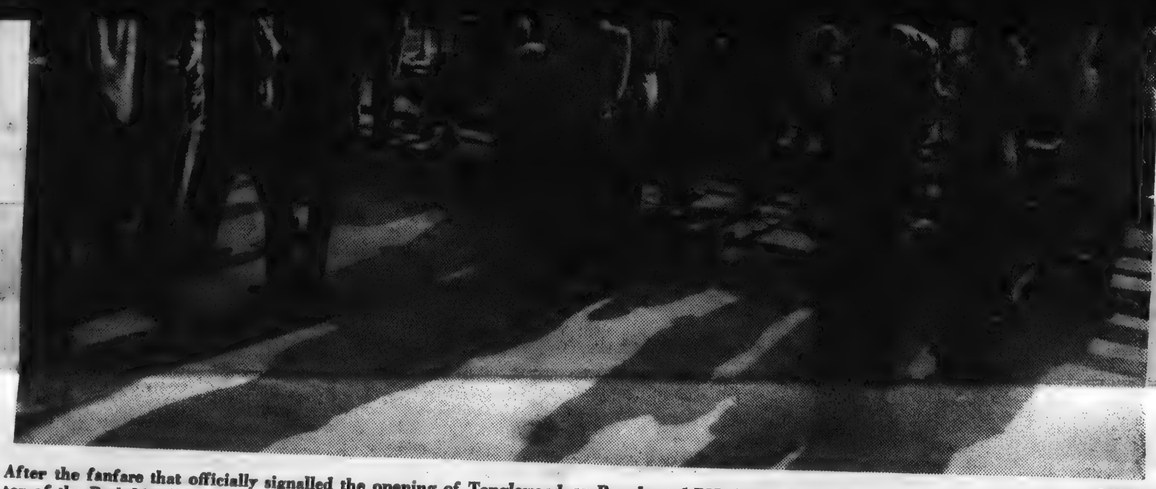
After the fanfare that officially signalled the opening of Tanglewood on Parade at 6 PM, Aaron Copland, noted composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, told the students as well as the visitors that they would find a great deal of musical interest in the potpourri of activities going on simultaneously on the grounds. Babbitt



Eleanor deCarvalho, seated, who will conduct tonight's concert in the Study, goes over the score of the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" with Joseph de Pasquale, the viola soloist. Babbitt

Babbitt

Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the executive secretary of the Center, at left, looks over the door prize piano with the lucky winner, Miss Betty Oppenheim of Philadelphia



Babbitt

After the fanfare that officially signalled the opening of Tanglewood on Parade at 6 PM, Aaron Copland, noted composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, told the students as well as the visitors that they would find a great deal of musical interest in the potpourri of activities going on simultaneously on the grounds.

Babbitt

Eleazar deCarvalho, seated, who will conduct tonight's concert in the Shed, goes over the score of the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" with Joseph de Pasquale, the viola soloist.

Babbitt

Dr. Koussevitzky, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and the Boston Symphony put on a rigorous rehearsal in the theatre-concert hall of "Peter and the Wolf" and made a recording for RCA-Victor in the few hours between Mrs. Roosevelt's arrival late yesterday morning and the formal performance in the Shed last night.

Babbitt

A piano, played by acting Opera Department Director Dr. Jan Popper and Kurt Saffir, provided the accompaniment for opera scenes presented by students in the theatre-concert hall.

Pinette

Famed violinist Fritz Kreisler chats with Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, at left, Mrs. Kreisler and Miss Maria Birro, daughter of the Hungarian pianist, Sari Burro, during intermission.

Mrs. F. D. R., Koussevitzky Thrill Tanglewood Crowd

Orchestra Leader Electrifies Audience With Surprise Playing of National Anthem and 'Stars and Stripes Forever'

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

"Tanglewood on Parade" is by now an established institution which takes place each year on the last Friday of the Berkshire Festival and which has two prime goals, one, to raise money for some worthy purpose, and second, to show in a swift hour-long circuit the activities of the Berkshire Music Center, the school founded by Serge Koussevitzky, which is run in conjunction with the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At the outset there was an actual procession each year within the grounds which by now has been abandoned but the thousands who attend are soon happily bewildered by the three-or-more-ring circus to which their entrance ticket grants them admission and to which they are seriously invited. The orchestral and choral departments, the opera, chamber music, composition classes, all have live exhibits going on simultaneously for which they seek audiences in friendly competition. The gates open a little before six when the various attractions are scheduled to start and the traffic on the spacious lawns, abetted yesterday by one of our most glorious Berkshire summer days, must look from aloft much like a bright and varicolored colony of industrious ants. The milling of music-lovers eager not to miss anything and then the settling of small groups for their picnic suppers in every part of the vast estate makes it one of the most enjoyable and gay events of the Tanglewood year.

This year the "Parade" was for the benefit of the "Center," which has enrolled 400 students from practically the entire musical world. All the preliminary listed affairs, however, focussed on the main event of the day which was the concert in the Shed by the full Boston orchestra. Last night an extra spirit of gala was almost tangible in the atmosphere of the occasion by the scheduled appearance of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as the narrator in Prokofieff's delightful symphonic tale for children, "Peter and the Wolf." Mrs. Roosevelt not only told the lovely little story graphically but so charmed the huge audience by her gracious manner and sympathetic personality that the assemblage, apparently forgetting possible previous political differences, joined as one man in a mammoth demonstration which lasted through many recalls.

"Peter" had been preceded by a charming Haydn symphony, the "Oxford," and, after intermission, was followed to close the concert by Dvorak's "From the New World" symphony, a marvelously apt choice for the occasion, first, for the sheer beauty of its many melodies and the lavish resonance of the prodigal harmonies the orchestra produced for Koussevitzky, but, beyond that, for the deep and heart-felt nostalgia which is inherent in the music.

When Mrs. Roosevelt made her entrance for the Prokofieff, Koussevitzky with impatient zeal whipped the orchestra into the national anthem. We were under the impression that the eyes of the late President's widow were not completely dry at the rousing conclusion. With the stage thus set, she proceeded with her assignment, after which, no choice could have exceeded in appropriateness, according to our ideas, the extravagant music which Dvorak wrote in this country a little over a half-century ago while his heart was breaking with homesickness for his native Bohemia. The performance was full to overflowing with sentiment and emotion. In the ensuing ovation Koussevitzky still further electrified his by now mildly-frenzied audience by a rendition of the "Stars and Stripes Forever" which brought to a close an evening of memorable excitement that will not be forgotten very soon.

Mrs. Roosevelt

Continued From First Page

wood to rehearse with the orchestra at 11.30.

After rehearsal, Mrs. Roosevelt had lunch in the cafeteria with a party of 15, including General David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, Mrs. Sarnoff, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky, and several Boston Symphony trustees.

A rehearsal with the orchestra, starting at 2 PM, ended at 4.45, after a recording of "Peter and the Wolf," was cut by the RCA Victor Company.

Opera Program Delayed

The lengthy rehearsal and recording slightly delayed the beginning of an opera program, which was scheduled for 4.30 in the Theatre-Concert Hall. Trouble with one of the sets also occasioned some confusion, but the head of the opera department, Dr. Jan Popper, called out a number of soloists, including Adele Addison, Luis Pichardo, Sumner Crockett and Marni Nixon, who sang several numbers until the opera was ready to start at 5.35.

The hall was filled to capacity for the special performance of Puccini's humorous one-act opera, "Gianni Schicchi," given for holders of tickets to boxes or the reserved section. An even larger crowd took up all the bench seats outside and the standing room, for a presentation of opera scenes which was part of the general student show starting at 6.

The whole student program of opera, symphonic selections, chamber music and choral rehearsals, might have been unkindly likened to a four-ring circus—except that the music was far better, there were no animals, and everything was not under one tent.

It gave the guests an unusual opportunity to hear music of every sort played by advance amateurs and professionals, and to learn about some of the activities carried on at the six-week summer school. Most of the visitors appeared to be enjoying that chance to the full.

At 7 PM there was a break for the lawn party and picnic supper. Hundreds dined on blankets spread throughout the grounds, and others used the benches and chairs at the students' cafeteria. One party, in the box section, was observed being served by a chauffeur laden with goodies.

Door Prizes Awarded

After the BSO concert in the Shed, which lasted from 8.30 to 10.30, the crowd mostly stayed in their seats for the drawing of the two door prizes: An Acrosonic piano from Dr. Koussevitzky's dressing room, and eight long-playing records.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the BMC, who acted as master of ceremonies, had no trouble at all finding the winner of the first prize, Miss Betty Oppenheim of Philadelphia. To the accompaniment of squeals from her friends, Miss Oppenheim strode briskly to the stage to be welcomed by Mr. Perry and a representative of the Baldwin Piano Company.

The second prize-winner was another story, however. Mrs. Perry, who did the drawing from a large box filled with tickets, selected no less than seven tickets before Miss Frances Henderson of Pittsfield finally claimed the records. Those ruled out by the two-minute time limit were W. Bailey of Sheffield, Miss Ruth Buchsbaum of Brooklyn, Dick Rosa of Schenectady, Eric B. Ayres of Pittsburgh, Esther Adelman of the Bronx, Mrs. John Gramm of Columbus, Ohio, and Miss Helen Fogelnest of North Bergen, N.J.

Dancing on the lawn, to piano music provided by BMC instructors Lukas Foss and Irving Fine, wound up the festivities. Contrary to the routine of previous years, there were no fireworks; but, as one observer put it, "Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra provided fireworks enough."

1950 Festival Drawing to Close Over the Week End

The Berkshire Festival will wind up its 1950 season over the week end, featuring Eleazar de Carvalho as the guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 8.15 and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky tomorrow afternoon at 3.

Mr. deCarvalho's program tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood includes Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist; Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10," with the Festival chorus and Ibert's "Escales."

Tonight's appearance will be deCarvalho's first with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Festival concerts, although he has conducted on several occasions the Department II orchestra at student events.

Dr. Koussevitzky will close the Festival season tomorrow afternoon with Prokofieff's fifth symphony and Brahms' symphony No. 1 in C minor.

A GREAT BIG HAND: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky acknowledge the ovation of the overflowing Shed at Tanglewood after their joint production of "Peter and the Wolf," a high light of last night's Tanglewood on Parade program, which attracted a crowd of 8800 and brought in $19,000 to the Berkshire Music Center. Babbitt Center Nets $19,000 With Mrs. FDR's Help

By ANTHONY G. RUD

LENOX—With help from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt the Berkshire Music Center let down its hair yesterday afternoon and went on a seven-hour musical jag that left most of its 8800 visitors breathless—but still calling for more as the last notes died away at midnight.

Spontaniety Keynote

Spontaneity was the keynote, from the first trumpet fanfare heralding the opening "Tanglewood on Parade," through a distinguished performance of "Peter and the Wolf" narrated by Mrs. Roosevelt, to the public waltz-fest under the stars concluding the evening.

A total of $19,000 was netted for the Berkshire Music Center in the annual benefit, since all the performers donated their services. Mrs. Roosevelt, who was making her debut as a concert artist, gave the center one half of the honorarium coming to her from RCA Victor for her performance in the recording of "Peter and the Wolf"; the other half went to the Wiltwyck School for Boys.

After the trumpet fanfare, shortly before 6, the student body mustered in front of the Music Shed, where Aaron Copland, assistant director of the BMC, greeted the guests and gave a preview of the evening's activities.

From then on, everyone was on his own.

The show stuck pretty much to the script, but Dr. Serge Koussevitzky threw in some extras that happily surprised even veteran Tanglewood-goers. When Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on the stage, he struck up the orchestra in a rousing rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner," in which the entire audience joined with fervor. And at the close of the Boston Symphony Orchetra program, he put on a performance of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" that brought the audience to their feet again, in a roaring, excited demonstration of approval.

Mrs. Roosevelt's reading of a modern Russian composition at this moment in world history had a meaning that could have been lost on few in the audience. The generous gesture by the permanent U.S. delegate to the U.N. General Assembly — which certainly would not be paralleled in Russia today— drew an ovation that was evidently as much for its significance as for its entertainment value.

system. She was especially effective in the quieter passages, and came in strongly on her cues from Dr. Koussevitzky.

At the end of Prokofieff's symphonic story, she was called back many times although it was clear she figured all the credit should go to the conductor and orchestra members. Each time, she was escorted, arm-in-arm, by Dr. Koussevitzky, except once when the maestro sent her to the platform alone to acknowledge the ovation.

After acknowledging the applause, Mrs. Roosevelt made straight for the dressing-room, and left for her Hyde Park home a few minutes afterwards in her gray, chauffeur-driven Studebaker.

Several hundred fans gathered around the side door to the Shed to catch a glimpse as she left. There was a burst of handclapping and several "bravos" when she appeared, a white coat over her dark-blue, ankle-length, lace net gown. She waved to the crowd, smiled, and cried, "Thank you! Goodbye."

That completed a long day of rehearsals and social activity for the former first lady of the land. She had arrived at 9.38 AM at the Pittsfield Airport aboard a private plane, and then hurried off to Dr. Koussevitzky's home, Seranak.

There she had coffee and a piece of Russian bread with Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky, Mrs. Leonard Lyons, and Ralph Berkowitz, the Berkshire Music Center executive and pianist who coached her in her part.

Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Berkowitz went over the score several times at Seranak, before they all went down to the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tangle-

Mrs. Roosevelt
Contined on Page 18

Koussevitzky Tribute

Dr. Koussevitzky elaborated on that meaning in a statement to reporters after the concert:

"We all know Mrs. Roosevelt as a godmother to youth. Today, the appearance of Mrs. Roosevelt at Tanglewood is a historic occasion.

"Now, the first lady of the world is not only a grandmother to her own grandchildren, but also, through her memorable participation in 'Peter and the Wolf,' she becomes a grandmother to the children of the world."

Mrs. Roosevelt put over the charming fairy tale of the boy who catches a wolf with the aid of his animal friends, in measured, maternal accents that carried quite clearly through the public-address

Roosevelt Family Represented In Box Section at Tanglewood

Box occupants at last night's Tanglewood on Parade program included Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. of Poughquag, N.Y., her weekend guest, Miss Susan Cable of New York, and Mrs. Edward Elliott of Franklin, Mich., niece of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt of Long Island was accompanied by Fritz Kriesler, famous violinist, Mrs. Kreisler, Mr. and Mrs. William Hamilton Russell of New York and Miss Maria Birro, whose mother is the noted Hungarian pianist, Sari Birro.

Guests of Miss Anna R. Alexandre of Lenox were her sister, Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson and Mr. Jackson's mother, Mrs. E. F. Jackson, all of Lenox. Mr. and Mrs. George VanSantvoord of Lakeville, Conn., were accompanied by Dr. and Mrs.. H. J. Wheeler of Lakeville and Capt. and Mrs. Alger Dresel of Newport, R.I.; Mrs. Clarence Cochran of Boston and her daughters, Cynthia and Cecily; Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Norton of Great Barrington and Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Tracy of Stockbridge.

Also, in Princess Diane Eristavi's box were her mother, Mrs. George Otis Rockwood of Stockbridge and New York; Mrs. William Penn Cresson of Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. John Brooke of Lenox and Earle Appleton of Boston. Attorney Sol W. Weltman of Springfield had as his guests Judge and Mrs. Joseph Bloomenfeld of Hartford and Mrs. Martin H. Klein of Pittsfield.

Others were Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., wife of the publisher, with Mrs. William S. Ridgly of Decatur, Ill., and Miss Katherine Wolff of Philadelphia; Mrs. Winthrop S. Emmet of Stockbridge, Miss Rosamund Sherwood of Stockbridge and Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Warburg of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Brown and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Derby of Williamstown; Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Kay of Chester, N.J., Col. and Mrs. William M. Adams of Canaan, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Alex Avidan of East Orange, N.J., and Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Hoeffer of West Hartford, Conn.

Also, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn of Lenox and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Price and daughter, Patty, of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft of Boston, Dr. Lewis Perry and Rev. Peter Blynn of Boston, Mrs. Gurnee Cummings and her son, Edward, of New York; Frank Hatch and Mr. and Mrs. Gluyas Williams of Boston; Romeo M. Talbot, Ronald Langevin, Everett Ouellette, Roland LaBossiere, Roger Davis and James Augus of Ludlow; Mr. and Mrs. John Bennett of Chicago and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Horvell of Ardsley-on-the-Hudson; Dr. and Mrs. Seymour Oppenheimer of New York, Miss Betty Gersten and Harold W. Katz of Glens Falls; Mr. and Mrs. John Ortez and Robert Cosgrove of New York, Mrs. Roger Voisin of Lenox and Mrs. John Burnham of Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Brandies of New York and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Newfeld of Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Blau and son, Andrew, Mrs. S. Harley Jones, Stephen Hibbard of Pittsfield, and Mrs. Joseph Farber of Great Neck, N.Y.

Pittsfield Monitor

Opera at Tanglewood

Ibert's 'King of Yvetot' In First American Hearing

By Paul Giuliana

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The festive atmosphere of an opening night prevailed here Monday evening when the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's four-act comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot." Added interest was given the occasion by the composer's presence in the audience that filled the Theater-Concert Hall.

The opera is a delightful farce, satirizing the inconsistencies of provincials employed in the absurd functions of government. The women of the kingdom take note at one point and revolt against their husbands, thus setting conditions with great merriment for all concerned. Although Beranger's ballad, from which the composer took the story, is based on historical fact, M. Ibert has said that he had no specific place or set of individuals in mind when he conceived the score back in 1930. The truth of the statement was brought home throughout the performance when such foibles as "passing the buck," "too little and too late," "conflicting so-called authoritative reports," "witch hunting," etc., seemed to point up problems in our own day.

* * *

A tender love story runs throughout the action which involves the king of a small principality and a servant girl named Jeanneton. About these characters—sung by Manfred Hecht, baritone, and Ewan Harbrecht, soprano—revolves the main action. The other principal, Catherine, was sung by Beatrice Bush-Kane, contralto.

Among the host of lesser characters must be mentioned the four droll old men who always appeared together, representing reaction in the land; the fat and thin innkeepers, portraying opposite views of liberalism and staid complacency with their conflicting commercial interests, and the bellringer, who describes a distant battle from the tower from which he eventually falls.

* * *

Best work of the evening was done by the chorus, who handled the difficult score with surprising precision. The composer, in fact, seemed genuinely amazed that students could perform the work so well. Soloists and chorus alike sang Mr. Reese's English translation so clearly that the continuity of the story was easy to follow. Jan Popper, who conducted, held down the orchestra so that at no time were the singers obscured by too much instrumental fabric.

Though cast in a twentieth-century French idiom, the music was never unduly harsh or unpleasantly dissonant. There were passages of vivid beauty and lyric impressionism in Catherine's aria at the end of the first act and in Jeanneton's aria at the end of the third act. The love duets for the king and Jeanneton were conceived with masterly restraint and good taste. Much of the dialogue was set to diatonic patterns resembling the natural melody of speech. This technique was most effectively used by Debussy in his opera "Pelléas et Mélisande." The many concerted portions of M. Ibert's opera provided movement and color, often terminating in well-planned climaxes.

* * *

The sets were simple and required little change with a conspicuous exception of the third act which provided the most beautiful scenery of the evening. The river scene, with its background of grassy slopes and trees, made the audience gasp when the curtains parted. It was also in this act that the women, who were washing their clothes at the river, performed what might be called the ballet. They went through their unconventional dance with various pieces of colorful clothing waving about.

On the whole the opera received an excellent première. The best singing performances were turned in by Mr. Hecht and Miss Harbrecht. The beautiful "Miller's song" was most effectively sung by Rosalind Elias at the riverbank.

M. Ibert's opera is good theater accompanied by excellent music and deserves a place in the lyric theater repertoire along with Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes."

The composer, conductor, and the cast were given an ovation at the final curtain. The performance was repeated Tuesday evening with a slight change in the cast.

Springfield Republican

Two Symphonies On Today's Final Tanglewood Concert

Koussevitzky Chooses No. 5 by Prokofieff and Brahms' 'First'; Season Successful

By VICTOR PRAHL

For the final concert at Tanglewood this afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen two symphonies just as he did for the opening program of the season. This afternoon's offerings will be the Symphony No. 5 by Prokofieff and Brahms' "First".

This will round out another successful season of what is undoubtedly the most important summer musical center in existence. What with the Bach commemorative concerts, the Mozart programs, the varied symphonic repertoire and the high standard of the abundant student activities, it seems to have surpassed any previous season in artistic significance.

Attendance Good

In spite of the cool weather and rain the attendance has been good and we must congratulate those in charge of the traffic regulations on the improved conditions for entering and leaving the grounds.

Last Sunday's concert belonged to Leonard Bernstein, who reaped a triumph both as conductor and pianist in a program devoted to Ravel and Berlioz. This greatly gifted young musician is amazingly versatile but it is only natural that he should excel in certain types of music. Mr. Bernstein himself has written charming songs about children and he approached the five numbers of Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" with sympathy and understanding. They were pages of pure enchantment,—imaginative, poetical, subtle, and musically colorful. He was equally successful in that other facet of Ravel's art, the vital, native Spanish rhythms and themes that enliven so many of his compositions. "Alborada del Gracioso" fairly crackled in its crisp rhythms, fragmentary tunes, sudden dynamic contrasts.

To play and conduct a concerto by Bach, Mozart or even Beethoven is one thing but one by a composer like Ravel is quite another. Aside from the talent involved, it requires the physical resistance of youth, and represents a task that few would ever undertake, expecially after conducting a strenuous piece like "Alborada". Even Mr. Bernstein perspired but he surmounted the job valiantly, turning out a performance that was a tour de force. He has an innate feeling for the touch of blues and jazz that pervade the work, and he gave a terrific punch to the brilliant technical passages of the first and last movements. Naturally the audience was ecstatic in their approval.

The contrasting excerpts from Berlioz' dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet" that constituted the second half were also projected with an understanding of their programatic content. The serenity of mood was beautifully sustained in the love scene, and the ball music of the Capulet's feast made an exciting finale. Even the banalities that always creep in from time to time seemed acceptable. Mr. Bernstein had the full co-operation of the orchestra players who turned out some superlatively fine performances. He has a conducting technic that is sure and clear but watching him from the back, his set of gestures is not always so successful. That of pushing his shoulders up and down is anything but attractive.

Odds Against Bernstein

The odds were against Mr. Bernstein. A heavy downpour and the screams of some hilarious youths caught in the rain were hardly conducive to the proper mood of the "Pavane for the Sleeping Beauty". But the delay gave him time to relax and visit with the men of the orchestra as well as congratulate and shake hands with the first violist, Joseph de Pasquale, who had that day become a father. The audience applauded and Mr. de Pasquale took a bow.

'Le Roi d'Yvetot'

"Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert, French composer and teacher of composition at the center this summer, was a happy choice as the major operatic production of the season for it is light, gay, charming, colorful and entertaining. Of course with such a galaxy of talent the Tanglewood group is capable of tackling practically anything but this opera which is a kind of French folk-song of many verses acted out,—an old picture-book come to life, seemed expressive of these lively, gifted students and appropriate to the setting.

This does not mean that it was an easy way out, for Mr. Ibert's idiom while not ultra modern is personal and none too easy, and much of the opera consists of some rather involved choruses and stage movements and groupings that must have taken infinite rehearsals. These were all carried out with professional skill as were most of the individual performances.

Ewan Harbrecht (Jeanneton), pretty and fresh of voice, and Manfred Hecht with his fine, manly voice and unaffected acting were successful in portraying the wistful love story; Beatrice Bush-Kane's warm tones became the role of Catharine; Mario Lalli, tenor of Springfield, was realistic in relaying the description of the battle from the tower, and Sumner Crockett's ringing high tenor tones as a revolutionist were convincing enough to convert anyone to the cause.

A list of those responsible for the success of such an opera is always a long one but we must mention the expert conducting of Jan Popper that held everything together so well, F. Cowles Strickland's very professional stage directing, Philippe de Rosier's picturesque sets and the colorful costumes designed by Leo Van Witsen. Henry Reese's translation was a good one and came through whenever the music gave it a chance. The enunciation of the leads was uniformly good and that of the women in the prayer to St. Ives that opened the second act was highly admirable. The work as a whole adds up to another success in the best Tanglewood tradition.

B Minor Mass

The series of Bach commemorative concerts were climaxed by the performance of the Mass in B minor by the full chorus, orchestra and soloists under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky on Thursday afternoon and evening. We do not recall a performance of this stupendous work that reached greater proportions of grandeur than this one. All concerned gave of their utmost, and in the moving choruses "Et incarnatus est" and "Crucifixus," Dr. Koussevitzky conducted like one inspired. The faster choruses "Cum sancto Spiritu" and "Et resurrexit" were delivered with a real spiritual lift, and on the technical side with a remarkable clarity of articulation. Probably most powerful in its breath and force of tonal volume was the magnificent "Credo".

Adele Addison, gifted young Springfield soprano, impressed again with the purity of her tone and her splendid musicianship in the two duets with alto and one with tenor. She and Eunice Alberts, contralto, duplicated their fine Boston success of a year ago in their numbers. Miss Alberts was impressive in her two arias with oboe d'amore and violin respectively, David Lloyd was the secure musician in the difficult florid air, "Benedictus" and James Pease gave a smooth, flowing line to "Et in Spiritum sanctum". Tumultuous applause from the huge audience recalled all concerned again and again.

MISS GOODMAN SINGS

BUENOS AIRES, 15 DE JUNIO DEL AÑO DEL LIBERTADOR GRAL. SAN MARTIN 1946

[illegible] del Berkshire Music Center, que dirige Serge Koussevitzky, en Tanglewood, estado de Massachusetts, se realizará entre el 3 de julio y el [illegible] agosto próximos. La Orquesta Sinfónica de Boston ha [illegible] ya su labor de trabajo y unión. El músico dictará clases de [illegible] estará a cargo de [illegible] Ross, dirigirá los [illegible] de los Festivales. [illegible] Igor Piatigorsky, [illegible] Bedetti, Fernand [illegible] Ralph Berkowitz, [illegible] Música de Cámara. [illegible] este año los de [illegible] Bellison. Koussevitzky presidirá como [illegible] de dirección orquestal Bernstein, Richard [illegible] Carvalho y Lukas [illegible] tores. Howard [illegible] orquesta de alumnos de la Orquesta Sinfónica de Boston [illegible] clases de música de cámara y práctica de orquesta.

NY Times 8/13/50

NEW WORKS: During the Berkshire Festival the student orchestras gave some little noticed first performances. Howard Shanet conducted two. With the Department Five Orchestra he premiered Music for Strings, by Manuel Mahler-Kalkstein, Israeli composer, and with the Advanced Orchestra he gave the first American performance of "Herodiade," Jan Meyerowitz's work for soprano, alto and orchestra, based on Mallarmé's poem. . . . "New York Profiles," [illegible] Norman Dello Joio wrote for

BostonSymphonyInvites Koussevitsky, Monteux

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux to conduct the concerts in Boston and other cities during his mid-season vacation, Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, announced yesterday.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in Boston for the first time since his retirement as its leader in 1949. Mr. Monteux, conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra, will return to lead the orchestra whose conductor he was from 1919 to 1924. The season is scheduled to begin Oct. 6 in Symphony Hall.

In a letter to season-ticket holders, Mr. Cabot asked persons renewing season tickets to add 20 per cent to their checks as a voluntary gift to make up the $165,000 additional income the orchestra would have gained if a proposed Federal tax exemption had not been ruled out by the present war emergency.

[74]

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Climax of the "Tanglewood on Parade" program Friday night was the appearance of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as narrator of Prokofieff's symphonic tale, "Peter and the Wolf." Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directed the orchestra and cued Mrs. Roosevelt on the dialogue interludes.

Among the audience of 8,800 that filled the Music Shed and part of the lawn outside were Mrs. Roosevelt's niece, Mrs. Edward Elliot, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt jr. and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt. When Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on the stage Dr. Koussevitzky led the orchestra and audience in "The Star-Spangled Banner." To insure every one in the one and one-half acre shed hearing her narration, a pencil microphone was mounted on the music stand which held Mrs. Roosevelt's script.

Mrs. Roosevelt flew from the Catskills to the Pittsfield airport Friday morning and rehearsed her role with the orchestra. In the afternoon a recording was made by RCA-Victor. Immediately after the evening performance Mrs. Roosevelt returned to Hyde Park.

"Tanglewood on Parade" was started in 1940 by Dr. Koussevitzky as a European war relief project, and the following year Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on a speaking program for the benefit of Britain and the U. S. O. Friday night's program started at 6 o'clock, with demonstrations by students simultaneously in the music shed, the theater concert hall, the chamber music hall and a chorus in the orchard music shell. Programs were informal and many patrons picnicked on the lawn preceding the main concert by the Boston orchestra in the shed at 8:30.

Proceeds from the event totaled $19,000, which goes to provide scholarships for students in the Berkshire music center which was founded by Dr. Koussevitzky ten years ago.

Mrs. Roosevelt Narrates 'Peter and the Wolf'

Associated Press wirephoto

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt rehearsing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Friday afternoon as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts. She was the narrator for last night's performance of Prokofieff's symphonic tale, "Peter and the Wolf" at the annual benefit program

A Sunday Afternoon Audience at Tanglewood

Howard S. Babbitt jr.

This scene will be repeated today when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the last Berkshire Festival concert at Lenox, Mass.

* * *

This Sunday, the 13th. will see the final concert of the Tanglewood season. In recent years this great music festival has become of major importance in planning summer activities in the Berkshires, and the closing of the concerts is among the first sure signs that autumn is approaching. Programs this year have been rich in variety, rare in quality and delightful in friendships developed by those who frequent these great gatherings.

Details for handling tremendous crowds under difficult conditions were unusually successful this year. Our old friends of Berkshire Eagle days, when we haunted the Pittsfield police station in search for news, Officers Tom Broderick and Frank Carlon and Laurence Naughton, and of more recent days, Jim Gazaw, who did traffic duty in Our Quiet Valley a few years back when the Mohawk Trail was under construction, were among Hilltown Neighbors who took charge of visitors in the area where we parked, and more than once we saw them show the patience of Job in untangling and directing selfish drivers.

Nick Sommerfield, a Princeton graduate, but at the present time a student at the Harvard Law School, did fine work this year as Director of Publicity, a position filled for many years by George Edman until the war called him into service with the Department of State in foreign lands. Ted Giddings and John Mahana of the Eagle were also active in local publicity affairs for the Festival, and whether we looked, or whether we listened, there was Willard Clark, music critic of The Union, but Victor Prahl of The Republican we saw less frequently.

George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under whose general directions the entire schedule ran so smoothly, tells us that the minimum yearly base salary paid to any musician is $4860. When one considers the size of the staff necessary for routine operations, in addition to the musicians themselves, it is easy to believe that sponsoring the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is an expensive undertaking. It is a tremendous project, predicated on high ideals, made possible through the co-operation and generosity of friends of music throughout the nation.

We are always sorry when the season closes.

* * *

OVATION GIVEN DE CARVALHO FOR HIS CONDUCTING

DiPasquale, Violist, Also Scores With Audience at Tanglewood

By VICTOR PRAHL

[illegible] Brazilian composer, [illegible] vivid personality of previous seasons, reappeared [illegible] here at the [illegible] tonight conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program consisting of three major works well suited to his talents.

Violist Gives Great Performance

The first [illegible] was taken up with "Harold in Italy", a symphony in [illegible] with viola solo, composed by Hector Berlioz. Joseph DiPasquale, the great violist of the orchestra, was the soloist and added greatly to his artistic status by a

(Continued On Page 6A)

OVATION GIVEN

(Continued From Page 1A)

[illegible] thrilling performance of [illegible] musical work. His instrument [illegible] with expressively and with [illegible] carrying out well the combination [illegible] the viola figure as [illegible] constantly preserved [illegible]. That artist that he is, [illegible] to lose himself completely [illegible] ing its poetic and dramatic content. Of exceptional beauty were the open intervals for the viola in the last part of the Pilgrim's March and the tonal purity of the [illegible] melody in the serenade of the [illegible]. Mr. De Pasquale and Mr. De Carvalho made a fine team, the latter giving the score an imaginative realization full of poetry and [illegible] built up to a terrific climax in the "Orgy of Brigands" of the last movement. After this fiery [illegible] both musicians as well as the [illegible] shared in an ovation that [illegible] on the sensational.

After intermission Mr. De Carvalho gave a spirited and colorful performance of Jacques Ibert's most popular score, "Escales" (Ports of Call), descriptive of three ports touched on a Mediterranean cruise, Palermo, Tunis and Valencia. The three movements are nostalgic, exotic, and brimming with the tunes and rhythms of the three different countries. Mr. De Carvalho gave plenty of verve and native flavor to all three movements with an extra punch to the Spanish rhythms of the finale.

The same qualities came to life in even a bigger way in Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10 for chorus and orchestra. This authentic folk-expression was a stirring experience tonight as performed by the combined forces of chorus and orchestra. One admired all through the concert the simplicity of means with which Mr. De Carvalho accomplished such admirable results. Surely no other contemporary conductor has a more sympathetic understanding of the music of his fellow-countryman, Villa-Lobos.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert will bring this year's Berkshire Music Festival to an end. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in a program consisting of Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony and Brahms' First Symphony.

8/13/50

IX [illegible] M

TWO COMIC OPERAS

Ibert and Foss Scores Given at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

LENOX, MASS.

WITHIN the past two weeks two contemporary operas have been presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood here. The department is under the direction of Jan Popper this summer. He is filling in for Boris Goldovsky, who is away on leave, and he, too, has managed, thanks to the enthusiasm and assiduous labors of the young people enrolled in the department, to get an amazing amount of work done in a short space of time.

Sets and costumes at Tanglewood are simple, inexpensive and imaginative, and the young people in the company make up for their lack of experience by their goodwill and lively spirits. All in all, the opera department has proved once more that the mounting of new operas need not be the formidable task it is sometimes made out to be by richer and more pretentious organizations.

The biggest problem everywhere, of course, is the opera. Where do you find the contemporary works that can hold their own in a repertory theatre? After all, at Tanglewood the productions play to a small, invited and indulgent audience. It is another matter when the customer who pays his way has to be pleased.

Pleasant Performances

Each summer Tanglewood seems to come up with a work of more than run-of-mill quality. The big opera production this season has been Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot." A week earlier the opera department put on Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog." The latter work has been done in New York, but here, with the composer conducting, it had an authoritative performance that had the additional advantage of an orchestra instead of just piano accompaniment. Despite a certain amateurishness in acting techniques, the company did an attractive job with "The Jumping Frog." It managed equally well with the Ibert opera, which was having its first American performance.

"The Jumping Frog," based on the Mark Twain story, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," is probably not meant for the major opera companies. Like the Kurt Weill-Arnold Sundgaard "Down in the Valley," it is likely to find favor with opera workshops throughout the country.

But "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is a full-length work that has been presented at the Opéra-Comique in Paris. It is a thoroughly professional job of composing. It has wit, good taste, gay spirits and in the latter part of the third act achieves poetry.

Would it be viable in a New York opera house? At Tanglewood, while the performance was youthful and sprightly, it lacked the subtlety and style that, one imagines, a French company gave it. Assuming that this Gallic flavor could be captured in New York, how would "Le Roi d'Yvetot" fare? It might find an audience, just as "The Jumping Frog" has found one. But one is inclined to think that the Ibert opera, like so many other comic operas written in our time, lacks the basic ingredient that has given lasting value to a few pieces that have withstood changes in taste and the assaults of time.

The trouble with "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is not the thinness of its story, although, in all conscience, it is a flimsy tale. The story line of an opera is rarely strong. What distinguishes the great comic operas from the lesser ones is not their librettos but the humanity of their music.

There we have the crux of the problem. The enduring comic operas are more than comic in the narrow sense. They laugh at, and with, the foibles of man and woman. They have compassion. The music probes to the heart of the people in the story. There may be amusing situations, but they do not make the difference. The presence of tenderness and sentiment is what counts.

Emotion Lacking

In "The Jumping Frog" there is the faintest suggestion of emotion, but little is to be expected from this brief musical anecdote. In "De Roi d'Yvetot" the stage comes alive in the third act when the composer ceases to be witty and begins to be affecting.

Without the evocation of mood and emotion in believable human beings a comic opera may be amusing, but only for a while.

Look at the repertory of comic operas and see how this principle applies. In "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart is brilliant and lusty, but he is also radiant with warmth and the loveliness of life. It is not Beckmesser's fatuousness that causes "Die Meistersinger" to endure but the wisdom of Hans Sachs and the sweetness and freshness of the young people. Baron Ochs provides some hilarious moments in "Rosenkavalier," but it is the touching predicament of the Marschallin and the purity of the love of Sophie and Octavian that lift the opera into a higher realm. The humor of "Falstaff" is the least important element of this valedictory opera of Verdi; the poetry, the mellow acceptance of life in all its vagrancies and the abiding compassion are the things that make it precious and endearing.

Now glance at some of the Rossini comic operas. They return now and then, but they do not remain in the repertory year in and year out. And the public is right. For these operas, like "The Barber of Seville," are tours de force of sprightliness and good cheer, but they do not reach out searchingly into man's emotions.

That is where "Le Roi d'Yvetot," save for one brief scene, is lacking, and that is where most contemporary comic operas miss out. That they do so is not surprising. To achieve universality in any opera form—tragic or comic—or in any art, for that matter, requires genius. And genius has always been a rare commodity.

[76]

Boston Globe 8/13/50

Koussevitzky Conducts Last Berkshire Festival Concert This Afternoon

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the final concert of the 1950 Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood at 3 this afternoon There will be two symphonies, the Sixth by Prokofieff and the First of Brahms.

Munch Invites Monteux and Koussevitzky to Conduct Symphony Here

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux to conduct concerts in Boston and other cities during the weeks of his mid-season vacation, according to a letter just sent to each season subscriber by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees.

Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra here for the first time since his retirement as its leader. Pierre Monteux, who was the conductor of this orchestra for the five years 1919-24, will return after many years of distinguished service as conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra.

Charles Munch is now resting at his country home in Alsace, after a notable season of concerts in France and Belgium. He will return to this country next month to open this orchestra's 70th season in Symphony Hall on Oct. 6, and will then begin his second season as conductor.

In his letter to the season ticket holders, Mr. Cabot drew attention to the fact that the Boston Orchestra will lose an expected $165,000 of additional income which would have been the result of tax exemption—the proposed Federal measure ruled out by the national emergency. The orchestra is without available funds to meet its deficits. Instead of raising the price of tickets, he has asked those who renew their season tickets to add 20% as a voluntary gift to their checks to make up the amount which had been hoped for through tax repeal.

George Mager, 1st Trumpeter, Leaves Boston Symphony

Housatonic, Aug. 13 (AP)—George Mager, for 30 years first trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, retired today because of illness.

Mager recently purchased an 80-acre farm in this village. He is confined to Pittsfield General Hospital with a broken hip suffered in a fall last week.

While with the Boston Symphony, Mager taught at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston University and the Longy School of Music, Cambridge.

POLITESSE

Charles Munch is proving a man of tact. He did not intrude on Serge Koussevitzky by conducting this summer at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. And this week it was announced that the two men he has invited to be guest conductors of the Boston Symphony during his mid-season vacation are his two predecessors, on the podium—Pierre Monteux, who led the orchestra from 1919 to 1924, and Dr. Koussevitzky.

12,600 APPLAUD KOUSSEVITZKY AND SYMPHONY

Fine Concert Ends 13th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 13—The 13th annual Berkshire Festival here at Tanglewood ended this afternoon with 12,600 people giving Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra a rousing farewell.

An estimated 178,700 people have attended all the events during this season. Of this number 23,500 attended the Bach-Mozart series, while 88,500 persons attended the three orchestral series. Tanglewood-on-parade drew 8800 people and 6000 people attended the orchestra rehearsals given for the benefit of the pension fund.

It was estimated that a total of $243,100 was taken in this season, a larger amount than last season, even though total attendance last season was 181,350.

Topping all performances, as far as we are concerned, was the monumental performance of Bach's "Mass in B Minor." Victor De Sabata, the Italian guest conductor, provided a maximum of excitement and beautifully designed readings, particularly of "The Pines of Rome" by Resphigi.

Continued On Page 9

12,600 Applaud

Continued From Page 1

The gifted Leonard Berstein scored a personal success in his performance of Ravel piano concerto and did his bit for the American composer. In his single performance Eleazar De Carvalho showed increased artistic stature.

Dr. Koussevitzky has remained content to program those works with which he has become particularly associated. More vital than ever, apparently in the best of spirits and retaining all the personal magnetism and charm which have endeared him to countless audiences, he was always the guiding spirit of focal point of the festival whether he was conducting or sitting in his box.

This afternoon he and the orchestra provided a virtuoso performance of the fifth symphony of Prokofieff, making even its many frankly borrowed passages sound fresh and new. The work is filled with a nervous tension, with ear-splitting cacophony and bits of those tongue-in-cheek passages in which the Russian composer has always delighted.

The performance of the first symphony of Brahms was lofty in conception, brilliant in execution and profoundly moving. The work has always been a favorite of Koussevitzky and today he is able to reveal it in all its grandeur.

Opera Department

We have been particularly interested this season in the work of the opera department under the direction of Dr. Jan Popper. Three new works to Tanglewood were given. These included the Mozart "The Make Believe Gardener"; Lukas Foss's "The Jumping Frog" and Ibert's "Le Roi Yvetet." Also heard was a charming performance of Puccini's "Gianni Shcecci." Dr. Popper made out an excellent case for opera in English, showing that sensible, singable translation can be made to be sung understandably.

More than 60 concerts devoted to the music of Bach observed the 200th anniversary of his death. Thus Bach was the focal point of the festival this season. We believe that each festival should have such a focal point. Guest conductors playing the standard repertoire could easily cause the Berkshire Festival to go the way of the Lewisohn Stadium concerts and people throughout the country would have little reason to come to Tanglewood to hear often heard works, superbly performed though they are.

We should like to see a portion of one festival devoted to Hector Berlios. Imagine the sensation his "Requiem" would be in this setting. This is only one of many works which Tanglewood and Berkshire Center have the resources to give as they should be given. The festival must stand for something more than virtuoso performances of often heard works.

FESTIVAL DRAWS 12,600 AT FINALE

Tanglewood Total Attendance Is 178,700—Koussevitzky Leads Closing Program

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13—The Berkshire festival ended this afternoon with a concert that drew 12,600, the largest audience of the season. Serve Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made it a memorable occasion with stirring performances of two large-voiced symphonies — Serge Prokofieff's Fifth and Brahms' First.

At last night's concert there was an audience of 9,500 which heard Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor and one of Mr. Koussevitzky's proteges, lead an absorbing program consisting of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Ibert's "Escales" and Villalobos' Choros No. 10, "Rasga O. Caracao," for chorus and orchestra.

With the figures in for this thirteenth annual festival, it was made clear once again that music in the Berkshires is here to stay. The season's total attendance at Tanglewood was 178,700, and the receipts for all the festival concerts amounted to $243,100, about $8,000 more than last year's record-breaking returns.

Center Strongly Supported

The Berkshire Music Center, which is so distinctive an adjunct of the festival, received encouraging support on its own. The friends of the center, an organization of people who contribute varying sums each year and are admitted, in return, to the students' events, raised $27,000, and another $18,800 was earned for the center by last Friday night's "Tanglewood on Parade" program.

The figures tell a success story, and they are supported by the quality of the performances that have been heard here. Mr. Koussevitsky and his orchestra this afternoon showed that summer concerts need not depend entirely on the beauty of the landscape for their appeal. Here was music-making of a high order—devoted, dignified and concerned with expression momentous for the hearts of men.

Consider Prokofieff's Fifth. This is a major symphony. It is the lofty and searching outpouring of one of the great composers of our time. This symphony was written in 1944, at the height of the Russians' struggle with the Germans, and it said things for all of us. The slow movement is tragic and moving without a shred of sentimentality or self-pity. There is strength in the music—and pain. And all these things were eloquently projected today.

The Brahms First, his grandest score in this form, needs no comment at this date, save that the orchestra and conductor gave it a spacious, ennobling performance.

Saturday Night's Program

Mr. de Carvalho's program last night was well suited to his talents as a conductor. He knows how to keep music moving, how to build dramatic effects, how to project vivid, jagged rhythms. Each work gave him and the orchestra an opportunity to show their virtuosity.

In the Berlioz score, which employs the orchestra with a boldness that still seems daring today, Joseph di Pasquale, the orchestra's first viola player, was the soloist. He handled his assignment intelligently and mellifluously. But it was the drive and passion of the orchestra in the last movement that made the dominant impression.

Jacques Ibert, guest teacher at the Center this summer, was in the audience to acknowledge the applause of the audience for his sparkling and vivacious "Escales," and it was played with immense relish.

In the villa-lobos Mr. de Carvalho really let himself go, and the authentic Brazilian rhythms brought the audience to its feet, shouting and applauding. The festival chorus sang the choral part in this piece with savor; one had the feeling that the several hundred young men and women would break out into a spontaneous conga line at any moment, and if they had, some 9,000 in the audience might have been tempted to join.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

Berkshire Festival Ends

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought the thirteenth Berkshire Festival to a close here today, playing before an audience of 12,600, a record for the season.

The final concert was comprised of Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Op. 11 and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Op. 68. At the conclusion, the seventy-six-year-old director was recalled by a cheering audience for seven bows.

The two week-end concerts attracted a total of more than 22,000 persons; 9,500 atteending the Saturday night program directed by Eleazar de Carvalho, with Joseph de Pasquale, Boston Orchestra first viola, as soloist. Mr. de Carvalho is a former student of the Berkshire Music Center, and was a student conductor before his selection by Dr. Koussevitzky as a guest conductor two years ago.

Total Tanglewood attendance this year was 178,700, a slight drop from last year's 181,350. Ticket sales grossed $243,100, however, an increase over last year's total of $235,300. This was brought about by increasing the number of Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-concert hall from four to six. Most of the attendance drop occurred in special programs by students given for the friends of the music center. A slight decline in the main-shed concerts also was seen, attributed by Tanglewood officials to threatening weather for five of the nine programs.

Since the shed was built in 1938, the attendance trend, however, has been increasing; starting with an initial season total of 38,000. Tanglewood figures show that some 500,000 persons have attended Boston Symphony concerts in the twelve years to date. In addition, the students of the music center present some forty choral, opera and chamber music events during a season.

BSO's First Trumpet To Retire 'Covered Orchestra With Gold'

Georges Mager

By ANTHONY G. RUD

HOUSATONIC—The first trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past 30 years—a player whose singing notes, in the words of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, "covered the orchestra with gold"—will retire officially Sunday to make his permanent home in this town.

With his wife, Claire, and sister-in-law, Miss Suzanne Laumonier, Georges Mager will stay the year round at Sky Terrace, his 80-acre farm a mile and a half north of this village, while his colleagues are in Boston.

Here, if his health permits, the 65-year-old artist will farm, tend his garden, receive his friends, and enjoy the quiet and peace of his Pixley Hill home with its commanding view of the Taconic Range to the west.

That the BSO is losing an outstanding artist is attested by his fellow musicians and the conductor himself, who speak with huge respect of the extraordinary lyric quality of his trumpet.

'One of Greatest'

"He is one of the greatest of this time," says Dr. Koussevitzky. "I know of few who can compare with his beautiful tone."

The end of the Tanglewood season marks the last day of Mr. Mager's formal connection with the orchestra. But unofficially, he has been in retirement since last May, because of serious illness. And at the moment, he is under treatment at Pittsfield General Hospital for a broken hip sustained in a fall at his home a week ago.

When he is out of the cast and back on his feet, he and his wife hope to spend some spare hours singing together. Before the first world war, they were a well-known tenor-soprano team in France. As a singer, he won first prize at the Paris Conservatory of Music in 1906. Mrs. Mager studied there also, and later was a member of the Opera Comique in Paris.

That voice training, Mrs. Mager points out, may account in some measure for her husband's singing tone.

"He plays like a singer; he puts all his soul into it," she declares. On tour with the French Army band Mr. Mager was engaged by the Boston Symphony in 1919. For one year he played the viola (sitting, incidentally, next to Arthur Fiedler, the present Pops conductor) and then took the first trumpet chair.

tom, a vegetable garden, an apple and pear orchard, two cows and several hens. Since 1940, when they bought the property, Mr. and Mrs. Mager have been operating it from May to October as a regular farm, but this year they had to be content with only a few animals.

Mrs. Mager milks the two cows, tends the garden, and, nowadays, visits her husband at the hospital every afternoon from 1 to 7.

"The doctors can't say exactly when he will come back," she says. "But it will be as soon as possible—if I have to turn the livingroom into a bedroom for him."

Also a Teacher

Along with his BSO work, Mr. Mager has taught at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston University, and the Longy School of Music in Cambridge. He has also instructed scores of private pupils——one of whom came from California last winter to study with him in Boston and at his Brookline winter home.

Many of these pupils have gone on to jobs in symphony orchestras throughout the country. Mr. and Mrs. Mager are humorously chagrined, however, at the career of a joint pupil: Their only son, Pierre Mager, is now playing drum in a Boston jazz band.

"He's married and has a child, but he's only 21 years old," chuckles Mrs. Mager. "He will, I hope, come back to better music some day."

Mr. Mager's summer pupils have worked with him for the past 10 years at Tanglewood and in the studio at his home. A converted milkhouse, it now is a snug little room containing a picture window, a piano, and numerous autographed pictures of his friends and fellow-musicians, such as Dr. Koussevitsky, Gregor Piatigorsky, Jascha Heifetz, Georges Enesco, Bruno Walter and Arthur Fiedler.

Through the windows are the 90 acres of fields, extending to the railroad tracks at the valley bot-

N.Y. Daily News Aug 13

'Koussy' Won't Play Double Bill With Movies at Lenox

By ROBERT WAHLS

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—Serge Koussevitzky, the 76-year-old Pooh-Bah of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, dropped his baton on the final concert of the 1950 series this afternoon. About 175,000 music lovers shelled out between $1 and $5 to attend during the three-week season.

For pure showmanship, Koussevitsky has no close rival with the possible exception of Leopold Stokowski. He rules the festival with an iron hand. Earlier this season the trustees engaged Victor de Sabata, flashy Italian conductor, as a guest. Koussy hit the ceiling of his 6,000-seat music shed.

When it was suggested that movies follow the concerts so as to break up the mass departure and reduce getaway traffic snarls, the director threatened to leave Lenox flat. He'd move Tanglewood to some point where the local cops could handle their highways while he handled his musicians.

While he hasn't succumbed to movies, Koussy isn't above the door prize. Arriving at Friday night's Tanglewood on Parade," this reporter was startled by the gateman who said, "Hold on to your ticket stub. You may win a grand piano or a package of Victor records."

Door Prizes.

Perhaps the greatest coup of the season was the conductor's persuasive ways which induced Mrs. Mrs. Eleanor Rosevelt to take over as narrator while he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Her appearance was the climax of Tanglewood on Parade, a five-hour program of student works topped by an evening concert.

Although an annual benefit for the Music Center, the program has never drawn well. The former first lady and current U.S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly brought 9,000 flocking. The take for the evening was a cool $19,000.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been briefed for her appearance at Hyde Park earlier in the week. Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, composer and Koussevitzky's assistant, had driven down earlier in the week to deliver the script. When Mrs. Roosevelt arrived Friday morning she went through a rehearsal, and then an afternoon session during which she recorded the effort for RCA Victor.

There followed a dinner with Koussey, which those who should know tells us is almost as arduous as a full scale rehearsal. The evening performance over, Mrs. Roosevelt drove quickly from the grounds, almost before the applause for her had died away.

The Berkshire Inn at nearyby Great Barrington, is an excellent base of operations for Tanglewood, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee and the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge. James L. Joyce, former ski champ who has run the Inn for 12 years, tells us business men of the area wish Koussevitzky would stretch the season over the Summer.

Three weeks isn't long enough, Joyce says. He thinks the Tanglewood facilities should be used for other purposes. In fact he thinks a championship fight would be just fine. He would also like a barbershop quartet competition, or something of the kind.

"But," says Joyce," I don't know that Koussevitzky would go for it."

Berkshire Center To Stage Ibert Opera

Boston.—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Mass., will give the first American performances of Jacques Ibert's Le Roi d'Yvetot, on Aug. 7 and 8. It is a comic opera in four acts, with a libretto by Jean Limozin and André de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, on Jan. 6, 1930. The action is set in early France and employs melodies of folk character. The composer will teach composition at the center this summer. A one-act opera, The Jumping Frog, by Lukas Foss, another member of the school's faculty, will also be produced at Tanglewood. The work is based on Mark Twain's short story, and received its first performance at the University of Indiana, in May.

Victor de Sabata has been added to the list of guest conductors who will appear with the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival. He will conduct the concerts on Aug. 3 and 5.

N.Y. TIMES
August 13, 1950
6 X + M

TWO COMIC OPERAS

Ibert and Foss Scores Given at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

LENOX, MASS.

WITHIN the past two weeks two contemporary operas have been presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood here. The department is under the direction of Jan Popper this summer. He is filling in for Boris Goldovsky, who is away on leave, and he, too, has managed, thanks to the enthusiasm and assiduous labors of the young people enrolled in the department, to get an amazing amount of work done in a short space of time.

Sets and costumes at Tanglewood are simple, inexpensive and imaginative, and the young people in the company make up for their lack of experience by their goodwill and lively spirits. All in all, the opera department has proved once more that the mounting of new operas need not be the formidable task it is sometimes made out to be by richer and more pretentious organizations.

The biggest problem everywhere, of course, is the opera. Where do you find the contemporary works that can hold their own in a repertory theatre? After all, at Tanglewood the productions play to a small, invited and indulgent audience. It is another matter when the customer who pays his way has to be pleased.

Pleasant Performances

Each summer Tanglewood seems to come up with a work of more than run-of-mill quality. The big opera production this season has been Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot." A week earlier the opera department put on Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog." The latter work has been done in New York, but here, with the composer conducting, it had an authoritative performance that had the additional advantage of an orchestra instead of just piano accompaniment. Despite a certain amateurishness in acting techniques, the company did an attractive job with "The Jumping Frog." It managed equally well with the Ibert opera, which was having its first American performance.

"The Jumping Frog," based on the Mark Twain story, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," is probably not meant for the major opera companies. Like the Kurt Weill-Arnold Sundgaard "Down in the Valley," it is likely to find favor with opera workshops throughout the country.

But "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is a full-length work that has been presented at the Opéra-Comique in Paris. It is a thoroughly professional job of composing. It has wit, good taste, gay spirits and in the latter part of the third act it achieves poetry.

Would it be viable in a New York opera house? At Tanglewood, while the performance was youthful and sprightly, it lacked the subtlety and style that, one imagines, a French company gave it. Assuming that this Gallic flavor could be captured in New York, how would "Le Roi d'Yvetot" fare? It might find an audience, just as "The Jumping Frog" has found one. But one is inclined to think that the Ibert opera, like so many other comic operas written in our time, lacks the basic ingredient that has given lasting value to a few pieces that have withstood changes in taste and the assaults of time.

The trouble with "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is not the thinness of its story, although, in all conscience, it is a flimsy tale. The story line of an opera is rarely strong. What distinguishes the great comic operas from the lesser ones is not their librettos but the humanity of their music.

There we have the crux of the problem. The enduring comic operas are more than comic in the narrow sense. They laugh at, and with, the foibles of man and woman. They have compassion. The music probes to the heart of the people in the story. There may be amusing situations, but they do not make the difference. The presence of tenderness and sentiment is what counts.

Emotion Lacking

In "The Jumping Frog" there is the faintest suggestion of emotion, but little is to be expected from this brief musical anecdote. In "De Roi d'Yvetot" the stage comes alive in the third act when the composer ceases to be witty and begins to be affecting.

Without the evocation of mood and emotion in believable human beings a comic opera may be amusing, but only for a while.

Look at the repertory of comic operas and see how this principle applies: in "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart is brilliant and lusty, but he is also radiant with warmth and the loveliness of life. It is not Beckmesser's fatuousness that causes "Die Meistersinger" to endure but the wisdom of Hans Sachs and the sweetness and freshness of the young people. Baron Ochs provides some hilarious moments in "Rosenkavalier," but it is the touching predicament of the Marschallin and the purity of the love of Sophie and Octavian that lift the opera into a higher realm. The humor of "Falstaff" is the least important element of this valedictory opera of Verdi; the poetry, the mellow acceptance of life in all its vagrancies and the abiding compassion are the things that make it precious and endearing.

Now glance at some of the Rossini comic operas. They return now and then, but they do not remain in the repertory year in and year out. And the public is right. For these operas, like "The Barber of Seville," are tours de force of sprightliness and good cheer, but they do not reach out searchingly into man's emotions.

That is where "Le Roi d'Yvetot," save for one brief scene, is lacking, and that is where most contemporary comic operas miss out. That they do so is not surprising. To achieve universality in any opera form—tragic or comic—or in any art, for that matter, requires genius. And genius has always been a rare commodity.

N.Y. Daily News Aug 13

'Koussy' Won't Play Double Bill With Movies at Lenox

By ROBERT WAHLS

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12—Serge Koussevitzky, the 76-year-old Pooh-Bah of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, dropped his baton on the final concert of the 1950 series this afternoon. About 175,000 music lovers shelled out between $1 and $5 to attend during the three-week season.

For pure showmanship, Koussevitsky has no close rival with the possible exception of Leopold Stokowski. He rules the festival with an iron hand. Earlier this season the trustees engaged Victor de Sabata, flashy Italian conductor, as a guest. Koussy hit the ceiling of his 6,000-seat music shed.

When it was suggested that movies follow the concerts so as to break up the mass departure and reduce getaway traffic snarls, the director threatened to leave Lenox flat. He'd move Tanglewood to some point where the local cops could handle their highways while he handled his musicians.

While he hasn't succumbed to movies, Koussy isn't above the door prize. Arriving at Friday night's Tanglewood on Parade," this reporter was startled by the gateman who said, "Hold on to your ticket stub. You may win a grand piano or a package of Victor records."

Door Prizes.

Perhaps the greatest coup of the season was the conductor's persuasive ways which induced Mrs. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt to take over as narrator while he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Her appearance was the climax of Tanglewood on Parade, a five-hour program of student works topped by an evening concert.

Although an annual benefit for the Music Center, the program has never drawn well. The former first lady and current U.S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly brought 9,000 flocking. The take for the evening was a cool $19,000.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been briefed for her appearance at Hyde Park earlier in the week. Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, composer and Koussevitzky's assistant, had driven down earlier in the week to deliver the script. When Mrs. Roosevelt arrived Friday morning she went through a rehearsal, and then an afternoon session during which she recorded the effort for RCA Victor.

There followed a dinner with Koussey, which those who should know tells us is almost as arduous as a full scale rehearsal. The evening performance over, Mrs. Roosevelt drove quickly from the grounds, almost before the applause for her had died away.

The Berkshire Inn at nearby Great Barrington, is an excellent base of operations for Tanglewood, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee and the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge. James L. Joyce, former ski champ who has run the Inn for 12 years, tells us business men of the area wish Koussevitzky would stretch the season over the Summer.

Three weeks isn't long enough, Joyce says. He thinks the Tanglewood facilities should be used for other purposes. In fact he thinks a championship fight would be just fine. He would also like a barbershop quartet competition, or something of the kind.

"But," says Joyce," I don't know that Koussevitzky would go for it."

Berkshire Concerts 2nd To Stage Ibert Opera

Boston.—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Mass., will give the first American performances of Jacques Ibert's Le Roi d'Yvetot, on Aug. 7 and 8. It is a comic opera in four acts, with a libretto by Jean Limozin and André de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, on Jan. 6, 1930. The action is set in early France and employs melodies of folk character. The composer will teach composition at the center this summer. A one-act opera, The Jumping Frog, by Lukas Foss, another member of the school's faculty, will also be produced at Tanglewood. The work is based on Mark Twain's short story, and received its first performance at the University of Indiana, in May.

Victor de Sabata has been added to the list of guest conductors who will appear with the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival. He will conduct the concerts on Aug. 3 and 5.

N.Y. TIMES
August 13, 1950
6 X

TWO COMIC OPERAS

Ibert and Foss Scores Given at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

LENOX, MASS.

WITHIN the past two weeks two contemporary operas have been presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood here. The department is under the direction of Jan Popper this summer. He is filling in for Boris Goldovsky, who is away on leave, and he, too, has managed, thanks to the enthusiasm and assiduous labors of the young people enrolled in the department, to get an amazing amount of work done in a short space of time.

Sets and costumes at Tanglewood are simple, inexpensive and imaginative, and the young people in the company make up for their lack of experience by their good-will and lively spirits. All in all, the opera department has proved once more that the mounting of new operas need not be the formidable task it is sometimes made out to be by richer and more pretentious organizations.

The biggest problem everywhere, of course, is the opera. Where do you find the contemporary works that can hold their own in a repertory theatre? After all, at Tanglewood the productions play to a small, invited and indulgent audience. It is another matter when the customer who pays his way has to be pleased.

Pleasant Performances

Each summer Tanglewood seems to come up with a work of more than run-of-mill quality. The big opera production this season has been Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot." A week earlier the opera department put on Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog." The latter work has been done in New York, but here, with the composer conducting, it had an authoritative performance that had the additional advantage of an orchestra instead of just piano accompaniment. Despite a certain amateurishness in acting techniques, the company did an attractive job with "The Jumping Frog." It managed equally well with the Ibert opera, which was having its first American performance.

"The Jumping Frog," based on the Mark Twain story, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," is probably not meant for the major opera companies. Like the Kurt Weill-Arnold Sundgaard "Down in the Valley," it is likely to find favor with opera workshops throughout the country.

But "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is a full-length work that has been presented at the Opéra-Comique in Paris. It is a thoroughly professional job of composing. It has wit, good taste, gay spirits and in the latter part of the third act it achieves poetry.

Would it be viable in a New York opera house? At Tanglewood, while the performance was youthful and sprightly, it lacked the subtlety and style that, one imagines, a French company gave it. Assuming that this Gallic flavor could be captured in New York, how would "Le Roi d'Yvetot" fare? It might find an audience, just as "The Jumping Frog" has found one. But one is inclined to think that the Ibert opera, like so many other comic operas written in our time, lacks the basic ingredient that has given lasting value to a few pieces that have withstood changes in taste and the assaults of time.

The trouble with "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is not the thinness of its story although, in all conscience, it is a flimsy tale. The story of an opera is rarely strong. What distinguishes the great operas from the lesser ones is not their librettos but the humanity of their music.

There we have the crux of the problem. The enduring comic operas are more than comic in the narrow sense. They laugh at, as well as with, the foibles of man and woman. They have compassion. The music probes to the heart of the people in the story. There may be amusing situations, but they do not make the difference. The presence of tenderness and sentiment, is what counts.

Emotion Lacking

In "The Jumping Frog" there is the faintest suggestion of emotion, but little is to be expected from this brief musical anecdote. In "De Roi d'Yvetot" the stage comes alive in the third act when the composer ceases to be witty and begins to be affecting.

Without the evocation of mood and emotion in believable human beings a comic opera may be amusing, but only for a while.

Look at the repertory of comic operas and see how this principle applies: in "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart is brilliant and lusty, but he is also radiant with warmth and the loveliness of life. It is not Beckmesser's fatuousness that causes "Die Meistersinger" to endure but the wisdom of Hans Sachs and the sweetness and freshness of the young people. Baron Ochs provides some hilarious moments in "Rosenkavalier," but it is the touching predicament of the Marschallin and the purity of the love of Sophie and Octavian that lift the opera into a higher realm. The humor of "Falstaff" is the least important element of this valedictory opera of Verdi; the poetry, the mellow acceptance of life in all its vagrancies and the abiding compassion are the things that make it precious and endearing.

Now glance at some of the Rossini comic operas. They remain not remain in the repertory year in and year out. And the public is right. For these operas, like "The Barber of Seville," are tours de force of sprightliness and good cheer, but they do not reach out searchingly into man's emotions.

That is where "Le Roi d'Yvetot," save for one brief scene, is lacking, and that is why, of the contemporary comic operas it stands out. That they do so is not surprising. To achieve universality in any opera form—tragic or comic—or in any art, for that matter, requires genius. And genius has always been a rare commodity.

[78]

FESTIVAL FINALE: This is part of the crowd of 12,600 which took advantage of beautiful weather to attend the final concert of the 1950 Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Babbitt

Festival Sets Record With $243,000 Gate

LENOX — The 1950 Berkshire Festival closed yesterday afternoon, its total attendance down slightly from last year, but its gate receipts at a record high of $243,100. An increase of both price and attendance at Friday's Tanglewood on Parade program, along with some increases in reserved seat sales during the regular concerts, are credited with boosting the income above last year's previous high of $235,300. The attendance total dropper 17,700 from the 1949 high of 181,350.

Students Draw 50,000

Total attendance of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center to the student activities, including the operas, was 50,600, and 6000 turned out for the public rehearsals Saturday mornings for the past three weeks for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. The Bach-Mozart festival at the beginning of the season attracted 23,500 music lovers. The breakdown for the concerts in the Music Shed follows: Series A, 28,300; Series B, 31,600; Series C, 29,900.

Saturday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky gave a farewell message to the 425 students who attended the Berkshire Music Center this year, expressing the hope many would return next year. Last night Dr. Koussevitzky was honored at a dinner party in the Curtis Hotel attended by faculty members of the Music Center, including many members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their wives.

Brahms First Makes Dramatic Festival Finale

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The final note of the Brahms first symphony brought on a demonstration yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood that proved to be a personal triumph for Serge Koussevitzky. This particular symphony was not a haphazard choice, for Koussevitzky has ridden it to glory many times, but the performance yesterday was conceived on a plane of grandeur and magnitude he has seldom equalled. The orchestra played with tone and spirit to match the occasion, to make a dramatic finale of this year's Festival.

The final brace of concerts had been especially stimulating. Eleazar deCarvalho conducted Saturday evening in a program replete with interest. His main offering was the Berlioz "Harold in Italy" in which Joseph de Pasquale was soloist. It is not a concerto, but rather a symphony with many opportunities for viola. De Pasquale distinguished himself by the beauty and elegance of his tone. He played with a classic reticence and refrained from making his viola conspicuous where the orchestra matter was of more importance. Carvalho gave him excellent support and revealed himself as a vastly advanced conductor, leading now with a new poise and maturity.

Ibert Takes a Bow

He continued his program after intermission with the "Escales" of Jacques Ibert, who is at Tanglewood for the season as guest faculty member of the composition classes at the Berkshire Music Center. Carvalho sought him out in the audience and made him rise to acknowledge the applause which followed his music. "Ports of Call" is a series of three sketches, inspired, he relates, from a Mediterranean trip in which his ship put in at Palermo, Tunis and Valencia. The three distinct pictures are descriptively reminiscent of the characters of the three ports, at least of what popular imagination would conjure up of Italian, quasi-Oriental and Spanish impressions. Ibert uses his conceded orchestral facility and talent for color, and he found a sympathetic collaborator in Carvalho.

The final number on Saturday's program was another choros by Carvalho's fellow-countryman, Hector Villa-Lobos, whose work Carvalho has commendably and loyally made known to Festival audiences whenever there was opportunity. This choros, No. 10, is a vivid and rousing short number in which the Festival chorus, 150 voices from the student body of the Center, assisted. The vocal line is in short, choppy syllables, youthfully gay and primitively vigorous and the chorus sang for Carvalho with eagerness. He led Hugh Ross, ton" men, despite their terrific schedule of the past three weeks,

[79]

Berkshire Eagle 8/15/60

Koussevitzky Plans 50 Engagements; Nadia Boulanger Coming to Tanglewood

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

LENOX—"Feeling better than ever," and looking every bit the part, 76-year-old Dr. Serge Koussevitzky spoke enthusiastisally today of plans for a series of engagements that would tax the energy of a man half his age.

Between the latter part of this month and next July when he returns to again direct the activities of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the retired conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make more than 50 concert appearances in several principal cities of this country and Europe.

Before going into detail on his plans for the next 10 months, Dr. Koussevitzky in an interview today at his home, Seranak, revealed that next year he is bringing to Tanglewood as the guest faculty member, Nadia Boulanger, noted French conductor, composer and teacher. This year's guest faculty member was Jacques Ibert. Nadia Boulanger, head of the department of music at the Ecole Normale in Paris and director of the American Academy at Fontainbleau, in 1938, became the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when she conducted the orchestra at Symphony Hall in Gabriel Faure's "Requiem."

Nadia Boulanger

Israel Orchestra To Tour

Dr. Koussevitzky also announced that the nation-wide tour he is arranging for the Israel Symphony Orchestra next winter will have besides himself and Leonard Bernstein as conductors, Eleazar de Carvalho, marking the first time that Koussevitzky and the two prize pupils in his conducting class at the Berkshire Music Center, will appear together on tour.

Obviously happy that he will be able to present to music lovers throughout the country his two pupils, who are also on the faculty of the BMC, Dr. Koussevitzky smilingly asserted that "Bernstein and Carvalho will take most of the concerts. I plan to take only 18 or 20."

The orchestra, made up of about 100 musicians, will appear at about 60 concerts during the trip across the United States. The tour will start in January, end in March.

Artur Toscanini, the NBC Symphony Orchestra conductor and the first conductor of the Israel Symphony, will be invited, Dr. Koussevitzky said, to conduct the orchestra when it plays in New York after the opening U.S. concert in Washington, D.C., on Jan. 7, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will leave Lenox Aug. 23 for California where he will make his second appearance as guest conductor in the Hollywood Bowl. Last year in his first appearance on the West Coast, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted before a crowd of 20,000 in the Hollywood Bowl.

This year he was invited to conduct five concerts at a festival dedicated to him at the Bowl but he has notified the Hollywood Bowl officials he would prefer to have the festival dedicated to the works of great composers of the world. He was authorized to engage his own soloists for the concerts and has decided to appear at four instead of five concerts. Soloists will include Isaac Stern, violinist; Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, and the famed violinist, Jascha Heifetz. The first concert will be devoted to the works of Tchaikovsky; the second, Brahms; the third, Beethoven. The fourth will be highlighted by the works of Bach, closing with Beethoven's ninth symphony.

Returning Here Next Month

After returning from California early in September, Dr. Koussevitzky will remain at his home atop Baldhead Mountain for about 20 days before leaving for Israel where he will appear as the conductor for 12 concerts in a month with the Israel Symphony.

Following his concerts abroad, he will return to the United States in November and appear as guest conductor for two weeks with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall and a third week with the BSO on tour of New Haven, New York, Brooklyn and Washington. His schedule with the BSO calls for appearances in Boston the last two weeks in November and the first week in December.

"After that I'll take another little rest," the genial musician related, "and in January the orchestra from Israel will arrive for our tour of this country.

"The work of my school will be demonstrated from coast to coast with Bernstein and Carvalho appearing with me. It makes me very, very happy."

Dr. Koussevitzky's work will not be finished in March when the Israel orchestra's tour of this country ends, for he is scheduled to return in the spring to Belgium at the invitation of the dowager Queen Elizabeth, mother of King Leopold III who has relinquished his throne. In Belgium Dr. Koussevitzky will presids at the annual violinists' competition established several years ago by Queen Elizabeth in memory of her former violin teacher, Eugene Ysaye. Dr. Koussevitzky hopes "before long" to induce the mother queen of Belgium to come to Tanglewood.

During the spring Dr. Koussevitzky will make appearances as a guest conductor in Brussels and at Amsterdam before going to Paris where he will conduct the first concert for UNESCO to benefit the International Music Fund which he established at Tanglewood a few years ago.

"She will be my guest at the International Music Fund benefit being arranged by UNESCO in Paris," the noted conductor added.

Dr. Koussevitzky has agreed to commission from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, founded in memory of his first wife, Natalie, a composition by either Stravinsky or Hindemith to be performed in 1952 at an International Music Fund benefit concert "in some principal city of the world."

While in California later this month Dr. Koussevitzky said, he plans to confer with Igor Stravinsky, who is currently visiting there, about composing a symphony for this benefit. Should Stravinsky find he is unable to prepare the work in time for the 1952 benefit, Dr. Koussevitzky said he will then consult Hindemith when the two meet abroad next winter.

After his concert in Paris, Dr. Koussevitzky will go to England for his annual appearance as a guest conductor and will then return to Tanglewood to start another season.

Although the 1950 Festival season ended Sunday, Dr. Koussevitzky was unable to catch up on his rest yesterday. He was busy all day greeting faculty members and close friends who called at Seranak before leaving for their homes. A few promising students also appeared to have private auditions with the director at Tanglewood. Today, however, his schedule has been slowed down somewhat and his only plans between now and Aug. 23 are to relax.

Dr. Koussevitzky is enthusiastic about the arrival next year of Nadia Boulanger to the Berkshire Music Center's faculty.

A native of Paris, she was vorn Sept. 16, 1887. She has been associated for many years with the Paris Conservatory, the Ecole Normale de Musique at Paris and the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau. Many young American composers have studied under her in Paris, including Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center; Walter Piston and Roy Harris, whose works have been performed by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

To Meet Miss Robinson Smith

While in Paris he plans to meet Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, pioneer in the establishment of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934, who was the first to invite Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to come to the Berkshires for the Festival in 1936 when the concerts were held at Highwood, the former Alfred Gwynn Vanderbilt estate, now Foxhollow School.

"The music lovers all over the world who come each year to Tanglewood owe much to Miss Robinson Smith for the part she played in starting this great festival in Lenox," Dr. Koussevitzky declared. For the past few years Miss Robinson Smith has been residing in France.

[80]

GREAT BARRINGTON

and Surrounding Territory

OVER two hundred years of progress have passed since the first Massachusetts settlers traveled the "Great Road" to Great Barrington, then the only access to the famous Berkshires.

In these two hundred years a rich history of Yankee ingenuity has unfolded to give this southern Berkshire territory claim to an undefiable list of "firsts." Reverend John Sergeant in 1739 became the first missionary to the Stockbridge Indians. In 1774 the first armed resistance to British rule flared in Great Barrington when Crown Judges were forced from town while attempting to hold court. The first slave in the country to obtain freedom was Elizabeth Freeman whose case was argued by Theodore Sedgwick in 1781 in Great Barrington. The Berkshire Courier, founded in 1834 and still issuing the same weekly in Great Barrington, was the first newspaper to use country correspondents and the Marcus Rogers paper folding machine. The famous Cyrus Field family of the first trolley car and transatlantic cable renown further enhances the Berkshire hall of fame.

The nineteenth century continued to uphold the tradition of progress in the Berkshires when in 1886 George William Stanley, partner of Westinghouse and pioneer in the electrical field, perfected the first practical alternating current transformer. From his generating plant, a deserted rubber mill, Stanley proved that alternating current not only was suitable for illumination but would also solve the problems of transmission over distances satisfactorily and economically. On March 20, 1886, Stanley threw the switch that ushered in an era of unestimable value in electric light and power development. Years later the Berkshires saw the first high tension cables laid in Lenox.

In 1922, another electrical genius, Joseph Franz, designed and installed on the Williamsville River the first entirely automatic outdoor generating plant. In the Rockdale plant in West Stockbridge he solved the problem of water freezing. By installing a galvanized pipe under water that agitated air bubbles and prevented freezing, he saved money and promoted even greater efficiency in hydro power generation.

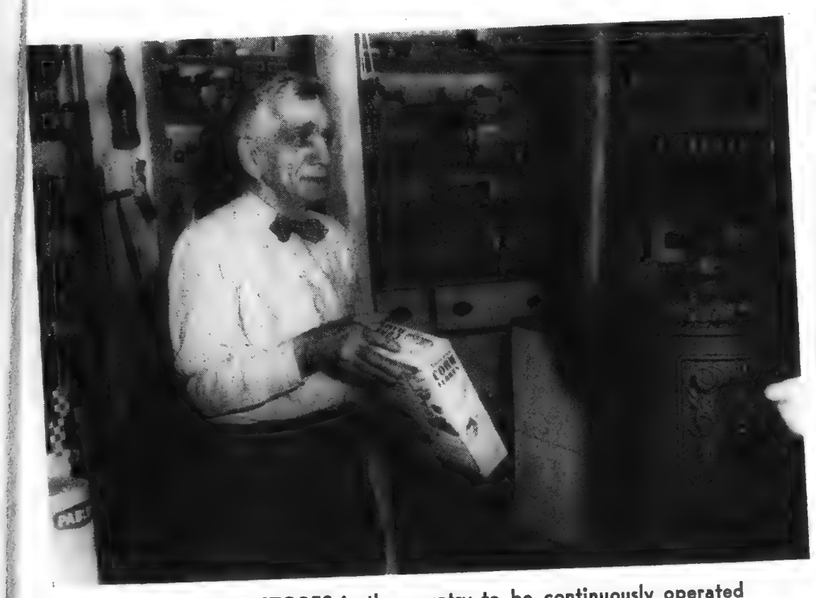
While the progress of the 1800's continued with the growth of mills turning out an incredible number and

(Continued on page 4)

This is the first in a series of articles describing the communities served by the New England Electric System

[81]

STOCKBRIDGE POLICEMAN, Bill Collins, humorizes with Town Selectman Richard Thorsell, also a gravel pit owner, agent for the Railway Express, and night telephone operator



ONE OF FIVE STORES in the country to be continuously operated for 170 years is now owned by Lester J. Miner in Monterey

FORMER HOME OF ANDREW CARNEGIE, this chalet-like mansion in Stockbridge is now a Jesuit Novitiate

Great Barrington

(Continued from page 3)

variety of products, the Berkshires became a cradle for more talent. Names like William Cullen Bryant, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Herman Melville, Oliver Wendell Holmes and many others infiltrated the scenic splendor of the Berkshires and composed some of their most brilliant works.

Conducive to the art of learning, the southern Berkshires can also proudly boast of themselves as a center for education preparatory to college. Acres of green campuses encompass institutions such as the Berkshire School for boys, Barrington School for girls, Lenox School for boys, and the Jesuit Schools of Shadowbrook and Cranwell.

Today some 8000 people live in Great Barrington, still the progressive community of years ago. Industries such as the Monument Mills, Great Barrington Manufacturing Company, Rising Paper Company and Sheffield Plastics produce a variety of products ranging from technical papers to sheets and bedspreads. Year-round residents of Great Barrington, Lenox, Stockbridge, Sheffield, and Monterey enjoy their beautiful corner of Massachusetts and watch amusedly as summer comes luring thousands of tourists from all parts of the country. The diversity of the Berkshires—summer playhouses, clear lakes, resorts, concerts at Tanglewood, or just a look at the countryside—is enough to lure anyone into the southern Berkshire territory.

MODESTLY CALLED THE MUSIC SHED, Tanglewood's open auditorium seats 6000 inside while thousands more gather outside for Berkshire Summer Music Festival concerts

A REPLICA OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE'S RED HOUSE in Lenox where he composed "House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book" now stands where the original burned in 1890

JUG END BARN, formerly an $80,000 dairy barn, was converted into a sports resort catering to young people

TWO MEMBERS OF THE RESIDENT COMPANY of the Berkshire Playhouse, Barbara Brady and Gaye Jordan, prepare for the last act of "Goodbye, My Fancy" starring Sylvia Sidney

THE LONG FOUDINIER MACHINE at the Rising Paper Company in Great Barrington in one unit converts pulp into paper

EMPLOYEES OF SOUTHERN BERKSHIRE POWER & ELECTRIC COMPANY, Margaret LaMudge, Madeleine Dutcher, George Helmrich, Margaret Cashman, and Dorothea Landon, tackle business behind the scenes in the inner office

FONG CHOW, art student at Tanglewood, carves a replica of a painting in mahogany at the Wheatleigh Dormitory for students

THE PAPER IS "PUT TO BED" in the "Berkshire Courier" office by makeup men Fred Pulver and Bernard Tierney as reporter John LaFontana supervises the job

BARBECUED CHICKEN was one of the delicacies served at the Worcester County Farmers Field Day

SYSTEM GUESTS were on hand for many of the festivities and here, for the chicken

WILDER MOORE tells the farmers' wives about electric appliances (upper). PART OF THE 1200 who witnessed the food preparation and demonstration program jointly sponsored by System Companies in Worcester County

Farmers Field Day Held in Lunenburg

CITY folk could well take a few hints on living from their brothers and sisters back on the farm. This became more and more apparent as the Fifth Annual Worcester County Farmers Field Day literally rolled on to its conclusion.

The intense interest in this annual affair is best shown by the fact that without the lure of a midway, ferris wheel and shell games, better than 15,000 farmers, with their wives and children, flocked to Clover Hill Farms in Lunenburg to see what they could see and learn what they could learn.

Naturally they look forward each year to meeting old friends and swapping yarns about this and that; but mainly their interest lies in what they can learn about the latest heavy duty farm equipment, land clearing, care and breeding of animals, and electric labor-saving equipment.

This crowded event began at nine on the bright, breezy, Wednesday morning of August 16 and lasted until the sun went down. There was something for everybody—fruit growing, poultry raising, beekeeping, forestry, 4-H programs, veterinarian demonstrations, homemaking and promotion of the need for safety on the farm. Insects, however, had a bad time of it by being constantly sprayed from Department of Agriculture airplanes.

Best attended was the women's program where in a special tent 1200 guests had an opportunity to catch up on the latest in food preparation and preservation. Prominent in this program were District Merchandising Manager Wilder Moore and Home Service Demonstrator Carolyn Kennedy of Worcester County Electric. These Company representatives discussed small appliances and quick freeze handling of food. This program was shared with one of the leading bottled gas companies.

Participation by farmers' wives in telling how they handled their own particular food problems added a great deal of color to the forum. This electric homemaking program was jointly sponsored by all the System Companies in Worcester County and Fitchburg Gas and Electric Company. System Rural Servicemen Ray Carrier of Webster and Frank Whouley of Leominster were on hand to help solve the electrical problems of many of the guests.

The promotion of this tremendous undertaking rested on the fine co-operation of 20 agricultural organizations in the county. The large attendance was proof of the fact that the event was well publicized. This responsibility was in the hands of Service Company Director of Agricultural Development F. L. Rimbach.

Tanglewood

Music lovers by the ten thousands enjoy festival in the Berkshires

Automobiles bring thousands to the summertime Tanglewood concerts

PHOTOS FROM BERKSHIRE HILLS CONFERENCE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra on the Tanglewood stage, Serge Koussevitzky conducting

By RUSSELL COLLINS

BY THE SHORES of Lake Mahkeenac, in the pastoral quiet of the Berkshire Hills countryside, is the summertime music center of the east—Tanglewood.

Leaving behind the heat and frenzy of the city, tens of thousands of motorists journey to Tanglewood in July and August as they have since 1934, when the Berkshire Music Festival first became a reality.

Ideally located, 150 miles from both New York and Boston (near the junction of U. S. Highways 20 and 7), in western Massachusetts, Tanglewood exemplifies one of the automobile's contributions to our culture. Over wide ribbons of highway come the music lovers, from all parts of the east. During the festival, thousands of cars are lined in neat rows in the parking area adjacent to the Music Shed.

The chief attraction to concert-goers is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor. The festival is the series of concerts given every summer for five weeks by the orchestra.

Less well known, but contributing much to the musical progress of the world, is the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school sponsored by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. It runs six weeks, the last five concurrent with the festival.

The festival this year begins Saturday night, July 8, and the final concert of the series is scheduled for Sunday afternoon, August 13.

In the Music Shed, the men of the orchestra present an informal appearance in their white summer coats. Cool country air and the gentle rustle of trees combine with the music.

But the best picture of relaxed enjoyment during the music is that presented by the "lawn sitters." Carrying blankets, pillows, umbrellas, and picnic lunches, they lie or sit on the wide expanse of lawn in front of the Music Shed and absorb the music of the masters. So hushed is this audience and so efficient the shed's accoustics that the music can be heard distinctly hundreds of yards away.

The first Berkshire Music Festival was held in 1934, with the orchestra playing in a circus tent. After Mrs. Andrew Hepburn and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan presented the Tanglewood estate to festival officials, Koussevitzky stressed the need for a permanent structure.

It took a storm to provoke the required financial aid. Most of the concert on August 12, 1937, which had been scheduled for radio broadcast, was never heard. The musicians and audience were drenched as wind and rain tore at the canvas tent, and valuable instruments were soaked.

At the end of this fateful concert, Dr. Koussevitzky announced there would be no more unless a permanent shed could be built. More than $20,000 was subscribed that night, and within a few weeks $80,000 had been given. The shed was ready the next year.

A week before the festival begins, the gates of Tanglewood swing open to admit 425 youthful students of music. For six weeks, Dr. Koussevitzky, known informally to the young students as "Koussy," keeps them busy every minute they are awake. The hand-picked student body of 450 last year represented thirty-eight states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and twenty-one foreign countries.

The various student concerts, as well as some rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are open to the public, in addition to the regular concert series.

Tanglewood itself has a long and romantic history. Located between Lenox and Stockbridge, Massachusetts, it was the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne from 1851 to 1853.

In this idyllic spot, Hawthorne planned "Tanglewood Tales," wrote "The Wonder Book," and gathered material for "The House of the Seven Gables." The cottage burned in 1890. A replica on the original site was built and presented in 1948 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the National Federation of Music Clubs. It houses studios for students at the Berkshire Music Center.

No chuck wagon dinner is complete without an Indian or two

An easterner almost gets branded

PHOTOS FROM PIKES PEAK INFORMATION BUREAU AND JOSEF MUENCH

Upthrust peaks of sandstone in the Garden of the Gods

In the Garden of the Gods

Thousands enjoy chuck wagon dinners at Colorado Springs

Crowd enjoys exhibition square dancing

Western music is the style

By WILLIAM H. GEISLER

OF ALL the numerous attractions in the beautiful summer playground that centers around Colorado Springs, one of the most pleasant and memorable, for the average visitor, is a chuck wagon dinner in the Garden of the Gods.

The setting is ideal—a great natural park of 700 acres on the northwest edge of town, where mammoth upthrusts of red sandstone tower awesomely hundreds of feet in the air.

The time is exactly right—in the evening, starting when the sun's last rays are reflected from distant Pikes Peak, and continuing into darkness under a canopy of stars, with the moon suspended above the ghostlike rocks, and the yellow light of the campfire lighting the shadowed canyon walls.

There's a friendly atmosphere, too—a spirit of informality, and much good-natured banter. When the dinner gong sounds, at sundown, everyone lines up cafeteria style and gets his chuck, western style, on a durable tin plate. Crowds average about 700, but everyone's served in twenty minutes flat.

And the food is fine—fried chicken, or mountain trout, with all the trimmin's, including sourdough biscuits baked over charcoal.

Then the crowd gathers 'round the campfire for the after-dinner fun. There's considerable horseplay, including the "branding" of a "dude" from the east. State names are called, and this prompts the singing of songs like "Missouri Waltz," "Sidewalks of New York," or "Deep in the Heart of Texas." The evening wouldn't be complete without a dance or two.

Mixed with this audience participation is western entertainment by westerners, who manufacture some fine music with mouth organ and guitar.

When the last song is sung and the flames die away into a glowing bed of coals, hundreds of visitors tell themselves, "This is the most enjoyable evening I've had in many years." Even after they reach home, they write to their hosts, the Colorado Springs Junior Chamber of Commerce, to tell them what a fine time they had.

These colorful chuck wagon dinners are held on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday nights from June through September as a community, nonprofit project sponsored by the Jaycees. The Jaycees preside in western attire, and Jaycee wives help prepare the food. Tickets should be obtained in advance at the office of the Chamber of Commerce.

Last year, some 25,000 persons attended, representing every state in the union and many foreign countries.

If you're out Colorado way, stop in at one of the covered wagon information bureaus located on all main highways into Colorado Springs. The Jaycees will be glad to answer your questions about the Pikes Peak region and will be pleased to have you stay for a chuck wagon dinner in the Garden of the Gods.

DETROIT, MICH.
JUNE, 19[illegible]

by PAUL L. PAYNE
Editor, Fiction House

JUNE—and they scatter, these musicians! . . . to foreign parts and to the oncoming Festivals . . . Nicola Moscona (May 20-June 17) and Leonard Warren (June 16-July 8), those good Metropolitan baritones, to appear with the Opera Nationale in Mexico City . . . Lovely Patrice Munsel opening with the San Francisco Light Opera Company, June 15, and going on to Los Angeles soon thereafter . . . Martial Singher also in California, teaching at Santa Barbara Musical Academy, June 15-18 . . . Brian Sullivan singing in Huntington, West Virginia, June 12 . . . Chicago's famous Ravinia Park Festival gets under way (June 27-August 13) in a new pavilion—the old one was burned down last summer—and, of course, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra will play . . . Philadelphia's beloved Robin Hood Dell concerts also begin this month . . . it is the Philadelphia Inquirer's Charity Festival, featuring among others the dePaur Infantry Chorus . . . The great Holland Festival starts June 15 . . . and now for some good record releases: RCA is issuing the first Bach Brandenburg Concerto by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, the "Pathetique," by the NBC Symphony under Toscanini, Beethoven's Quartet No. 5 in A by the Paganini Quartet, Sevitzky's arrangement, the Paraphrase on "Aida," by the Indianapolis Symphony, directed by him, Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," by Stokowski and a specially assembled orchestra, a Rogers and Hammerstein Waltz Medley—from "Oklahoma!" and other shows—by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler . . . among the Pop records you'll want to get "All The Things You Are" and "The [illegible] Made for Love," featuring Allan Jones with Robert [illegible]'s Band, and "Tuorn a surriento" and "Ai, Ai, A[illegible]" by James Melton with Frank Black's Orchestra. . . . Notes of special interest: This is the month Rudolph Bing takes over management of the old Met, and we know now that Kirsten Flagstad will be back where she belongs—on that great stage—and the mighty Melchior will not be there . . . there's a last-minute change) next season . . . Opera-in-the-round is something you'll be witnessing soon; they've tried it out in Warrensburg (N.Y.) and Cleveland, and found it fun.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
ITALIAN ECHO
7/14/50

DR. KOUSSEVITSKY VS. FOREIGNERS

You can never tell about an accent!

If you hear Serge Koussevitsky speak, you'd swear he was a Russian or, at least, of Russian descent.

Well, what do you know? He is a 110 per cent American! So much so that he's opposed to the hiring of a "foreigner," as guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival, the foreigner in this case being the Italian composer and conductor, De Sabata.

The Doctor says that, in effect, in America, music should be for Americans. Well that's another first. We always thought music was universal. The Metropolitan Opera Company should take heed of this or else they might go ahead with its program of Italian, French and German operas for next season. That would be unAmerican, wouldn't it Doctor?

Kpussevitsky is a very lucky man. Imagine if his music-for-Americans idea had been in effect when the Trustees of the Boston Symphony selected him as the orchestra's permanent conductor? At the time he was a foreigner from Russia and his principal competitor for the job was Alfredo Casella, a distinguished Italian composer and conductor. It was a close call because Casella had many friends and a far greater reputation. Perhaps the Doctor has been uneasy about Italians ever since.

Anyhow Dr. Koussevitsky is peeved at the selection of a foreigner. Fortunately he is retired and he can't threaten to quit the Boston Symphony. Do you suppose he will renounce his American citizenship and go back to Russia? That would certainly be carrying it too far.

Just stand in a corner and pout, Dr. Koussevitsky. But don't speak.....your accent you know.....

SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN
JUL 23 1950

The World Of Music

By United Press

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this Summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

Berkshire Music Center

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, their chairman, and the group will attend nearly forty musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music Center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends of the Center are a unique means of support for a school. The group is composed of persons who have enough interest in music and in Director Serge Koussevitzky's school to contribute financial support as they are able, and also to make up the audiences for the students who are thus given an opportunity to be heard by many music lovers at a stage in their development when most musicians have no audience.

This summer the Friends will again comprise the audience which will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, at it has in three previous summers. Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be given two performances by the Opera Department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced at the Center for Friends' audiences. Thirty-four other concerts and recitals will have been played for them before the end of the season in mid-August.

These will once again include a series of chamber music programs made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress with performances by Alexander Schneider, James Friskin, the Roth String Quartet, and the Ricci Trio.

It is the financial support of the Friends which makes possible their attendance at these events. Much of this support is in the form of modest contributions, but a growing number of full-tuition, $150 scholarships are being provided for the purpose of enabling young musicians to study under such noted personalities as Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Aaron Copland, and many others, including, of course, Dr. Koussevitzky. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory; total contributions by Friends amounted to $27,000, and more than 65,000 attended. The latter figure compares with an attendance of more than 110,000 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's nine Berkshire Festival concerts. Last weekend's opening Friends' events attracted 2800 persons.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body, 400 strong, at the Berkshire Music Center; they come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty; and they perform in orchestras, ensembles, and in three operas for those who endorse their efforts by joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in which a voluntary contribution constitutes membership.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 28 1950

8,800 at Music Festival As 16th Season is Opened

The Berkshire Music Festival opened its 16th season last night with an appreciative throng of 8,800 attending the first concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood.

Both at the opening and close of the program, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the orchestra, drew prolonged ovations from the audience which filled most of the reserve seats and boxes in the famed music shed, as well as spreading out over the lawns outside.

The first concert included Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Second symphony of Jan Sibelius, the same program with which Dr. Koussevitzky had closed the 1948 season.

Tonight's program will feature a concert by students from the Berkshire Music center, which wil include selections from Ravel, Gerald Kechley, a student at the center, and Bloch. Earlier, the students will stage a concert at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, marking the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Last night's attendance surpassed last year's opening throng of 8,500, and strengthened the belief that new records may be set this season.

RIVERSIDE, CAL.
PRESS

In the World of Music

20 Performances of Bach

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

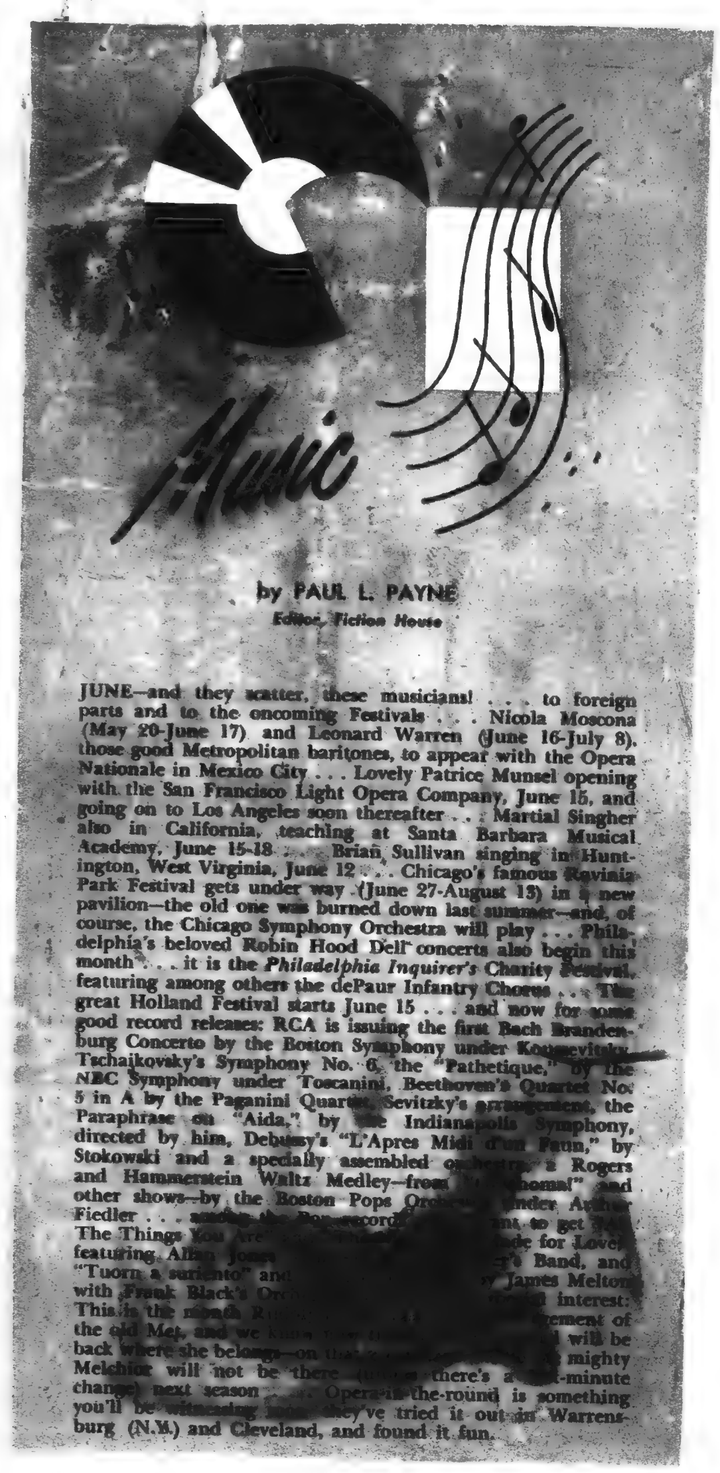
Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

The Philadelphia Orchestra announces the selection of prominent guest soloists for next season, in addition to soloists from the orchestra personnel. Guest pianists will include Rudolf Serkin, William Kapell, Menahem Pressler, Rudolf Firkusny, Agi Jambor, Solomon, Anna Xydis and Eugene List.

Violinists will be Zino Francescatti, Yehudi Menuhin, Nathan Milstein, Emil Telmanyi and Carroll Glenn. Astrid Varnay, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will be heard in a Wagnerian program.

The Sadler's Wells Ballet of London is almost assured of jammed houses for all its performances during a three-week engagement at New York's Metropolitan Opera House beginning Sept. 10. S. Hurok, who is bringing the company over for a repeat engagement and a tour of the United States and Canada, announced that $267,000 out of a possible capacity of $300,000 already has been sold at the Metropolitan, two months ahead of the engagement.

CHRYSLER EVENTS
DETROIT, MICH
JUNE, 1950



by PAUL L. PAYNE
Editor, Fiction House

JUNE—and they scatter, these musicians! . . . to foreign parts and to the oncoming Festivals . . . Nicola Moscona (May 20-June 17) and Leonard Warren (June 16-July 8), those good Metropolitan baritones, to appear with the Opera Nationale in Mexico City . . . Lovely Patrice Munsel opening with the San Francisco Light Opera Company, June 15, and going on to Los Angeles soon thereafter . . . Martial Singher also in California, teaching at Santa Barbara Musical Academy, June 15-18 . . . Brian Sullivan singing in Huntington, West Virginia, June 12 . . . Chicago's famous Ravinia Park Festival gets under way (June 27-August 13) in a new pavilion—the old one was burned down last summer—and, of course, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra will play . . . Philadelphia's beloved Robin Hood Dell concerts also begin this month . . . it is the Philadelphia Inquirer's Charity Festival, featuring among others the dePaur Infantry Chorus . . . The great Holland Festival starts June 15 . . . and now for some good record releases: RCA is issuing the first Bach Brandenburg Concerto by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, the "Pathetique," by the NBC Symphony under Toscanini, Beethoven's Quartet No. 5 in A by the Paganini Quartet, Sevitzky's arrangement, the Paraphrase on "Aida," by the Indianapolis Symphony, directed by him, Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," by Stokowski and a specially assembled orchestra a Rogers and Hammerstein Waltz Medley—from "Oklahoma!" and other shows—by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler . . . and the Boston Symphony recording [illegible] to get [illegible] The Things You Are [illegible] de for Lovers featuring Allan Jones [illegible] 's Band, and "Tuorn a surriento" and [illegible] James Melton with Frank Black's Orchestra [illegible] interest: This is the month R[illegible] rement of the old Met, and we [illegible] will be back where she belongs—on the [illegible] mighty Melchior will not be there [illegible] there's a last-minute change) next season . . . Opera-in-the-round is something you'll be witnessing [illegible] they've tried it out in Warrensburg (N.M.) and Cleveland, and found it fun.

SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN
JUL 23 1950

The World Of Music

By United Press

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this Summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 28 1950

8,800 at Music Festival As 16th Season is Opened

The Berkshire Music Festival opened its 16th season last night with an appreciative throng of 8,800 attending the first concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood.

Both at the opening and close of the program, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the orchestra, drew prolonged ovations from the audience which filled most of the reserve seats and boxes in the famed music shed, as well as spreading out over the lawns outside.

The first concert included Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Second symphony of Jan Sibelius, the same program with which Dr. Koussevitzky had closed the 1948 season.

Tonight's program will feature a concert by students from the Berkshire Music center, which wil include selections from Ravel, Gerald Kechley, a student at the center, and Bloch. Earlier, the students will stage a concert at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, marking the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Last night's attendance surpassed last year's opening throng of 8,500, and strengthened the belief that new records may be set this season.

RIVERSIDE, CAL.
PRESS

In the World of Music

20 Performances of Bach

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

The Philadelphia Orchestra announces the selection of prominent guest soloists for next season, in addition to soloists from the orchestra personnel. Guest pianists will include Rudolf Serkin, William Kapell, Menahem Pressler, Rudolf Firkusny, Agi Jambor, Solomon, Anna Xydis and Eugene List.

Violinists will be Zino Francescatti, Yehudi Menuhin, Nathan Milstein, Emil Telmanyi and Carroll Glenn. Astrid Varnay, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will be heard in a Wagnerian program.

The Sadler's Wells Ballet of London is almost assured of jammed houses for all its performances during a three-week engagement at New York's Metropolitan Opera House beginning Sept. 10. S. Hurok, who is bringing the company over for a repeat engagement and a tour of the United States and Canada, announced that $267,000 out of a possible capacity of $300,000 already has been sold at the Metropolitan, two months ahead of the engagement.

STAMFORD, CONN
NEWS
7/20/50

Berkshire Music Center

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, their chairman, and the group will attend nearly forty musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music Center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends of the Center are a unique means of support for a school. The group is composed of persons who have enough interest in music and in Director Serge Koussevitzky's school to contribute financial support as they are able, and also to make up the audiences for the students who are thus given an opportunity to be heard by many music lovers at a stage in their development when most musicians have no audience.

This summer the Friends will again comprise the audience which will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, at it has in three previous summers. Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be given two performances by the Opera Department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced at the Center for Friends' audiences. Thirty-four other concerts and recitals will have been played for them before the end of the season in mid-August.

These will once again include a series of chamber music programs made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress with performances by Alexander Schneider, James Friskin, the Roth String Quartet, and the Ricci Trio.

It is the financial support of the Friends which makes possible their attendance at these events. Much of this support is in the form of modest contributions, but a growing number of full-tuition, $150 scholarships are being provided for the purpose of enabling young musicians to study under such noted personalities as Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Aaron Copland, and many others, including, of course, Dr. Koussevitzky. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory; total contributions by Friends amounted to $27,000, and more than 65,000 attended. The latter figure compares with an attendance of more than 110,000 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's nine Berkshire Festival concerts. Last weekend's opening Friends' events attracted 2800 persons.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body, 400 strong, at the Berkshire Music Center; they come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty; and they perform in orchestras, ensembles, and in three operas for those who endorse their efforts by joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in which a voluntary contribution constitutes membership.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
ITALIAN ECHO
7/14/50

DR. KOUSSEVITSKY VS. FOREIGNERS

You can never tell about an accent!

If you hear Serge Koussevitsky speak, you'd swear he was a Russian or, at least, of Russian descent.

Well, what do you know? He is a 110 per cent American! So much so that he's opposed to the hiring of a "foreigner," as guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival, the foreigner in this case being the Italian composer and conductor, De Sabata.

The Doctor says that, in effect, in America, music should be for Americans. Well that's another first. We always thought music was universal. The Metropolitan Opera Company should take heed of this or else they might go ahead with its program of Italian, French and German operas for next season. That would be unAmerican, wouldn't it Doctor?

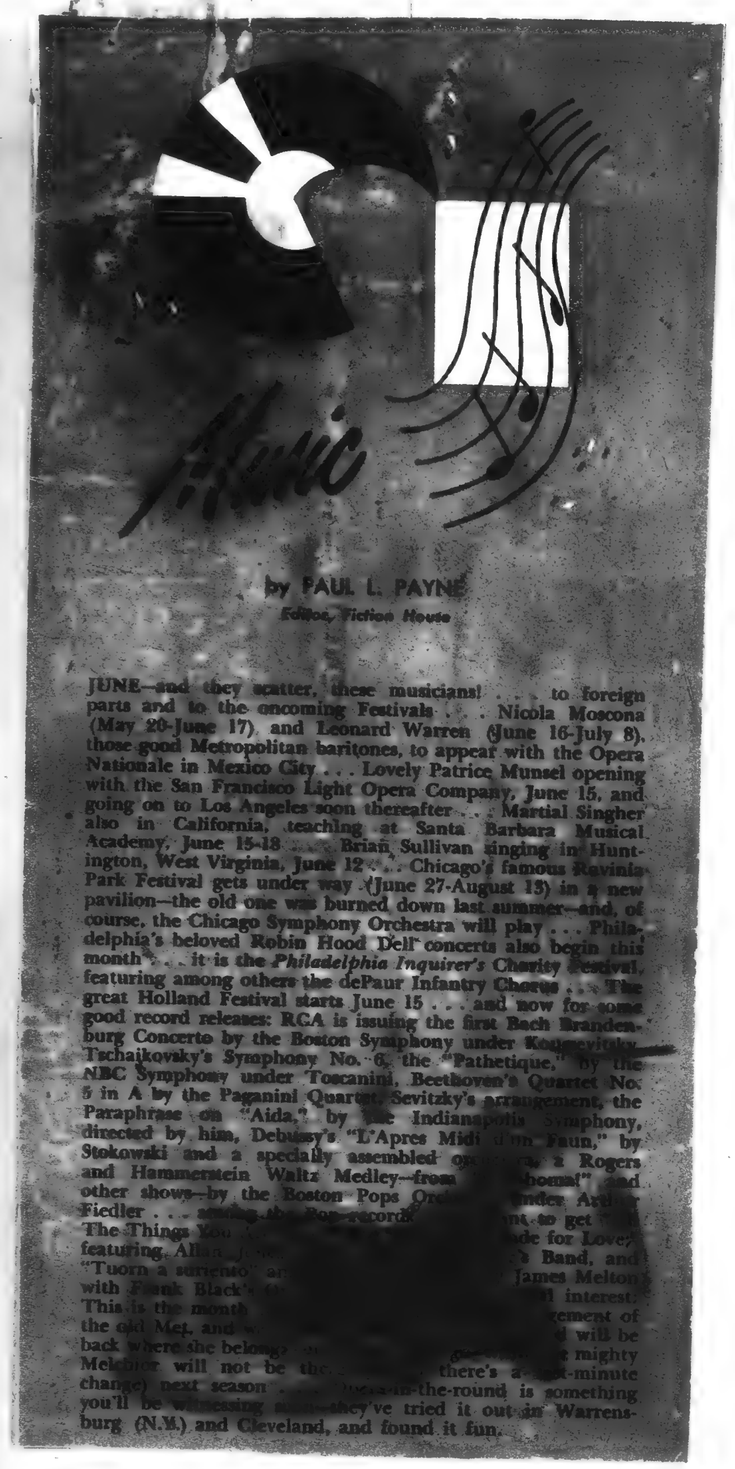
Kpussevitsky is a very lucky man. Imagine if his music-for-Americans idea had been in effect when the Trustees of the Boston Symphony selected him as the orchestra's permanent conductor? At the time he was a foreigner from Russia and his principal competitor for the job was Alfredo Casella, a distinguished Italian composer and conductor. It was a close call because Casella had many friends and a far greater reputation. Perhaps the Doctor has been uneasy about Italians ever since.

Anyhow Dr. Koussevitsky is peeved at the selection of a foreigner. Fortunately he is retired and he can't threaten to quit the Boston Symphony. Do you suppose he will renounce his American citizenship and go back to Russia? That would certainly be carrying it too far.

Just stand in a corner and pout, Dr. Koussevitsky. But don't speak.....your accent you know.....

[93]

CHRYSLER EVENTS
DETROIT, MICH
JUNE, 1950



by PAUL L. PAYNE
Editor, Fiction House

JUNE—and they scatter, these musicians! . . . to foreign parts and to the oncoming Festivals . . . Nicola Moscona (May 26-June 17) and Leonard Warren (June 16-July 8), those good Metropolitan baritones, to appear with the Opera Nationale in Mexico City . . . Lovely Patrice Munsel opening with the San Francisco Light Opera Company, June 15, and going on to Los Angeles soon thereafter . . . Martial Singher also in California, teaching at Santa Barbara Musical Academy, June 15-18 . . . Brian Sullivan singing in Huntington, West Virginia, June 12 . . . Chicago's famous Ravinia Park Festival gets under way (June 27-August 13) in a new pavilion—the old one was burned down last summer—and, of course, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra will play . . . Philadelphia's beloved Robin Hood Dell concerts also begin this month . . . it is the Philadelphia Inquirer's Charity Festival, featuring among others the dePaur Infantry Chorus . . . The great Holland Festival starts June 15 . . . and now for some good record releases: RCA is issuing the first Bach Brandenburg Concerto by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky . . . Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, the "Pathetique," by the NBC Symphony under Toscanini, Beethoven's Quartet No. 5 in A by the Paganini Quartet, Sevitzky's arrangement, the Paraphrase on "Aida," by the Indianapolis Symphony, directed by him, Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faun," by Stokowski and a specially assembled o[illegible] of Rogers and Hammerstein Waltz Medley—from [illegible]boma!" and other shows—by the Boston Pops Or[illegible] under Arthur Fiedler . . . [illegible] Pops records [illegible]nt to get "[illegible] The Things You [illegible]de for Love," featuring Al[illegible] [illegible]'s Band, and "Tuorn a surrento" [illegible] James Melton with Frank Black's [illegible]l interest: This is the month [illegible]gement of the old Met, and [illegible]d will be back where she belongs [illegible]t mighty Melchior will not be the [illegible] there's a [illegible]-minute change) next season [illegible]-the-round is something you'll be witnessing [illegible]they've tried it out in Warrensburg (N.M.) and Cleveland, and found it fun.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
ITALIAN ECHO
7/14/50

DR. KOUSSEVITSKY VS. FOREIGNERS

You can never tell about an accent!

If you hear Serge Koussevitsky speak, you'd swear he was a Russian or, at least, of Russian descent.

Well, what do you know? He is a 110 per cent American! So much so that he's opposed to the hiring of a "foreigner," as guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival, the foreigner in this case being the Italian composer and conductor, De Sabata.

The Doctor says that, in effect, in America, music should be for Americans. Well that's another first. We always thought music was universal. The Metropolitan Opera Company should take heed of this or else they might go ahead with its program of Italian, French and German operas for next season. That would be unAmerican, wouldn't it Doctor?

Kpussevitsky is a very lucky man. Imagine if his music-for-Americans idea had been in effect when the Trustees of the Boston Symphony selected him as the orchestra's permanent conductor? At the time he was a foreigner from Russia and his principal competitor for the job was Alfredo Casella, a distinguished Italian composer and conductor. It was a close call because Casella had many friends and a far greater reputation. Perhaps the Doctor has been uneasy about Italians ever since.

Anyhow Dr. Koussevitsky is peeved at the selection of a foreigner. Fortunately he is retired and he can't threaten to quit the Boston Symphony. Do you suppose he will renounce his American citizenship and go back to Russia? That would certainly be carrying it too far.

Just stand in a corner and pout, Dr. Koussevitsky. But don't speak.....your accent you know.....

SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN
JUL 23 1950

The World Of Music

By United Press

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this Summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
7/20/50

Berkshire Music Center

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitzky's music school this summer, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, their chairman, and the group will attend nearly forty musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible.

Just as the Berkshire Music Center is unique in that it is the only full-sized school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory, the Friends of the Center are a unique means of support for a school. The group is composed of persons who have enough interest in music and in Director Serge Koussevitzky's school to contribute financial support as they are able, and also to make up the audiences for the students who are thus given an opportunity to be heard by many music lovers at a stage in their development when most musicians have no audience.

This summer the Friends will again comprise the audience which will be the first to hear the American premiere of a modern European opera, at it has in three previous summers. Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be given two performances by the Opera Department under the direction of its acting head, Jan Popper. "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss and Mozart's "La Finta Giardiniera" also will be produced at the Center for Friends' audiences. Thirty-four other concerts and recitals will have been played for them before the end of the season in mid-August.

These will once again include a series of chamber music programs made possible by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress with performances by Alexander Schneider, James Friskin, the Roth String Quartet, and the Ricci Trio.

It is the financial support of the Friends which makes possible their attendance at these events. Much of this support is in the form of modest contributions, but a growing number of full-tuition, $150 scholarships are being provided for the purpose of enabling young musicians to study under such noted personalities as Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Aaron Copland, and many others, including, of course, Dr. Koussevitzky. Last year, the Friends were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory; total contributions by Friends amounted to $27,000, and more than 65,000 attended. The latter figure compares with an attendance of more than 110,000 at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's nine Berkshire Festival concerts. Last weekend's opening Friends' events attracted 2800 persons.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body, 400 strong, at the Berkshire Music Center; they come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty; and they perform in orchestras, ensembles, and in three operas for those who endorse their efforts by joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in which a voluntary contribution constitutes membership.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 28 1950

8,800 at Music Festival As 16th Season is Opened

The Berkshire Music Festival opened its 16th season last night with an appreciative throng of 8,800 attending the first concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood.

Both at the opening and close of the program, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted the orchestra, drew prolonged ovations from the audience which filled most of the reserve seats and boxes in the famed music shed, as well as spreading out over the lawns outside.

The first concert included Beethoven's "Eroica" and the Second symphony of Jan Sibelius, the same program with which Dr. Koussevitzky had closed the 1948 season.

Tonight's program will feature a concert by students from the Berkshire Music center, which wil include selections from Ravel, Gerald Kechley, a student at the center, and Bloch. Earlier, the students will stage a concert at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, marking the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Last night's attendance surpassed last year's opening throng of 8,500, and strengthened the belief that new records may be set this season.

RIVERSIDE, CAL.
PRESS
JUL 17 1950

In the World of Music

20 Performances of Bach

A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, arranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

The Philadelphia Orchestra announces the selection of prominent guest soloists for next season, in addition to soloists from the orchestra personnel. Guest pianists will include Rudolf Serkin, William Kapell, Menahem Pressler, Rudolf Firkusny, Agi Jambor, Solomon, Anna Xydis and Eugene List.

Violinists will be Zino Francescatti, Yehudi Menuhin, Nathan Milstein, Emil Telmanyi and Carroll Glenn. Astrid Varnay, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will be heard in a Wagnerian program.

The Sadler's Wells Ballet of London is almost assured of jammed houses for all its performances during a three-week engagement at New York's Metropolitan Opera House beginning Sept. 10. S. Hurok, who is bringing the company over for a repeat engagement and a tour of the United States and Canada, announced that $267,000 out of a possible capacity of $300,000 already has been sold at the Metropolitan, two months ahead of the engagement.

[83]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION-REPUBLICAN

CHARM OF MOZART DELIGHTS THRONG AT TANGLEWOOD

Record Crowd of 6000 Hears Boston Symphony Concert

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 22—The charm of Mozart held sway at the Tanglewood concert given tonight by members of the Boston Symphony under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Old favorites heard previously in this setting made up most of the program, but under the magic hand of Dr. Koussevitzky there was a festive joyousness in the four movements of the Haffner Serenade, which opened the program, and an engaging freshness in the perennial "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" played after the intermission.

The "Haffner" reached the proportions of a violin concerto with its cadenzas in the second and final movements. Richard Burgin's delicate tone and refined style so perfectly suited to the music of Mozart enhanced the solo passages with subtlety both elegant and expressive. Appealing and in the best Mozartian vein was the tonal beauty of the andante. There was substance in the short but meaningful, minor-hued menuetto, and an infectious rhythm and a breezy virtuosity in the fast triplet figuration of the finale. It was one of the most delightful numbers of the evening.

Lukas Foss was the soloist in the piano concerto in C major. This young pianist, whose solo appearances were outstanding highlights of the Bach series, must surely be rated as one of the most musicianly and sensitive of contemporary pianists. The same admirable qualities exidenced in his solo appearance with our own symphony last season were to the fore again, namely that of identifying himself completely with the music. Yet withal, his playing is backed up with a personal drive that carries force and conviction. Technical clarity beauty of phrase line, a singing tone and a pulsating rhythmical lift, plus a touch of personal magic all went to give this enchanting work the breath of life.

The concert closed with an exceptionally brilliant performance of the vigorous symphony in C Major No. 34. Direct and immediate in appeal, this colorful, dynamic work represents another of the composer's happier efforts. The folksy element of its lively finale and the spirited manner in which it was delivered aroused the audience to a prolonged demonstration of approval.

In the choice and contrast of compositions, length, and finesse of performance, it was quite a perfect concert. It attracted an audience of some 6000, a record attendance for any concert ever given in the concert hall.

WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES
JUL 25 1950

MUSIC MENTION

Amateurs Will Perform World Premieres of Two Works at N. E. Festival

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.—Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music Center will perform the world premieres of two works at concerts on July 24 and Aug. 7 this summer. Howard Shanet, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and conductor of the 50-piece orchestra of department five, said that both works had been written for presentation by his group.

Unlike the principal student orchestra at Tanglewood, which gives weekly concerts and is composed of highly-trained musicians, Mr. Shanet's orchestra includes many who are only incidentally involved in symphonic music. It was formed to give less-advanced students at the school a chance to play under the direction without the pressure of public performance. In the group are a pianist playing cello, an organist playing violin, an automobile salesman, six schoolteachers, three college students, and others who play more for fun than for fame or career advancement.

Three from Havana

A sample of the spirit of this orchestra, however, is apparent from the fact that three members of the violin section of the Havana Philharmonic Orchestra asked to play in it, rather than in the more professional orchestra here. These three decided to study at Tanglewood after a meeting with Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Shanet, when the former's tour brought them to Cuba. Though their main purpose in coming was to study chamber music at Tanglewood, under the tutelage of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they volunteered for Mr. Shanet's group when the latter came to need more strings. Because of a similar shortage of topnotch violas in the principal student orchestra, the fourth Havana Philharmonic player was not able to make the same transfer.

The first concert by this student orchestra will be performed at Tanglewood on July 24, and will feature the first performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." Manfred Hecht, who will sing the title role in Jacques Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot" at Tanglewood a week later, will be the baritone. The Moussorgsky text was translated from the Russian by Maria de Pasquale, niece of Dr. Koussevitzky, and by Alfred Weiss, a student in the libretto-writing department. Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Douglas Moore's Symphony in A will round out the program. Mr Moore, a professor at Columbia University, has been invited to attend, and is expected to be present.

"Music for Strings"

The concert on Aug. 7, again under Howard Shanet's direction, will feature "Music for Strings," by Manuel Mahler - Kalkstein. This piece was earmarked for a Tanglewood unveiling by its Israeli composer last year. Handel's Royal Fireworks Music, Hindemith's Morning Music, a toccata by Bonelli, and Brahms' Second Symphony will complete the program.

These two concerts, as are all events at Tanglewood, are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and will be held in the Music Shed in the afternoons at 4:30, on July 24 and Aug. 7.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 24 1950

Weekend Attendanc. Record Shattered At Tanglewood

The unforgettable music of Mozart, interpreted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and a group of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians, drew a record attendance yesterday to the Tanglewood music shed and lawns at Lenox.

The final in the series of six Bach-Mozart concerts was heard by 5700 music lovers. Combined with the record attendance of 6000 Saturday evening, the weekend audience total of 11,700 shattered the previous high mark of 9500 established one weekend last year.

The total attendance for this particular series of concerts was 23,000 as compared to 17,000 last year, then a record.

Yesterday's closing program included the rarely heard symphony in B-flat by Mozart and featured Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, who have performed for the Springfield Symphony, as the duo pianists in Mozart's concerto in E-flat major.

The mass of concert-goers on the lawn in front of the music shed presented a picture reminiscent of Coney Island on a Sunday afteroon. Dress ran the gamut from strapless gowns to beach attire. Newest addition to the motley crowd was a playpen, occupied by a baby and guarded by a young mother who knitted thruout the concert.

On Thursday evening, the main concerts will begin in the music shed. The 1950 festival will be opened by a Beethoven-Sibelius program played by the full Boston Symphony under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

BRIDGEHAMPTON, N.Y
NEWS
7/28/50

People and Places

By

Leighton Rollins

Lenox, in the Berkshire Highland of northern Massachusetts, abou equally distant from New York an Boston, is in a holiday mood. Fron all over America and Europe de voted followers of music are con verging upon the hill towns of Len ox and Stockbridge.

The Berkshire Festival has jus had its first concerts of its 1950 sea son, which extends past the middl of August. Dr. Koussevitzky ha brought to them a spirit which re flects the brilliant life-giving sun shine of Arizona. Each year the Fes tival commences with two concert devoted to the music of Johann Se bastian Bach and two concerts on t Saturday evening and Sunday after noon devoted to the music of Wolf gang Amadeus Mozart. The week end past the enraptured throng have learned something of the eter nal spirit of Bach and something o the exciting spirit of disciplined youth under the guiding and stimu lating direction of Dr. Koussevitzky and Aaron Copland, Assistant Director of the Berkshire Music Center, which is the music school associated with the Festival at its magnificent "Tanglewood" estate.

On Friday evening of this opening week-end of the Festival season, one of the two student orchestras of 100 young men and women gave an enthusiastically applauded concert in the great music shed, which seats 6000 within its pie shaped auditorium and 6000 outside on its vast lawn bordered by elms and sky-touching pine trees.

As in past seasons the orchestra is led by a series of young conductors, most of whom are studying the conductors art under Dr. Koussevitzky. Irwin Hoofman, who has been at Lenox for several summers gave a spirited reading of Copland's El Salon Mexico. The programme was concluded with Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Opus 38. Lukas Foss, pianist for the Boston Symphony and well known composer, (his "The Song of Songs" for voice and orchestra well be played by the Boston Symphony on July 30th., conducted by Leonard Bernstein), conducted this brilliant young orchestra with zest and elan. These symphonic concerts given on Friday evenings, each summer by two student orchestras, each numbering a 100 each, have the rare quality of stirring the audience to a special kind of applause which shows beyond any question that it appreciated the spirit that trained and disciplined youth has to offer as its visa to future success and recognition.

On the next afternoon the music shed was filled again by an audience which had assembled to hear one of Americas great organists, E. Power Biggs, in a recital of organ music by Bach. To the uninvited accompaniment of the jubilant chirping of an overgrown sparrow, perched high in the girders over our heads. Biggs played with memorable distinction the six so called Schubler Chorale Preludes, named for the publisher who first issued them beginning with the familiar "Sleepers Wake" and concluding with "Comest Thou Now, Jesu, from Heaven Above". Biggs completed his recital with the heart-shaking Toccatta in F Major.

All over the world, which we continue to call civilized,musicians are honoring the memory of Bach, on the anniversary of his death. His son Phillipps Emanuel Bach, recorded it. "He died on July 28th. of the year of Grace 1750."

When Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts devoted to Bach, which brought to an end the first week of the Festival, I had a feeling he did it with the same quiet and sublime spirit of trust and faith which moved Bach to request that the name of a choral he was dictating be changed. Bach was old and he was blind. He was dictating a choral for the organ to his son-in-law. He had first chosen the title, "When In the Hour of Utmost Need," but as he proceeded with this composition he felt that death had come for him. He then asked that the title be changed to "Before Thy Throne, My God, I Stand".

The Berkshire Festival audiences are brought to-gether in a common spirit of ready and heady enthusiasm for the concerts they have come to hear. As a consequence the applause is tremendous. Wave on wave of mounting sound, punctuated by a powerful choir shouting "Bravo". The bravos echo from the shores of the Stockbridge Bowl and down the green hills which rise above the Festival grounds, known as "Tanglewood", where incidentally Hawthorne first told "The Tanglewood Tales" to his children.

Near-by almost across the street from the entrance to "Tanglewood" is Hawthorne Hill, an Inn which is more like a club. At the top of the hill going into the village is the Curtis Hotel, which has been serving satisfied customers for over a hundred years, and The Village Inn, a modest hotel patronized by a discriminating clientele, and on the old Stockbridge Road is Elm Court. Elm Court is a fabulous hotel which was until recently the country residence of Mrs. Henry White, whose husband was our Ambasasdor to The Court of St. James. Magnificent rooms open out onto equally magnificent lawns and gardens.

This is the time of the year when the residents of Berkshire County begin to wear a glazed look in their eyes. And no wonder! In the next three weeks the following public events are listed: 27 concerts and 3 operas at the Festival, 3 plays at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, including the try-out of "Once An Actor", by Rosemary Casey with Leo Carroll, and 9 performances of Ballet. If your feet, head and eyes havn't given out, there are also a series of modern movies at the Berkshire Museum!

WESTCHESTER, PA.
LOCAL NEWS
JUL 27 1950

BACH MUSIC BEING PRESENTED AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

New York, July 27 (U.P.)—A wealth of music by Johann Sebastian Bach is being presented at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the composer's death, 61 of his works are scheduled in 20 events. The performances will continue almost daily until Aug. 10, when the Mass in B Minor will be given. It is one of two full-length program pieces included in the series, the other being the monumental Art of Fugue, aranged for string quartet.

In addition to performances by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, which will play the six Brandenburg concertos and all four of the Bach orchestra suites, concerts will be given by the faculty and student body of the Berkshire Music Center; the Roth String Quartet; by James Friskin, pianist, and Alexander Schneider, violinist.

Another presentation of Bach's music, including cantatas and orchestral works, is planned for next season at Town Hall in New York by the Bach Aria Group and the Saidenberg Little Symphony. Four concerts will be given, one a month during October, November, December and January.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

Huge Audience Attends Opening At Tanglewood

An appreciative and enthusiastic audience of nearly 9,000 attended the opening of the Berkshire Festival last night at Tanglewood.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, that fountain of energy, conducted the Boston Symphon orchestra in Beethoven's Eroica and the Second Symphony of Jan Sibelius. Koussevitzky chose to open the festival with the Beethoven selection and its presentation was magnificent.

The conductor and orchestra received a tremendous ovation after "Eroica", which was interpreted brilliantly.

The concert was a virtual sell-out and hundreds of music lovers reclined on the spacious lawns to hear the music of the masters. It was a comfortably cool summer evening and a full moon added magic to the scene.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
JUL 28 1950

Members U. N. Secretariat Are Guests at Tanglewood

Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week end to fifty members of the U. N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group. Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

This week end, the first of the three major Berkshire Festival concert weekends, the group from Lake Success, including Secretariat members from many nations, will hear two of the Shed concerts as guests of Tanglewood. Their hosts over the week end will be Berkshire County residents, who will take the visitors into their homes. Local arrangements have been made under the supervision of K. K. Paluev of Pittsfield, chairman of the Workshop for World Understanding. According to Mr. Paluev, the U. N. group will include two of the Assistant Secretaries General.

The arrival of Mrs. Roosevelt at Tanglewood next week will crystallize final plans for the months-old idea of having her as narrator in the popular Prokofieff work, subtitled "A Musical Fairy Tale for Children".

"Tanglewood on Parade" also will feature performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony and Dvorak's Symphony, "From the New World". Tickets to the program are seperate from Festival presentations, and are available now at the Tanglewood box office. Purchasers of tickets also will be able to visit the activities of the five departments of the Berkshire Music Center, the music school founded by Dr. Koussevitsky, during the afternoon. Door prizes and waltzing on the lawn will also be a part of the program. Because of the hours—from six until eleven in the evening—many groups bring picnic suppers, and in past years there has always been a distinguished list of box-holders for the event.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 28

Conducts Concerts At Tanglewood Twice Next Week

Victor de Sabata

Attending the concerts this weekend at Tanglewood is Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor, who is making his first visit to the Berkshire Music Festival. He will conduct concerts next Thursday and Saturday.

Selection of the Italian conductor by the board of trustees of the festival brought sharp criticism from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, who has fostered American musicianship.

The program on Thursday, conducted by de Sabata, will include Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra, and Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde."

On the following Saturday the Boston Symphony will perform Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 39; Berlioz's Overture to "The Roman Carnival"; Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

The shed concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. The program includes Ravel's Piano Concerto; Mother Goose Suite and Alborada del Gracioso; excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

Koussevitzky will conduct on Aug. 10 and 13 and Eleazar de Carvalho on Aug. 12.

Thursday and Saturday concerts are held in the music shed at 8.15 p. m. and at 3 p. m. on Sundays. General admission tickets are sold on the grounds.

TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
JUL 30 1950

Two Premieres At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 29.—Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music center programmed world premieres of two works at July and August concerts. Howard Shanet, assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and conductor of the 50-piece orchestra of Department Five, said that both works had been written for presentation by his group.

Unlike the principal student orchestra at Tanglewood, which gives weekly concerts and is composed of highly-trained musicians, Shanet's orchestra includes many who are only incidentally involved in symphonic music. It was formed to give less-advanced students at the school a chance to play under direction without the pressure of public performance. In the group are a pianist playing cello, an organist playing violin, an automobile salesman, six schoolteachers, three college students, and others who play more for fun than for fame or career advancement.

The first concert by this student orchestra was performed at Tanglewood July 24, and featured the first performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." Manfred Hecht was the baritone. The Moussorgsky text was translated from the Russian by Maria de Pasquale, niece of Dr. Koussovitsky, and by Alfred Weiss, a student in the libretto-writing department.

The concert Aug. 7, again under Howard Shanet's direction, will feature "Music for Strings" by Manuel Mahler - Kalkstein. This piece was earmarked for a Tanglewood unveiling by its Israeli composer last year.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 31 1950

De Sabata Next For Tanglewood

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 30.—Victor de Sabata will conduct the Boston Symphony Thursday and Saturday of the week end Berkshire Festical concerts. He will be followed on next Sunday's concert by Leonard Bernstein, who also conducted this past Sunday. Subsequently Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium Aug. 10 and 13 and Eleazar de Carvalho Aug. 12.

De Sabata's Thursday program will include works by Brahms, Schubert, and Wagner, in addition to Morton Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra. Saturday he will conduct Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante" and works by Bach, Mozart, Berlioz, and Beethoven.

Mr. Bernstein will double as conductor and soloist for the Ravel Piano Concerto, and will conduct the orchestra in works by Ravel and Berlioz.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 29 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt to Act As Narrator in Tanglewood's 'Peter'

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 29—Berkshire county and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week-end to 50 members of the U.N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week. as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

This week-end, the first of the three major Berkshire Festival concert week-ends, the group from Lake Success, including Secretariat members from many nations, will hear two of the Shed concerts as guests of Tanglewood. Their hosts over the week-end will be Berkshire county residents, who will take the visitors into their homes. Local arrangements have been made under the supervision of K. K. Paluev of Pittsfield, chairman of the Workshop for World Understanding. According to Mr. Paluev, the U. N. group will include two of the Assistant Secretaries General.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 29 1950

Koussevitzky to Lead Orchestra Tonight

Guest Conductor Bernstein to Direct Tanglewood Concert Tomorrow.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra at the concert to be presented this evening at 8:15 o'clock in the Shed at Tanglewood, while Guest Conductor Leonard Bernstein will direct the orchestra at the concert tomorrow afternoon at 3.

The fourth concert of chamber music by members of Department 2 at the Berkshire Music center there will be presented by the students tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in Chamber Music hall.

The program this evening will include Bruckner's "Symphony No. 2," with Debussy's "Two Nocturnes" and "La Mer." The program tomorrow will feature Diamond's "Timon of Athens," Foss' "The Song of Songs (Ellabelle Davis), and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 31 1950

9500 Music Lovers At Tanglewood Concert Sunday

A brief thunderstorm gave an audience of 9500 some uneasy moments at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon and delayed the start of the program by five minutes.

Most of the concert-goers who thronged the lawn remained to hear Leonard Bernstein conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in new works by three American composers and Brahms' First Symphony.

The program included the adagio from Shapiro's "Symphony for Classical Orchestra" written in 1947, David Diamond's "Timon of Athens," and "Song of Songs," by Lukas Foss. Both Diamond and Foss were in the audience.

Also in the audience was the Italian conductor, Victor de Sabata who will conduct the concert Thursday night.

Special guests at the afternoon program were 50 members of the United Nations Secretariat who were entertained in Lenox over the week-end by Dr. Serge Koussevisky and the Friends of the Berkshire Festival. Another group of guests comprised foreign engineers from 25 countries who are studying at Massachusetts Institute of Technology as part of a summer project.

One of the Sunday patrons in the shed left the concert in a huff, tearing his ticket to shreds as he stormed toward the public relations department to file a complaint over the fact that the concert was not opened with the "Star Spangled Banner."

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 30 1950

U.N. Secretariat Tanglewood Guests

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 29.—Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week end to fifty members of the U.N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center.

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG - 1950

TURGENEV, IVAN SERGEEVICH. Borzoi Turgenev; tr. from the Russian by Harry Stevens; foreword by Serge Koussevitzky; introd. by Avrahm Yarmolinsky. Knopf $4.95

A collection of seven of Turgenev's works, all newly translated. Contents: Smoke; Fathers and sons; First love; On the eve; Rudin; A quiet spot (the backwater); The diary of a superfluous man.

Chicago Sun p22 Ap 23 '50 150w
Kirkus 18:45 Ja 15 '50 180w

"The new translation is said to be closer to the original than some of the earlier translations were. Of this I am not a competent judge, but this is good English. The selection is excellent and the Turgenev here presented is Turgenev at his best."

+ N Y Herald Tribune Bk R p25 Mr 26 '50 240w

"The present edition does not include Turgenev's most robust work, 'A Sportsman's Sketches.' . . So that excellently as Mr. Stevens' new translations read (except for a few jarring literalisms), the effect of this edition is to point up Turgenev's melancholy, his lack of inventive power, and even the curious suggestion he sometimes gives of some deep inertia inside himself." Alfred Kazin

N Y Times p5 Mr 12 '50 1400w
New Yorker 26:126 Ap 22 '50 120w

Reviewed by E. J. Simmons
Sat R of Lit 33:18 Je 3 '50 650w

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
JUL 28 1950

Members U. N. Secretariat Are Guests at Tanglewood

Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week-end to fifty members of the U. N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group. Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

This week end, the first of the three major Berkshire Festival concert weekends, the group from Lake Success, including Secretariat members from many nations, will hear two of the Shed concerts as guests of Tanglewood. Their hosts over the week end will be Berkshire County residents, who will take the visitors into their homes. Local arrangements have been made under the supervision of K. K. Paluev of Pittsfield, chairman of the Workshop for World Understanding. According to Mr. Paluev, the U. N. group will include two of the Assistant Secretaries General.

The arrival of Mrs. Roosevelt at Tanglewood next week will crystallize final plans for the months-old idea of having her be narrator in the popular Prokofieff work, subtitled "A Musical Fairy Tale for Children".

"Tanglewood on Parade" also will feature performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony and Dvorak's Symphony, "From the New World". Tickets to the program are seperate from Festival presentations, and are available now at the Tanglewood box office. Purchasers of tickets also will be able to visit the activities of the five departments of the Berkshire Music Center, the music school founded by Dr. Koussevitsky, during the afternoon. Door prizes and waltzing on the lawn will also be a part of the program. Because of the hours—from six until eleven in the evening—many groups bring picnic suppers, and in past years there has always been a distinguished list of box-holders for the event.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
JUL 28

Conducts Concerts At Tanglewood Twice Next Week

Victor de Sabata

Attending the concerts this weekend at Tanglewood is Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor, who is making his first visit to the Berkshire Music Festival. He will conduct concerts next Thursday and Saturday.

Selection of the Italian conductor by the board of trustees of the festival brought sharp criticism from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, who has fostered American musicianship.

The program on Thursday, conducted by de Sabata, will include Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra, and Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan and Isolde."

On the following Saturday the Boston Symphony will perform Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E-flat Major, No. 39; Berlioz's Overture to "The Roman Carnival"; Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

The shed concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. The program includes Ravel's Piano Concerto; Mother Goose Suite and Alborada del Gracioso; excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet."

Koussevitzky will conduct on Aug. 10 and 13 and Eleazar de Carvalho on Aug. 12.

Thursday and Saturday concerts are held in the music shed at 8.15 p. m. and at 3 p. m. on Sundays. General admission tickets are sold on the grounds.

TACOMA, WASH.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
JUL 30 1950

Two Premieres At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 29.—Amateur musicians at the Berkshire Music center programmed world premieres of two works at July and August concerts. Howard Shanet, assistant to Dr. [illegible] and conductor of the 50-piece orchestra of Department Five, said that both works had been written for presentation by his group.

Unlike the principal student orchestra at Tanglewood, which gives weekly concerts and is composed of highly-trained musicians, Shanet's orchestra includes many who are only incidentally involved in symphonic music. It was formed to give less-advanced students at the school a chance to play under direction without the pressure of public performance. In the group are a pianist playing cello, an organist playing violin, an automobile salesman, six schoolteachers, three college students, and others who play more for fun than for fame or career advancement.

The first concert by this student orchestra was performed at Tanglewood July 24, and featured the first performance of Eric Simon's version for voice and orchestra of Moussorgsky's "Songs and Dances of Death." Manfred Hecht was the baritone. The Moussorgsky text was translated from the Russian by Maria de Pasquale, niece of Dr. Koussovitsky, and by Alfred Weiss, a student in the libretto-writing department.

The concert Aug. 7, again under Howard Shanet's direction, will feature "Music for Strings" by Manuel Mahler - Kalkstein. This piece was earmarked for a Tanglewood unveiling by its Israeli composer last year.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 31 1950

De Sabata Next For Tanglewood

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 30.—Victor de Sabata will conduct the Boston Symphony Thursday and Saturday of the week end Berkshire Festical concerts. He will be followed on next Sunday's concert by Leonard Bernstein, who also conducted this past Sunday. Subsequently Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium Aug. 10 and 13 and Eleazar de Carvalho Aug. 12.

De Sabata's Thursday program will include works by Brahms, Schubert, and Wagner, in addition to Morton Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra. Saturday he will conduct Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante" and works by Bach, Mozart, Berlioz, and Beethoven.

Mr. Bernstein will double as conductor and soloist for the Ravel Piano Concerto, and will conduct the orchestra in works by Ravel and Berlioz.

KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
JUL 29 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt to Act As Narrator in Tanglewood's 'Peter'

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 29—Berkshire county and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week-end to 50 members of the U.N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week, as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. The two will spend some time in discussing the former First Lady's role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

This week-end, the first of the three major Berkshire Festival concert week-ends, the group from Lake Success, including Secretariat members from many nations, will hear two of the Shed concerts as guests of Tanglewood. Their hosts over the week-end will be Berkshire county residents, who will take the visitors into their homes. Local arrangements have been made under the supervision of K. K. Paluev of Pittsfield, chairman of the Workshop for World Understanding. According to Mr. Paluev, the U. N. group will include two of the Assistant Secretaries General.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 29 1950

Koussevitzky to Lead Orchestra Tonight

Guest Conductor Bernstein to Direct Tanglewood Concert Tomorrow.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra at the concert to be presented this evening at 8:15 o'clock in the Shed at Tanglewood, while Guest Conductor Leonard Bernstein will direct the orchestra at the concert tomorrow afternoon at 3.

The fourth concert of chamber music by members of Department 2 at the Berkshire Music center there will be presented by the students tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in Chamber Music hall.

The program this evening will include Bruckner's "Symphony No. 2," with Debussy's "Two Nocturnes" and "La Mer." The program tomorrow will feature Diamond's "Timon of Athens," Foss' "The Song of Songs (Ellabelle Davis), and Brahms' "Symphony No. 2."

9500 Music Lovers At Tanglewood Concert Sunday

A brief thunderstorm gave an audience of 9500 some uneasy moments at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon and delayed the start of the program by five minutes.

Most of the concert-goers who thronged the lawn remained to hear Leonard Bernstein conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in new works by [illegible] composers and Brahms' First Symphony.

The program included the adagio from Shapiro's "Symphony for Classical Orchestra" written in 1947, David Diamond's "Timon of Athens," and "Song of Songs," by Lukas Foss. Both Diamond and Foss were in the audience.

Also in the audience was the Italian conductor, Victor de Sabata who will conduct the concert Thursday night.

Special guests at the afternoon program were 50 members of the United Nations Secretariat who were entertained in Lenox over the week-end by Dr. Serge Koussevisky and the Friends of the Berkshire Festival. Another group of guests comprised foreign engineers from 25 countries who are studying at Massachusetts Institute of Technology as part of a summer project.

One of the Sunday patrons in the shed left the concert in a huff, tearing his ticket to shreds as he stormed toward the public relations department to file a complaint over the fact that the concert was not opened with the "Star Spangled Banner."

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 30 1950

U.N. Secretariat Tanglewood Guests

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 29.—Berkshire County and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play host this week end to fifty members of the U.N. Secretariat, as a result of a request for such arrangements made last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, United States delegate to the world group.

Mrs. Roosevelt herself will be at Tanglewood next week as the guest of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berk[illegible] Center.

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG - 1950

TURGENEV, IVAN SERGEEVICH. Borzoi Turgenev; tr. from the Russian by Harry Stevens; foreword by Serge Koussevitzky; introd. by Avrahm Yarmolinsky. [illegible] $4.95 Knopf

A collection of seven of Turgenev's works, all newly translated. Contents: Smoke; Fathers and sons; First love; On the eve; Rudin; A quiet spot (the backwater); The diary of a superfluous man.

Chicago Sun p22 Ap 23 '50 150w
Kirkus 18:45 Ja 15 '50 130w

"The new translation is said to be closer to the original than some of the earlier translations were. Of this I am not a competent judge, but this is good English. The selection is excellent and the Turgenev here presented is Turgenev at his best."
+ N Y Herald Tribune Bk R p25 Mr 26 '50 240w

"The present edition does not include Turgenev's most robust work, 'A Sportsman's Sketches.' So that excellently as Mr. Stevens' new translations read (except for a few jarring literalisms), the effect of this edition is to point up Turgenev's melancholy, his lack of inventive power, and even the curious suggestion he sometimes gives of some deep inertia inside himself." Alfred Kazin
N Y Times p5 Mr 12 '50 1400w
New Yorker 26:126 Ap 22 '50 120w

Reviewed by E. J. Simmons
Sat R of Lit 33:18 Je 3 '50 650w

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Foss Cantata Wins Ovation In Tanglewood Offering

COMPOSER LUKAS FOSS (left) is called to the platform at Tanglewood to receive ovation following performance of his Biblical Cantata "The Song of Songs" for orchestra and solo soprano, Ellabelle Davis (center), under direction of Leonard Bernstein (right).

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.— Leonard Bernstein, favored disciple of Koussevitzky, took over the podium at Tanglewood Sunday and interpreted three works by composers living "here and now."

All three, Lukas Foss, Harold Shapero and David Diamond, were present and received deserved recognition. For Shapero and Diamond the response was cordial; Foss was acclaimed. It was insisted that he go to the platform, and there he received resounding congratulations along with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and with Bernstein. There could have been no better proof that the public quickly recognizes the composer who has something to say and says it effectively.

It was the solo cantata of Foss, "The Song of Songs" for voice and orchestra which really lifted the audience out of a humid, threatening Sunday afternoon atmosphere to cheer for the artist whose hand Bernstein devoutly kissed at the conclusion of her interpretation of the Biblical settings.

* * *

SHAPERO'S composition was the victim of ambiguous titling. Designated in the first instance as Classic Symphony (for Classical Orchestra)," the notes referred simply to a "Symphony for Classical Orchestra." Thus seeming the slow movement of a short work, it actually was long enough and tedious enough to be a complete one-movement symphony, so I judge that is what it was.

The program book reported that Shapero had the "benefits of distinguished instruction: Boulanger, Hindemith, Krenek, Slonimsky, Stravinsky, Piston and Copland." His work sounded as though he had too many teachers—labored and unoriginal.

There isn't much more to be said for Diamond's "Timon of Athens" except that it contains the most excruciating, deliberately discordant I have ever heard as Bernstein executed with tremendous crescendo.

The quiet conciliatory episode that followed was not enough to convince one that Timon was any the better understood for the symphonic experience.

ELLABELLE DAVIS has a beautiful voice, firm and even in texture, sweet, musical and implemented by a fine intelligence.

The Foss work is plausible in its references to voluptuous psalmody. The first song is antique in thematic and harmonic material; the second delightfully lissome and lilting; the third grippingly dramatic, affording opportunities for Miss Davis' darker tones. The composer gave her some bristling orchestral barriers to overcome and he also authored some writing for horns which was anything but idiomatic. Condensation would improve the cantata which is long.

Bernstein, who excels in modern interpretations, threw in for good measure the Brahms E minor Symphony, a reliable repertory item in which he confirmed the Koussevitzky tutelage.

In some respects he has gained maturity. If he hasn't the same tailor as Koussevitzky he has one just as good. His newly acquired foible of shooting the jeweled cuff will remind old-timers of Nikisch.

* * *

Saturday's Concert

Leave it to Koussevitzky to make program-mates of Bruckner and Debussy. What a pair!

The first a withdrawn, dedicated Catholic, who in his child-like simplicity occasionally found an aperture to Heaven, as in the slow movement of the hour-long Seventh Symphony; the other an urbane decadent, who painted the two nocturnes and "The Sea" with a cynical, phosphorescent impressionism — Bruckner in retreat from terrestrial realism; Debussy escaped into illusion.

It was about as antithetical as the fact that both Fritz Kreisler and Benny Goodman (individually) were seen among the 9,900 persons attracted to Tanglewood Saturday night.

Koussevitzky is sufficiently Parisian to give us a lambent Debussy. He has the reputation and he did nothing to harm it this time, except that he remained Koussevitzky; which means that he has eyes in the back of his head for the effect upon his audience.

* * *

THE STRAIN he throws upon the orchestra is not important to him. The brass choir was screechy and high-strung all evening. Ensemble was often secondary.

Of the two composers I preferred Bruckner because Koussevitzky added an element for which he was never distinguished and that was a legato quality—a flow that was almost vocal, a cohesion which enabled the composition to wear its great length becomingly

The first movement of Bruckner's E major is a protracted song, inspired and happy singing. The scherzo has its intimations of the day of wrath but it is hearsay evidence and there is no smell of brimstone. The finale, in Koussevitzky's terms, is simply a case of leaping from climax to climax.

In listening to the marvelous slow movement it was impossible not to recall the companion section of Thursday night's Eroica—great and apocalyptic both of them, but Bruckner's is redeemed music while Beethoven's despair is barely reconciled.

Of the Debussy nocturnes, the first, "Clouds," I regard as unsymphonic. It is seldom played except to the accompaniment of restless coughing and certainly not be attempted in open-air performance.

"Festivals" was a magnificent burst of orchestral virtuosity. The three panels of "The Sea" were equally sonorous and pictorial. There are some melodies here which the popular tunesmiths will seize upon some day.

* * *

A BRIEF SHOWER disturbed Saturday's night's concert and a similar threat and eventual downpour cut into Sunday afternoon's attendance. Saturday night several thousand lawn sitters managed to crowd under the rim of the big shed and few, if any, left the grounds.

There were of course some disturbing noises and I thought that Koussevitzky was needlessly impatient about it. He was also sharply peremptory about squelching applause which burst out quite spontaneously between movements of the Bruckner Symphony.

Victor de Sabata who will conduct the next three concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon was in the audience.

[86]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1950

Berkshire Music Center Has 40 Student Units

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Tuesday—The average patron of the Berkshire Music Festival does not realize that the real heartbeat of Tanglewood is the Berkshire Music Center.

The younger and better musicians of today make up the student body; this Summer there are 400 of them. They come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries to study under a distinguished faculty. They perform in orchestras, ensembles, and in three operas for those who endorse their efforts by joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, in which a voluntary contribution constitutes membership.

This Summer's list of Friends is not yet complete, but last year they were instrumental in obtaining for the Center the former Wheatleigh estate as a men's dormitory; contributions amounted to $27,000 and more than 65,000 attended student events.

Guiding Spirit

The guilding spirit of this Tanglewood is Serge Koussevitzky. It was this Tanglewood to which he referred when he stated in a recent broadcast—"Tanglewood, it is my child. It is my creation. It is my blood and tears. Tanglewood I will never give up."

Koussevitzky's name, as director, does not appear on the cover of this year's Berkshire Festival program—but it is significant that all programs and literature about the Berkshire Music Center carry the words, "Serge Koussevitzky, Director."

Any student who comes here to enjoy a vacation with music is brought sharply to attention from the start. There may be isolated moments when some kind of music is not heard somewhere on the grounds from early morning to late at night, but I have rarely experienced them.

The other day I attended a student choral concert at which I was astonished at the lack of vitality in the orchestral accompaniment. After these events there is always a forum discussion, and at this one the conductors blamed the orchestra for the mediocre quality of the performances.

Hours Of Rehearsing

Why not? The players had just been rehearsing other programs for seven continuous hours! Such is the industry of these young Tanglewood-ites.

This particular concert was of exceptional interest because of Augusto Alejandro Rodriguez, a 46-year-old conductor from the University of Puerto Rico.

Rodriguez was brought to Tanglewood by special invitation of Hugh Ross who heads the department of choral conducting. I had been told that Rodriguez has been depressed here. One student said—"He feels that he can never get anywhere in Puerto Rico because of the present regime which is strongly anti-Rodriguez." Another said — "He is worried about his future in this country."

When I met and talked with him I observed none of this, and his effect on the chorus at the concert I mentioned was extraordinary. They had sung a "Stabat Mater" by Palestrina, sacred choruses of moderate interest by Stravinsky, and the women's chorus had sung two charming "chants" by Jacques Ibert who was in the audience and amiably applauded them.

Gives Life To Program

Rodriguez then bounded on stage to conduct three Puerto-Rican choruses of his arrangement, and the afternoon suddenly came to life. Well-trained singing became inspired song. The conductor's demands for fervor, enthusiasm, and total participation, became infectious. The tempo of some phrases made a challenge of difficult Spanish words, but the beat was precisely maintained.

Solos in a fine lyric tenor were given by Daniel George of West Hartford, Conn. But the most exciting aspect of the performance was that the audience was compelled to sense the authenticity of the music, and when the program resumed with Handel's "L'Allegro" and Haydn's "Theresa Mass," vitality again simmered to a sort of complacent sufficiency.

Bach Anniversary Marked

One of the highlights of the 40-odd student activities was the special concert by members of Department II (Orchestral) commemorating to the day (July 28) the 200th anniversary of Bach's death.

Rarely can four pianos and a symphony orchestra be assembled to perform Bach's "Concerto for Four Pianos, in A minor," but it was done here. One of the soloists, incidentally, was Frances Myska of Rutland. Having a commitment at Jacob's Pillow, I was unable to attend. I was told, however, by one whose opinion I value that the work was exceedingly well-played, the only serious flaw being one of acoustics. Bach concertos for two and three pianos, and two violins, were also performed.

The student orchestra is of an excellence, surpassed only by the nation's foremost organizations. The student conductors don't bury their heads in their scores, and many of them are already qualified to take over a major orchestra.

One of the most gifted I have seen is Jurriaan Andriessen of Holland, who conducted his "Berkshire Symphonies." It has rhythmic ideas that would be more interesting if less repetitious, and some instrumental combinations are probably more interesting on paper than they are to the ear. But, by no means is it a work of rank student caliber. There is every reason to predict that the young composer's technical growth will eventually equal his sense of imagination and inspiration.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION
JUL 29 1950

MARION MITCHELL'S RADIO

Concerts in Bowl Will Begin Today

As the Saturday highlight, the first of a series of eight concerts from Hollywood Bowl will be broadcast at noon today through KFSD.

Among the artists scheduled for early engagements are Rubenstein, Heifetz, Serge Toussevitsky, Artur Rodinski, Menuhin, Oscar Levant, Jose Iturbi, Helen Traubel, and Alfred Wallerstein.

The first program will be a tribute to George Gershwin—baritone Gordon MacRae, soprano Lucille Norman and Carmen Dragon's orchestra, all participating in the half hour show.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 1 - 1950

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor, arrived Saturday on his first visit to Tanglewood and will begin his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today in preparation for the Thursday and Saturday evening concerts. Serge Koussevitzky, who led the orchestra for two of the major concerts last week will again be on the podium in the final series of Festival concerts on Aug. 10 and 13.

Your columnist attended the Saturday morning rehearsal and was completely fascinated (not to mention exhausted by Dr. Koussevitzky's energy. The rehearsal was the first that we had ever managed to get to and we were a bit horrified at the attitude of some of the public, who apparently were under the impression that they were attending a sideshow. Talking and walking around became so annoying that even Dr. Koussevitzky could not take it any longer and requested the "ladies and gentlemen" to "SIT." They did.

The second week's concerts in the big Shed at Tanglewood will open Thursday evening with Victor de Sabata conducting. The program will include the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture," the Schubert "Unfinished" symphony, Respighi's "Pines of Rome," "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra by Gould and the "Prelude and Love-Death" from Tristan and Isolde, Wagner.

De Sabata will also conduct the Saturday evening program which will include the "Sinfonia" from the Christmas Oratorio, Bach; Symphony in E-flat major, K. 543 Mozart; Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; "Pezzo Concertante," Ghedini; and the symphony number 5 in C minor, Beethoven.

The Sunday afternoon program will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. It will include the Ravel suite, "Mother Goose," the "Alborada del Gracioso" and the piano concerto; also excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet." Bernstein will be both conductor and soloist for the Ravel concerto.

Other Tanglewood events this week will include a program in the Theatre today at 4:30 p.m. by the small choir of the school and at 8:15 p.m. a Coolidge concert with Alexander Shneider, violinist, as the soloist in the solo sonatas and suites of Bach. Mr. Schneider will continue the Bach program tomorrow at the Theatre at 8:15 p.m.

On Friday there will be a song recital sponsored by departments II and IV at the Chamber Music Hall at 4:30 o'clock, and a department II orchestra program at the Shed at 8:15 p.m. The second of the Boston Symphony open rehearsals will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. in the Shed. Proceeds from this are used as a benefit for the orchestra pension fund. On Saturday afternoon a composers' forum under the sponsorship of Department III of the school will meet at 3 p.m.

A chamber music program given by Department II will be held Sunday morning at 10 a.m. the Chamber Music Hall.

On Monday the Department V orchestra will present a program in the Shed at 4:30 p.m. and the Ibert Opera, "LeRoi D'Yvetot" will be presented in the Theatre at 8:15 p.m.

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1950

Daytonian Given Opera Role In Premiere At Tanglewood

"It seemed almost like a command performance," commented Carmon O. Caplinger Jr. when he was requested earlier in the season to sing in the famous Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

But this Dayton boy jumped at the opportunity and made such a success of it that he was asked to continue with the summer season.

So next Monday and Tuesday he will sing a role in the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." It is being produced under the direction of the composer, who is director of the French academy in Rome and now making his first visit to this country.

Served In Air Forces

Caplinger is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carmon O. Caplinger sr., of 421 Sandhurst drive. His father is an attorney at Wright-Patterson Air Force base. A graduate of the Miami-Jacobs college here, young Caplinger served three years in the Army Air Forces during World War II.

The story of Caplinger's meteoric rise in the operatic world goes back several months when the Indiana university school of music in Bloomington, Ind., started casting for a new American opera, "The Jumping Frog," by Lucas Foss.

Caplinger, a graduate student of the university, read the notice with stars in his eyes. He checked out a copy of the script, rehearsed the role of Uncle Henry and went to the first audition. He got the part, a type role that was a natural and he played it to the hilt.

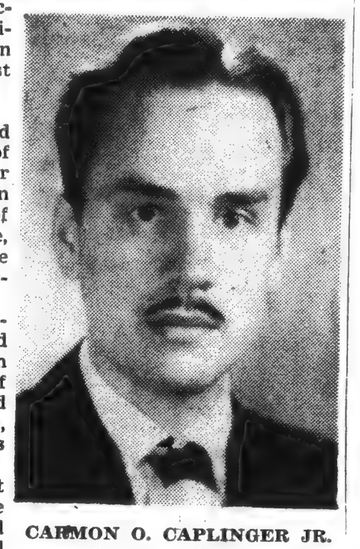
So well, in fact, that Foss asked him to repeat the role when the opera was to be produced at the Berkshire festival with a professional cast. He was the only member of the original all-student cast asked to sing at the festival.

Selected For Cast

From his work in "The Jumping Frog" Caplinger was selected for the cast of next week's opera, an enviable opportunity for anyone with such little previous experience in this field but with an unbounded enthusiasm.

Most of Caplinger's previous work in this line has been in dramatics, ranging from a walk-on part in "The Time of Your Life" to such plays as "Joan of Lorraine" and "King Lear." He played the lead in "The Inspector Calls" at the university theater.

Caplinger holds a master's degree in dramatics from Indiana university and in the fall expects to enroll in the Neighborhood Playhouse in New York. That is, if a casting call for some musical show doesn't prove more alluring than the sound of classroom bells. —A. S. KANY.



CARMON O. CAPLINGER JR.
. . . Command Performance

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG

De Sabata To Lead Concert At Berkshire

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. Aug. 2.—(Sp)—Victor de Sabata, eminent Italian conductor, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts Thursday and Saturday at the Music Shed of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood.

Making his first visit to one of America's principal summer music centers, Mr. De Sabata arrived Saturday and began rehearsing the orchestra on Tuesday.

His program Thursday will conssist of Brahms' "Academic Festival" overture; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony; "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi; the "Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra" of Gould, and Wagner's Prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristran and Isolde."

The Saturday offering will include "Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio" by Bach; Mozart's Symphony Number 39 in E Flat Major; Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture; "Pezzo Concertante" by Ghedini, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

On Sunday Leonard Bernstein, American conductor-pianist who has just returned from a tour abroad as a guest conductor, will perform and direct Ravel's Piano Concerto in an afternoon program. He will also conduct the ensemble in the "Mother Goose" suite and "Alborada del Gracioso," both by Ravel.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1950

Accent On Youth At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—This week the accent has been on youth here at Tanglewood where young artists dominate the pattern of the Berkshire Center. The works of three young musicians composed the entire first half of the concert here Sunday.

Harold Shapero, 30, David Diamond, 35 and Lukas Foss, 28, are the three celebrated composers. Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra. He offered to the Tanglewood audience, Mr. Shapero's "Symphony for Classical Orchestra," Mr. Diamond's, "Timon of Athens" and Mr. Foss's Biblical solo cantata, based on "Song of Songs."

Critics and artists dotted the audience. Dr. Koussevitsky in his familiar white linen cap and Jacques Ibert, the French composer in his ever-present beret were prominent at the concert.

FZ

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1950 3

Victor de Sabata To Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra In Concerts At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.—Attending this week end's concerts at the Berkshire Festival was Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor. Mr. de Sabata, who is making his first visit to Tanglewood, arrived Saturday, and began his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday, in preparation for next Thursday's and Saturday's concerts, which he will conduct. Next Sunday's Shed concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, who arrived at Tanglewood last week, after a tour abroad as guest conductor. Mr. Bernstein is also conducting today's concert at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky, who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two major concerts this past week, will again be on the podium in the final series of Festival concerts on Aug. 10 and 13; Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct on Aug. 12.

Victor de Sabata's program this Thursday will consist of Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; Respighi's Pines of Rome; Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra; and Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from Tristan and Isolde.

On Saturday the Boston Sympony Orchestra under Mr. de Sabata will perform Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major (No. 39); Berlioz's Overture to The Roman Carnival; Ghedini's Pezza Concertante and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Next Sunday afternoon, Mr Bernstein will be soloist as well as conductor in Ravel's Piano Concerto. The Mother Goose Suite and Alborada del Gracioso, both also by Ravel, and excerpts from Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will complete the program.

Thursday and Saturday concerts are held in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood grounds between Lenox and Stockbridge, at 8:15. The Sunday afternoon concerts, also in the Shed, are given at three o'clock. In addition to inside seats, tickets for which are still available at the Tanglewood box office, general admission tickets are sold on the day of a concert and purchasers may hear the concerts from the lawns.

of July 22 as previously announced. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Millard E. Giles, pastor of the Canton Baptist Church.

• • •

Mrs. Maude Hodgkin of 41 Pleasant Street, Auburn, is spending a few weeks with her daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Elwell, at Suncook, N. H.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 4 - 19

De Sabata Gets Hearty Welcome At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP)—Victor De Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 tonight when he appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the festival at Tanglewood and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of De Sabata as a guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's directors.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when De Sabata was given a five minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

De Sabata will return to Tanglewood Saturday for another performance.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 2 - 1950

AROUND THE TOWN

By E. S. Van Olinda

Tanglewood Intangibles

TANGLEWOOD Intangibles...

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, still the biggest Tanglewood box office attraction, with his protege and clear carbon copy, Leonard Bernstein running a close second. Maestro Koussevitzky showing tremendous patience as he sat in his box, the target for all the amateur flash-bulb addicts during intermissions.

Not so patient, however, as he waited for the noise to subside following the first movement of the Bruckner symphony Saturday night when a sudden shower sent the fringe sitters into the shed for shelter.

THE DEMOCRACY OF Music: Real New England blueblooders, families which made Lenox and Stockbridge the summer capital of America, with a bottle of pop in one hand and a ham and cheese in the other, catching some quick sustenance before the concert; probably the maids' day off.

Glimpsed in the audience: George Sokolsky, attired in a brown and white plaid shirt which must have given Brahms a little competition after the down beat; Albert Spalding, scion of the athletic goods manufacturer, who became one of the great violinists of the world, and who gave up his distinguished professional career within the past month; Mr. and Mrs. Murray C. Smouse, Ned Wheeler, Mrs. Esther Hoy Griswold, Emmett Wall, the Jules-Larsens and their pianistic son; members of the Jacob Pillow dance group resting their million-dollar legs on the closely-cropped turf surrounding the shed. Ditto, the resident, "at liberty" members of the Berkshire Playhouse cast, imbibing a bit of additional culture.

CASUALTIES: Mary Farrell, the very efficient head waitress at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge who has pulled out more chairs for more distinguished transients than anybody who comes to mind. Mary, God bless her, has retired to a well-earned rest.

Musical lions at the Sunday afternoon concert: Ellabelle Davis, the magnificent Negro soprano, heard two seasons ago in Albany with the Civic Music association, singing, magnificently the music of "The Song of Songs," by Lucas Foss, who was the piano soloist with the Albany Symphony orchestra last year.

STYLE NOTE: YOUNGSTERS from the nearby camps, arriving by the bus load, with bare feet and bare mid-riffs, tanned to the color of rich mahogany, but each and everyone, knowing the score. Our future music patrons, providing they don't have to enter the armed services.

The regrettable absence of any Tschaikowsky symphonies on the Boston Symphony orchestra's programs. But a lot of new, modernistic works, seep into the repertoire, which, of course, gets a big hand from the musical radicals. However, good old Brahms always comes through at the opportune moment, as he did Sunday afternoon with his "Second" symphony, sending one and all home, humming the beautiful melodies, which, praise be, have not yet been appropriated by Tin Pan Alley.

AND FINALLY. You owe it to yourself to get over to Tanglewood if only for one concert. Here is the greatest music festival in the whole world, right in our own back yard, with world celebrities, a dime a dozen, and acting just like your next door neighbor. Music has no racial or sociological problems.

[87]

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 1 - 1950

Music Notes

By D. E. RITE

Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor, arrived Saturday on his first visit to Tanglewood and will begin his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra today in preparation for the Thursday and Saturday evening concerts. Serge Koussevitzky, who led the orchestra for two of the major concerts last week will again be on the podium in the final series of Festival concerts on Aug. 10 and 13.

Your columnist attended the Saturday morning rehearsal and was completely fascinated (not to mention exhausted by Dr. Koussevitzky's energy. The rehearsal was the first that we had ever managed to get to and we were a bit horrified at the attitude of some of the public, who apparently were under the impression that they were attending a sideshow. Talking and walking around became so annoying that even Dr. Koussevitzky could not take it any longer and requested the "ladies and gentlemen" to "SIT." They did.

The second week's concerts in the big Shed at Tanglewood will open Thursday evening with Victor de Sabata conducting. The program will include the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture," the Schuberg "Unfinished" symphony, Respighi's "Pines of Rome," "Spirituals" for string choir and orchestra by Gould and the "Prelude and Love-Death" from Tristan and Isolde, Wagner.

De Sabata will also conduct the Saturday evening program which will include the "Sinfonia" from the Christmas Oratorio, Bach; Symphony in E-flat major, K. 543, Mozart; Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; "Pezzo Concertante," Ghedini; and the symphony number 5 in C minor, Beethoven.

The Sunday afternoon program will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. It will include the Ravel suite, "Mother Goose," the "Alborada del Gracioso" and the piano concerto; also excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet." Bernstein will be both conductor and soloist for the Ravel concerto.

Other Tanglewood events this week will include a program in the Theatre today at 4:30 p.m. by the small choir of the school and at 8:15 p.m. a Coolidge concert with Alexander Shneider, violinist, as the soloist in the solo sonatas and suites of Bach. Mr. Schneider will continue the Bach program tomorrow at the Theatre at 8:15 p.m.

On Friday there will be a song recital sponsored by departments II and IV at the Chamber Music Hall at 4:30 o'clock, and a department II orchestra program at the Shed at 8:15 p.m. The second of the Boston Symphony open rehearsals will be held Saturday at 10 a.m. in the Shed. Proceeds from this are used as a benefit for the orchestra pension fund. On Saturday afternoon a composers' forum under the sponsorship of Department III of the school will meet at 3 p.m.

A chamber music program given by Department II will be held Sunday morning at 10 a.m. the Chamber Music Hall.

On Monday the Department V orchestra will present a program in the Shed at 4:30 p.m. and the Ibert Opera, "LeRoi D'Yvetot" will be presented in the Theatre at 8:15 p.m.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1950

Accent On Youth At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—This week the accent has been on youth here at Tanglewood where young artists dominate the pattern of the Berkshire Center. The works of three young musicians composed the entire first half of the concert here Sunday.

Harold Shapero, 20, David Diamond, 35 and Lukas Foss, 28, are the three celebrated composers. Leonard Bernstein conducted the orchestra. He offered to the Tanglewood audience, Mr. Shapero's "Symphony for Classical Orchestra," Mr. Diamond's, "Timon of Athens" and Mr. Foss's Biblical solo cantata, based on "Song of Songs."

Critics and artists dotted the audience. Dr. Koussevitsky in his familiar white linen cap and Jacques Ibert, the French composer in his ever-present beret were prominent at the concert.

FZ

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
AUG 2 - 1950

Daytonian Given Opera Role In Premiere At Tanglewood

"It seemed almost like a command performance," commented Carmon O. Caplinger Jr. when he was requested earlier in the season to sing in the famous Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

But this Dayton boy jumped at the opportunity and made such a success of it that he was asked to continue with the summer season.

So next Monday and Tuesday he will sing a role in the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." It is being produced under the direction of the composer, who is director of the French academy in Rome and now making his first visit to this country.

Served In Air Forces

Caplinger is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carmon O. Caplinger sr., of 421 Sandhurst drive. His father is an attorney at Wright-Patterson Air Force base. A graduate of the Miami-Jacobs college here, young Caplinger served three years in the Army Air Forces during World War II.

The story of Caplinger's meteoric rise in the operatic world goes back several months when the Indiana university school of music in Bloomington, Ind., started casting for a new American opera, "The Jumping Frog," by Lucas Foss.

Caplinger, a graduate student of the university, read the notice with stars in his eyes. He checked out a copy of the script, rehearsed the role of Uncle Henry and went to the first audition. He got the part, a type role that was a natural and he played it to the hilt.

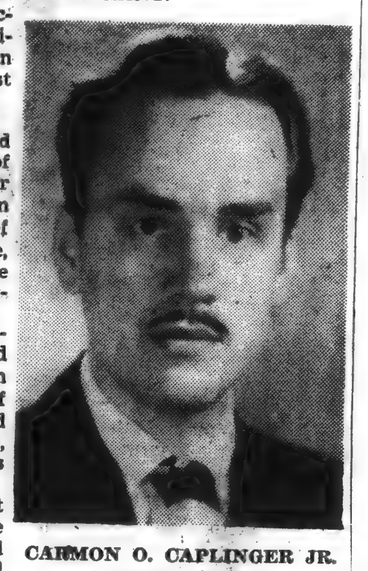
So well, in fact, that Foss asked him to repeat the role when the opera was to be produced at the Berkshire festival with a professional cast. He was the only member of the original all-student cast asked to sing at the festival.

Selected For Cast

From his work in "The Jumping Frog" Caplinger was selected for the cast of next week's opera, an enviable opportunity for anyone with such little previous experience in this field but with an unbounded enthusiasm.

Most of Caplinger's previous work in this line has been in dramatics, ranging from a walk-on part in "The Time of Your Life" to such plays as "Joan of Lorraine" and "King Lear." He played the lead in "The Inspector Calls" at the university theater.

Caplinger holds a master's degree in dramatics from Indiana university and in the fall expects to enroll in the Neighborhood Playhouse in New York. That is, if a casting call for some musical show doesn't prove more alluring than the sound of classroom bells. —A. S. KANY.



CARMON O. CAPLINGER JR.
. . . Command Performance

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG 3 [illegible]

De Sabata To Lead Concert At Berkshire

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. Aug 2—(Sp)—Victor de Sabata, eminent Italian conductor, will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts Thursday and Saturday at the Music Shed of the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood.

Making his first visit to one of America's principal summer music centers, Mr De Sabata arrived Saturday and began rehearsing the orchestra on Tuesday.

His program Thursday will consist of Brahms' "Academic Festival" overture; Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony; "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi; the "Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra" of Gould, and Wagner's Prelude and "Love-Death" from "Tristran and Isolde."

The Saturday offering will include "Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio" by Bach; Mozart's Symphony Number 39 in E Flat Major; Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture; "Pezzo Concertante" by Ghedini, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

On Sunday Leonard Bernstein, American conductor-pianist who has just returned from a tour abroad as a guest conductor, will perform and direct Ravel's Piano Concerto in an afternoon program. He will also conduct the ensemble in the "Mother Goose" suite and "Alborada del Gracioso," both by Ravel.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 2 - 1950 3

Victor de Sabata To Conduct Boston Symphony Orchestra In Concerts At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.—Attending this week end's concerts at the Berkshire Festival was Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor. Mr. de Sabata, who is making his first visit to Tanglewood, arrived Saturday, and began his rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday, in preparation for next Thursday's and Saturday's concerts, which he will conduct. Next Sunday's Shed concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, who arrived at Tanglewood last week, after a tour abroad as guest conductor. Mr. Bernstein is also conducting today's concert at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky, who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two major concerts this past week, will again be on the podium in the final series of Festival concerts on Aug. 10 and 13; Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct on Aug. 12.

Victor de Sabata's program this Thursday will consist of Brahms' Academic Festival Overture; Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; Respighi's Pines of Rome; Gould's Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra and Wagner's Prelude and Love-Death from Tristan and Isolde.

On Saturday the Boston Sympony Orchestra under Mr. de Sabata will perform Bach's Sinfonia from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart's Symphony in E-flat major (No. 39); Berlioz's Overture to The Roman Carnival; Ghedini's Pezza Concertante, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Next Sunday afternoon, Mr. Bernstein will be soloist as well as conductor in Ravel's Piano Concerto. The Mother Goose Suite and Alborada del Gracioso, both also by Ravel, and excerpts from Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will complete the program.

Thursday and Saturday concerts are held in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood grounds between Lenox and Stockbridge, at 8:15. The Sunday afternoon concerts, also in the Shed, are given at three o'clock. In addition to inside seats, tickets for which are still available at the Tanglewood box office, general admission tickets are sold on the day of a concert and purchasers may hear the concerts from the lawns.

of July 22 as previously announced. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Millard E. Giles, pastor of the Canton Baptist Church.

• • •

Mrs. Maude Hodgkin of 41 Pleasant Street, Auburn, is spending a few weeks with her daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Elwell, at Suncook, N. H.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD
AUG 4 - 1950

De Sabata Gets Hearty Welcome At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3 —(AP)— Victor De Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 tonight when he appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the festival at Tanglewood and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of De Sabata as a guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's directors.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when De Sabata was given a five minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

De Sabata will return to Tanglewood Saturday for another performance.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 2 - 1950

AROUND THE TOWN

By E. S. Van Olinda

TANGLEWOOD Intangibles...

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, still the biggest Tanglewood box office attraction, with his protege and clear carbon copy, Leonard Bernstein running a close second. Watching Koussevitzky showing tremendous patience as he sat in his box, the target for all the amateur flash-bulb addicts during intermissions.

Not so patient, however, as he waited for the noise to subside following the first movement of the Bruckner symphony Saturday night when a sudden shower sent the fringe sitters into the shed for shelter.

THE DEMOCRACY OF Music: Real New England bluebloodes, families which made Lenox and Stockbridge the summer capital of America, with a bottle of pop in one hand and a ham and cheese in the other, catching some quick sustenance before the concert; probably the maids' day off.

Glimpsed in the audience: George Sokolsky, attired in a brown and white plaid shirt which must have given Brahms a little competition after the down beat; Albert Spalding, scion of the athletic goods manufacturer, who became one of the great violinists of the world, and who gave up his distinguished professional career within the past month; Mr. and Mrs. Murray C. Smouse, Ned Wheeler, Mrs. Esther Hoy Griswold, Emmett Wall, the Jules-Larsens and their pianistic son; members of the Jacob Pillow dance group resting their million-dollar legs on the closely-cropped turf surrounding the shed. Ditto, the resident, "at liberty" members of the Berkshire Playhouse cast, imbibing a bit of additional culture.

CASUALTIES: Mary Farrell, the very efficient head waitress at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge who has pulled out more chairs for more distinguished transients than anybody who comes to mind. Mary, God bless her, has retired to a well-earned rest.

Musical lions at the Sunday afternoon concert: Elisabeth Davis, the magnificent Negro soprano, heard two seasons ago in Albany with the Civic Music association, singing, magnificently the music of "The Song of Songs," by Lucas Foss, who was the piano soloist with the Albany Symphony orchestra last year.

Tanglewood Intangibles

STYLE NOTE: YOUNGSTERS from the nearby camps, arriving by the bus load, with bare feet and bare mid-riffs, tanned to the color of rich mahogany, but each and everyone, knowing the score. Our future music patrons, providing they don't have to enter the armed services.

The regrettable absence of any Tschaikowsky symphonies on the Boston Symphony orchestra's programs. But a lot of new, modernistic works, seep into the repertoire, which, of course, gets a big hand from the musical radicals. However, good old Brahms always comes through at the opportune moment, as he did Sunday afternoon, with his "Second" symphony, sending one and all home, humming the beautiful melodies, which, praise be, have not yet been appropriated by Tin Pan Alley.

AND FINALLY. You owe it to yourself to get over to Tanglewood if only for one concert. Here is the greatest music festival in the whole world, right in our own back yard, with world celebrities, a dime a dozen, and acting just like your next door neighbor. Music has no racial or sociological problems.

[67]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1950

New Tanglewood Theater Disclosed by Koussevitsky

By RAYMOND MORIN, Telegram Music Critic

LENOX, Friday — In an exclusive interview at Seranak, Summer home of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires, the famed conductor announced for the first time that a Greek Theater is to be erected at Tanglewood, construction possibly to begin in about a year's time.

The site will be a natural amphitheater near the area occupied by the Little Red House, due South of the Shed. A few years ago, Dr. Koussevitzky had already been in conference with the late Eliel Saarinen, who originally designed the shed, and with his son Eero, regarding plans for the new structure. It will seat between 25,000 and 30,000 persons.

The new theater will be fashioned after those of ancient Greek times.

'Tragedy of Our Times'

"Also, we will have our own stage-masters, composers and conductors," said Dr. Koussevitzky. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

One of the problems to be solved is protection against the sun. Dr. Koussevitzky explained by showing the position of the sun, from one of the windows of his spacious home, in relation to the prospective structure. For that reason it will require some sort of protective covering.

"Is this idea new to you?" I asked.

CONDUCTOR TELLS OF PROJECT

Raymond Morin (left), Telegram music critic, interviews Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in the Summer home of the retired Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor in the Berkshires. Dr. Koussevitzky disclosed in the exclusive interview plans for a Greek Theater at Tanglewood.

THEATER

Continued from Page One

He replied: "I thought of this forty years ago in Russia. In fact, I already had selected a location for such a project in Moscow . . . and destiny brought me to America."

Speaking of the future of the Berkshire Music Center, the product of his dreams, Dr. Koussevitzky said: "We need a great change in opera. We have already made steps by inaugurating a libretto department."

Had Protested Movies

One of the many things that Dr. Koussevitzky spoke about at length was what he described as the "dignity" of Tanglewood. Illustrative of this was his protest against the movies that were to have been shown after the first Thursday night concert, July 27. The reported purpose of these movies was to facilitate traffic departure after the concert, because vacating of the grounds after these events is a slow process.

"Tanglewood is a musical pilgrimage," said Dr. Koussevitzky. "I have known students to walk one hundred miles to hear these concerts, so is it important that people are delayed a little while to leave the grounds? The solution is to improve the roads, and I think the community should do so. It gains a great deal because of Tanglewood."

On Young Conductors

I was keenly interested in Dr. Koussevitzky's attitude toward young conductors. One of the things I asked him to comment about was the mannerisms and stylistic methods that young conductors assimilate from their teachers.

"First of all," Dr. Koussevitzky said, "I have been criticized for accepting as students young musicians who have had no training as conductors. A conductor must have a knowledge of all instruments, as well as play the piano, and know how to compose. I don't say, however, that he must be a great composer."

To illustrate his point, he added: "Rimsky-Korsakoff, Debussy, Saint-Saens, and Glazounov were certainly good musicians but they were terrible conductors. It takes special gifts to become a conductor, and when I first watch a young conductor, I can tell very quickly whether he has the gift or not."

Experience Not Wanted

Dr. Koussevitzky refuses to accept experienced conductors because "in six weeks I would not have time to rid them of some of their defects in conducting. Under these circumstances it is easier to work with a beginner."

(The Summer session at the Berkshire Music Center is six weeks.)

With regard to mannerisms acquired by the student from his teacher, he has this to say: "When you enter a school, do you not go to your teacher for advice and guidance? My students see me express the melody with my hands and facial expressions, also the rhythm, and they do the same, until they develop their own individual technique."

Dr. Koussevitzky is equally clear in his estimate of newspaper criticism. Among other things, he deplores the necessity of reviewing performances after a single hearing.

Preparatory Study

"Let's take, for example, the Bruckner Symphony I conducted the other night. I had not seen it for some time, and I studied it a long time before I felt sufficiently prepared to conduct it. (The French words he used are translated "ripe enough.") But the critics listen once and they express an opinion. It would take genius to do so."

Insofar as personal criticism is concerned, Dr. Koussevitzky said: "I have read many incompetent reviews and they do not bother me." And, "I dislike criticism to speak of less mature artists in the same terms as great ones. For example, one cannot speak of lesser violinists in the same language that one speaks of Heifetz. A critic may be criticized for failure to understand the rank of the artist of whom he writes, or to recognize an arising artist—this is unpardonable."

View From House

Seranak has a view beyond compare, looking down majestically upon beautiful Lake Mahkeenac. Although Tanglewood and its many properties are hidden by dense foliage, as I awaited Dr. Koussevitzky on the spacious terrace of his home, I could hear waves of choral sound as Bach's "Mass in B minor" was being rehearsed for a performance next Thursday night.

With it all, Dr. Koussevitzky says, "Tanglewood, today, it is but the beginning."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 4 - 1950

Varied Program to Mark Final Week at Tanglewood

American Premiere of French Opera; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt Narrating 'Peter and the Wolf' to Be Among Closing Features

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 4—The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf", next Friday evening.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

Monday and Tuesday evening, the opera department at Tanglewood under acting head Jan Popper present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera "The King of Yvetot". This production will be the third opera presentation by the students at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, and is their most important work of the season.

On Wednesday the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitsky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed. In the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this 13th season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 and 8.15.

Next Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade". Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

Next Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy". Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And on next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitsky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 4 - 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT TRIES OUT FOR "PETER AND THE WOLF"

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4. (U.P.)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who says she knows no music, was getting ready today for her debut on a symphonic program.

The former president's widow tried out yesterday as a narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood [illegible].

The rehearsal took place at her Hyde Park home with pianist Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Conductor Serve Koussevitzky.

Though Mrs. Roosevelt said she knew no music and never had heard the symphony, she read the lines that accompany the music with what Berkowitz described as delightful ease.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1950

de Sabata Conducts Brilliant Concert At Tanglewood; Koussevitzky Absent

Victor de Sabata, 57-year-old Italian conductor, scored a brilliant personal triumph last evening at Tanglewood when he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time.

His accomplishment was all the more emphatic inasmuch as he was cold shouldered by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed director of the Berkshire Music Center who stayed in his "house on the hill" last night. It was one of the few concerts at Tanglewood he has vere missed. Also, there were many empty boxes, which is a rare thing for Tanglewood. Presumably they belonged to patrons who chose to side with Dr. Koussevitzky in his definite objections to engaging De Sabata without his consent.

But the Koussevitzky clan freeze had no chilling effect on the 8,500 who filled the reserved seat sections of the shed and spread out in numbers on the lawn. They indulged in intense acclaim for De Sabata, rose enmasse and cheered him at the end, and insisted on a half a dozen or so bows. The enthusiasm for the Italian conductor was infectious, and the orchestra members themselves broke precedent by rising to applaud.

The program opened with Brahm's "Academic Festival Overature," which was exalting and had the effect of lifting the audience to a thrilling pitch which was sustained thruout the evening.

The program included Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony in B Minor; Respighi's symphonic poem, "Pines of Rome," Morton Gould's spirituals for string choir and orchestra, and the Prelude and Liebestod from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

Mr. De Sabata is a fascinating podium figure to watch. He is tallish and has an unusually wide arm stretch. He walks with a distinct limp because of an artificial leg. He addresses himself in a personal way to those players whom he instructs. He is tremendously energetic but it is an efficient expenditure of energy.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 4 - 1950

Tanglewood to Build Greek-Type Theater

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4.—(AP)—Construction of a Greek theater seating 25,000 will begin next year at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The retired Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor told a reporter last night that the amphitheater will be patterned after those of ancient Greek times.

"We will have our stage masters, composers and conductors," Koussevitzky said. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8500 when he appeared last night as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of the festival and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of De Sabata as guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's director.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 4 - 1950

Victor de Sabata Is Spectacular At Tanglewood Concert

His Conducting of Boston Symphony Orchestra Dominates Whole Evening at Tanglewood. Dramatically Unfolds All Musical Lines, Rhythms and Intent of Composers

A superlative conducting performance was witnessed when Victor de Sabata lead the Boston Symphony orchestra through a [illegible] varied program at Tanglewood Thursday night before about 9,000. Mr. de Sabata completely dominated the whole evening with an exhibition of conducting which in some would have been called gymnastics or an egocentric exhibitionism, but for him a remarkable unfolding of all the musical lines, rhythms and intent of each composer represented.

One felt that this man was so living and graphically outlining the music that the orchestra was under a loving compulsion to honor him with their best musicianship. The audience reaction was completely consonant with de Sabata's interpretation. He was called back repeatedly. Even the orchestra applauded him and his superb manifestation of, and oneness with the music.

After the Academic Festival Overture by Brahms, which incidentally was played as this overture should be played, giving it its true stature and breadth as an independently complete opus, de Sabata himself was so pleased he threw kisses to his musicians and faced an applauding audience almost overcome with delight and enthusiasm.

Schubert's Unfinished Symphony would have elated its maker. One hears this work so often done more or less academically that it is a rare treat to hear it performed as one just feels the composer would have it accomplished. Beautiful, restrained pianissimo cellos exquisitely drawn out by de Sabata's eloquent fingers delineated the second melody.

Respighi's Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome", was the outstanding work of the evening. One felt, if possible, that the conductor was even more perfactly familiar and in accord with the composer's intent. De Sabata made the audience see the children playing in the Pines of the Villa Borghese. He enjoyed their play and games. The recorded nightingale song in the third section of the poem was intriguing. The climax of this work is one of the most remarkably thunderous and thrilling ever composed.

The de Sabata who conducted Morton Gould's "Spirtuals" seemed to be a minister, a Puck and an eloquently inspired section of humanity. The audience was alternately whimsically delighted and majestically awed.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 4 - 1950

De Sabata At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4.—Victor de Sabata made his debut as a special guest conductor with the Boston Symphony in the opening [illegible] of the second Berkshire Festival weekend last night.

It was a resounding success with the sound traveling far beyond the music shed and even beyond the 8,500 people attending. With the orchestra responding to his theatricalism, he put on a wonderful show. Everybody had a good time.

De Sabata certainly created excitement. If he does so at the expense of the music, it is, I suppose, his business. He applies the "wow" technique with gestures; he pulls no punches. His sculptured conduction is something to see as well as to hear.

That the people laughed and loved it almost goes without saying. The music sighed and billowed, it murmured and crashed; it shook the rafters. That it was by Brahms, Schubert, Respighi, Gould, and Wagner made little difference. Each composer supplied a vehicle and De Sabata took him for an electrifying ride.

"Of course all this virtuosity could not be accomplished without a certain mastery. Neither orchestra nor audience was seldom in doubt as to what the conductor wished. His beat is firm and his discipline is rigid. The rest is fervor unleashed in the most picturesque posturing.

Most of the program had been given in New York: Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Gould's "Spirituals" and Wagner's "Prelude and Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde." It is a popular lineup, but then De Sabata is a popular conductor.

His appearance here was by way of pinch-hitting. This weekend series was originally scheduled for Munch, the regular conductor of the B.S.O. When he withdrew, it fell to Koussevitzky who in turn declined. In the search for another international figure, the choice fell on De Sabata. He conducts again on Saturday night.

LYNN, MASS.
TELEGRAM-NEWS
AUG 4 - 1950

Clem Norton Says

KOUSSEVITSKY

Koussevitsky is the most famous orchestra conductor in the world in our day with one exception, Toscanini. I got a good close-up of him at Tanglewood this summer. Because of his ear for music, the richness and beauty of orchestral tone of the Boston Symphony is said to be the world's best in our day. But Koussevitsky has is weaknesses. Great when it comes to storming the musical heavens with tone, he is not so good when it comes to producing music of mellow warmth, such as is exemplified by the warmth given off by the embers of a dying fire. Here is where conductor Bruno Walter is supreme, and it is what is wanted for the quieter moments of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms and others.

But no conductor can do a better job when it comes to presenting say Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony or some of the music of Debussy.

When Vladimar Horowitz, the most famous pianist playing today, played with the Boston Symphony in 1944, there were times when the soloist and the orchestra were not together, and Koussevitsky did not return to the stage to take a bow with Horowitz after the final performance, he was so disgusted. Some folks claim that Koussevitsky is just not a good accompanist.

Moses Smith, who was music critic for the Boston Transcript for some time feel that Koussevitsky has poor timing in some numbers, such as in Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. That his beat, is sometimes vague when it should be clear. That this is what happened at the Horowitz recital.

In 1918, the Communists seized Koussevitsky in Russia, but he got away. During World War II, the Nazis took over his Paris home and converted it into an officers' home. In February, 1941, when he became an American citizen he said: "I'm sorry I didn't do this earlier. I want to spend the rest of my days here in an attitude of freedom . . . The United States is the only country today where artistic and musical ability can find free expression . . . ."
The next morning, when he started a rehearsal, the orchestra disregarded him and played "The Star Spangled Banner", and he wept. A few weeks later, he conducted 300 Army musicians at Camp Edwards, standing on a jeep, in "Stars and Stripes Forever", and when he got down from the jeep, tears s[illegible] me down his face.

DEATH

Koussevitsky was happily married, and when his wife died in July, 1942, at the age of 61, in the Druce street, Brookline, home, he seemed to age 10 years.

He seems to grow ten years younger when the crowd applauds him vigorously. To grow young on public adulation. It was dramatic when 8800 people at the opening concert of the 1950 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, remained hushed, remained abnormally quiet for a moment or two, just before the opening number, and when Koussevitsky dramatically appeared, dressed correctly in a wnite linen coat, and black trousers, and walked to his place on the podium, that cultured crowd suddenly went wild. It was like a bolt of thunder. Out on the grass, sat an elderly couple, with a bottle of old world wine standing between them, and they clapped their feeble, gnarled old hands, when the maestro appeared.

It was quite a sight, under a velvet sky, and a big, full, silvery noon.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
AUG 5 - 1950

Music

By Nora Holt

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and UN Secretariat Visit Tanglewood

As the result of a request last year by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, fifty members of the UN Secretariat visited Tanglewood last weekend to attend the Berkshire Festival concerts. They were guests of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire County residents. Mrs. Roosevelt will be in Tanglewood the coming weekend as guest of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and will spend some time with the famous conductor discussing her role as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be performed August 11 as a part of "Tanglewood on Parade" the annual program for the benefit of Berkshire Music Center. This annual occasion is a popular one with music lovers and students who enjoy music, festivities and dancing on the lawn from six until eleven in the evening. Many bring picnic suppers and spread blankets on the grass for an informal party. The Shed concert August 6 will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Dr. Koussevitzky on the podium August 10 and 13; and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct August 12. The major production of the Opera department this year will be Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," presented August 7, 8. The noted French composer is director of the French Academy in Rome and is teaching advanced composition at Tanglewood this year.

* * *

Officials of the National Art Foundation of New York recently named Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as chairman of the music committee. He will aid in awarding fellowships for foreign study and also join in planning an international music festival.

* * *

Charles Dunn, music lover and art patron, arrived in the city last Saturday from Chicago, en route to Oak Bluffs for a vacation. Mr. Dunn was a familiar figure in the operatic world for many years when he served as personal press agent for Claudia Muzio, famous Metropolitan star, and accompanied her and her mother all over Europe for operatic engagements. He has invaluable information concerning the habits, practice hours, temperaments, eating schedules and throat care of opera stars. He entertained Camilla Williams when she appeared in Chicago, and spent Tuesday as her guest in Philadelphia before going on to Oak Bluffs. He was also dinner guest of Les Williams, head of the Washington Academy of Music, on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Williams was in the city on business, and also invited this writer to dinner at the Savarin in Penn Station. With him for the trip were three music students from his school, Messrs. Solomon, Suter and Freeman. All plan to attend the NANM convention in Baltimore Aug. 20-25.

* * *

From London we have news that Muriel Smith, brilliant young soprano who starred in "Carmen Jones," "Our Lan" and other Broadway musicals before trying her luck in London, was a sensation in the English show "Sauce Piquante" which closed recently. She has also appeared in television; at Ciro's; in concert at the Portugese Embassy; in three programs for BBC; and has auditioned for David Webster, director of Covent Garden Opera House. Her prospects are so favorable, she will remain in London indefinitely.

Muriel Smith

* * *

Kenneth Spencer, international basso, is finding the Swiss Alps a delight during his vacation. A postcard says, "Spending a few days here in sight of magnificent Mount Blanc. Wonderful!" Which makes us feel a bit of nostalgia for Lake Lucerne, Lake Geneva and Jungfrau, as well as the Cornish Road on the Riviera which touches Juan le Pins, Nice, Cannes, and Monte Carlo before going on to Mentone in Italy.

* * *

The versatile Etta Moten of "Porgy and Bess" fame is serving with a group of distinguished Chicago women on the civic music committee for the Chicago Lake Front Fair, Mrs. Alma K. Anderson, chairman. Others include Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Mrs. Henry Vanzwoll, Miss Anna Fitzu, Mrs. Borden Stevenson and Mrs. Arthur Grunow. Miss Moten has a special booth of music and art on the grounds, and September 8 is Etta Moten Day when she will present a concert program with local, national and international artists.

Etta Moten

* * *

Sadie Knight, gifted blind soprano, added another notch to her promising career when she was selected as guest soloist for All-Gershwin Pop Concert at Chautauqua, New York, July 25.

WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN
AUG 4 - 1950

WIFE OF LATE FDR TO MAKE HER DEBUT IN LENOX PROGRAM

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who knows no music was getting ready today for her debut on a smyphonic program.

The former president's widow tried out recently as a narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood here Aug. 11.

The rehearsal took place at her Hyde Park, N. Y. home with Pianist Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Conductor Serge Koussevitzky.

Though Mrs. Roosevelt said she knew no music and never had heard the symphony, she read the lines that accompany the music with what Berkowitz described as delightful ease.

After her practice session, Berkowitz said she had done very well in her first attempt as narrator and left her with the score which she promised to work over.

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD
AUG 4 - 1950

De Sabata Acclaimed At Berkshire Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3. (AP) — Victor De Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 tonight when he appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the festival at Tanglewood and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of De Sabata as a guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's directors.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when De Sabata was given a five minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's Academic Festival Overture.

De Sabata will return to Tanglewood Saturday for another performance.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 5 - 1950

Mrs. Koussevitzky's Father Dies in Nice, France

LENOX — Alexander Naoumoff, 82, father of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, died in Nice, France, this week according to word received by Mrs. Koussevitzky Thursday afternoon. Mr. Naoumoff served as minister of agriculture in Russia during World War I.

Mrs. Koussevitzky's father's memoirs, which he never wanted published while he was living, are being kept at the Hoover War Library at Leland Stanford Junior University in California.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 5 - 1950

Floor Collapses As Friends Greet Dr. Koussevitzky

TANGLEWOOD—The floor of the Green Room in the Music Shed—the after concert room where friends greet Dr. Koussevitzky — collapsed under the weight of a huge crowd last night following the Department II orchestra's concert.

Dr. Koussevitzky was receiving congratulations from a group of admirers when the floor dropped about 12 inches. No one was injured. The maestro and his group of friends described the incident as "quite a surprise."

[89]

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shown here is an artist's conception of some of the people and their work connected with the Berkshire Music Center production of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." The 20-year-old work, based on a folk-legend of ancient France, will gets its initial American presentation at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Shown in this sketch are Dr. Jan Pepper, musical director of the production and acting head of the Tanglewood opera department (left center), and Jacques Ibert (right center), the noted French composer, who teaches advanced musical composition at Tanglewood this summer, on his first visit to America. On the left is baritone Manfred Hecht, sing the title role. J

M. Ibert is costume designer Leo van Witsen.

Stage director F. Cowles Strickland and Philippe de Rosier, scenic designer, are not seen in this impression.

The artist, Arthur Pelonsky of the Boston Museum School's summer session faculty, whose classes are held at the summe session's quarters at the Berk ...Music Center, made thes ...ls.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 5 - 1950

Music Has Its Politics

There is politics in music even as it is greatly presented at Tanglewood. They love Serge Koussevitzky as well they may. When he comes into the great shed these days to take his place in his box everybody rises. They should. People should give present and personal honor to the men who lift music to yet higher powers for them.

Someboay sees the maestro step from his car and enter the shed with no show of his own part. He rises Everybody rises and stands until Koussevitzky takes his seat. We do that for Governors and Presidents and even we have had mayors in Holyoke who thought it should be done for them. Not our present mayor. You feel the glow that spreads across the audience when somebody says "It is Koussevitzky."

But Thursday night Koussevitzky was not in his box. If he had slipped in thru the dark of the evening nobody saw him. The occasion was the conducting of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Victor de Sabata, the great Italian conductor. Somewhere in the background de Sabata had been invited to conduct and the invitation was not issued by Koussevitzky — just a mistake somewhere.

Because Koussevitzky had taken that bit of manners to the people by radio on a Sunday evening, everybody who was among the 8500 listeners last night, knew. Many of the regular box holders did not come even if they have such easy parking facilities. But the great audience gave to de Sabata such a reception as no conductor has ever evoked at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony, as of today, is Koussevitzky's creation. It has long been a very great orchestra. Under Koussevitzky it has been made the greatest orchestra in the world. Thursday night it proved its greatness and its universality by doing everything de-Sabata asked of them.

Nor should it be omitted that with this yesterday came the announcement by Koussvitzky that the Berkshire Music Center will build a theater after the ancient Greek pattern that will seat 25,000 people. It will have its own stage managers, composers and conductors. That can be done. Some fine music has come out of the schools conducted at Tanglewood for the past ten years or so.

Already the world is forgetting Stockbridge and Lenox, the towns at whose edges Tanglewood sits. The world over it is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

And some one asks where will the 25,000 park their cars? It may be heresy to bring to the Berkshire Center's attention that the soul stirring of the magnificent concerts are followed by headaching of those whpe would get out Tanglewood's primitive parking areas by the winding roads.

One could consider this problem politically, too, for great is Tanglewood and increasingly great is the public interest and effort to be part of it.

Retail merchants of the country are to be congratulated. With a war on, and possible consumer goods to be taken off the market occuping purchasers minds, the merchants are attempting to rationalize the thinking of customers by conducting sales of regular merchandise, at reduced, and in some instances, drastic reductions.

Confusion reigned at Washington yesterday at the meeting of a House committee investigating lobbying activities. There was an exchange of tongue between Rep H. L. Lanham, Democrat of Georgia, and William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights of Congress. There was almost an exchange of blows. Patterson bluntly refused to surrender twice-subpoenaed data of the Civil Rights Congress. The House committee recommended that Mr. Patterson be cited for contempt. Talk then centered on lynchings in Georgia. Mr. Patterson said that state had a world-wide reputation for lynching Negroes. Rep. Lanham resented the allegation and called Patterson a liar and another name—not a nice one either. Mr. Patterson said "lie" to several statements of Mr. Lanham, who scurried from the committee dias in the direction of Mr. Patterson. With fists doubled, Mr. Lanham was checked by attendants and police when his rush had advanced to within a few feet of Mr. Patterson. Someone, not the chairman, Mr. Lanham, moved for an adjournment. Someone, not the chairman, asked, "all in favor, say aye." There was no need to ask, "those opposed, speak up." The meeting adjourned after the first question was put.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE & POST
AUG 5 - 1950

Behind the Success At Tanglewood

ALL reports from Tanglewood indicate that the great center of music in the beauty of the Berkshires is flourishing this Summer. It is astonishing that this enterprise should have become, in a few short years, one of the principal music festivals in the world.

There are several reasons for the success. The setting is incomparable. The tremendous Music Shed and other buildings on what was once a magnificent private estate are admirably appointed for thorough enjoyment of concerts. The activity of thousands of patrons, rich and not rich, has been indispensable. The Boston Symphony is superb. But the main reason for Tanglewood, and its concerts which sometimes draw upwards of 10,000 listeners of an afternoon or evening, is unquestionably the vision and genius of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky combined with the sense and practical acumer of the trustees.

It is true that this year there was a flurry between the eminent music director and the trustees over the latter's designation of a couple of foreign guest conductors. But the controversy has not been fundamental, and there is full mutual appreciation by both sides of each one's part in the Tanglewood accomplishment.

THERE was an arresting remark in Dr. Koussevitzky's interview given Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic. He said, "Tanglewood today, it is but the beginning."

"The beginning," he said! Here is a man in his late seventies, who in 26 years as its conductor led the Boston Symphony to the heights, and who inspired this Tanglewood achievement with its hundreds of students and overflowing audiences. Yet he dreams of still greater things ahead.

Candidly, we cannot see how a vast Greek amphitheater at Tanglewood, seating 25,000 persons and playing music drama in the classic mode, will ever fit the practical limits of space and human demand. As it is, the thousands who attend Tanglewood tax Berkshire transport and housing. And even art must heed the arithmetic of investment and budget. Perhaps Dr. Koussevitzky, suggesting the plan in his talk with Mr. Morin, was setting his sights purposely high.

But that Tanglewood is going forward, Greek theater or no Greek theater, is evident. There is imagination and venture in it. And that should be a stimulus to every music festival of any pretensions in the country—including Worcester's.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shifting Scenes

Report On Berkshire Festival Comes From Flora Ward Hineline

By RUTH ELGUTTER

IF A PERSON can't hear (or see) something exciting herself the next best thing is to get a vivid description from someone who has been there. It always has been one of my dreams to go to Tanglewood some summer and hear the Berkshire Festival. Somehow my plans never have worked out to get me to Lenox at the right time so I'm always delighted to get reports on one of America's finest institutions conducted annually by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra in the beautiful setting of the Berkshire Hills.

Flora Ward Hineline, who has one of the most keenly attuned musical ears in these parts, and her daughter-in-law, Leone Hineline, made the pilgrimage this year and F. W. H. has written a most enthusiastic report, which I'm reprinting in part here.

On the evening when she arrived, "10,000 were expected to hear Koussevitzky do his Debussy program," Mrs. Hineline writes. "I didn't count them but between those in the huge shed and the three or four thousand on the grass outside, I guess that many got there. Everything from blue jeans to ermine in the audience.

"The concert was utterly superb. Koussevitzky holds the palm for Debussy in this country for my money. If 'La Mer' has even been better done anywhere by any conductor I wasn't present. He got a wild ovation. The Bruckner was wonderful, too, of course."

Mrs. Hineline reports that Koussevitzky now seats his orchestra "in the round," to use the new theatrical phrase.

"This brings the second violins with backs to the audience but eyes on the conductor as it was never possible before," she says. "Another innovation—to me, at least—was the bass viol players seated in especially constructed high chairs, each holding his instrument on his lap. I'm all for it—they should have sat down years ago."

"At intermission," Mrs. Hineline continues, "Leone spied Fritz Kreisler in the crowd milling to get to the front—his bushy hair as white as his evening jacket. Madame Kreisler, majestic in formal gown shooing folks away with the admonition, 'He's going backstage.' But coming back she could not stop the hand he got from the crowd rushing back to seats.

"Saw Mrs. Kossevitzky, blond and beautiful, in snowy chiffon falling to the floor, over which she wore the new half-length evening wrap—also white.

"The only Toledoan we could glimpe in the huge audience was Mrs. Sidney Vinnedge, who had motored down earlier in the week alone but was meeting her daughter and grandchildren to motor back and show the youngsters Niagara Falls.

"The night was perfect and at sundown we stood in the formal gardens where the marble circle holds the inscription to the donors, with the beautiful Berkshires like a stage backdrop—unbelievably lovely. Here, I thought, is American democracy at its best in this gathering of thousands of music lovers.

"As guests of citizens of Lenox and Pittsfield, representatives of 26 nations from the United Nations at Lake Success were seated in front near us. I hoped (but did not ascertain. that Russia's man was there to hear and greet his great countryman and Boston's indomitable orchestra ... It was the thrill of a lifetime."

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 5 - 1950 91

GREEK STAGE IS TANGLEWOOD PLAN FOR 1951

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—Construction of a Greek theater seating 25,000 will begin next year at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor has disclosed that the amphitheater will be patterned after those of ancient Greek times.

"We will have our stage masters, composers and conductors," Koussevitzky said. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 when he appeared Thursday as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of the festival and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of de Sabata as guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's director.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when de Sabata was given a five-minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festibal Overture."

De Sabata returns to Tanglewood today for another performance.

[90]

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shown here is an artist's conception of some of the people and their work connected with the Berkshire Music Center production of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." The 20-year-old work, based on a folk-legend of ancient France, will gets its initial American presentation at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Shown in this sketch are Dr. Jan Pepper, musical director of the production and acting head of the Tanglewood opera department (left center), and Jacques Ibert (right center), the noted French composer, who teaches advanced musical composition at Tanglewood this summer, on his first visit to America. On the left is baritone Manfred Hecht, sing the title role. J... M. Ibert is costume designer Leo van Witsen.

Stage director F. Cowles Strickland and Philippe de Rosier, scenic designer, are not seen in this impression.

The artist, Arthur Polonsky of the Boston Museum School's summer session faculty, whose classes are held at the summer session's quarters at the Berk... Music Center, made these ...ils.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 5 - 1950

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE & POST
AUG 5 - 1950

Behind the Success At Tanglewood

ALL reports from Tanglewood indicate that the great center of music in the beauty of the Berkshires is flourishing this Summer. It is astonishing that this enterprise should have become, in a few short years, one of the principal music festivals in the world.

There are several reasons for the success. The setting is incomparable. The tremendous Music Shed and other buildings on what was once a magnificent private estate are admirably appointed for thorough enjoyment of concerts. The activity of thousands of patrons, rich and not rich, has been indispensable. The Boston Symphony is superb. But the main reason for Tanglewood, and its concerts which sometimes draw upwards of 10,000 listeners of an afternoon or evening, is unquestionably the vision and genius of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky combined with the sense and practical acumer of the trustees.

It is true that this year there was a flurry between the eminent music director and the trustees over the latter's designation of a couple of foreign guest conductors. But the controversy has not been fundamental, and there is full mutual appreciation by both sides of each one's part in the Tanglewood accomplishment.

THERE was an arresting remark in Dr. Koussevitzky's interview given Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic. He said, "Tanglewood today, it is but the beginning."

"The beginning," he said! Here is a man in his late seventies, who in 26 years as its conductor led the Boston Symphony to the heights, and who inspired this Tanglewood achievement with its hundreds of students and overflowing audiences. Yet he dreams of still greater things ahead.

Candidly, we cannot see how a vast Greek amphitheater at Tanglewood, seating 25,000 persons and playing music drama in the classic mode, will ever fit the practical limits of space and human demand. As it is, the thousands who attend Tanglewood tax Berkshire transport and housing. And even art must heed the arithmetic of investment and budget. Perhaps Dr. Koussevitzky, suggesting the plan in his talk with Mr. Morin, was setting his sights purposely high.

But that Tanglewood is going forward, Greek theater or no Greek theater, is evident. There is imagination and venture in it. And that should be a stimulus to every music festival of any pretensions in the country—including Worcester's.

Music Has Its Politics

There is politics in music even as it is greatly presented at Tanglewood. They love Serge Koussevitzky as wel... they may. When he comes into the great shed these days to take his place in his box everybody rises. They should. People should give present and personal honor to the men who lift music to yet higher powers for them.

Somebody sees the maestro step from his car and enter the shed with no show of his own part. He rises Everybody rises and stands until Koussevitzky takes his seat. We do that for Governors and Presidents and even we have had mayors in Holyoke who thought it should be done for them. Not our present mayor. You feel the glow that spreads across the audience when somebody says "It is Koussevitzky."

But Thursday night Koussevitzky was not in his box. If he had slipped in thru the dark of the evening nobody saw him. The occasion was the conducting of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Victor de Sabata, the great Italian conductor. Somewhere in the background de Sabata had been invited to conduct and the invitation was not issued by Koussevitzky — just a mistake somewhere.

Because Koussevitzky had taken that bit of manners to the people by radio on a Sunday evening, everybody who was among the 8500 listeners last night, knew. Many of the regular box holders did not come even if they have such easy parking facilities. But the great audience gave to de Sabata such a reception as no conductor has ever evoked at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony, as of today, is Koussevitzky's creation. It has long been a very great orchestra. Under Koussevitzky it has been made the greatest orchestra in the world. Thursday night it proved its greatness and its universality by doing everything de-Sabata asked of them.

Nor should it be omitted that with this yesterday came the announcement by Koussvitzky that the Berkshire Music Center will build a theater after the ancient Greek pattern that will seat 25,000 people. It will have its own stage managers, composers and conductors. That can be done. Some fine music has come out of the schools conducted at Tanglewood for the past ten years or so Already the world is forgetting Stockbridge and Lenox, the towns at whose edges Tanglewood sits. The world over it is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

And some one asks where will the 25,000 park their cars? It may be heresy to bring to the Berkshire Center's attention that the soul stirring of the magnificent concerts are followed by headaching of those whoe would get out Tanglewood's primitive parking areas by the winding roads.

One could consider this problem politically, too, for great is Tanglewood and increasingly great is the public interest and effort to be part of it.

Retail merchants of the country are to be congratulated. With a war on, and possible consumer goods to be taken off the market occuping purchasers minds, the merchants are attempting to rationalize the thinking of customers by conducting sales of regular merchandise, at reduced, and in some instances, drastic reductions.

Confusion reigned at Washington yesterday at the meeting of a House committee investigating lobbying activities. There was an exchange of tongue between Rep H. L. Lanham, Democrat of Georgia, and William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights of Congress. There was almost an exchange of blows. Patterson bluntly refused to surrender twice-subpoenaed data of the Civil Rights Congress. The House committee recommended that Mr. Patterson be cited for contempt. Talk then centered on lynchings in Georgia. Mr. Patterson said that state had a world-wide reputation for lynching Negroes. Rep. Lanham resented the allegation and called Patterson a liar and another name—not a nice one either. Mr. Patterson said "lie" to several statements of Mr. Lanham, who scurried from the committee dias in the direction of Mr. Patterson. With fists doubled, Mr. Lanham was checked by attendants and police when his rush had advanced to within a few feet of Mr. Patterson. Someone, not the chairman, Mr. Lanham, moved for an adjournment. Someone, not the chairman, asked, "all in favor, say aye." There was no need to ask, "those opposed, speak up." The meeting adjourned after the first

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shifting Scenes

Report On Berkshire Festival Comes From Flora Ward Hineline

By RUTH ELGUTTER

IF A PERSON can't heer (or see) something exciting herself the next best thing is to get a vivid description from someone who has been there. It always has been one of my dreams to go to Tanglewood some summer and hear the Berkshire Festival. Somehow my plans never have worked out to get me to Lenox at the right time so I'm always delighted to get reports on one of America's finest institutions conducted annually by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra in the beautiful setting of the Berkshire Hills.

Flora Ward Hineline, who has one of the most keenly attuned musical ears in these parts, and her daughter-in-law, Leone Hineline, made the pilgrimage this year and F. W. H. has written a most enthusiastic report, which I'm reprinting in part here.

On the evening when she arrived, "10,000 were expected to hear Koussevitzky do his Debussy program," Mrs. Hineline writes. "I didn't count them but between those in the huge shed and the three or four thousand on the grass outside, I guess that many got there. Everything from blue jeans to ermine in the audience.

"The concert was utterly superb. Koussevitzky holds the palm for Debussy in this country for my money. If 'La Mer' has even been better done anywhere by any conductor I wasn't present. He got a wild ovation. The Bruckner was wonderful, too, of course."

Mrs. Hineline reports that Koussevitzky now seats his orchestra "in the round," to use the new theatrical phrase.

"This brings the second violins with backs to the audience but eyes on the conductor as it was never possible before," she says. "Another innovation—to me, at least—was the bass viol players seated in especially constructed high chairs, each holding his instrument on his lap. I'm all for it—they should have sat down years ago."

"At intermission," Mrs. Hineline continues, "Leone spied Fritz Kreisler in the crowd milling to get to the front—his bushy hair as white as his evening jacket. Madame Kreisler, majestic in formal gown shooing folks away with the admonition, 'He's going backstage.' But coming back she could not stop the hand he got from the crowd rushing back to seats.

"Saw Mrs. Kossevitzky, blond and beautiful, in snowy chiffon falling to the floor, over which she wore the new half-length evening wrap—also white.

"The only Toledoan we could glimpe in the huge audience was Mrs. Sidney Vinnedge, who had motored down earlier in the week alone but was meeting her daughter and grandchildren to motor back and show the youngsters Niagara Falls.

"The night was perfect and at sundown we stood in the formal gardens where the marble circle holds the inscription to the donors, with the beautiful Berkshires like a stage backdrop—unbelievably lovely. Here, I thought, is American democracy at its best in this gathering of thousands of music lovers.

"As guests of citizens of Lenox and Pittsfield, representatives of 26 nations from the United Nations at Lake Success were seated in front near us. I hoped (but did not ascertain that Russia's man was there to hear and greet his great countryman and Boston's indomitable orchestra . . . It was the thrill of a lifetime."

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 5 - 1950

GREEK STAGE IS TANGLEWOOD PLAN FOR 1951

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—Construction of a Greek theater seating 25,000 will begin next year at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The veteran Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor has disclosed that the amphitheater will be patterned after those of ancient Greek times.

"We will have our stage masters, composers and conductors," Koussevitzky said. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 when he appeared Thursday as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of the festival and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of de Sabata as guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's director.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when de Sabata was given a five-minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

De Sabata returns to Tanglewood today for another performance.

[90]

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shown here is an artist's conception of some of the people and their work connected with the Berkshire Music Center production of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." The 20-year-old work, based on a folk-legend of ancient France, will gets its initial American presentation at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Shown in this sketch are Dr. Jan Pepper, musical director of the production and acting head of the Tanglewood opera department (left center), and Jacques Ibert (right center), the noted French composer, who teaches advanced musical composition at Tanglewood this summer, on his first visit to America. On the left is baritone Manfred Hecht, who will sing the title role. Just below M. Ibert is costume designer Leo van Witsen.

Stage director F. Cowles Strickland and Philippe de Rosier, scenic designer, are not seen in this impression.

The artist, Arthur Polonsky of the Boston Museum School's summer session faculty, whose classes are held at the summer session's quarters at the Berkshire Music Center, made these sketches during rehearsals.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1950

Shifting Scenes

Report On Berkshire Festival Comes From Flora Ward Hineline

By RUTH ELGUTTER

IF A PERSON can't hear (or see) something exciting herself the next best thing is to get a vivid description from someone who has been there. It always has been one of my dreams to go to Tanglewood some summer and hear the Berkshire Festival. Somehow my plans never have worked out to get me to Lenox at the right time so I'm always delighted to get reports on one of America's finest institutions conducted annually by the great Boston Symphony Orchestra in the beautiful setting of the Berkshire Hills.

Flora Ward Hineline, who has one of the most keenly attuned musical ears in these parts, and her daughter-in-law, Leone Hineline, made the pilgrimage this year and F. W. H. has written a most enthusiastic report, which I'm reprinting in part here.

On the evening when she arrived, "10,000 were expected to hear Koussevitzky do his Debussy program," Mrs. Hineline writes. "I didn't count them but between those in the huge shed and the three or four thousand on the grass outside, I guess that many got there. Everything from blue jeans to ermine in the audience.

"The concert was utterly superb. Koussevitzky holds the palm for Debussy in this country for my money. If 'La Mer' has even been better done anywhere by any conductor I wasn't present. He got a wild ovation. The Bruckner was wonderful, too, of course."

Mrs. Hineline reports that Koussevitzky now seats his orchestra "in the round," to use the new theatrical phrase.

"This brings the second violins with backs to the audience but eyes on the conductor as it was never possible before," she says. "Another innovation—to me, at least—was the bass viol players seated in especially constructed high chairs, each holding his instrument on his lap. I'm all for it—they should have sat down years ago."

"At intermission," Mrs. Hineline continues, "Leone spied Fritz Kreisler in the crowd milling to get to the front—his bushy hair as white as his evening jacket. Madame Kreisler, majestic in formal gown shooing folks away with the admonition, 'He's going backstage.' But coming back she could not stop the hand he got from the crowd rushing back to seats.

"Saw Mrs. Kossevitzky, blond and beautiful, in snowy chiffon falling to the floor, over which she wore the new half-length evening wrap—also white.

"The only Toledoan we could glimpe in the huge audience was Mrs. Sidney Vinnedge, who had motored down earlier in the week alone but was meeting her daughter and grandchildren to motor back and show the youngsters Niagara Falls.

"The night was perfect and at sundown we stood in the formal gardens where the marble circle holds the inscription to the donors, with the beautiful Berkshires like a stage backdrop—unbelievably lovely. Here, I thought, is American democracy at its best in this gathering of thousands of music lovers.

"As guests of citizens of Lenox and Pittsfield, representatives of 26 nations from the United Nations at Lake Success were seated in front near us. I hoped (but did not ascertain, that Russia's man was there to hear and greet his great countryman and Boston's indomitable orchestra . . It was the thrill of a lifetime."

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE & POST
AUG 5 - 1950

Behind the Success At Tanglewood

ALL reports from Tanglewood indicate that the great center of music in the beauty of the Berkshires is flourishing this Summer. It is astonishing that this enterprise should have become, in a few short years, one of the principal music festivals in the world.

There are several reasons for the success. The setting is incomparable. The tremendous Music Shed and other buildings on what was once a magnificent private estate are admirably appointed for thorough enjoyment of concerts. The activity of thousands of patrons, rich and not rich, has been indispensable. The Boston Symphony is superb. But the main reason for Tanglewood, and its concerts which sometimes draw upwards of 10,000 listeners of an afternoon or evening, is unquestionably the vision and genius of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky combined with the sense and practical acumer of the trustees.

It is true that this year there was a flurry between the eminent music director and the trustees over the latter's designation of a couple of foreign guest conductors. But the controversy has not been fundamental, and there is full mutual appreciation by both sides of each one's part in the Tanglewood accomplishment.

THERE was an arresting remark in Dr. Koussevitzky's interview given Raymond Morin, Telegram music critic. He said, "Tanglewood today, it is but the beginning."

"The beginning," he said! Here is a man in his late seventies, who in 26 years as its conductor led the Boston Symphony to the heights, and who inspired this Tanglewood achievement with its hundreds of students and overflowing audiences. Yet he dreams of still greater things ahead.

Candidly, we cannot see how a vast Greek amphitheater at Tanglewood, seating 25,000 persons and playing music drama in the classic mode, will ever fit the practical limits of space and human demand. As it is, the thousands who attend Tanglewood tax Berkshire transport and housing. And even art must heed the arithmetic of investment and budget. Perhaps Dr. Koussevitzky, suggesting the plan in his talk with Mr. Morin, was setting his sights purposely high.

But that Tanglewood is going forward, Greek theater or no Greek theater, is evident. There is imagination and venture in it. And that should be a stimulus to every music festival of any pretensions in the country—including Worcester's.

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 5 - 1950

Music Has Its Politics

There is politics in music even as it is greatly presented at Tanglewood. They love Serge Koussevitzky as well they may. When he comes into the great shed these days to take his place in his box everybody rises. They should. People should give present and personal honor to the men who lift music to yet higher powers for them.

Somebody sees the maestro step from his car and enter the shed with no show of his own part. He rises Everybody rises and stands until Koussevitzky takes his seat. We do that for Governors and Presidents and even we have had mayors in Holyoke who thought it should be done for them. Not our present mayor. You feel the glow that spreads across the audience when somebody says "It is Koussevitzky."

But Thursday night Koussevitzky was not in his box. If he had slipped in thru the dark of the evening nobody saw him. The occasion was the conducting of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Victor de Sabata, the great Italian conductor. Somewhere in the background de Sabata had been invited to conduct and the invitation was not issued by Koussevitzky — just a mistake somewhere.

Because Koussevitzky had taken that bit of manners to the people by radio on a Sunday evening, everybody who was among the 8500 listeners last night, knew. Many of the regular box holders did not come even if they have such easy parking facilities. But the great audience gave to de Sabata such a reception as no conductor has ever evoked at Tanglewood.

The Boston Symphony, as of today, is Koussevitzky's creation. It has long been a very great orchestra. Under Koussevitzky it has been made the greatest orchestra in the world. Thursday night it proved its greatness and its universality by doing everything de Sabata asked of them.

Nor should it be omitted that with this yesterday came the announcement by Koussvitzky that the Berkshire Music Center will build a theater after the ancient Greek pattern that will seat 25,000 people. It will have its own stage managers, composers and conductors. That can be done. Some fine music has come out of the schools conducted at Tanglewood for the past ten years or so.

Already the world is forgetting Stockbridge and Lenox, the towns at whose edges Tanglewood sits. The world over it is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

And some one asks where will the 25,000 park their cars? It may be heresy to bring to the Berkshire Center's attention that the soul stirring of the magnificent concerts are followed by headaching of those whpe would get out Tanglewood's primitive parking areas by the winding roads.

One could consider this problem politically, too, for great is Tanglewood and increasingly great is the public interest and effort to be part of it.

Retail merchants of the country are to be congratulated. With a war on, and possible consumer goods to be taken off the market occuping purchasers minds, the merchants are attempting to rationalize the thinking of customers by conducting sales of regular merchandise, at reduced, and in some instances, drastic reductions.

Confusion reigned at Washington yesterday at the meeting of a House committee investigating lobbying activities. There was an exchange of tongue between Rep H. L. Lanham, Democrat of Georgia, and William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights of Congress. There was almost an exchange of blows. Patterson bluntly refused to surrender twice-subpoenaed data of the Civil Rights Congress. The House committee recommended that Mr. Patterson be cited for contempt. Talk then centered on lynchings in Georgia. Mr. Patterson said that state had a world-wide reputation for lynching Negroes. Rep. Lanham resented the allegation and called Patterson a liar and another name—not a nice one either. Mr. Patterson said "lie" to several statements of Mr. Lanham, who scurried from the committee dias in the direction of Mr. Patterson. With fists doubled, Mr. Lanham was checked by attendants and police when his rush had advanced to within a few feet of Mr. Patterson. Someone, not the chairman, Mr. Lanham, moved for an adjournment. Someone, not the chairman, asked, "all in favor, say aye." There was no need to ask, "those opposed, speak up." The meeting adjourned after the first question was put.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 6 - 1950

GREEK STAGE IS TANGLEWOOD PLAN FOR 1951

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—Construction of a Greek theater seating 25,000 will begin next year at Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center, according to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The famed Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor has disclosed that the amphitheater will be patterned after those of ancient Greek times.

"We will have our stage masters, composers and conductors," Koussevitzky said. "They will find a way to create a tragedy of our times—not less tragic than the tragedies of ancient Greece."

Victor de Sabata, noted Italian conductor, was given an enthusiastic reception by a crowd of some 8,500 when he appeared Thursday as a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of the festival and retired conductor of the orchestra, had protested the engagement of de Sabata as guest conductor "without my knowledge." He was engaged by the orchestra's director.

Koussevitzky was not in the audience when de Sabata was given a five-minute ovation at the conclusion of the opening number, Brahm's "Academic Festival Overture."

De Sabata returns to Tanglewood today for another performance.

[90]

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1950

The World of Music

Jacques Ibert Opera to Have American Premiere at Tanglewood, Mass.

New York. (U.P.)—The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitsky, director, on Aug. 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

"The King of Yvetot" is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique, in Paris, Jan. 6, 1930, and has been given since in Dusseldorf, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

The one-act opera "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss of the Tanglewood faculty, based on the short story of Mark Twain, also will be produced in the theater at Tanglewood.

High in the North Carolina Balsam Mountains, where the fiddle and banjo long have been king, a new kind of music has taken over.

French horns, violins, and piano echo daily through the Transylvania music camp and the Brevard music festival, twin projects of being the south's first music center.

It started in 1937 when a young graduate of the University of Michigan who was director of music at Davidson College in North Carolina established a summer session in music for high school students.

That was the first step, but in 1945, when its director, James Pfohl, stumbled across an abandoned boy's camp near Brevard, N.C. in the shadow of the Balsams, he established the music camp. It was a place for young men and women to come for six weeks and study music at the same time they enjoyed mountain camp life.

The following year, the Transylvania music camp was followed by the first Brevard music festival, with prominent artists from outside coming to join camp graduates in concert presentations.

Sixty thousand people heard the Philadelphia Orchestra in four free concerts at Philadelphia's convention hall, climaxing the 50th anniversary season with one of the greatest successes in the history of the organization.

On four successive nights, Eugene Ormandy led his full orchestra of 110 musicians in programs of standard and popular symphonic fare, presented under the auspices of the city of Philadelphia in return for an appropriation of $50,000 toward the orchestra's maintenance. It was the first time the city council has appropriated funds for the orchestra.

Mayor Bernard Samuel observed:

"If there was any doubt about the desire of a large number of Philadelphians to hear their orchestra, it was dispelled by the throng of 15,000 music lovers who filled convention hall each evening."

To make a small room look king-size, paint the walls in a light color. Works eye-magic miracles!

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1950

RECORD REVIEWS

Donizetti: "Il Campanello," opera buffa in one act; Clara Scarangella, soprano; Sesto Bruscantini, bass; Miti Truccato Pace, mezzo-soprano; Renato Capecchi, bass-baritone; Angelo Mercuriala, tenor; orchestra and chorus of Radio Italiana, Alfredo Simonetto conducting (Cetra-Soria 50.027, one 12-inch LP record). This one-act gem of opera buffa has been heard only once in America, when it was sung by David Bispham in 1917. It is packed with Donizetti's best brand of sparkling melody and the long stretches of recitative need bother no one content to follow the libretto which comes with the album. Anyway, half the fun is in the story, being about a disappointed lover who schemes to keep an elderly apothecary from his young bride on their wedding night. The singing is good in an expert buffa style, and the recording excellent.

Mozart: "Linz" Symphony No. 36 in C (Koechel 425). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting (Victor WDM 1354, three 45 r.p.m. records). The last recordings of Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra are perhaps particularly to be cherished, though the first and slow movements of this have a sluggishness and lethargy that are hardly characteristic of this combination. The minuet and finale, however, are brisk and up to the best standard.

Franck: Piano Quintet in F Minor; the Chigi Quintet (London ffrr LLP 201, one 12-inch LP record). Franck's Quintet for piano and string quartet is one of his finest and most characteristic works; though many reminiscences from his other compositions appear in it, it is a broad, strong work of great drive and dramatic force. A well-balanced and sympathetic reading is given by an Italian chamber music group. A. G.

MARSHALL, TEXAS
NEWS-MESSENGER
AUG 6 1950

Myra Hess Plays After Illness

Pianist Myra Hess gave her first recital since her illness in England recently. Engagement was highlighed by a special dinner tendered the pianist by the Admiral in command of the Portsmouth Naval Base.

Occasion took place aboard His Majesty's Ship "Victory," — Lord Nelson's flagship in the famous battle of Trafalgar, and now preserved for the purpose of entertaining important guests. Dame Myra also played under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in a concert given in the London suburbs.

The instrumentalist returns to the United States this fall to resume the tour cancelled because of her illness this past season.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1950

Berkshire Festival Busy In Normally Dull Season

BY BETTY A. DIETZ

Daily News Music Editor

IT'S THE in-between season. Instrumentalists and singers are making the most of the last few weeks before it's time to settle down again and make music. Final plans are being lined up for the season ahead. In Dayton only the band concerts at the shell in Island park remain to entertain the summer crowds. Last night at Cincinnati the zoo opera company rang down the curtain on Tosca, at the same time ending the 1950 season of outdoor grand opera.

The excellent ticket sales for the zoo opera this year have prompted new talk of a longer season and the possibility of a new outdoor theater. Incidentally, despite Cincinnati's wealth of music lovers, about half the operagoers are out-of-towners, with Daytonians leading the trek to the zoo. Missing from the scene was Sigmund Effron, concertmaster of the opera orchestra and the Cincinnati Symphony, who was too ill to participate in the series. Effron for several years commuted to Dayton to serve as concertmaster of the Philharmonic orchestra.

Perhaps the busiest place in the country is Lenox, Mass., where the Berkshire Festival is in full swing. This week it was announced that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will make her first appearance on a symphonic program Aug. 11 at Tanglewood. She will be narrator in Prokofieff's Peter and the Woif when it is performed by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony.

According to Ralph Berkowitz, Koussevitzky's executive assistant, and a pianist, who has rehearsed the work with Mrs. Roosevelt, she knows no music. But as they worked with the score she soon lost her nervousness. After the public performance RCA Victor will make a recording of the entrancing Prokofieff piece with Mrs. Roosevelt and the orchestra.

This week—Monday and Tuesday—the Berkshire Music Center will be the scene of the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, The King of Yvetot. The work is one of several by the French composer to be presented during the festival. Ibert, director of the French academy in Rome, is teaching advanced composition classes at Tangelwood this season and the performances were arranged in his honor.

Ibert's opera was first performed in Paris at the Opera Comique in 1930. It will be sung in English. The story of The King of Yvetot is based on a legend, founded on fact. The small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France, was an independent principality until the 14th century. Rebellion of the rural community against the king and its assumption of control forms the framework of the plot.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 6 - 1950

In Music World

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

"Tanglewood on Parade," the annual added attraction of the Berkshire Music festival will take place Friday from 6 to 11 p. m. The proceeds are for the benefit of the Berkshire Music center. For those who were unable to obtain tickets for the big festival, this is an opportunity to see and hear every phase of music as it is presented on the Center grounds.

THE CELEBRATION will get underway with an assembly and parade, symphony orchestra concert, opera scenes, selections by the chorus, and chamber music. The Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in the Haydn "Oxford" symphony; symphony "From the New World" by Dvorak and Prokofieff's fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf." Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has consented to act as narrator in the latter work. There will be door prizes and dancing on the lawns, rain or shine. Tickets admitting to all events range in price from $2.50 to $5.00.

THE PROGRAM for this afternoon will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, and will include Ravel's "Mother Goose" suite; the Ravel piano concerto with Mr. Bernstein playing and conducting from the keyboard, and excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

Series C, starting Thursday, the final of the season will include the Bach Mass in B-minor in two parts, at 5 and 8:15 p. m., with a solo quartet consisting of Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct. On Saturday night the concert will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, and will include "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz; Ibert's "Escales" and "Choros 10," by Villa-Lobos. The final concert of the season will be held Sunday afternoon, a 3 o'clock at which time the music to be played is Prokofieff's "Symphony, No. 6" and Brahms' "Symphony, No. 1."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 5 - 1950

Tanglewood

Tanglewood Featured In Collier's Magazine

A photographic layout depicting "Tanglewood Time," with informal snaps of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other Berkshire Music Center celebrities, plus two of the concerts, appears in the current issue of Collier's magazine.

Among the persons in the pictures are Dr. Koussevitzky, assistant director Aaron Copland, Olivier Messiaen, the French composer who taught at Tanglewood last year; and Miss Peggy Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, Boston Symphony Orchestra executive and program annotator.

The pictures were taken by Miss Ruth Orkin of New York, a frequent visitor at the Music Center last summer.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG 6 - 1950

Ibert Comic Opera Gets US Premiere Monday

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass, Aug 5.—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday.

The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the production here of his opera was designed to honor his presence.

"The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert to be performed here this summer.

Musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director of the production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality.

The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France. The story is a legend founded on the historical fact of the onetime existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th Century. A ballad of the Napoleonic era concerning its magnanimous king was the basis for M. Ibert's opera.

The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevent effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
AUG 5 - 1950

Opera Premiere Due Next Week At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Aug. 5 The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday. The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence.

"The King of Yvetot" will be the major production of the Opera Department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the Opera Department, which, in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas.

Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University, Palo Alto, Calif.

[91]

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST-JOURNAL
AUG 5 - 1950

The World of Music

Jacques Ibert Opera to Have American Premiere at Tanglewood, Mass.

New York. (U.P.)—The opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" by Jacques Ibert will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitsky, director, on Aug. 7 and 8.

The French composer will make his first visit to America to join Aaron Copland in the composition class of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

"The King of Yvetot" is a comic opera in four acts, to a text of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse. It was first performed at the Opera Comique, in Paris, Jan. 6, 1930, and has been given since in Dusseldorf, Gratz and Prague. The action is set in early France and uses melodies of folk character.

The one-act opera "The Jumping Frog" by Lukas Foss of the Tanglewood faculty, based on the short story of Mark Twain, also will be produced in the theater at Tanglewood.

High in the North Carolina Balsam Mountains, where the fiddle and banjo long have been king, a new kind of music has taken over.

French horns, violins, and piano echo daily through the Transylvania music camp and the Brevard music festival, twin projects of being the south's first music center.

It started in 1937 when a young graduate of the University of Michigan who was director of music at Davidson College in North Carolina established a summer session in music for high school students.

That was the first step, but in 1945, when its director, James Pfohl, stumbled across an abandoned boy's camp near Brevard, N.C. in the shadow of the Balsams, he established the music camp. It was a place for young men and women to come for six weeks and study music at the same time they enjoyed mountain camp life.

The following year, the Transylvania music camp was followed by the first Brevard music festival, with prominent artists from outside coming to join camp graduates in concert presentations.

Sixty thousand people heard the Philadelphia Orchestra in four free concerts at Philadelphia's convention hall, climaxing the 50th anniversary season with one of the greatest successes in the history of the organization.

On four successive nights, Eugene Ormandy led his full orchestra of 110 musicians in programs of standard and popular symphonic fare, presented under the auspices of the city of Philadelphia in return for an appropriation of $50,000 toward the orchestra's maintenance. It was the first time the city council has appropriated funds for the orchestra.

Mayor Bernard Samuel observed:

"If there was any doubt about the desire of a large number of Philadelphians to hear their orchestra, it was dispelled by the throng of 15,000 music lovers who filled convention hall each evening."

To make a small room look king-size, paint the walls in a light color. Works eye magic miracles!

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1950

RECORD REVIEWS

Donizetti: "Il Campanello," opera buffa in one act; Clara Scarangella, soprano; Sesto Bruscantini, bass; Miti Truccato Pace, mezzo-soprano; Renato Capecchi, bass-baritone; Angelo Mercuriala, tenor; orchestra and chorus of Radio Italiana, Alfredo Simonetto conducting (Cetra-Soria 50,027, one 12-inch LP record). This one-act gem of opera buffa has been heard only once in America, when it was sung by David Bispham in 1917. It is packed with Donizetti's best brand of sparkling melody and the long stretches of recitative need bother no one content to follow the libretto which comes with the album. Anyway, half the fun is in the story, being about a disappointed lover who schemes to keep an elderly apothecary from his young bride on their wedding night. The singing is good in an expert buffa style, and the recording excellent.

Mozart: "Linz" Symphony No. 36 in C (Koechel 425). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting (Victor WDM 1354, three 45 r.p.m. records). The last recordings of Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony Orchestra are perhaps particularly to be cherished, though the first and slow movements of this have a sluggishness and lethargy that are hardly characteristic of this combination. The minuet and finale, however, are brisk and up to the best standard.

Franck: Piano Quintet in F Minor; the Chigi Quintet (London ffrr LLP 201, one 12-inch LP record). Franck's Quintet for piano and string quartet is one of his finest and most characteristic works; though many reminiscences from his other compositions appear in it, it is a broad, strong work of great drive and dramatic force. A well-balanced and sympathetic reading is given by an Italian chamber music group. A. G.

MARSHALL, TEXAS
NEWS-MESSENGER
AUG 6 1950

Myra Hess Plays After Illness

Pianist Myra Hess gave her first recital since her illness in England recently. Engagement was highlighed by a special dinner tendered the pianist by the Admiral in command of the Portsmouth Naval Base.

Occasion took place aboard His Majesty's Ship "Victory," — Lord Nelson's flagship in the famous battle of Trafalgar, and now preserved for the purpose of entertaining important guests. Dame Myra also played under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in a concert given in the London suburbs.

The instrumentalist returns to the United States this fall to resume the tour cancelled because of her illness this past season.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1950

Berkshire Festival Busy In Normally Dull Season

BY BETTY A. DIETZ
Daily News Music Editor

IT'S THE in-between season. Instrumentalists and singers are making the most of the last few weeks before it's time to settle down again and make music. Final plans are being lined up for the season ahead. In Dayton only the band concerts at the shell in Island park remain to entertain the summer crowds. Last night at Cincinnati the zoo opera company rang down the curtain on Tosca, at the same time ending the 1950 season of outdoor grand opera.

The excellent ticket sales for the zoo opera this year have prompted new talk of a longer season and the possibility of a new outdoor theater. Incidentally, despite Cincinnati's wealth of music lovers, about half the operagoers are out-of-towners, with Daytonians leading the trek to the zoo. Missing from the scene was Sigmund Effron, concertmaster of the opera orchestra and the Cincinnati Symphony, who was too ill to participate in the series. Effron for several years commuted to Dayton to serve as concertmaster of the Philharmonic orchestra.

Perhaps the busiest place in the country is Lenox, Mass., where the Berkshire Festival is in full swing. This week it was announced that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will make her first appearance on a symphonic program Aug. 11 at Tanglewood. She will be narrator in Prokofieff's Peter and the Wolf when it is performed by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony.

According to Ralph Berkowitz, Koussevitzky's executive assistant, and a pianist, who has rehearsed the work with Mrs. Roosevelt, she knows no music. But as they worked with the score she soon lost her nervousness. After the public performance RCA Victor will make a recording of the entrancing Prokofieff piece with Mrs. Roosevelt and the orchestra.

This week—Monday and Tuesday—the Berkshire Music Center will be the scene of the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, The King of Yvetot. The work is one of several by the French composer to be presented during the festival. Ibert, director of the French academy in Rome, is teaching advanced composition classes at Tangelwood this season and the performances were arranged in his honor.

Ibert's opera was first performed in Paris at the Opera Comique in 1930. It will be sung in English. The story of The King of Yvetot is based on a legend, founded on fact. The small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France, was an independent principality until the 14th century. Rebellion of the rural community against the king and its assumption of control forms the framework of the plot.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 6 - 1950

In Music World

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

"Tanglewood on Parade," the annual added attraction of the Berkshire Music festival will take place Friday from 6 to 11 p. m. The proceeds are for the benefit of the Berkshire Music center. For those who were unable to obtain tickets for the big festival, this is an opportunity to see and hear every phase of music as it is presented on the Center grounds.

THE CELEBRATION will get underway with an assembly and parade, symphony orchestra concert, opera scenes, selections by the chorus, and chamber music. The Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in the Haydn "Oxford" symphony; symphony "From the New World" by Dvorak and Prokofieff's fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf." Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has consented to act as narrator in the latter work. There will be door prizes and dancing on the lawns, rain or shine. Tickets admitting to all events range in price from $2.50 to $5.00.

THE PROGRAM for this afternoon will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, and will include Ravel's "Mother Goose" suite; the Ravel piano concerto with Mr. Bernstein playing and conducting from the keyboard, and excerpts from "Romeo and Juliet" by Berlioz.

Series C, starting Thursday, the final of the season will include the Bach Mass in B-minor in two parts, at 5 and 8:15 p. m., with a solo quartet consisting of Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct. On Saturday night the concert will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, and will include "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz; Ibert's "Escales" and "Choros 10," by Villa-Lobos. The final concert of the season will be held Sunday afternoon, a 3 o'clock at which time the music to be played is Prokofieff's "Symphony, No. 6" and Brahms' "Symphony, No. 1."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 5 - 1950

Tanglewood

Tanglewood Featured In Collier's Magazine

A photographic layout depicting "Tanglewood Time," with informal snaps of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and other Berkshire Music Center celebrities, plus two of the concerts, appears in the current issue of Collier's magazine.

Among the persons in the pictures are Dr. Koussevitzky, assistant director Aaron Copland, Olivier Messiaen, the French composer who taught at Tanglewood last year; and Miss Peggy Burk, daughter of John N. Burk, Boston Symphony Orchestra executive and program annotator.

The pictures were taken by Miss Ruth Orkin of New York, a frequent visitor at the Music Center last summer.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG 6 1950

Ibert Comic Opera Gets US Premiere Monday

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass, Aug 5.—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday.

The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the production here of his opera was designed to honor his presence.

"The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert to be performed here this summer.

Musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director of the production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality.

The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France. The story is a legend founded on the historical fact of the onetime existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th Century. A ballad of the Napoleonic era concerning its magnanimous king was the basis for M. Ibert's opera.

The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevent effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
AUG 5 - 1950

Opera Premiere Due Next Week At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Aug. 5—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday. The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence.

"The King of Yvetot" will be the major production of the Opera Department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the Opera Department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas.

Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University, Palo Alto, Calif.

[91]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 6 - 1950

Contradictory Styles Of Conducting Shown

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX Sunday—More so than on Thursday night, last Tanglewood program served to view two contradictory styles by Victor de Sabata of conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood—the flamboyant and ultra-conservative.

There may be basic traits of the latter conductor and from those who have seen him conduct other orchestras elsewhere, that they are. But we are told that they are. But we are told that extensive studying the flamboyant conductor has been restrained to these two Berkshire music festival concerts.

Program

The program last night, Bach, Suite from the Christmas Oratorio; Mozart, Symphony in E-flat major, K. 543; Berlioz, Roman Carnival Overture," Bach, Piano Concertante, for Gruenberg, Piano and viola obligati (soloists Richard Burgin, Alfred Krips and Joseph De Pasquale); Beethoven, Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

Mr. Sabata's appearance on the podium, which caused a furore, much speculation has been voiced regarding the sincerity of his interpretive conceptions and the particular methods he employs in making known his wishes to the orchestra.

On the basis of what we have seen which is admittedly inadequate in view of the puzzling aspects involved) we are inclined to go along with the opinion that his super-energized directives, many of them grotesque to the eye, are a means to an end and not the technique of exhibitionism.

Strong Arguments

Two strong arguments for this decision were the Bach and Mozart scores performed last night. There was no question during virtually every phrase that, as we stated in the previous review, Mr. Sabata's primary objectives are to feature melody as prominently as possible whether it be at the expense of lucid form, or not.

Secondly, Mr. Sabata is eagerly bent on making the most of every effect possible—rhythmic or instrumentally colorful—or just arresting.

Podium gyrations did appear en masse in the Berlioz score and we suspect in the Ghedini and Beethoven which we did not hear, but the Bach and Mozart were scrupulously safeguarded against extravagant directive.

Legato Qualities

Throughout the Bach, considerable stress was placed on its legato qualities. Bows were drawn over strings with concentration on evenness and richness of intonation while repartee from woodwinds was spoken cautiously. There was a slight instability of rhythmic pulse between these sections, but a comparatively leisurely tempo made possible an unusually lucid exposition of elements.

The Mozart was distinctly Sabata interpretation — some of it excellent and elsewhere argumentative. The adagio preceding the opening movement was somewhat disorganized, or perhaps it would be more accurate to state that an evasion of close continuity seemed to be the conductor's method. The movement proper, an allegro, was effectively paced at discreet tempos with close attention to tonal contrasts. The finale however, was more romantic than in keeping with tradition, lacking the crispness and energy of other Mozart heard here two seasons ago.

Every Inflection

Sabata took meticulous care in the slow movement to bring out every [illegible] possible, not only between individuals but between themselves. It was slow, but better this than it should be hurried. The audience, on the other hand, benefited from this leisurely approach and created the rare illusion of a true Viennese minuet.

The final movement was imperfectly adjusted to the conductor's baton, as shown in critical phrase entrances and sequential passages between sections.

With the Berlioz score, the "Other Side" of Sabata's podium personality became known. He was very definite in his demands for the "Roman Carnival" overture. Effects were in turn expounded by a swooping baton, arms extended dramatically upwards, vigorous circular movements with both hands, head shaken from side to side—and a special movement of the right arm that would serve well in lasso throwing.

The record audience for this festival, 11,450 persons, reacted as you might expect—with an excited enthusiasm.

Today's Program

This afternoon's concert features Leonard Bernstein as conductor pianist. The program will include "Mother Goose," "Alborado del Gracioso," and concerto for piano and orchestra, all by Ravel; also excerpts from Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
AUG 6 - 1950

American Premiere Of Ibert Comic Opera Tanglewood Event

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS, AUG. 5—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 7 and 8. The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence. "The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford University.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France. The first production of "The King of Yvetot, in what is now France. at the Opera Comique, under the direction of Albert Wolff. Since then, the opera has been performed in several European opera houses. The English translation for this production was made by Henry Reese.

THE story of "The King of Yvetot" is a legend founded on the historical fact of the one-time existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th century. A ballad of the Napoleonic era concerning its magnanimous king was the basis for M. Ibert's opera.

The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevents effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment.

The threat of invasion and the contrivance of a servant-girl are instrumental in this. The romance between the servant-girl, Jeanneton, and the king contrasts with the zestful humor of the rebellion, and ends with Jeanneton's becoming queen of Yvetot.

"THE King of Yvetot" is written in four acts, and has sixteen principals, a chorus, and a full orchestra. Philippe de Rosier is scenic designer, and costumes were created by Leo van Witsen. Manfred Hecht, baritone, will sing the title role, and Ewan Harbrecht takes the part of Jeanneton, the servant-girl.

Other principals, not all of whom will appear on both evenings, include: Mario Lalli, Gene Cox, Rosalind Elias, Beatrice Bush-Kene, Fernand Martel, Thomas Holt, Sumner Crockett, Earl Ringland, Willabelle Underwood, Sara Carter, Angelica Sarris, Helen McCloskey, Arlquine Goodjohn, Joan Spafford, Marni Nixon, James Minser, Irvin Nordquist, Morten Shames and Raymond Wolansky.

The two performances will come on Monday and Tuesday evenings in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. They will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, as the other events of the Berkshire Music Center.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1950

NOTEBOOK:

Tanglewood Introduces U.S. Music

By ARTHUR BERGER

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 5.—Leonard Bernstein's program for a Boston Symphony concert in the mammoth Tanglewood shed went a long way toward giving this year's Berkshire Festival its measure of freshness.

It listed three of our best young American composers whose music Mr. Bernstein brings to life in a fashion no one quite equals. David Diamond's "Timon of Athens" was the news of the occasion. Harold Shapero's adagietto and (with Ellabelle Davis again as the excellent soprano) Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs" had both been favorably received before and were very good to hear again.

Serge Koussevitzky has done more than his share for new music and now, at seventy-six, he seems understandably content to leave this department to his young associates.

But his program was in no sense routine or lacking in power and ambitiousness. Bruckner's hour-long seventh symphony is not the sort of music that lends itself to frequent performances, and this was, as a matter of fact, the first time Mr. Koussevitzky has done it without cuts.

His masterful reading was remarkable for its eloquence, accuracy and style. His tempos, some of them a shade fast for the Brucknerites, minimized the arid stretches and pointed up the several inspired and beautiful ones.

UNSETTELED weather played tricks with the week-end concerts. Partly cloudy, but not unpromising skies preceded the event, but a light rain started to fall at about the second movement of the Bruckner.

Many hardy listeners remained on the lawns, some of them without even protection of blankets or the shelter of trees.

Most of the audience that overflowed the 6,000-capacity shed, however, were allowed to stand under the shed or bring in the outside benches and their own camp chairs.

The attendance was very good, considering that both the weather and programs did not have wide popular appeal. There were almost 10,000 one night and 9,500 for the afternoon.

(Copyright, 1950, by The New York Herald-Tribune, Inc.)

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD
AUG 6 - 1950

Tanglewood Plans 'Yvetot'

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 5—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire music center Monday and Tuesday.

The noted French composer, director of the French academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence. "The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in last years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland of Stanford university.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the opera are varied and full of vitality. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France.

CINCINNATTI OHIO
ENQUIRER
AUG 6 - 1950

Tanglewood Has Premiere

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6 — (Special) — The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King Of Yvetot," will be presented in English at the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow and Tuesday. The noted French composer, director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare as its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality. The libretto is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot, in what is now France. The first production came in 1930 in Paris at the Opera Comique.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1950

JACQUES IBERT'S "The King of Yvetot" will receive its world premiere at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday. The comic opera satirizing government and warfare is being performed as a compliment to the French composer, director of the French Academy in Rome, who is teaching composition at Tanglewood this summer.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 6 - 1950

'Parade' Set By Berkshire

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former United States First Lady, spent last week-end at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., discussing plans for her role as narrator in Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf," scheduled as part of the "Tanglewood on Parade" program on Aug. 11.

Mrs. Roosevelt will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leonard Bernstein, young conductor who arrived at Tanglewood last week following a tour abroad, will conduct today's Shed concert with the Boston Symphony.

He follows Victor de Sabata, Italian conductor, who led the Thursday and Saturday concerts last week.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
AUG 6 - 1950

Berkshire Center To Put On Ibert

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be marking their fifth year of support of Serge Koussevitsky's music school this summer in attending nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions make possible, according to Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends group of the Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., school.

The Friends of the center fully support the full-sized school, which is the only such school maintained by a large orchestra on its own grounds and with its own dormitory. The supporting group makes up the audiences for presentations of the young musicians, in addition to making it possible for them to study under Dr. Koussevitsky and such other outstanding musicians as Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll and Aaron Copland.

The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," will be heard by the Friends. Concerts and recitals, including a series of chamber music programs, will complete the program for the summer.

The 400 students enrolled in the center come from 37 states and 15 foreign countries. Most of their costs are paid from small contributions from friends, but occasional full-tuition, $150 scholarships are provided.

[92]

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 6 - 1950

Why Not a Big Shed For Summer Music?

By Paul Hume

"A SHED for summer concerts here in Washington? Oh, we could never get anything like that! Who would pay for it?"

"You have been paying for it," I told this typical Watergate attender, Miss Citronella Blightmore. Miss Blightmore is the youngest member of a family that has been plaguing Washington musical circles for an entire generation.

"I," she exclaimed, "what do you mean I have been paying for a shed for summer concerts? I put my money into the National Symphony, but we have had such a hard struggle. You newcomers don't know all the trouble we have had getting our own symphony orchestra going here in Washington. No one here really wants music, and the public doesn't support the orchestra."

"Now wait a minute, Miss Blightmore," I interrupted. "Let me say a few things you keep forgetting."

Citronella sat down with a look on her face that meant there was nothing I could tell her about music in Washington that she had not known for 20 years.

Just Like Boston

"IN THE first place," I began with more heat than originality. "the deficit from the last four summers at the Watergate is, at a conservative estimate, $82,000. And that is just about what it would cost to build a beautiful, permanent shed like the one the Boston Symphony has at Tangle-[redacted]

Miss Blightmore's jaw fell as far as her hardened arteries would allow. "$82,000," she gasped. "Why, you must be mistaken. Why, they wouldn't continue the concerts if they lost that much!"

I paused before going on—more from speechlessness at such unanswerable logic than from any sudden burst of gentleness. "No, you wouldn't think they would keep going, with such losses. But they have, because people really want these summer concerts. However, I think it would be a mistake to let them go on any longer this way."

"Oh, you do, do you," she bristled. "That's just what I mean. You people who have come here in the last 10 years just think you can run this city, and tell us who can sing in Constitution Hall, and whether we can have summer concerts, and just what music we should and shouldn't like."

Past the Goal

"NOW wait a minute," I broke in once more. "The recent sustaining fund drive of the National Symphony Orchestra went well past its goal of $190,000. And as to your statement that the public doesn't support music and the orchestra, that money came from a total of 14,801 individual donors.

"That is twice the number of people who contributed to the National Symphony three years ago. That sounds as if there was wide support for the orchestra, doesn't it, Miss Blightmore?"

Miss B. looked far from impressed, but the figures had shaken her slightly.

"That is very nice. It's about time someone else took over the work a few of us have done for so long." There was still enough acid in her voice to eat away the finish of every credenza in her Georgetown house.

All in Same Boat

I TRIED a new angle.

"Miss Blightmore, surely you are acquainted with the magazine Musical America"?

"Of course," she snapped. "Our family has read no other musical periodical for 50 years. I'm not sure we approve of their recent, liberal tendencies; but it is a paper with a fine tradition. What about it?"

"Well," I went on, grateful that we both liked something in common, though I decidedly approve of the magazine's recent policies. "In its latest issue, Musical America has an editorial which says that all summer musical ventures are in the same boat, except for Tanglewood and Ravinia Park outside Chicago.

"According to the magazine's editors, all summer concerts must find some way of getting away from weather risks and outdoor noises, or the constant hazards and resulting deficits will prove too strong for them."

But Not for Music . . . . .

BEFORE Miss Blightmore could interrupt, I went ahead. "Now the Watergate is a beautiful spot—the river, the view, the wonderful feeling of historical surroundings—all those are fine. But it is not a place for music. The noise of traffic, river boats, buses, people talking and whistling, and the airplanes—"

"Hmf," she exploded. "Young man, do you know that those airplanes wouldn't have been there at all if somebody had only taken the trouble to find out that the National Airport is on Eastern Standard Time, and the concerts operate on Daylight Saving Time—did you?"

"Yes, I did know that," I sighed. "And I agree with you it was too bad we had to have planes all but the last two nights, just because the right person did not put two and two together with the airport people. The last two concerts only one airplane flew over the barge, and that was a mistake."

"But even so," I added, "planes can be heard even when they fly south of the barge, and the other noises, plus the weather make the outdoors locations too difficult."

And Amplification

"BESIDES, there is the problem of amplification." We both said this at the same moment, and looked amazed that there should be any such unanimity between us.

"What is the matter with the amplification, Mr. Hume?" Miss Blightmore asked in a tone almost civil.

"Well, I am no technician," I modestly began. "But there seems to be no way of amplifying musical sounds enough to have them carry to the top of the Watergate steps, and still have them retain their original tone quality. The strings sound mechanical, the balance between parts of the orchestra is not maintained, and the piano, if one is used, has no character. And if you get a chorus in there, it's that much worse."

"Well, and if it is a windy night," Miss Blightmore put in, "I feel almost seasick the way the sound is blown around and reaches you at several different times."

At this point our rapport reached its highest peak.

"Miss Blightmore, I asked, hesitantly, wondering if I were going to upset our happy rapprochement, "I've used up all my space for today. Would you come back next week and discuss with our readers what should be done next year?" I waited for the blow.

"Well——" She peered at her engagement book through her pleased-to-meet-you glasses. "I might be able to work it in. But I certainly hope my friends don't hear of it."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1950

Bernstein's Versatility Sparkles at Tanglewood

Leonard Bernstein, who conducted a program of Ravel and Berlioz partly in the rain at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, is a young man of musical accomplishment.

Yesterday he not only led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two Ravel pieces and one by Berlioz but performed at the piano in a third Ravel number, the taxing Concerto for Piano and Orchestra.

Mr. Bernstein opened the afternoon with a clean and neatly balanced interpretation of Ravel's "Mother Goose" Suite.

Now this, for me, is not great music — it is often charming, melodious and technically interesting music, but it somehow lacks the intensity, depth and warmth that could raise it to grand heights. There is a certain air of facility about it that makes one applaud its technical brilliance but which leaves one emotionally untouched. This was pretty much true of the other Ravel selections also.

* * *

MR. BERNSTEIN, however, knows this music well. And he brings to it, as well as knowledge, a rich command of tonal clarity and a fine understanding of the marvelous instrument under him.

He has mastered to a delightful degree the trick of taking bits of the music — some dissonant, some harmonically straight—and making them tingle for an instant, then cutting them off sharply while fitting them into the total design.

It is almost as if he atomizes the score and puts it back together piece by piece until he has created a totality that is alive and glowing, whether beneath the shimmering surface it deserves it or not.

He gave this same careful treatment to the "Alborada del Gracioso," and was able to make this rather flashy and meaningless piece into something almost interesting. It is a fascinating process to watch.

At the piano for the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Mr. Bernstein played with verve and assurance and the orchestra did the same, but the music, despite some interesting jazz influences, remained leaden.

* * *

SWITCHING to excerpts from the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Hector Berlioz, Mr. Bernstein and orchestra continued expert performances and the program improved musically. This is Berlioz's interpretation of the Shakespearean play, and like much program music it suffers from being a highly personal interpretation. Charming, melodious and quite in spirit throughout the major portion, it suddenly bursts in the last of these excerpts into a blaring, high pitched "Grand Feast at the Capulets," which make grotesque music as well as taking liberties with the play as I remember it.

If the Berkshire Festival cannot be accused of striking program originality, it may certainly accept heart-felt applause for presenting at times some very great music performed with exquisite taste.

—E. C.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
[illegible] 1950

Miss Rogers Among Tanglewood Students

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. —Eighteen students from New Jersey are studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer. They are studying under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and with a faculty the principals of which come from that orchestra.

Among the students is Elizabeth Rogers, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence H. Rogers of the Donnelly Hospital, Trenton, N. J. She is studying composition.

The school of Music Center is in the Berkshire Hills in Western Massachusetts. It is partly supported by receipts from festival concerts given by the Boston Symphony and partly from gifts by people interested in the work of the school.

The students from New Jersey this Summer are studying everything from orchestral playing to opera libretto writing.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1950

BERNSTEIN LEADS FESTIVAL CONCERT

Conducts Works by Ravel and Berlioz at Tanglewood—Three Programs Draw 31,550

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The two concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood this week drew a total of 23,050 persons. There were 11,600 here for this afternoon's program and 11,450 attended last night. With the 8,500 at Thursday night's concert, the three programs by the Boston Symphony this week attracted 31,550 persons.

Today's concert, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, was bedeviled at the start by showers, but the cheerful, holidaying overflow on the lawn took it in stride. People gathered up their blankets, camp chairs and lunch baskets and found temporary shelter under the trees and the sides of the shed. When the sun came out, they resumed their places, looking for all the world like a crowd at the beach.

Mr. Bernstein held up the start of the concert for more than fifteen minutes because of the commotion outside the shed.

Violist Congratulated

While he waited on the stage, he took the opportunity to shake the hand of Joseph di Pasquale, first violist, whose wife had given birth to a daughter early this morning. Mrs. di Pasquale is a niece of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and apparently a good many in the audience knew what the congratulations were about. There was applause, and Mr. di Pasquale took a pleased bow.

Today's program was devoted to two moderns of France—Ravel and Berlioz. The latter composer, of course, lived 100 years ago, but his music has a freshness and audacity that is contemporary in spirit. The excerpts from his "Romeo and Juliet," which Mr. Bernstein conducted with gusto, were full of bold instrumental effects and had appealing color and vitality.

The first half of the program was all Ravel. The "Mother Goose" suite was done with lightness of touch and sensitivity of nuance. The "Alborado del Gracioso," with its rhythmic variety and freedom, was fair meat for Mr. Bernstein's modern-spirited approach. Then he undertook one of his favorite stunts, being his own piano soloist. His conducting and piano-playing in the Ravel concerto were assured. He may not be the best pianist in the world, but the jazz idiom of this music in the corner movements is up his alley.

Cooperation by Orchestra

The orchestra has been playing stirringly at Tanglewood. It gave Mr. Bernstein all the cooperation he could ask for, and it did likewise last night in the second program conducted by Victor De Sabata.

That program had Mozart's E Flat Major Symphony (K. [illegible]) and Beethoven's Fifth as [illegible] cipal items. It was rounded [illegible] the Sinfonia from Bach's [illegible] mas Oratorio," Berlioz' "H[illegible] Carnival" overture and [illegible] Pezzo Concertante, with [illegible] Burgin, Alfred Krips and [illegible] Pasquale of the orchestra [illegible] solo passages.

Mr. De Sabata again [illegible] cited approval, and Koussevitzky, [illegible] festival these [illegible] in attendance. [illegible] ever, the two [illegible] have met a[illegible]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 19[illegible]

Concrete [illegible] Causes S[illegible]

One of the delights [illegible] visit to Tanglewood [illegible] round, between Ber[illegible] al events, among the [illegible] ng number of concert[illegible] ectures and formal [illegible] iscussion groups of [illegible] Music Center. The [illegible] e thought otherwise [illegible] Koussevitzky's, quite [illegible] he fact that the ov[illegible] esponsibility of the [illegible] ts programs, as he [illegible] recent public statem[illegible] With Aaron Copland [illegible] ant director and Ja[illegible] this year's distingu[illegible] visitor, the Music C[illegible] tracted as usual a [illegible] of our young compo[illegible] just out of their [illegible]

At one session, [illegible] presided over a te[illegible] Anton Webern's Co[illegible] instruments, after [illegible] of it by students, I[illegible] duce a strong enou[illegible] combat a brilliant [illegible] Lukas Foss. Twe[illegible] was, however, s[illegible] faced. On a less ex[illegible] fascinating as a pi[illegible] the information we[illegible] faculty members [illegible] with regard to o[illegible] Parisian vogues, [illegible] crete." The Cent[illegible] the first large mu[illegible] in this country wi[illegible] ery of Paul Sch[illegible] aired. The news o[illegible] by Irving Fine o[illegible] one of his lect[illegible] French music, wi[illegible] investigated with[illegible] Fulbright grant, [illegible] transcriptions of [illegible] An etude for o[illegible] symphony for on[illegible] graph controls w[illegible] Fine as among t[illegible] tions, and the [illegible] them here may [illegible] of its character.

A work of "C[illegible] an organized fa[illegible] sound effects. It [illegible] in the sense of [illegible] or descriptive m[illegible] with this term. [illegible] radio engineer a[illegible] cian, was intrig[illegible] of isolating "the [illegible] onating substan[illegible] cussive impact [illegible] agent"—to quot[illegible] verberation, cap[illegible] of recording m[illegible] object is struck[illegible] distinct from [illegible] object and the [illegible] as they collide, [illegible] a new world of [illegible]

We shall no[illegible] Mr. Schaeffer's [illegible] are being carri[illegible] of the "Clu[illegible] sored by "Ra[illegible] caise." Sound[illegible] musical instru[illegible] organized into[illegible] they may be [illegible] central control[illegible]

[93]

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 6 - 1950

Why Not a Big Shed For Summer Music?

By Paul Hume

"A SHED for summer concerts here in Washington? Oh, we could never get anything like that! Who would pay for it?"

"You have been paying for it," I told this typical Watergate attender, Miss Citronella Blightmore. Miss Blightmore is the youngest member of a family that has been plaguing Washington musical circles for an entire generation.

"I," she exclaimed, "what do you mean I have been paying for a shed for summer concerts? I put my money into the National Symphony, but we have had such a hard struggle. You newcomers don't know all the trouble we have had getting our own symphony orchestra going here in Washington. No one here really wants music, and the public doesn't support the orchestra."

"Now wait a minute, Miss Blightmore," I interrupted. "Let me say a few things you keep forgetting."

Citronella sat down with a look on her face that meant there was nothing I could tell her about music in Washington that she had not known for 20 years.

Just Like Boston

"IN THE first place," I began with more heat than originality. "the deficit from the last four summers at the Watergate is, at a conservative estimate, $82,000. And that is just about what it would cost to build a beautiful, permanent shed like the one the Boston Symphony has at Tanglewood.

Miss Blightmore's jaw fell as far as her hardened arteries would allow. "$82,000," she gasped. "Why, you must be mistaken. Why, they wouldn't continue the concerts if they lost that much!"

I paused before going on—more from speechlessness at such unanswerable logic than from any sudden burst of gentleness. "No, you wouldn't think they would keep going, with such losses. But they have, because people really want these summer concerts. However, I think it would be a mistake to let them go on any longer this way."

"Oh, you do, do you," she bristled. "That's just what I mean. You people who have come here in the last 10 years just think you can run this city, and tell us who can sing in Constitution Hall, and whether we can have summer concerts, and just what music we should and shouldn't like."

Past the Goal

"NOW wait a minute," I broke in once more. "The recent sustaining fund drive of the National Symphony Orchestra went well past its goal of $190,000. And as to your statement that the public doesn't support music and the orchestra, that money came from a total of 14,801 individual donors.

"That is twice the number of people who contributed to the National Symphony three years ago. That sounds as if there was wide support for the orchestra, doesn't it, Miss Blightmore?"

Miss B. looked far from impressed, but the figures had shaken her slightly.

"That is very nice. It's about time someone else took over the work a few of us have done for so long." There was still enough acid in her voice to eat away the finish of every crystal in her Georgetown house.

All in Same Boat

I TRIED a new angle.

"Miss Blightmore, surely you are acquainted with the magazine Musical America"?

"Of course," she snapped. "Our family has read no other musical periodical for 50 years. I'm not sure we approve of their recent, liberal tendencies; but it is a paper with a fine tradition. What about it?"

"Well," I went on, grateful that we both liked something in common, though I decidedly approve of the magazine's recent policies. "In its latest issue, Musical America has an editorial which says that all summer musical ventures are in the same boat, except for Tanglewood and Ravinia Park outside Chicago.

"According to the magazine's editors, all summer concerts must find some way of getting away from weather risks and outdoor noises, or the constant hazards and resulting deficits will prove too strong for them."

But Not for Music . . . . .

BEFORE Miss Blightmore could interrupt, I went ahead. "Now the Watergate is a beautiful spot—the river, the view, the wonderful feeling of historical surroundings—all those are fine. But it is not a place for music. The noise of traffic, river boats, buses, people talking and whistling, and the airplanes—"

"Humf," she exploded. "Young man, do you know that those airplanes wouldn't have been there at all if somebody had only taken the trouble to find out that the National Airport is on Eastern Standard Time, and the concerts operate on Daylight Saving Time—did you?"

"Yes, I did know that," I sighed. "And I agree with you it was too bad we had to have planes all but the last two nights, just because the right person did not put two and two together with the airport people. The last two concerts only one airplane flew over the barge, and that was a mistake."

"But even so," I added, "planes can be heard even when they fly south of the barge, and the other noises, plus the weather make the outdoors locations too difficult."

And Amplification

"BESIDES, there is the problem of amplification." We both said this at the same moment, and looked amazed that there should be any such unanimity between us.

"What is the matter with the amplification, Mr. Hume?" Miss Blightmore asked in a tone almost civil.

"Well, I am no technician," I modestly began. "But there seems to be no way of amplifying musical sounds enough to have them carry to the top of the Watergate steps, and still have them retain their original tone quality. The strings sound mechanical, the balance between parts of the orchestra is not maintained, and the piano, if one is used, has no character. And if you get a chorus in there, it's that much worse."

"Well, and if it is a windy night," Miss Blightmore put in, "I feel almost seasick the way the sound is blown around and reaches you at several different times."

At this point our rapport reached its highest peak.

"Miss Blightmore, I asked, hesitantly, wondering if I were going to upset our happy rapprochement, "I've used up all my space for today. Would you come back next week and discuss with our readers what should be done next year?" I waited for the blow.

"Well——" She peered at her engagement book through her pleased-to-meet-you glasses. "I might be able to work it in. But I certainly hope my friends don't hear of it."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1950

Bernstein's Versatility Sparkles at Tanglewood

Leonard Bernstein, who conducted a program of Ravel and Berlioz partly in the rain at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, is a young man of musical accomplishment.

Yesterday he not only led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two Ravel pieces and one by Berlioz but performed at the piano in a third Ravel number, the taxing Concerto for Piano and Orchestra.

Mr. Bernstein opened the afternoon with a clean and neatly balanced interpretation of Ravel's "Mother Goose" Suite.

Now this, for me, is not great music — it is often charming, melodious and technically interesting music, but it somehow lacks the intensity, depth and warmth that could raise it to grand heights. There is a certain air of facility about it that makes one applaud its technical brilliance but which leaves one emotionally untouched. This was pretty much true of the other Ravel selections also.

* * *

MR. BERNSTEIN, however, knows this music well. And he brings to it, as well as knowledge, a rich command of tonal clarity and a fine understanding of the marvelous instrument under him.

He has mastered to a delightful degree the trick of taking bits of the music — some dissonant, some harmonically straight—and making them tingle for an instant, then cutting them off sharply while fitting them into the total design.

It is almost as if he atomizes the score and puts it back together piece by piece until he has created a totality that is alive and glowing, whether beneath the shimmering surface it deserves it or not.

He gave this same careful treatment to the "Alborada del Gracioso," and was able to make this rather flashy and meaningless piece into something almost interesting. It is a fascinating process to watch.

At the piano for the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Mr. Bernstein played with verve and assurance and the orchestra did the same, but the music, despite some interesting jazz influences, remained leaden.

* * *

SWITCHING to excerpts from the dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Hector Berlioz, Mr. Bernstein and orchestra continued expert performances and the program improved musically. This is Berlioz's interpretation of the Shakespearean play, and like much program music it suffers from being a highly personal interpretation. Charming, melodious and quite in spirit throughout the major portion, it suddenly bursts in the last of these excerpts into a blaring, high pitched "Grand Feast at the Capulets," which make grotesque music as well as taking liberties with the play as I remember it.

If the Berkshire Festival cannot be accused of striking program originality, it may certainly accept heart-felt applause for presenting at times some very great music performed with exquisite taste.

—E. C.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1950

BERNSTEIN LEADS FESTIVAL CONCERT

Conducts Works by Ravel and Berlioz at Tanglewood—Three Programs Draw 31,550

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6—The two concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood this week drew a total of 23,050 persons. There were 11,600 here for this afternoon's program and 11,450 attended last night. With the 8,500 at Thursday night's concert, the three programs by the Boston Symphony this week attracted 31,550 persons.

Today's concert, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, was bedeviled at the start by showers, but the cheerful, holidaying overflow on the lawn took it in stride. People gathered up their blankets, camp chairs and lunch baskets and found temporary shelter under the trees and the sides of the shed. When the sun came out, they resumed their places, looking for all the world like a crowd at the beach.

Mr. Bernstein held up the start of the concert for more than fifteen minutes because of the commotion outside the shed.

Violist Congratulated

While he waited on the stage, he took the opportunity to shake the hand of Joseph di Pasquale, first violist, whose wife had given birth to a daughter early this morning. Mrs. di Pasquale is a niece of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, and apparently a good many in the audience knew what the congratulations were about. There was applause, and Mr. di Pasquale took a pleased bow.

Today's program was devoted to two moderns of France—Ravel and Berlioz. The latter composer, of course, lived 100 years ago, but his music has a freshness and audacity that is contemporary in spirit. The excerpts from his "Romeo and Juliet," which Mr. Bernstein conducted with gusto, were full of bold instrumental effects and had appealing color and vitality.

The first half of the program was all Ravel. The "Mother Goose" suite was done with lightness of touch and sensitivity of nuance. The "Alborado del Gracioso," with its rhythmic variety and freedom, was fair meat for Mr. Bernstein's modern-spirited approach. Then he undertook one of his favorite stunts, being his own piano soloist. His conducting and piano-playing in the Ravel concerto were assured. He may not be the best pianist in the world, but the jazz idiom of this music in the corner movements is up his alley.

Cooperation by Orchestra

The orchestra has been playing stirringly at Tanglewood. It gave Mr. Bernstein all the cooperation he could ask for, and it did likewise last night in the second program conducted by Victor De Sabata.

That program had Mozart's E Flat Major Symphony (K. 543) and Beethoven's Fifth as its principal items. It was rounded out by the Sinfonia from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" overture and Ghedini's Pezzo Concertante, with Richard Burgin, Alfred Krips and Mr. di Pasquale of the orchestra playing solo passages.

Mr. De Sabata again won excited approval, and again Mr. Koussevitzky, boss man of the festival these many years, was not in attendance. This morning, however, the two men were said to have met amicably.

TRENTON, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1950

Miss Rogers Among Tanglewood Students

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. —Eighteen students from New Jersey are studying at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer. They are studying under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and with a faculty the principals of which come from that orchestra.

Among the students is Elizabeth Rogers, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence H. Rogers of the Donnelly Hospital, Trenton, N. J. She is studying composition.

The school of Music Center is in the Berkshire Hills in Western Massachusetts. It is partly supported by receipts from festival concerts given by the Boston Symphony and partly from gifts by people interested in the work of the school.

The students from New Jersey this Summer are studying everything from orchestral playing to opera libretto writing.

NEW YORK, N.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 19

Concrete Causes S

One of the delights visit to Tanglewood round, between Ber al events, among th g number of concer ectures and formal discussion groups of Music Center. The e thought otherwise Koussevitzky's, quite the fact that the ov esponsibility of the ts programs, as he ecent public statem With Aaron Copland nt director and Ja this year's distingu visitor, the Music C tracted as usual a of our young compo just out of their

At one session, presided over a te Anton Webern's Co instruments, after of it by students, I duce a strong enou combat a brilliant Lukas Foss. Twe was, however, faced. On a less ex fascinating as a pi the information we faculty members with regard to o Parisian vogues, crete." The Cente the first large mu in this country w ery of Paul Sch aired. The news o by Irving Fine o one of his lectu French music, wh investigated with Fulbright grant. transcriptions of An etude for c symphony for on graph controls w Fine as among it tions, and the them here may of its character.

A work of "C an organized fal sound effects. It in the sense of or descriptive m with this term radio engineer a cian, was intrig of isolating "the onating substan cussive impact agent"—to quote verberation, cap of recording m object is struck distinct from object and the as they collide, a new world of

We shall no Mr. Schaeffer's are being carri of the "Clu sored by "Ra caise." Sound musical instru organized into they may be central control

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1950

'Concrete Music,' New Fad, Causes Stir at Tanglewood

By ARTHUR BERGER

One of the delights of a leisurely visit to Tanglewood is shopping around between Berkshire Festival events among the overwhelming number of concerts, rehearsals, lectures and formal and informal discussion groups of the Berkshire Music Center. The school, lest it be thought otherwise, is still Serge Koussevitzky's, quite distinct from the fact that the over-all artistic responsibility of the festival and its programs, as he asserted in a recent public statement, is not his. With Aaron Copland as its assistant director and Jacques Ibert as this year's distinguished foreign visitor, the Music Center has attracted as usual a cross-section of our young composers still in or just out of their student stage.

At one session, Mr. Copland presided over a tense debate on Anton Webern's Concerto for nine instruments, after a performance of it by students. It failed to produce a strong enough champion to combat a brilliant opposition by Lukas Foss. Twelve-tone music was, however, seriously being faced. On a less exalted plane, but fascinating as a piece of news, was the information we picked up from faculty members and students with regard to one of the latest Parisian vogues, "Musique Concrete." The Center is, we believe, the first large musical institution in this country where this discovery of Paul Schaeffer has been aired. The news of it was brought by Irving Fine of the faculty, in one of his lectures on current French music, which he had just investigated with the aid of a Fulbright grant. He also brought transcriptions of some examples. An etude for casseroles and a symphony for one man at phonograph controls were cited by Mr. Fine as among its best manifestations, and the mere mention of them here may give a little idea of its character.

A work of "Concrete Music" is an organized fabric of noises and sound effects. It is not "concrete" in the sense of the programmatic or descriptive music we associate with this term. Its inventor, a radio engineer and amateur musician, was intrigued by the result of isolating "the sound of the resonating substance from the percussive impact of the sounding agent"—to quote Mr. Fine. The reverberation, captured with the aid of recording mechanism after an object is struck, was found to be distinct from the sound of the object and the hammering device as they collide, and this opened up a new world of sonority.

We shall no doubt hear more of Mr. Schaeffer's experiments, which are being carried on in the studios of the "Club d'Essai" sponsored by "Radiodiffusion Francaise." Sounds, non-existent on musical instruments, have been organized into gamuts, so that they may be manipulated from central controls instead of through the unwieldy means of bringing into play all the objects themselves. Mr. Schaeffer's methods seem, on first acquaintance, to be a variant of the kind of thing our own John Cage has accomplished with the "prepared piano," or the Canadian Norman McLaren with his cuttings on a movie soundtrack. All three of these experimentalists are engaged in a field of ordered sound that sets them apart from the Italian futurists and others earlier in this century whose "modernistic" approach was primarily one of shock.

"Musique Concrete" is as yet only a matter of discussion and no little amusement among Tanglewood students. If its influence has made itself felt, we were not aware of it. Mr. Ibert told us he was more interested in discouraging the already existing preoccupation with theories, than with encouraging any new ones. Young composers here, like those abroad, he said, are much too concerned with systems. The first advice he gives them is the warning he was so delighted to read in American taxicabs: "Sit back and relax." The trouble with young creative musicians today, he remarked, is that "the bow is always stretched."

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
AUG 7 - 1950

Politics at Tanglewood

By George E. Sokolsky

I HAD INTENDED TO INVITE MY FRIEND, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

George Sokolsky

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

THIS IS A WONDERFUL FETE WHEN young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

At night, the full Boston symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometimes annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude. As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the thespian.

I DO NOT SHARE PEGLER'S DISLIKE FOR Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31, it brings a lump to the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American-composed music, conducted by Americans.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood.

THIS GOT ITSELF INTO A SNARL. KOUSsevitzky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

He has brought to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents instrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
STAR
AUG 6 - 1950

American Premiere Of Opera Tomorrow At Berkshire Fete

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., August 5—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday, August 7 and 8. The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence. "The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland, of Stanford University.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare at its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot in what is now France. The first production of "The King of Yvetot" came in 1930 in Paris at the Opera Comique, under the direction of Albert Wolff. Since then, the opera has been performed in several European Opera houses. The English translation for this production was made by Irving Reese.

The story of "The King of Yvetot" is a legend founded on the historical fact of the onetime existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th century. A ballad of the Napoleonic era concerning its magnanimous king was the basis for M. Ibert's opera.

The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevents effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment. The threat of invasion and the contrivance of a servant-girl are instrumental in this. The romance between the servant-girl, Jeanneton, and the king contrasts with the zestful humor of the rebellion, and ends with Jeanneton's becoming queen of Yvetot.

"The King of Yvetot" is written in four acts, and has sixteen principals, a chorus, and a full orchestra. Philippe de Rosier is scenic designer, and costumes were created by Leo van Witsen. Manfred Hecht, baritone, will sing the title role, and Ewan Harbrecht takes the part of Jeanneton, the servant-girl.

Other principals, not all of whom will appear on both evenings, include: Mario Lalli, Gene Cox, Rosalind Elias, Beatrice Bush-Kane, Fernand Martel, Thomas Holt, Sumner Crockett, Earl Ringland, Willabelle Underwood, Sara Carter, Angelica Sarris, Helen McCloskey, Arlouine Goodjohn, Joan Spafford, Marni Nixon, James Minser, Irvin Nordquist, Morten Shames, and Raymond Wolansky.

The two performances will come on Monday and Tuesday evenings in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. They will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, as the other events of the Berkshire Music Center.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 7 - 1950

Young Musicians Get Chance To Show Wares at Tanglewood

Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

LEE, Mass., Aug. 7.—I had intended to invite my friend, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter and the Wolf", and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

FOR SOME REASON, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

This is a wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. At night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late 70s. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches.

As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking.

BUT ELEANOR ROOSEVELT, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the Thespian.

I do not share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood.

HE HAS BROUGHT to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The businessmen who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
AUG 7 - 1950

Next Voice You Hear: Because Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt "is a great success as a storyteller," she will appear in that role with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Aug. 11 she will narrate Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1950

'Concrete Music,' New Fad, Causes Stir at Tanglewood

By ARTHUR BERGER

One of the delights of a leisurely visit to Tanglewood is shopping around, between Berkshire Festival events, among the overwhelming number of concerts, rehearsals, lectures and formal and informal discussion groups of the Berkshire Music Center. The school, lest it be thought otherwise, is still Serge Koussevitzky's, quite distinct from the fact that the over-all artistic responsibility of the festival and its programs, as he asserted in a recent public statement, is not his. With Aaron Copland as its assistant director and Jacques Ibert as this year's distinguished foreign visitor, the Music Center has attracted as usual a cross-section of our young composers still in or just out of their student stage.

At one session, Mr. Copland presided over a tense debate on Anton Webern's Concerto for nine instruments, after a performance of it by students. It failed to produce a strong enough champion to combat a brilliant opposition by Lukas Foss. Twelve-tone music was, however, seriously being faced. On a less exalted plane, but fascinating as a piece of news, was the information we picked up from faculty members and students with regard to one of the latest Parisian vogues, "Musique Concrete." The Center is, we believe, the first large musical institution in this country where this discovery of Paul Schaeffer has been aired. The news of it was brought by Irving Fine of the faculty, in one of his lectures on current French music, which he had just investigated with the aid of a Fulbright grant. He also brought transcriptions of some examples. An etude for casseroles and a symphony for one man at phonograph controls were cited by Mr. Fine as among its best manifestations, and the mere mention of them here may give a little idea of its character.

A work of "Concrete Music" is an organized fabric of noises and sound effects. It is not "concrete" in the sense of the programmatic or descriptive music we associate with this term. Its inventor, a radio engineer and amateur musician, was intrigued by the result of isolating "the sound of the resonating substance from the percussive impact of the sounding agent"—to quote Mr. Fine. The reverberation, captured with the aid of recording mechanism after an object is struck, was found to be distinct from the sound of the object and the hammering device as they collide, and this opened up a new world of sonority.

We shall no doubt hear more of Mr. Schaeffer's experiments, which are being carried on in the studios of the "Club d'Essai" sponsored by "Radiodiffusion Francaise." Sounds, non-existent on musical instruments, have been organized into gamuts, so that they may be manipulated from central controls instead of through the unwieldy means of bringing into play all the objects themselves. Mr. Schaeffer's methods seem, on first acquaintance, to be a variant of the kind of thing our own John Cage has accomplished with the "prepared piano," or the Canadian Norman McLaren with his cuttings on a movie soundtrack. All three of these experimentalists are engaged in a field of ordered sound that sets them apart from the Italian futurists and others earlier in this century whose "modernistic" approach was primarily one of shock.

"Musique Concrete" is as yet only a matter of discussion and no little amusement among Tanglewood students. If its influence has made itself felt, we were not aware of it. Mr. Ibert told us he was more interested in discouraging the already existing preoccupation with theories, than with encouraging any new ones. Young composers here, like those abroad, he said, are much too concerned with systems. The first advice he gives them is the warning he was so delighted to read in American taxicabs: "Sit back and relax." The trouble with young creative musicians today, he remarked, is that "the bow is always stretched."

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
AUG 7 - 1950

Politics at Tanglewood

By George E. Sokolsky

I HAD INTENDED TO INVITE MY FRIEND, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

George Sokolsky

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

THIS IS A WONDERFUL FETE WHEN young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

At night, the full Boston symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometimes annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude. As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the thespian.

I DO NOT SHARE PEGLER'S DISLIKE FOR Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31, it brings a lump to the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American-composed music, conducted by Americans.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood.

THIS GOT ITSELF INTO A SNARL. KOUSsevitzky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

He has brought to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents instrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
STAR
AUG 6 - 1950

American Premiere Of Opera Tomorrow At Berkshire Fete

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., August 5—The American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center Monday and Tuesday, August 7 and 8. The noted French composer, who is director of the French Academy in Rome, is making his first visit to America this summer. He is teaching advanced composition classes at Tanglewood, and the presentation here of his opera was designed to honor his presence. "The King of Yvetot" is the major production of the opera department at Tanglewood this year, and is one of several works by M. Ibert performed here this summer.

The musical direction for this production is in the hands of Dr. Jan Popper, acting head of the opera department, which in past years has scored several triumphs in staging American premieres of operas. Dr. Popper is on the faculty of the University of California at Los Angeles. Stage director for this production will be F. Cowles Strickland, of Stanford University.

The theme of the opera is satirical, using government and warfare at its targets. M. Ibert's music is often folk-like in character and the rhythmic patterns of the ensemble opera are varied and full of vitality. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase, is set in an early period in history in the small kingdom of Yvetot in what is now France. The first production of "The King of Yvetot" came in 1930 in Paris at the Opera Comique, under the direction of Albert Wolff. Since then, the opera has been performed in several European Opera houses. The English translation [illegible] was made by Henry Reese.

The story of "The King of Yvetot" is a legend founded on the historical fact of the onetime existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th century. A ballad of the Napoleonic era concerning its magnanimous king was the basis for M. Ibert's opera.

The framework of the plot is the rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by the peasants. The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevents effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment. The threat of invasion and the contrivance of a servant-girl are instrumental in this. The romance between the servant-girl, Jeanneton, and the king contrasts with the zestful humor of the rebellion, and ends with Jeanneton's becoming queen of Yvetot.

"The King of Yvetot" is written in four acts, and has sixteen principals, a chorus, and a full orchestra. Philippe de Rosier is scenic designer, and costumes were created by Leo van Witsen. Manfred Hecht, baritone, will sing the title role, and Ewan Harbrecht takes the part of Jeanneton, the servant-girl.

Other principals, not all of whom will appear on both evenings, include: Mario Lalli, Gene Cox, Rosalind Elias, Beatrice Bush-Kane, Fernand Martel, Thomas Holt, Sumner Crockett, Earl Ringland, Willabelle Underwood, Sara Carter, Angelica Sarris, Helen McCloskey, Arlouine Goodjohn, Joan Spafford, Marni Nixon, James Minser, Irvin Nordquist, Morten Shames, and Raymond Wolansky.

The two performances will come on Monday and Tuesday evenings in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. They will be open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, as the other events of the Berkshire Music Center.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 7 - 1950

Young Musicians Get Chance To Show Wares at Tanglewood

Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

LEE, Mass., Aug. 7.—I had intended to invite my friend, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter and the Wolf", and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

FOR SOME REASON, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

This is a wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. At night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitzky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late 70s. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches.

As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking.

BUT ELEANOR ROOSEVELT, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the Thespian.

I do not share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss' "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

There is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitzky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood.

HE HAS BROUGHT to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The businessmen who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK
AUG 7 - 1950

Next Voice You Hear: Because Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt "is a great success as a storyteller," she will appear in that role with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Aug. 11 she will narrate Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass.

[94]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 7 - 1950

AT TANGLEWOOD

Leonard Bernstein Dazzles Big Audience

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday—For the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival's Series B, Leonard Bernstein conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in singularly restrained and tasteful readings of scores by Ravel and Berlioz. His special assignment was that of soloist-conductor for the Ravel piano concerto.

In spite of showers, this season's record audience of 11,600 attended, although outside listeners were frequently obliged to seek shelter wherever they could.

It looked as if the concert were in for a bad start. Just as the conductor made his initial appearance, the rain gave him a noisy greeting augmented by human confusion. After several attempts to gain some measure of quiet so that the gentle opening bars of Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" could be heard, Mr. Bernstein finally retired from the stage. By the time he returned, order had been restored.

Little Flamboyance

For those of us who have regretted the necessity of directing derogatory comment toward Mr. Bernstein for his podium flamboyance, yesterday's concert was a blessed relief. Only during the concluding excerpt from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" did the young conductor unloose some of his colorful demonstrations of athletic prowess.

The "Mother Goose" music was admirably directed and played. There might have been reason to question the tempos of at least two movements, but even these were license rather than liberty.

At no time was there an impairment of the music's luxuriant qualities. The "Sleeping Beauty" was portrayed with dulcet tone at a leisurely gait. "Hop o' My Thumb" derived beautifully clear voices from the woodwinds and exact precision in elusive entrances. The "Empress of the Pagodas" was well-caluculated in style although the chattering oriental passages were not always clearly dictioned.

The "Beauty" was imaged with voluptuous phrases while the low woodwinds made a grotesque but friendly fellow of the "Beast."

The "Fairy Garden" was pictured at a slow pace, but the broad climax was approached with stealth and excellent augmentation of volume.

Thriling Performance

One might have expected that "Alborada del Gracioso" (the second Ravel score) would serve as a natural fashion plate for the conductor's previous methods, but such was not the case. Instead, he constantly directed attention to its bizarre and energetic rhythms and its resplendent sounds. It was a "coup d'etat" of direction, cues being given with split-second precision, and beauty of sound of uppermost concern. It was a thrilling performance.

There was nothing downright spectacular in Mr. Bernstein's duo-performance as pianist and conductor, but there was a remarkable efficiency in both fields of endeavor. He tended to sentimentalize the second movement, but beter to have it played that way than casually. The two rapid movements, with their jazz cloaks and startling effects, were securely welded to piano and orchestra, with seemingly little demonstrative assistance from the conductor.

Mr. Bernstein's piano technique was wholly equal to the difficulties that bring dash and brilliance to the rapid movements, and at every opportunity he produced a warm, singing tone from his instrument. As admirable was his grasp over the score's vitalized spirit and episodes of subtle nuances.

Berlioz's 'Romeo'

Whether you enjoyed the Berlioz version of the Capulet's drama depended less on your approbation or disapproval of Mr. Bernstein's interpretations than on your personal regard for the music.

To me at least, it says little beyond the suggestive implications of the title, "Romeo and Juliet," and it pales before the Tschaikowsky reflections on the same subject matter.

Nevertheless, Mr. Bernstein gave the music the advantage of enlightened direction and made a thorough exploration of its materials, whether thinly-sliced or pompously dictated. It was only in the final excerpt, "Great Feast of the Capulets'" that discipline gave way to indiscretion and tactics got partly under way.

Series C will begin Thursday night with a performance of Bach's "Mass in B Minor." It will be presented in two parts, the first from five o'clock to six-thirty; the second to begin at 8.15. Soloists will be Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, James Pease, and David Lloyd. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 7 - 1950

VARIED CONCERTS TO BE PRESENTED AT TANGLEWOOD

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6—The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," this Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening, the opera department at Tanglewood under acting head Jan Popper present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera "The King of Yvetot." The production will be the third opera presentation by the students at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, and is their most important work of the season.

Wednesday the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this thirteenth season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5:00 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony.

9

DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

AUG 7 - 1950

A Woman's New York

by Alice Hughes

IF THERE IS ANOTHER MUSICAL CENTER as beguiling as Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where the Music Festival and music school are held each August, I'd like to know about it. The years have enriched this event so that it is now a summer Mecca for the great and the famous, as well as for the obscure who simply love music.

Ex-Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky imparts his old-world glamor to this outdoor fiesta, swinging his Inverness cape dramatically over his shoulders, welcoming old friends and new.

Last week end Eleanor Roosevelt was in the audience. Had it been New York, there'd have been elbowing and craning of necks. But Tanglewood is in New England, and these Yankees reveal restraint.

The local inns and restaurants thrive off this summer music business, but natives resent it. They get high prices for the rent of their rooms and tourist lodges and feed the populace quite well, too. But you have the feeling they hate every minute of it, and are relieved when, by mid-August, invaders are gone.

Marj Heyduck is on vacation. "Third and Main" will be resumed Aug. 9.

The music under the stars, the sight of the great shell of a shed under which the great orchestra gives forth heavenly music, the enchanting sweep of ground and a fusing emotional ecstasy which music provides give the event special savor.

All that fades, as far as many locals are concerned, once the concerts are over and the cars crawl at miserable speed over the country roads that are still of horse-and-buggy vintage.

Next Friday Eleanor Roosevelt is coming again to Tanglewood, this time to narrate the fanciful story of "Peter and the Wolf." This is part of the Berkshire benefits to endow the music schools, the opera, chorus and instrument classes which flourish there. Naturally, the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Koussevitsky, will play the idyllic Prokofieff music.

Afterward there'll be waltzing on the lawn, picnic supper and other events. It'll be worth the price of admission to see Eleanor waltzing with Serge.

The watchful ushers keep a sharp eye over the students to make sure that shorts are not too short, and deportment proper. So don't hold Eleanor too tight, nor waltz her too fast, Koussy!

★

HOW MISTAKEN CAN HUSBANDS BE? When television just began, they moaned there'd never be "any work done." New York's Career Changing Clinic has just made a survey among women as to what they listened to, and this is what they found among 788 housewives interviewed.

"Housewives" means those whose only occupation is keeping house.) They were 25 to 50 in age, one or two children, income from $2,000 to $10,000 a year. Average Americans.

Of that number, 85 per cent played the television only after 5 p. m., only 2 per cent played it more than three hours during the day. Day-time viewers use it mostly between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, before supper preparation and before the kids programs come on.

What do they like to see? Fifty-two per cent prefer a dramatic show; 12 per cent a musical with a male star; 12 per cent an audience participation show dealing with women's problems. The rest like hobby shows, cooking lessons, and so on. Can't see where women are neglecting their chores in this kind of TV schedule.

HIGH SCHOOL and just-into-college gals are known for the way they lavish costume jewelry upon suits and sweaters. But it seems that they now want the "real"thing—diamonds, semi-precious stones, gold, palladium.

And so Nadja Buckley, noted Jewelry designer, is making exquisite little ladybugs, honeybees and snail pins aglint with genuine gems set in precious metal. A charm bracelet dangles a miniature geology collection of uncut aquamarines, amethysts, tourmalines and topazes twined in gold.

The cost's a bit high for a young lady's jewelry; but after all, they'll last to hand down to some lucky granddaughter.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 7 - 1950

Sokolsky's THESE DAYS:

'Peter and Wolf' By Mrs. Roosevelt

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

I HAD intended to invite my friend, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire Hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Children love "Peter and the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

This is a wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

AT night, the full Boston Symphony plays under Koussevitsky who, at Tanglewood, is always young even in his late seventies. The evening show is generally somewhat marred by long and extraneous speeches which bore and sometime annoy the audience, who come for music and not for politics and can be very rude.

As silent as this vast audience, which can run up to 20,000 persons in the open air, always is during the music, so noisy does it become during the speechmaking. The attitude up here seems to be that listening to a speech under the moon is a sacrifice of time and beauty.

But Eleanor Roosevelt, as the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," will be a novelty. Thus she enters into the role of the Thespian.

I do not share Pegler's dislike for Eleanor Roosevelt. In fact, his preoccupation with the lady often has caused alarm that he has fallen deeply in love with her. In my case, it is easier: I can take her or leave her. But in "Peter and the Wolf," I must definitely leave her. I prefer my music unadulterated. If Pegler wants to squirm, he can do it on his own.

The remarkable thing about Tanglewood is that it does produce music by Americans. Recently, I listened to Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. When one realizes that Lukas Foss is 27 years old, and Leonard Bernstein, 31, it brings a lump to the throat of an old sentimentalist like myself, who yearns for the day when American orchestras will play American-composed music, conducted by Americans.

THERE is lots of politics up at Tanglewood this year, which is unfortunate. Koussevitsky resigned from the Boston Symphony, but he apparently had no intention of resigning from Tanglewood. This got itself into a snarl. Koussevitsky made Tanglewood and it is his child and as long as he lives, it should be so recognized, and when he dies, he will have left a great monument to American music.

He has brought to Tanglewood a remarkable group of young people, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, David Diamond, Harold Shapero, and many others. He wants them to have a chance to show what they can do and he apparently resents intrusion from outside.

This year they brought in a conductor from Italy, which seemed to be unnecessary and old Kousy said so, which started a rumpus.

What everyone knows is that he favors Leonard Bernstein, born in Lawrence, Mass., who, whatever his shortcomings, is probably the best of his generation of American conductors. The business men who run the show do not believe that Bernstein will attract between 15,000 and 20,000 music lovers on a Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood, however, exists for America. It is one of the few places where our young people have a chance—conductor, composer, artist. As long as it is maintained for that purpose, it will stimulate the interest and enthusiasm of those who love music.

Copyright, 1950, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

READING, PA.
EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1950

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

IF THERE is another musical center as beguiling as Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where the Music Festival and music school are held each August, I'd like to know about it. The years have enriched this event so that it is now a summer Mecca for the great and the famous, as well as for the obscure who simply love music. Ex-Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitsky imparts his old-world glamor to this outdoor fiesta, swinging his Inverness cape dramatically over his shoulders, welcoming old friends and new. Last week end Eleanor Roosevelt was in the audience. Had it been New York, there'd have been elbowing and craning of necks. But Tanglewood is in New England, and these Yankees reveal restraint.

Alice Hughes

The local inns and restaurants thrive off this summer music business, but natives resent it. They get high prices for the rent of their rooms and tourist lodges and feed the populace quite well, too. But you have the feeling they hate every minute of it, and are relieved when, by mid-August, invaders are gone. The music under the stars, the sight of the great shell of a shed under which the great orchestra gives forth heavenly music, the enchanting sweep or ground and a fusing emotional ecstasy which music provides give the event special savor. All that fades, as far as many locals are concerned, once the concerts are over and the cars crawl at miserable speed over the country roads that are still of horse-and-buggy vintage.

Friday, August 11, Eleanor Roosevelt is coming again to Tanglewood, this time to narrate the fanciful story of "Peter and the Wolf." This is part of the Berkshire benefits to endow the music schools, the opera, chorus and instrument classes which flourish there. Naturally, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Koussevitsky, will play the idyllic Prokofieff music. Afterward there'll be waltzing on the lawn, picnic supper and other events. It'll be worth the price of admission to see Eleanor waltzing with Serge. The watchful ushers keep a sharp eye over the students to make sure that shorts are not too short, and deportment proper. So don't hold Eleanor too tight, nor waltz her too fast, Koussy!

TV No Time Waster—How mistaken can husbands be? When television just began, they moaned there'd never be "any work done." New York's Career Changing Clinic has just made a survey among women as to what they listened to, and this is what they found among 788 housewives interviewed. ("Housewives" means those whose only occupation is keeping house.) They were 25-50 in age, one or two children, income from $2,000 to $10,000 a year. Average Americans.

Of that number, 85 per cent played the television only after 5 p. m., only 2 per cent played it more than three hours during the day. Daytime viewers use it mostly between 4 and 5 in the afternoon, before supper preparation and before the kids programs come on. What do they like to see? Fifty-two per cent prefer a dramatic show; 12 per cent a musical with a male star; 12 per cent an audience participation show dealing with women's problems. The rest—like hobby shows, cooking lessons, etc. Can't see where women are neglecting their chores in this kind of TV schedule.

Teen-Age Heirlooms—High school and just-into-college gals are known for the way they lavish costume jewelry upon suits and sweaters. But it seems that they now want the "real" thing—diamonds, semi-precious stones, gold, palladium. And so Nadja Buckley, noted jewelry designer, is making exquisite little ladybugs, honeybees and snail pins aglint with genuine gems set in precious metal. A charm bracelet dangles a miniature geology collection of uncut aquamarines, amethysts, tourmalines, and topazes twined in gold. The cost's a bit high for a young lady's jewelry; but after all, they'll last to hand down to some lucky granddaughter.

(Copyright, 1950, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

Ravel and Berlioz

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra completed the second of its three principal Berkshire Festival series here in Tanglewood's music shed with amply attended concerts last night and this afternoon. Victor de Sabata, making his second and last appearance in the current series, was in charge yesterday; Leonard Bernstein, who devoted today's program to French music, doubled as conductor and soloist in Ravel's piano concerto. He also conducted Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" and Alborado del Gracioso and three movements from the "Romeo and Juliet" symphony of Berlioz.

In his two Tanglewood programs, Mr. de Sabata has offered works by ten composers of various periods and has thus given his hearers an unusually comprehensive basis, considering the time available, for the appraisal of his talents. Saturday's list included one contemporary work not yet known in New York, the "Pezzo Concertante' by the conductor's compatriot, Georgio Federico Ghedini. The rest of the otherwise familiar program included the prelude to the second part of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio"; Mozart's thirty-ninth symphony in E flat; Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

The performances suggested that Mr. de Sabata's noteworthy interpretative talents are not limited to any particular field of music. They also modified a previous impression that he is a somewhat gesturesome leader. He has his characteristic and occasionally unusual gestures, but these are used only when he deems these necessary; not in music such as the Mozart symphony, which received an essentially classic reading.

The conductor obviously knew just what he wanted and was fully able to realize his intentions in the performance of the orchestra, which in clarity and quality of tone was at its best. He was never in a hurry; when his tempi differed from the general average, it was usually in the direction of greater deliberation. The result was happy in the Mozart symphony, whose reading had an appropriate lyric spaciousness. The finale was set forth with exceptional lightness, with momentum but not muscularity. The atmosphere of the Bach prelude or sinfonia was convincingly realized.

There were moments here and there in the Bach work and the Beethoven symphony when a nuance of pace or the careful shaping of certain phases slightly lessened a sense of spontaneity and continuity; the sounds of certain instruments at points in the Berlioz overture were brought forth with almost exaggerated prominence, but the Berlioz and Beethoven interpretations gave an impression of well proportioned contrast and climax; the demonstration which followed the Fifth symphony was of unusual warmth. The performance of the symphony had its unorthodoxies, but neither the conductor nor the orchestra seemed to regard this well worn masterpiece as something to be taken for granted.

Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante" can be regarded as a concerto grosso, with Richard Burgin and Alfred Krips, violinists, and Joseph de Pasquale, violonist, in the solo concertino, whose music is blended and contrasted with that of the rest of the orchestra. The work seemed to be based on two contrasted principal themes: one rhythmically energetic, the other of a meditatively lyric character. The style is conservative; its ideas are not devoid of reminiscence, but the music is melodically persuasive, with sufficient contrast, although it lingers rather unduly at the end. It was well played by the soloists and their colleagues.

The attendance for the two concerts was virutally a tie, with 11,460 counted for the evening performance and 11,500 for the afternoon. The latter was the largest Tanglewood crowd of the season thus far. The weather during Saturday's concert was fine, following showers in the afternoon and evening. Showers and sunlight alternated this afternoon. The last and heaviest shower fell just as Mr. Bernstein was about to begin the performance of the Ravel suite; the more than 5,000 listeners camped about the music shed sought shelter in the generous spaces of the building at the back and sides.

Meanwhile, Mr. Bernstein, waiting for complete silence, left the stage, and returned to begin the concert after the reshuffling was completed. The sun reappeared after the Alborado del Gracipso, and Tanglewood's lawn resumed its usual Sunday afternoon concert aspect.

The performance of the Mother Goose suite was admirable in tone quality and detail, if not atmospherically persuasive throughout. The Alborado was set forth with color and momentum, in the concerto, which emphasizes the element of virtuosity. Mr. Bernstein played with notable technical prowess and bravura combined with pervasive clarity; the orchestra provided well co-ordinated co-operation. The performance of the excerpts from the Berlioz Symphony reflected the devotion to this music which Mr. Bernstein exhibited last season when conducting it in New York.

LACONIA, N. H.
CITIZEN
AUG 7 - 1950

A Woman's New York

BY ALICE HUGHES

MUSICAL BENEFIT LURES ELEANOR ROOSEVELT TO TANGLEWOOD

NEW YORK — If there is another musical center as beguiling as Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where the Music Festival and music school are held each August, I'd like to know about it. The years have enriched this event so that it is now a summer Mecca for the great and the famous, as well as for the obscure who simply love music. Ex-Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitsky imparts his old-world glamor to this outdoor fiesta, swinging his Inverness cape dramatically over his shoulders, welcoming old friends and new. Last weekend Eleanor Roosevelt was in the audience. Had it been New York, there'd have been elbowing and craning of necks. But Tanglewood is in New England, and these Yankees reveal restraint.

The local inns and restaurants thrive off this summer music business, but natives resent it. They get high prices for the rent of their rooms and tourist lodges and feed the populace quite well, too. But you have the feeling they hate every minute of it and are relieved when, by mid-August, invaders are gone. The music under the stars, the sight of the great shell of a shed under which the great orchestra gives forth heavenly music, the enchanting sweep of ground and a fusing emotional ecstasy which music provides give the event special savor. All that fades, as far as many locals are concerned, once the concerts are over and the cars crawl at miserable speed over the country roads that are still of horse-and-buggy vintage.

Friday, Aug. 11, Eleanor Roosevelt is coming again to Tanglewood, this time to narrate the fanciful story of "Peter and the Wolf". This is part of the Berkshire benefits to endow the music schools, the opera, chorus and instrument classes which flourish there. Naturally, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Koussevitsky, will play the idyllic Prokofieff music. Afterward there'll be waltzing on the lawn, picnic supper and other events. It'll be worth the price of admission to see Eleanor waltzing with Serge. The watchful ushers keep a sharp eye over the students to make sure that shorts are not too short, and deportment proper. So don't hold Eleanor too tight, nor waltz her too fast, Koussy!

* * * *

TV NO TIME WASTER

How mistaken can husbands be? When television just began, they moaned there'd never be "any work done." New York's Career Changing Clinic has just made a survey among women as to what they listened to, and this is what they found among 788 housewives interviewed. ("Housewives" means those whose only occupation is keeping house.) They were 25-50 in age, one or two children, income from $2,000 to $10,000 a year. Average Americans.

Of that number, 85% played the television only after 5 p.m., only 2% played it more than three hours during the day. Day-time viewers use it mostly between four and five in the afternoon, before supper preparation and before the [redacted] programs come on. What do they like to see? 52% prefer a dramatic show: 12% a musical with a male star; 12% an audience participation show dealing with women's problems. The rest like hobby shows, cooking lessons, etc. Can't see where women are neglecting their chores in this kind of TV schedule.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS.
AUG 7 - 1950

Last Week at Tanglewood To Feature Festival Highlights

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit show of the Berkshire Music Center, will be presented.

Tonight and tomorrow night the opera department, under acting head Jan Popper, will present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera "The King of Yvetot." This production will be the third opera presentation of the season by Berkshire Music Center students.

Bach Celebration Continues

The bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach will continue Wednesday with the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The concert, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering."

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed Thursday with Serge Koussevitsky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed in two parts at 5 p. m. and 8:15 p. m.

Eleanor Roosevelt will narrate Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf" Friday night as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In the afternoon the students will present Puccini's comic opera "Gianni Schicchi."

Saturday Night Event

Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 7 - 1950

Tanglewood Charmed By De Sabata

Italian Conductor Is Audience-Beguiler at Berkshire Festival

Has someone already commented on the fickleness of the crowd? Last week, during the first concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, all were Sergeolaters, making a din for the former Great And Good Doctor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Saturday night, the audience was making boisterous demonstration for Victor de Sabata, guest conductor for the second series of concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky, immured on his nearby estate, must have heard the capricious clamor, and mused . . .

Yet there are things about this conductor from La Scala, to make American maestri fasten their laurels on with a few extra hobby-pins. Tall, spare, elderly, with rosy pate showing through a fringe of white hair, and walking with a stoop, Mr. De Sabata is unassuming, courteous, smiling and bowing with hand on heart. He is also a tremendous popular success.

Search For Sweetness

After hearing Saturday night's Bach and Mozart, Berlioz and Beethoven, one might almost be led into thinking that two greatly different hearts beat beneath Mr. De Sabata's white dinner jacket. This is an illusion. Reared on his toes and with arms flung over his head, he drove the orchestra to a flamboyant performance of "Roman Carnival" that brought the house up yelling. With a kind of ritual begging, he leaned over this side of the podium, that side, pleading with the orchestra for vehemence from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. And the orchestra gave it to him, until some of the pages were so tense that they seemed uttered through clenched teeth.

But while these moments of glitter and intensity are a phase of Mr. De Sabata's musicmaking, its heart and soul are something else. Nothing is more indicative and characteristic of the conductor than his behavior and treatment of what is gentle, tender and kindly in music. Here his readings are of infinite sweetness and refinement on the ear, their spirit is ineffable, and their temper is almost dreamlike. Nothing was more elegantly exquisite than the almost inaudibly played clarinet solo in the menuetto section of the Mozart E Flat Symphony, Saturday night. It was worth the whole price.

Conductor As Charmer

The fact is that Mr. De Sabata is a charmer. Though he played the more vehement parts of the program, and particularly of the Beethoven with impact, his search for the sweeter parts of any score, including the Beethoven, was unremitting. Nothing summed up Mr. De Sabata so succinctly, and more happily for that matter, than his presentation of the Ghedini Pezzo Concertante, a lovely little score done with all loveliness. Mr. De Sabata is bound to win with audiences for just this charm. Too his pronounced coupling of the ultra-lyric with the ultra-dramatic, is making him a winner, because it gives him an operatic approach to symphony. This is an unbeatable combination to ensnare the popular heart and fancy, and makes nice lotus-eating even for the more demanding.

And your deponent stands in this latter group. I cannot believe that even Mozart is so compact of sweetness and light as Mr. De Sabata made him last night. And certainly Beethoven is more puritanical in temper, more consistent in form. You can't make the Fifth Symphony out of Brahms and Mendelssohn, and sign it "Ludwig."

The orchestra in the main played well for Mr. De Sabata, making the warm, especially transparent music he wants, clear and full of detail. The conductor has a great love of instruments for their own sounding selves, and lavishes endless affection on all choirs of the orchestra separately, almost more than together. And Saturday most of the choirs responded beautifully, except the sabotaging brass. But nobody's been able to get them in line for several seasons now.

T.H.P.

WALTHAM
NEWS TRIB
AUG 7

Eleanor Roo
Narrator Fri
t Lenox Co

TANGLEWOOD, Le
The last week of nglewood season w ghlights of the Ber al concerts as wel esentations of the usic Center, In addi wood on Parade," nefit show for the usic Center, will ton Symphony Orc
Serge Koussevitz its most unusual pr anor Roosevelt join rator for Prokoffi the Wolf," this
g.
onight and tomorro
opera department
d, under acting er, present the niere of Jacques I a, "The King production will b presentation s at the Berksh er this summer, a important work

Wednesday the celebration of th
n Sebastian Bach
the performance is summer's five concerts at T the Elizabeth ge Foundation of Congress, Th to the Friends o
Music Center, w ormance of "Th
g" and other
's B minor Ma
ed on Thursda
vitzky conduc
Symphony Or d, in the first f Berkshire Fe
this thirteent
s will be giv
5 and 8:15.
evening will t performing
" as part of Parade, Haydn
y and Dvora ymphony also y the Boston S
that evening.
erved and box
o see a studen
Puccini's com Schicchi," in other student wood will be noon and eve urday evening
ho will cond
mphony Orch time his se featuring Jo as viola soloi old in Italy," nd Villa-Lobo complete the next Sunday ssevitzky le mphony Orch
erkshire Festi 1950 season.
onsist of Brah and Prokoffie

[97]

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt Narrator Friday At Lenox Concert

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Aug. 7 — The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of its most unusual programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf" this Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening, the opera department at Tanglewood, under acting head Jan Popper, present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." This production will be the third opera presentation by the students at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, and is their most important work of the season.

On Wednesday the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this thirteenth season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade. Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi," in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleazor de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time his season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales' and Villa-Lobos' "Chorus 10" will complete the program.

And on next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

MUNCIE, IND.
MORNING STAR

AUG 7 - 1950

A Woman's New York

Musical Benefit Lures Mrs. FDR

By ALICE HUGHES

If there is another musical center as beguiling as Tanglewood in the Berkshires, where the Music Festival and music school are held each August, I'd like to know about it. The years have enriched this event so that it is now a summer Mecca for the great and the famous, as well as for the obscure who simply love music. Ex-Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitsky imparts his old-world flamor to this outdoor fiesta, swinging his Inverness cape dramatically over his shoulders, welcoming old friends and new. Last week end Eleanor Roosevelt was in the audience. Had it been New York, there'd have been elbowing and craning of necks. But Tanglewood is in New England, and these Yankees reveal restraint.

The local inns and restaurants thrive off this summer music business, but natives resent it. They get high prices for the rent of their rooms and tourist lodges and feed the populace quite well, too. But you have the feeling they hate every minute of it, and are relieved when, by mid-August, invaders are gone. The music under the stars, the sight of the great shell of a shed under which the great orchestra gives forth heavenly music, the enchanting sweep of ground and a fusing emotional ecstasy which music provides give the event special savor. All that fades, as far as many locals are concerned, once the concerts are over and the cars crawl at miserable speed over the country roads that are still of horse-and-buggy vintage.

Friday, Aug. 11, Eleanor Roosevelt is coming again to Tanglewood, this time to narrate the fanciful story of "Peter and the Wolf." This is part of the Berkshire benefits to endow the music schools, the opera, chorus and instrument classes which flourish there. Naturally, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Koussevitsky, will play the idyllic Prokofieff music. Afterward there'll be waltzing on the lawn, picnic supper and other events. It'll be worth the price of admission to see Eleanor waltzing with Serge. The watchful ushers keep a sharp eye over the students to make sure that shorts are not too short, and deportment proper. So don't hold Eleanor too tight, nor waltz her too fast, Koussy!

* * *

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 8 - 1950

First U. S. Performance For Ibert Comic Opera

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Tuesday — The first American performance of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of d'Yvetot," the Summer's major production by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, last night was an event of good music but hardly an operatic triumph.

An invited audience of Berkshire Music Center friends filled the theater concert hall and no doubt the hall will be filled again tonight for the second and last performance.

Composer Present

The presentation of the opera was designed to honor the presence of the composer who has been teaching advanced composition at the Center on this, his first visit to this country.

The setting, plot, and political situations combine as excellent foils for amusement with excellent vantage points where the composer can reveal his talents and singers can make known their vocal abilities.

The story is a legend founded on the historical fact of the one-time existence of Yvetot, which remained an independent principality until the 14th Century. The framework of the plot is a rebellion of the rural community against the king and the assumption of control over the land by its peasants.

Women Restore King

The worry of law-making and voting and the growth of bureaucracy prevents effective farming of the crops. The women of Yvetot stage a counter-revolution to restore the king and their former happy contentment. The threat of invasion and the contrivance of a servant girl are instrumental in this. The romance between the servant girl, Jeanneton, and the king contrasts with the zestful humor of the rebellion, and ends, as you might suppose, with Jeanneton becoming queen of Yvetot.

This might suggest an injection of heavy drama, but such is not the case. Happily for the audience, but unfortunately for Mr. Ibert's music, the French text has been translated into English. Henry Reese has done a fine translation of the book by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourasse. But the words clutter up the music, particularly in the endless flow of rapid choruses that demand a lightsome treatment of language to confirm the spirit of the music.

Small Stage

Mr. Ibert has good reason to be pleased with the students. They established and maintained a consistency of vitality, in spite of a small stage (for this production) that was inevitably over-populated.

Generally speaking, the music either travels at a fast pace or it lingers longingly over attractive arias. The first act overture is brief, sufficing to build rising excitement that leads effectively to the curtain.

The characterizations are vivid or impersonal. The most visually effective are a quartet of elders, for whom Ibert has written some tired music, and who recite their lines in a slow unison. Their leader (a fifth) is a patriarchal human, longly bearded and respectfully draped in black.

The production's outstanding role is that of Sumner Crockett, the innkeeper of "Vive Bacchus." He made a dashing thing of the scene where he sets himself up as the factotum of the place when the king is supposedly deposed. Although less dominating vocally, Fernand Martel, the rival innkeeper, did much to propel the scene to an impressive dramatic stature.

The King And Others

Manfred Hecht was adequate enough as the king but somehow failed to give significance to the title role. Ewan Harbrecht offered the role of Jeanneton an attractive lyric soprano, but the ballad type of aria the composer gave her to sing did not permit extensive revealment of her talents.

Beatrice Bush-Kane was moderately effective as the cast's maternal adviser. Mario Lalli gave greater impetus to the Bellringer's musical score and dramatic assignment than might be expected.

The cast engages the services of 16 principals, so obviously there isn't time or space to discuss them all. However, heavy contributors to the work's effectiveness were Rosalind Elias, Robert Minser, and Mario Lalli.

The sets are attractive, but the first was flimsily constructed and came precipitously close to toppling over during an energetic point in the action. As customary Leo van Witsen has designed costumes that belong to the period and avoid a gaudiness that would destroy the necessary illusions.

Popper Conducts

Dr. Jan Popper performs a masterly task of conducting. The music prances at such a pace that numerous instances of clever adjustment prevented serious consequences.

In short, last night's success can be attributed to valiant effort of the students, episodes of sparkling music by Mr. Ibert, and an audience that lent its best interest and enthusiasm.

But its operatic measurement requires a friendly appraiser.

Berkshire Music Attracts Many From Syracuse

AMONG THE throngs attending the Berkshire Music Festival in "Tanglewood" this weekend are numbers of music lovers from the Syracuse area. Noted there during the season: Mr. and Mrs. John W. Bullard and daughter, Joan Bullard, 8, of Baldwinsville; Robert Stoltz, Cantor and Mrs. Pinchas Spiro, Mrs. Donald Mitchell Dey and her daughter, Miss Virginia Dey, on their way to Hingham, Mass., to visit relatives; Mrs. Ira Silverstein, Mrs. Sadie Barude, Miss Dorothy Brown, all of Syracuse . . . Cards from Luzerne, Switzerland, bring word from Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gilbert Chase of "Highfields," Fayetteville, who went to Europe early in the summer. Mrs. Chase is a member of Morning Musicals, Inc., board and a past president of the club.

ANOTHER FROM a distance is from Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Schmitt, former residents of Syracuse, the former a pianist, the latter an organist. With their young daughter, Danielle, they have been in Lake Louise and in Banff, Alberta, where Elvin Schmitt has been giving recitals. Formerly a member of the piano faculty in Syracuse University, Schmitt now is head of the piano faculty in Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Schmitt, one-time organist of University Church here, has an organ post in Des Moines.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

AUG 8 1950

Boston Orchestra To Have Mrs Roosevelt as Star

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug 7—The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center.

In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of its most unusual programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins the ensemble as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf" Friday evening.

On Wednesday the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed Thursday with Dr Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed.

Friday evening will see Mrs Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 8 - 1950

Comic Opera At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—Jacques Ibert's comic opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot" received its American premiere in the theatre-concert hall last night.

Presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center it was given in honor of the French composer who is teaching advanced composition classes here. Its contribution to contemporary opera is a timely work of refinement, of taste and of distinct individuality.

With an air of fantasy, a basis of historical fact, and a strong dose of satire, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" sings love's old sweet song. In doing so, however, the story involves a rural community in rebellion against its King.

When the peasants take over, they become so involved in bureaucracy that they neglect the crops. Only when the women also rebel and resolve to restore the king does the community find peace again. The king marries his servant-girl love and lives happily ever after.

Fortunately the libretto of Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrase had been translated for this production. Henry Reese has been astute in his use of vernacular and satire so that the mocking inflections of the text are clearly made.

The targets are government and warfare, and there may be more than meets the ear on a single hearing. Without advantage of translation, much of the mockery would have been lost.

Ibert has effectively amalgamated fantasy, romance and satire in his score. The opera has plenty of style; atmospheric to the literal imitation of sounds of nature; lyric to the point of sweetness in his love music; biting in his distinctive scherzo passage and in his "quotations" of other operatic composers.

Sometimes the translation obscures the satiric element of the music, but in his handling of the quartet, "Wise Old Men," his tongue-in-cheek manner can be easily detected.

Above all the score has quality and feeling.

The orchestration is imaginative and, of course, expert. While neither wholly consistent nor wholly sustained, the work has a folk-like character quite in keep-

RALEIGH, N. C.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1950

Thespian Eleanor Is A Novelty

By Geo. E. Sokolsky

★ I had intended to invite my friend, Westbrook Pegler, up to these Berkshire Hills to listen to Eleanor Roosevelt recite "Peter and the Wolf" to Prokofieff's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood.

It occurred to me that that would give Peg a chance to atone for all his sins. Unfortunately, I have something else to do on that occasion and shall have to forego the sadistic pleasure of watching Pegler writhe and squirm, listening to those lines read by a falsetto instead of a baritone.

Children love "Peter the Wolf" and they have listened to it on the radio and on recordings. The narrative goes well with a pleasant male voice like Basil Rathbone's. The music is simple and sweet and is good training in orchestration, as each instrument represents a person or an animal.

For some reason, widely discussed but not understood at Tanglewood, Eleanor Roosevelt volunteered her services to do this recitation on the occasion of "Tanglewood on Parade."

This is a wonderful fete when young American musicians gather to perform their various specialties. It is a sort of college campus class day, starting with a blare of trumpets and a students' parade. Then each section goes off to its own place to do opera, chamber music, student conducting of a students' orchestra, and all that sort of thing.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST HOME NEWS
AUG 8 - 1950

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Le Roi D'Yvetot Sung at Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8—War in Yvetot was a funny business as viewed through the music and text of Jacques Ibert's four-act opera, "Le Roe D'Yvetot," given its American premiere last night at Tanglewood in the theatre-concert hall. Using an English translation by Henry Reese, the work, first performed in Paris in 1930, was produced by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

The satire's humor and absurdities are based on a ballad by Beranger, French poet of the Napoleonic era. Probably they would have made the audience chuckle more uninhibitedly if American boys were not dying in Korea. Also, the events concerned with the uprising in this town which actually existed as an independent one-city principality until the 14th century made a point which went a little sour to this reviewer, who obviously cherishes the democratic tradition.

The Women Were Wrong

As a woman I hate to admit it, but to my mind the women of Yvetot were wrong. When worries over law-making prevented their male-counterparts from effective farming, the women revolted and eventually got their benevolent king back. A lukewarm democratic touch is provided by the romance between the servant girl, Jeanneton, and the king. In the end, she becomes queen and everybody on the stage rejoices.

Viewed objectively, however, from an artistic standpoint, the French composer, at present resident in Tanglewood, has composed an engaging work, which combines a folk-like idiom with musical sophistication. The humorous ensemble scenes are the most effective, and Ibert frequently employs counterpoint in the orchestral fabric against what is being sung with charming results.

Under the musical direction of Dr. Jan Popper and the stage direction of F. Cowles Strickland, the production had much to commend it and was frequently delightful in impression. The cast, headed by Manfred Hecht, baritone, as the king, and Ewan Harbrecht, soprano, as Jeanneton, proved generally excellent, but first honors should go jointly to the chorus and to a few character actors who put over their satirical lines with philosophical subtlety and musical skill.

Chief among the latter were the "four elders," bearded gentlemen in gray, who might have been Wagner's three norns turned quadrule and male and made to walk instead of sit. In their deadpan solemnity, they were more lovable than the king and his lady.

Viewed as satire, "The King of Yvetot" says a lot that cuts like a steel blade, e.g., "People are conspiring in the streets but nobody knows what he is conspiring for." On the other hand, being expected to laugh at soldiers appearing in what looked like pajama bottoms, fighting with wooden rakes and poles and making ludicrous remarks about "everybody being killed" when in reality everybody is alive, is a little too corny to swallow, particularly just at the moment. The production received an enthusiastic reception and Ibert, who was present, was warmly acclaimed.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1950

s. Eleanor Roosevelt o Serve As Narrator At Tanglewood Concert

LENOX, (INS) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, mother, writer, world-traveler, diplomat and former first lady, tomorrow night will invade a new field at the Tanglewood music festival.

Mrs. Roosevelt will serve as narrator for the difficult orchestral piece "Peter and the Wolf," or "Symphonic Tale for Children," by Serge Prokofieff, the Russian composer. The piece requires 25 minutes to play.

Musical experts at Tanglewood today could remember only one other attempt by a woman to perform the narration but could not remember her name.

The piece first was presented in America by the Boston Symphony orchestra, led by Prokofieff, 12 years ago. At that time the narrator was Richard Hale.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1950

IBERT OPERA GIVEN AT BERKSHIRE FETE

First of Two Performances of Work by French Composer Presented by Students

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7—Jacques Ibert, who has been one of France's gifted men of music for many years, finally got one of his operas produced in America. The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on "Le Roi d'Yvetot" here tonight in the theatre Concert Hall in the first of two performances and did well enough with it to make clear that M. Ibert writes for the stage with a delicate, witty and humane voice of his own.

M. Ibert, who is this year's distinguished guest on the composition faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, has been on hand to guide the young men and women who sing and play his opera, and he was in the audience to see the outcome of their efforts.

It was a brave show the young students, abetted by a few professional artists, put on. "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is not easy to do, and the Center's opera department has been busy with other productions. The company had five weeks at the most in which to study, rehearse and mount the opera.

"Le Roi d'Yvetot," which has a book by Jean Limozin and André de la Tourrasse, and which was sung in a workable translation by Henry Reese, pokes gentle fun at man's preoccupation with affairs of state.

The king of Yvetot, a likeable soul, is deposed by his equally likable subjects in the name of liberty. When the womenfolk find that their men, now running the state, no longer have time for them or work, they rebel. The king, it seems, was a useful fellow to have around after all and he is restored. There is also a love story between the king and a serving girl to round out this simple tale.

It is not, in all conscience, much of a story, and the satire is so gentle that it all but blows away in violent times like ours. "Le Roi d'Yvetot" was written twenty years ago. Did we have more time and appetite for soft-voiced, glancing political satire in those days?

It does not matter. The story would not be enough for an evening in the theatre. The burden rests on the music, and the music carries it in gay and resourceful fashion. Ibert writes with a professional's skill. He can compose sweet tunes and rousing choruses, and his orchestra can support the action as well as weave a magical spell of its own.

The concluding scene of the third act is perhaps the loveliest thing in the comic opera. A sustained nocturne, it is both a tender love scene and an evocation of the night beside a river bank. Ibert's use of woodwinds here has a poetry that seems to be a special talent of the French.

There are places in the opera where the musical line seems dry, but the composer is apt to redeem them in the next moment with a scene that has bounce and rhythmic vitality or with another that is fresh and lyrical.

In fairness to M. Ibert, his opera must not be judged too strictly by what was, at bottom, a student performance. The young singers were full of good-will and the high spirits of youth, but the French style requires more subtlety and point than they could be expected to muster. Given a more sharply defined performance, "Le Roi d'Yvetot" might not seem thin in places at all.

Jan Popper, who is in charge of Tanglewood's opera department this season, had charge of the preparation and conducted the performance with animation. He did an expert job, as did his colleagues, F. Cowles Strickland, stage director; G. Philippe de Rosier, in charge of settings and lights; Leo Van Witsen, costume designer.

Manfred Hecht sang intelligently and musically in the title role, and Ewan Harbrecht, as the girl who had always loved him, was an agreeable soubrette. It is impossible to list the names of all the others in the large cast. But as principals and as an ensemble they sang with rousing fervor. They left no doubt that there is an abundance of fine voices in this country. All they need is to be put to work.

NEWS RECORD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1950

Tie Display Linked To Music Festival

Pittsfield, Mass.—England Bros.' department store is receiving a good response to a neckwear promotion linked to the Tanglewood Music Festival, Tanglewood, Mass.

Called "Symphony in Satin," the display, in one window of the store, shows a series of satin ties in designs of musical scales and instruments. Various instruments are also shown in the window.

The ties are made by Phillips-Jones Corp. and retail for $1.50.

CLARKSBURG, W.VA
TELEGRAM
8/8/50

THE ONCE O'

By H. I. Phillips

A LETTER FROM SHUDDA HADDIM AT SARATOGA

Dear Hi—

Well I am up here amid the hot springs and cold favorites. It is hard to get used to the Saratoga meeting on account of so many people at the track look like people. They eat slow, take their time making wrong selections and do not get all hot and bothered until the middle of the afternoon as the races do not begin here until the squawks over at least three races at other tracks have been on for a couple of hours.

—o—

You can see horse players here whose laundry looks still fresh as late as 3 o'clock and who have not even started to take their aspirin yet. There are horse players here who do not dress like they was at a clambake and if they trample on women and children on the way to the paddock they do not use no profanity in helping them to get up. Class all over, I say.

—o—

It seems funny to know it is already 1 or 2 o'clock and I have not had no clothes ripped off in the rush to the oval. I still got time to relax at that hour. That is what comes hard to a horse player, this business of relaxing. It makes him very nervous to still be in a relaxed state in the middle of the day. I do not have to hurry in doing my handicapping. At other meetings I only have time to figure out the whole program once, but up here I can finish doping the skinners out and have time to go over them again and change my mind. Even if I don't win I have tried harder. This is the oldest track in the country. General Grant slept here. I got his bed. (His horse must of slept in it as there is horseshoes in the pillows.)

—o—

It was up here that Benedict old was a hero before he switched from the winner to the loser. There are a couple of the oldest hotels in America here and you see the plumbing that Jim Fiske stopped trying to fix and the veranda pillar that Chauncey Depew apologized to when he ran into it between banquets. At one of these hotels I got an order of ham and eggs that Grover Cleveland had ordered, which is okey, as I am sick of places where everybody hurries.

Frank Sullivan who got knocked out by Jim Corbett lives here. He don't do no fighting now except in exhibitions. Saratoga is famous for its bath. It is not unusual to take one and the Chamber of Commerce encourages it. Also there is mineral waters which is good for your blood if you have any blood left after the last race. The skinners are all de luxe. I have seen horses which even for a purse of $25,000 will not get undignified enough to show any interest in acquiring more dough. Today I bet on some that was so exclusive they would not even associate with the other skinners in the race.

But I do not feel bad about my losses as the atmosphere is the best you can lose money in and I found a mineral water which gives me a feeling I can afford to be up here. Could you wire me $4 for a few weeks.

Very truly yours,
Shudda Haddim

—o—

YE GOTHAM BUGLE & BANNER

If a title is wanted for the telecasting of the Security Council programs how about "Blockalong Mendacity"? . . . "Bumbling With Fumbling"? . . . The Chrysler Corporation says it had to fill out over 255,000 forms last year for tax purposes.—How did it get off that lightly? . . . We know a fellow who is so petty he is hoarding ideas for hoarding . . . Art Godfrey is on vacation—presumably on a tea plantation reading a good book on the cigarette industry . . . Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has now signed up on a symphony orchestra program at Tanglewood, Mass. . . . She will act as narrator for "Peter and the Wolf" in the Serge Koussevitsky recital.—What [illegible] do with her spare time? . . . A big hotel syndicate has bought two million dollars worth of liquor.— No hoarding, eh?—Still, two million dollars worth of liquor at present prices isn't so much, especially if you go in for a second highball.

—o—

[99]

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 8 - 1950

Ibert's New Opera Tested at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Popping up on piano programs these many years, or tossed in as an encore, has been a morceau called "The Little White Donkey."

A merry little thing, piquant, cute, it is by Ibert and that is about the only composition of his that has had much of a run in this country. Actually he is the composer of quite a few operas, some Mediterranean symphonic sketches and not a little film music but the donkey piece is about all we've ever been given.

Last night in the Theater-Concert Hall, sitting next to Koussevitsky who was hunched up with the Tanglewood chill, was Jacques Ibert watching the American premiere of his opera "The King of Yvetot." Ibert wore a black beret which combined with his pert white moustache to give him a good-humored, Parisian air. Had he not been so tall, the unprecise language of youth might have dubbed him cute.

The opera lasted through four acts. It was merry, full of color, expertly composed but when it was over you could accurately reach for any adjective that suited "Little White Donkey", and not do it any injustice—piquant, unimportant, verily cute.

In importance it was not to be compared with Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" or the consensus on "Albert Heering," its predecessors at the Tanglewood opera workshop. It was less moderne without being more singable. Its dramatic impact was a gentle thud.

* * *

YVETOT WAS a fourteenth century principality which engaged in Lilliput warfare with a neighbor state and was defeated. Its king deposed, there followed a period when the women did all the work and the men "spent all their time voting." This absorption with the business of state resulted in a women's revolution followed by restoration of the king and his marriage to a peasan girl. It is opera buffa, rather thar comic opera.

The entire first act which wa: given over to squeezing comedy out of the unpreparedness of the foolish little kingdom, its antic military preparations and the general folly of war, made you bite your lip. Remembering Korea, it could have been ten times as funny and not drawn a laugh, but this was a fortuitous circumstance.

* * *

THE STORY went on to other inconsequential business. It was played hard, as student productions are apt to be, and some of the humors might have improved with relaxation and simplicity. I got the impression that some of the stage properties were dangerously unsafe; there were some near accidents.

The stage was often overcrowded and its people not too expertly managed. There were dramatic cliches such as the description of the battle from the watch-tower.

The score contained a number of brilliant, tautly-written choruses and these were sung with gusto and style. A lyricism which would have given the opera bouyancy and a greater illusion was too frequently absent. The composer employed a parlando which was neither speaking nor singing. It did enable the cast to get across the dialogue, a virtue not to be belittled.

There were occasional moments of pure song and it was these which were relied upon for atmosphere and date, Ibert having imitated the old French folksong. The best example, sweet and melancoly, was the peasant girl's final aria in Act. I.

* * *

EWAN HARBRECHT, who had the part of Jeanneton last night, used a light soprano with charm and dramatic veracity. Manfred Hecht, baritone, was a king of stalwart voice and Beatrice Bush-Kane was fully adequate to the demands of a contralto role. These principals remain the same for tonight's performance.

Dr. Jan Popper, who conducted the student orchestra and cast, kept the production closely-meshed for the big ensembles and found a flattering pace for some of the needlessly protracted scenes.

The opera was handsomely mounted, in particular the second act which, incidentally contained some of the best music.

Other credits go to F. Cowles Strickland, stage director; G. Philippe de Rosier, settings and lighting design and Leo Van Witsen, costume design.—C. E. L.

FERRER [illegible]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
COMPASS
AUG 9 - 1950

Monteux, Koussevitzky To Conduct in Boston

Serge Koussevitsky and Pierre Monteux have been invited by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, to conduct some of the orchestra's concerts during its forthcoming and 70th anniversary season. Monteux, who Munch, now in Europe, will return to the U. S. next month to open this orchestra's season in Symphony Hall on Oct. 6, beginning his second year as its conductor.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 7.—Jacques Ibert's comic opera "The King of Yvetot" had its first performance in this country tonight by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center as its major production of the season in Tanglewood Theater Concert Hall. The four-act work was presented in Henry Reese's English translation of the French text by Jean Limozin and Andre De La Tourrasse, whose scene is placed in a small Norman city which was once an independent principality. Dr. Jan Popper, acting director of the opera department, conducted, with F. Cowles Strickland, of Stanford University, as stage director. Manfred Hecht sang the title role of the magnanimous king, with Ewan Harbrecht as Jeanneton, the servant girl who eventually becomes queen of Yvetot after the peasants have found self government a much too bothersome affair. Rosalind Elias had the role of gazette in the cast of twenty soloists; the same principals will reappear in the second and last performance tomorrow night.

Mr. Ibert is a member of the Berkshire Music Center's composition facutly this summer; he is the second prominent French composer who has taught at Tanglewood. His Escales which will be played at Tanglewood next Saturday has long been in the repertory of American orchestras, but thus far his stage works are not known here. The King of Yvetot, Ibert's third opera was first performed in Paris at the Opera Comique in 1930, and has also been staged in other European opera theaters. The gist of the story is that the people of Yvetot revolt against the king and take control over the land. But politics and bureaucracy interfere with effective farming; the women, aided by a threat of invasion and the contrivances of Jeanneton, revolt in turn and the king resumes his amiable rule.

Although a detailed review of the work and its performance must await a later occasion, the first act of the King of Yvetot gave an impression of tuneful and expressive music well suited to its purpose; hermonically conservative and generally French in flavor if not to a prouounced degree. The music is interspersed with some spoken dialogue, but plays an important part; the translated text seemed intelligible and satisfactory. The performance was heard by a capacity audience of members of the friends of the Berkshire music center.

A new Israeli work, Manuel Mahler Kalkstein's "Music for Strings" had its first performance this afternoon at Tanglewood in a concert of the Berkshire Music Center's Department 5 student orchestra under Howard Shanet's direction. The composer who is business manager of the Israel Philharmonic wrote the work for Mr. Shanet, and the centers students last spring, when Shanet was in Israel as Serge Koussevitzky's assistant on his tour. In four movements, and without a descriptive title, it takes twenty minutes to play. The second movement of a work which is often are primarily lyric in character with discreetly and sometimes more pungently dissonant harmonies. A national flavor is apparent mainly in the last movemet of a work which is often persuasive if rather over extended.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 8 - 1950

AROUND THE TOWN

By E. S. Van Olinda

WE WERE greatly amused, during the week, by being an inadvertent eavesdropper to a conversation carried on by a couple of bus riders, the one pungent statement which cried out loud being: "Albany is a dead place in summer. What can a fellow do to pass away the time?"

WELL, BROTHER, you don't know how close you came to getting an earfull from ONE Albanian who feels that we have, within a radius of 50 miles, some of the greatest summer recreational facilities in the whole of the United States. For instance:

At Tanglewood, we have the greatest symphony orchestra in the world, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, which as of next Sunday afternoon, (August 13) the closing performance of the 1950 season, some nearly 200,000 music lovers will have stored up enough musical vitamins to last them all winter.

NEARBY IS Ted Shawn's University of the Dance of Jacob's Pillow, beyond Lee, Mass., where the greatest dance artists of the world present programs of ethnic, classical and modern dances to capacity houses, and placing that part of the Berkshires in the category of the terpsichorean capital of the world, as is "Tanglewood" in the field of music. Also, during the season, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge presents a series of chamber music concerts in her beautiful South Mountain theatre, near Pittsfield.

For those who lean to what is known as the "Sild Circuit," there is the Berkshire Playhouse which offers weekly presentations of drama and comedy by a very capable resident company, augmented by famous stars of Broadway and Hollywood.

COMING CLOSER to home, one of the most popular spots is the Malden Bridge Playhouse where one really sees a typical "barn" theatre in operation. Out at Crooked Lake, the Red Barn (this year, a tent) summer theatre is giving delightful Wednesday through Sunday productions in the latest vogue: "Theatre in the Round." For those who are always looking

A
Fu

[100]

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1950

Ibert Opera Makes Hit At Berkshire Center

Special to The Evening Gazette

LENOX, Aug. 8—Last night in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center accomplished the meritorious task for Jacques Ibert of stirring up a warm reception for the American premiere of his opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot."

The famed French composer, a faculty member this Summer at the Center, was in the audience.

The work abounds, for the better part of four scenes, in loud and energetic choruses and several arias that would make excellent material for concert stage programs.

Dr. Jan Popper, held a firm grasp over music that drives on with unbounded vigor, and relaxes occasionally for ballad-typed arias. The stage is thickly populated with people most of the time and it requires more space than last night's had to offer. Sets are fragile, but pleasing to look at, and costumes carry you back to the 14th century.

Orchestra Competes With Voices

As frequently has occurred in past productions, the orchestra insisted upon giving concerted competition to voices, but as such sounded well—if given undivided attention.

The story goes back to the time when Yvetot occupied part of what is now France, and the women of that principality decided that it was a mistake to retire their magnanimous king. So they return him to his throne, to bring this about requires a rebellion and the mightier-than-the-male assistance of a servant girl, who naturally earns a queendom for her efforts.

In this production, the outstanding role was promoted from a secondary one by Sumner Crockett. He made a striking personality of a local inn-keeper, instigator of bad things in the story. His slightly more subdued competitior in the inn-keeping business and operatic plot was cleverly presented by Fernand Martel.

Title Role Handled Well

The title role was adequately handled by Manfrel Hecht, without raising it to the merits of a glowing report. Ewan Harbrecht did what she could to make the servant girl prominent but Mr. Ibert was content to make her sing pretty songs and emote rather unconvincingly.

The score moves at such speed that the English translation by Henry Reese frequently creates a struggle between words and music.

For the most part, the choruses are super-energized, quiet emotion is languorized, and humor is vitalized.

The capacity audience of Berkshire Center friends gave the production its stamp of approval, and tonight's probably won't argue the point.

Recalling briefly last weekend's activities considerable discussion, some of it unfavorable, was raised by Serge Koussevitzky's failure to attend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. They were conducted by Victor de Sabata and Leonard Bernstein.

In a nationwide broadcast on July 9, Dr. Koussevitzky reprimanded the trustees of the Boston Symphony for engaging Mr. de Sabata to conduct the concerts of Aug. 3 and 5 without consulting him. The symphony board replied that the Italian conductor was engaged after Dr. Koussevitzky had declined to take the series.

Koussevitzky Opposed Movies

More recently, Dr. Koussevitzky vigorously opposed the showing of movies following one of the main concerts. Although equipment had already been installed, the movies were withdrawn. The announced purpose for the movies was to alleviate the traffic situation by a more gradual withdrawing of patrons from the grounds.

Dr. Koussevitzky's absence from these concerts is interpreted in some quarters as a further expression of his disapproval. However, his failure to attend the Bernstein concert is as unprecedented as it is enigmatic.

Mr. De Sabata received another ovation on Saturday night. His podium manners and mannerisms again evoked considerable amusement and repeated outbursts of applause. During the Bach sinfonia from the "Christmas oratorio,' and Mozart's "symphony in E-flat Major.' He remained comparatively calm giving instructions with a minimum of gesture.

The Berlioz overture, "The Roman Carnival," Ghedini's "Pezzo Concertante," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5," caused him to revert to his fiery style, extravagtnt use of motion, and again he caused near-hysteria from the audience.

Bernstein Shows Ability

For some unexplained reason, Leonard Bernstein conducted the Sunday concert with uncommon restraint. While the reception he received did not equal those of the past for demonstrative enthusiasm, it was generally agreed that he outdid himself from the standpoints of musicality and tasteful direction.

His interpretations of Ravel's "Mother Goose Suite" and "Alborada Del Gracioso" were polished and craftfully delivered.

In capacities of pianist and conductor, Mr. Bernstein gave brilliant accounts of Ravel's "Concerto for piano and orchestra." His directorial duties were inconspicuously performed while the piano score was being unravelled with admirable deftness.

It was only during excerpts from Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" that Mr. Bernstein indulged in the rapturous expressions and athleticisms that have caused derogatory criticism. The largest portion of the score, however, was as exemplary as the Ravel conceptions.

Four concerts remain to be given in this festival. Thursday night, Dr. Koussevcitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony and a chorus of students from the Berkshire Music Center in a performance of Bach's "Mass in B Minor." Soloists will be Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd, and James Pease.

On Friday night, the festival's annual special event, "Tanglewood on Parade," will be highlighted by a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator. Koussevitzsky will also conduct Haydn's "Oxford" symphony, and Dvorak's symphony, "From the New World."

Joseph De Pasquale, violinist, will be soloist for Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" at Saturday night's concert, directed by Eleazar de Carvalho. Koussevitzky will close the festival Sunday afternoon when he conducts performances of Prokofieff's "Symphony No. 6," and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1."

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
8/10/50

Berkshire Music Center

The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade", the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of its most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf", this Friday evening.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this 13th season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5:00 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy". Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And on next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1950

Series C Concerts Open at Tanglewood

First of Final Series Tonight —"Tanglewood on Parade" Friday.

The first of the three Series C concerts will be given tonight at Tanglewood in Lenox, and will open the final series of three concerts.

Tonight the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, will perform Bach's Mass in B Minor. Because of the length of this work, its performance will be divided. The first part will start at 5 o'clock, and the second, at 8.15. This change is the only deviation of the season from the usual weeknight starting time of 8.15. The music center chorus will sing.

Soloists for the Bach work tonight are Adele Addisone, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

Saturday night, Eleazar De Carvalho will conduct. There will be three numbers: Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pesquale as soloist; Ibert's "Escales;" and the "Choros 10" of Villa-Lobos.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return to the podium Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, when the orchestra will perform the "Symphony No. 6" of Prokofieff, and "Symphony No. 1" by Brahms.

Friday will be the annual "Tanglewood On Parade" night, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. The orchestra will give a concert in the shed at 8.15 o'clock, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, and will present the "Oxford" Symphony of Haydn; Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolfe," with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator; and Dvorak's "New World Symphony."

In addition to the concert, there will be a lawn party, picnic supper and waltzing on the lawn. Those who purchase tickets will be invited to attend, at 6 o'clock, activities of the school, which include its symphony orchestra, opera scenes, chorus and chamber music.

Attendance has been excellent at the Tanglewood concerts this year. The total, at the close of the second series of concerts Sunday was 59,750. It is believed that the Series C concerts and Friday night's "Tanglewood on Parade" program may bring the total to around 100,000 for the season.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1950

TANGLEWOOD STORY BEHIND IRON CURTAIN

Trans-Atlantic Telephone Talk Carried to Germany

The story of Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival and Berkshire Music center in Lenox, is going to be carried behind the Iron Curtain.

Two members of the Tanglewood staff told the story in a trans-Atlantic telephone conversation with two distinguished musicians in Salzburg, Germany, today, while the talk was recorded for broadcasting on the "Voice of America" program with which the U. S. State department seeks to combat Soviet propaganda in the areas under Red Russian control in Europe.

William Kroll, noted violinist and chamber music teacher at Tanglewood, and Jan Popper, head of the opera department, were on the Lenox end of the trans-Atlantic phone line. The director of the Mozart institute in Salzburg and the producer of the Vienna State opera, were on the German end. Robert Bauer of the State department staff acted as moderator of their conversation. The German musicians asked questions about the Tangewood music project and the Americans replied, especially referring to the Bach commemorative program given this year.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

By Francis D. Perkins

Ibert's Opera Heard

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—Jacques Ibert's third opera, "The King of Yvetot," was warmly received in its first American performance last night by the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department in the center's Theater-Concert Hall here. There were fervent plaudits for the composer, who is a member of the center's composition faculty for this summer; for the members of the student cast, and for Dr. Jan Popper, the Opera Department's acting director, who conducted.

The twenty-year-old work is entertaining, in music and text; the score also speaks highly for the craftsmanship of a composer hitherto known in this country mainly in the orchestral field. The libretto, by Jean Limozin and Andre de la Tourrasse, has an element of amiably presented satire on war and politics. Yvetot, in Normandy, was once an independent state; its king, in Béranger's famous ballad, was an easy-going, pleasant character. In the opera, a dispute with aggressive neighbors leads the men of Yvetot to call for war; the king points out that they have no army and no arms. But the men march off, only to return, badly beaten up; one of the two rival innkeepers leads a revolt against the king, proclaiming that the citizenry was badly armed and badly led.

The third of the four acts, however, finds the women complaining against the new state of affairs; farming and domestic chores both suffer. Jeanneton, a servant girl in love with the king, figures prominently in the plan which brings the king back to the throne with little opposition, and becomes his queen.

The score is continuous, except for a few spoken passages; it is distinctly melodic, and, although the tunes are not, on the whole, readily rememberable, many passages have a distinct charm and persuasive atmosphere. The form, with no lack of arias, ariosos, concerted vocal music and lively choruses, is conservative; the same can be said of the musical ideas and harmonies, which suggest an earlier period in French opera than that of the late 1920s. The orchestral and vocal music are well balanced; the instrumental writing often has a notable descriptive effectiveness, and the element of satire appears in the music as well as the text, with one or two touches of parody. As a whole, "The King of Yvetot" serves its purpose well, although it is not one of those works which mark a milestone in operatic history or herald or carry on any new and significant musical trend. But it has coherence, tunefulness, momentum and expressive variety.

Henry Reese's transiation of the French text was presented with a praiseworthy degree of intelligibility, and the production was one of the best integrated of those presented by the center's operatic forces thus far. The vocal standard was high among the members of the cast, headed by Manfred Hecht as the k[illegible], Ewan Harbrecht as Jeanneton, Sumner Crockett and Fernand Martel as the rival innkeepers, Robert Minser as the Elder and Rosalind Elias as Gazette. The orchestra under Dr. Popper gave a polished, spirited and well co-ordinated performance, and unity and spirit also marked the choral singing. The stage director, F. Cowles Strickland, had his crowds move about the stage without giving any hint that its dimensions are limited. The opera was repeated tonight with a few changes in the cast.

For the Boston Symphony Orchestra's last program of the current Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next Sunday afternoon, Serge Koussevitzky has substituted Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony for his originally announced sixth symphony. Brahms' first symphony, as originally announced, completes the program.

ATHOL, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 11 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. Urges Big U.N. Forces

Ferndale, N. Y., Aug. 11 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wif of the late President, last nigh termed the Korean conflict a "war in which all free nations and the United Nations must have a part."

Speaking before 1,100 guests at the Grossinger country club resort here, she urged creation of a powerful U.N. force as a means of thwarting aggression throughout the world.

Mrs. Roosevelt was leaving here today to attend the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. Makes Symphonic Debut

LENOX, Aug. 11 (UP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt makes her symphonic debut tonight as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the Tanglewood Music Center.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who said she knows no music, will be paid by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the RCA-Victor Co. which will record the benefit performance.

She directed that her fee be given to the Music Center and the Wiltwyck school.

LA SALLE, ILL.
POST-TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1950

Summer Musical at Peru Library Saturday Afternoon

Peru librarians today announced the selections to be included in the midsummer concert to be presented at the Peru public library at 2 p.m. Saturday. The music on records, will be augmented by a dramatic presentation by Don Schmidt, Peru native son, now known professionally as Darr Stevens.

The program will open with the First Piano Quartet playing Paganini's "Variation on a Theme in A Minor." Next will come Nathan Miestern, violinist, and Leopold Mittman, piano, playing Wienlawski's "Polonaise Brillante in D Major."

Bach's "Suite No. 2" by the Boston Symphony conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, and the Chicago Symphony directed by Frederick Stock, playing "The Swan of Tuonela, Opus 22, No. 3, by Sibellus, will precede Stevens' dramatic interpretation of a soliloquy from "Hamlet."

Handel's "Concerto in B-flat" for harp and orchestra, will follow by the Victor Chamber orchestra, Marcel Grandjary, harpist, and Stevens, assisted by Dorothy Bieneman, Peru, will give a dramatic interpretation from "The Valiant."

The Rochester Sympnony, with Howard Hanson, conducting, will play "Night Soliloquay," by Keenan and Edward Kelerigi, pianist, will play Chopin's "Etuce No. 8 in F Major," and "Etude No. 4 in Ravel's "Bolero" by the Boston Symphony, will close the program, to which the public is invited.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 11 1950

7,800 at Tanglewood Thrilled by Bach's Mass

A thrilling performance of Bach's Mass in B minor which began at 5 o'clock and continued after a two-hour supper intermission, opened the third series of Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts for the 1950 season at Tanglewood, Lenox, last evening.

7,800 Present

An audience of 7,800 persons heard the mass presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Berkshire Music Center chorus and soloists under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This brought the total attendance for the seven festival concerts this season to 67,550.

More than 10,000 are expected this evening at the annual Tanglewood on Parade, a special program arranged by Dr. Koussevitzky for the benefit of the Music Center school, and the audience at each of the two remaining regular festival concerts, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, is expected to go above the 10,000 mark as they did last weekend.

Nearly 3,000 persons who were listening to the Bach mass from the lawn outside the huge Tanglewood shed last evening scattered when a sudden drenching shower occurred in the middle of the program. Some crowded under the shed roof. The rest ran to other Tanglewood buildings. But the shower soon stopped and they resumed their places.

Gov. Paul A. Dever was in the audience last evening. He plans to remain for the rest of the week.

Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Bease, bass, were the soloists in the performance of the mass. The chorus composed of students in the Music Center school, had been trained by Hugh Ross, choral director at the school.

Performance of the mass wound up Tanglewood's commemoration this year of the 200th anniversary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach. Four of the preliminary concerts were devoted to his works, several have been on previous Festival concert programs and the programs presented by Music center students have included numerous Bach works.

This evening's Tanglewood on Parade program will open at 6 o'clock with performances by various student groups including a production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi," by opera department students.

At 8.30 o'clock Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston orchestra in a program that will include Haydn's "Oxford" symphony, Dvorak's "New World" symphony, and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator. Mrs. Roosevelt arrived this morning to rehearse with the orchestra, and a recording of the piece was made this afternoon.

Provisions for picnic supper parties have been made, and after the concert there will be dancing on the lawn.

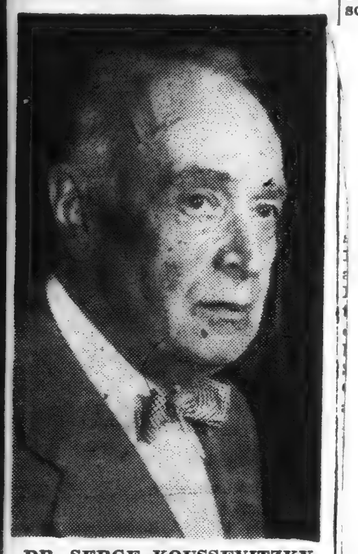
Tomorrow evening, Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the orchestra in the eighth festival concert of the year and on Sunday afternoon the 1950 season will close with a final concert at which Dr. Koussevitzky will be on the podium.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 8 - 1950

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed at Tanglewood on Thursday evening in a program featuring the Bach "Mass in B Minor." The program will be divided into two parts with the first starting at 5 and running to 6:30 o'clock and the second opening at 8:15 o'clock. Members of the assisting quartet will be Adele Addison, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Series C of the Berkshire Festival programs will continue on Saturday with Eleazar de Carvalho conducting a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in the Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Other numbers on the Saturday evening program, which opens at 8:15 o'clock, are Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10."

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the concluding program of the Berkshire 1950 season on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. It will include the Brahms' First Symphony and Prokofieff's "Fifth Symphony."

The annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center will be held Friday with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator for Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and with Dr. Koussevitzy conducting the orchestra. The "Tanglewood on Parade," as this benefit is known, will include a lawn party, picnic supper and waltzing on the lawn. The event runs from 6 to 11 p.m. In addition to "Peter and the Wolf" the orchestra program will include Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony and the Dvorak Symphony, "From the New World."

Events open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center this week include a program of contemporary American choral music today at 4:30 p.m. at the Chamber Music Hall and the second performance of Ibert's "Le Roi D'Yvetot" tonight at 8:15 o'clock at the Theatre. A chamber music program at the Theatre tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. under the sponsorship of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" of J. S. Bach.

On Saturday morning the concluding public rehearsal of the Boston Symphony will be held in the Shed at 10 a.m. with proceeds going to the pension fund of the orchestra. A final chamber music program will be held Sunday at 10 a.m. at the Theatre and will be given by Department II of the school.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt On Tanglewood Program Tomorrow Night

The seventh benefit program staged at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented tomorrow, and will feature the second appearance of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. The program will last from 6 p. m. to 11 p. m. and will include Mrs. Roosevelt's narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

This year's program, again known as Tanglewood on Parade, will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director. The RCA-Victor Company, which will make a recording of the performance, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra both have decided to recognize the former First Lady's services with an amount to be given to charities of her choice. Mrs. Roosevelt in turn has allotted the honorarium equally tothe Berkshire Music Center and the Wiltwyck School.

As door prizes to be awarded after the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday evening, the Baldwin Piano Co. has donated as first price an acrosonic piano from Dr. Koussevitzky's dressing room, and second prize will be a generous package of recordings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by the RCA-Victor Co.

Mrs. Roosevelt will arrive at Tanglewood on Friday morning, and will rehearse the popular Prokofieff work with Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra there. She will have luncheon on the grounds at Tanglewood with Koussevitzky and some of the trustees of the Orchestra. Following this, the RCA-Victor Co. will supervise the recording of the work, in the Theater-Concert hall. Until the recording is completed, at about 4:30, the grounds will be closed to visitors, as absolute quiet is necessary in the area.

BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS
AUG 9 - 1950

Last Week Of 1950-Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. August 7—The last week of the 1950 Tanglewood season will feature highlights of the Berkshire Festival concerts as well as major presentations of the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, "Tanglewood on Parade" the annual benefit show for the Berkshire Music Center, will present the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in one of their most unusual and attractive programs, as Eleanor Roosevelt joins them as narrator for Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf," this Friday evening.

Tonight and tomorrow evening, the opera department at Tanglewood under acting head Jan Popper present the American premiere of Jacques Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot." This production will be the third opera presentation by the students at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, and is their most important work of the season.

On Wednseday the bicentennial celebration of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach continues with the performance of the last of this summer's five chamber music concerts at Tanglewood under the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. This concert, open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will include a performance of "The Musical Offering" and other works.

Bach's B minor Mass will be performed on Thursday with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed, in the first of the last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in this thirteenth season. The Mass will be given in two parts, at 5:00 and 8:15.

Friday evening will see Mrs. Roosevelt performing "Peter and the Wolf" as part of "Tanglewood on Parade." Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony also are to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra that evening. Purchasers of reserved and box seats will be able to see a student production of Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicchi" in the afternoon, and other student activities at Tanglewood will be on view in the afternoon and evening, on Friday.

On Saturday evening Eleazar de Carvelho will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the only time this season, in a program featuring Joseph de Pasquale as viola soloist in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy." Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' "Choros 10" will complete the program.

And on next Sunday afternoon Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of the 1950 season. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokoffief's Fifth Symphony.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
AUG 11 1950

Dear Ed:

I guess you noticed that recent cable from Korea about the loss of three badly needed Sherman tanks and most of their crews due to the fact there was so much snafu back of the lines that three times the delivery of vital equipment needed to make the tanks operate got all snarled up. Planes were rushed up to drop the parts by parachute and on all three trips the stuff was not what was ordered! Twice the parachute came down with the wrong fan belts. The third package, which was supposed to contain a very important mechanical replacement, contained PISTOLS!

It looks like what our fighting men at the front need is some protection from the men in the rear. It seems to me the snafu experts responsible for this ghastly triple error during battle should be run down and made an example of. Combat-line GIs have been treated plenty rough for less.

But the question I can't get out of my noggin is whether this war zone sloppiness in filling an order in the matter of mechanical parts isn't an offshoot of a slipshod mood that has become pretty routine in our whole national life. A carelessness has crept into such things all over the scene back home. Order a new carburetor for your power lawn mower and the chances are even you get back a muffler and a sparkplug. Take your car into some service stations to get the generator fixed and they tighten the steering wheel and repair a windshield wiper instead. I have had my flivver in nine times to have it fixed so the top of the trunk compartment can be closed and locked and it is still warped like the day I got it. In those nine trips the service station has checked the wheels, relined the brakes, touched up a rear fender and done six other jobs I didn't order. Ask for a new part for your icebox and see what you get back. (In fact, I recently bought a new box and the dealer sent me a different model.) If your deep freeze comes through defective and you call up the manufacturer, what do you get? A letter thanking you for calling his attention "to your radio trouble" and assuring you that the matter is being looked into by the vice president in charge of phonographs.

It is not all mechanical. The wife ordered an electric fan by mail last week and what do you think she got today? A case of electric light bulbs and a card saying the missing part for the vacuum cleaner would arrive later.

I tell you snafu has swept over America in the last few years. The old-time fellow who got things straight the first time, saw the job through and had any sense of personal responsibility is gone with the wind. Can't we get him back?

Yours curiously,
ELMER.

* * *

RACE CHART STUFF

Frozen Custard.....Soft spot.
Skin Tonic.....Capable of improvement.
Knocks Twice.....Not enough.
Blinker Light.....Unsteady.
Pigiwigi.....Penned in last time.
Tea Maker.....Godfrey up.

* * *

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has taken on still another role. She has now signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

* * *

In Great Neck, L. I., the other day, Christmas mail meant for 1947 was delivered. It consisted of a thousand cards, letters and gifts found in an abandoned auto. Why the surprise? Two and half years isn't long to wait for the mail these days.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
AUG 10 1950

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced that he and Leonard Bernstein will assume musical supervision of the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra in its first American tour to begin next Jan. 7 in Washington. The two will share the conducting assignments for the major part of the tour. Several other conductors will lend their services.

The tour will cover 60 concerts in the larger cities, including Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Portland, San Francisco, Seattle and others.

HAGERSTOWN, MD.
HERALD
AUG 11 1950

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt ha taken on still another role. Sh has now signed up as narrator o Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf to be played by the Boston Sym phony under Serge Koussevitzky i the Berkshires this month. Al Republicans in the area are re ported fleeing from the lower Berk shires to the peaks.

"Peter and the Wolf" is primarily for children. We can see how Pete gets into it and we can apprentice the importance of the wolf but we are still puzzled as to how Mrs. Roosevelt fits in. The lady's versatility is terrific, but one of these days she is going to get all mixed up in executing her multiple assignments. We anticipate a day when she will go before the United Nations with a narration on Peter, hurry over to a "Meet The Press" session with a wolf and then panic a symphony concert with a lecture on European recovery.

Harry Bridges is in jail at last. This indicates that he may now not be considered any better than 100 per cent Americans.

In Great Neck, L. I., the other day, Christmas mail meant for 1947 was delivered. It consisted of a thousand cards, letters and gifts found in an abandoned auto. Why the surprise? Two and half years isn't long to wait for the mail these days.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 11 1950

Koussevitzky Directs Bach Mass Unevenly

By MILES KASTENDIEUK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11.—As the logical climax of its extended observance of the Bach anniversary at the Berkshire Music Center, Koussevitzky presented the great Mass in B Minor in the music shed last night.

The performance was divided into two parts: the Kyrie and Gloria at five p. m.; the Credo, Sanctus, and Agnes Dei at 8:15. Not all of the audience heard the whole work.

The 6,800 who made the occasion an event enjoyed picnic suppers on the lawns and watched the sunset glow over Stockbridge Bowl. Consciously or unconsciously they unified their musical experience in this interlude.

One of the towering masterpieces of musical literature, the Mass in B Minor never ceases to be a revelation. The music was singularly moving even though the performance of it last night courted constant reservations. They fused at least in expressing nobility.

Koussevitzky's way with Bach is strangely uneven. For one who is usually keenly aware of dramatic accents, he appeared quite unaware of certain ones in the Kyrie, Credo, and Sanctus particularly.

For one who is noted for generating intensity, he did not achieve the full intensity in performance that might be expected. Perhaps some arbitrary tempos and some exaggerated retards contributed to this impression.

The performance attained its quality from the singing of the Festival Chorus of 160 students of the Center and the instrumental soloists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The young voices had been admirably trained by Hugh Ross. Their singing had body and style and sounded exhilerating.

Participating as soloist were Adele Addison, soprano, Eurnice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. The highlight of their contribution was Lloyd's singing of the Benedictus, a beautifully voiced and deeply felt pronouncement.

Miss Addison attracted attention for vocal texture. And Miss Alberts for definite improvement over her Bach singing of several weeks ago.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 10 1950

Details Are Given For Tanglewood Program Friday

Further details on the annual Tanglewood-on-Parade program to be given at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., Friday, have been announced. It will be held rain or shine.

The program will begin at 6 and continue until 11 o'clock. Early events include performances by the student orchestra, scenes by the opera department, rehearsal by the chorus of the Center, and a recital of chamber music. These events will go on simultaneously.

After time out for picnic suppers, the main program will begin at 8:15 o'clock in the Shed. The major feature will be a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will be heard in Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony, Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, and the Prokofiev "Peter And The Wolf," for which Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will be narrator.

Following the concert there will be waltzing on the lawn.

"Tanglewood-on-Parade" is staged each year for the benefit of the Berkshire Music center founded by Dr. Koussevitzky and to acquaint the public further with the work there.

[102]

Mrs. FDR Wins Ovation In Tanglewood Recital

AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt took a place among the first ladies of music at Tanglewood in the Berkshires Friday night.

Her performance as narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was received so well she was applauded back to the stage of the outdoor music shed five times with one of her most enthusastic audience, Serge - Koussevitsky.

With only a single rehearsal which was recorded at the orchestra's summer home during the afternoon, Mrs. Roosevelt read the narration without any noticeable flaw in clear and beautifully inflected tones accompanied by the full orchestra, taking her cues from conductor Koussevitsky.

* * * *

THE CROWD of about 10,000 music enthusiasts who filled the shed and spread out across the whole great lawn of the Tanglewood estate under the stars broke up after her performance to watch Mrs. Roosevelt as she ducked out a side entrance of the hall and sped off in a waiting car.

Her part on the program was the high point in the benefit program billed as "Tanglewood on Parade" an open house affair in which the visitors were permitted to visit all parts of the big estate owned by the Boston Symphony.

During the early part of the evening there were operatic selections given in the concert hall, across the spacious grounds from the main music shed, and picnickers made a veritable Coney Island scene on the lawns, wandered through the landscaped gardens which look out over one of the most beautiful views in New England, and chatted with members of the orchestra before the main event of the evening began shortly after nightfall.

* * *

THE VISITORS came by the thousands some dressed formally and others in dungarees and sweaters from camps and summer homes in the Berkshire area. They spoke in many languages and accents. They all came to talk about and listen to great music, played in one of the most colorful settings anywhere by some of the world's finest musicians.

When the program was completed late in the evening the lawn was turned into a great dancefloor where the hundreds who remained late waltzed and lingered to listen.

The program itself took only a couple of hours. In included, besides the Prokofieff rendition, Haydn's Oxford Symphony, and the New World Symphony of Dvorak.

* * *

EVERY NOTE and phrase of the music could be heard clear and distinct far out in the darkness of the cool mountain evening. It was a performance well worth the trip for those who came from great distances to hear the orchestra and the versatile wife of the late President.

Tanglewood officials said that the crowd was far from a record one at the estate, but there were so many that at the concession stands the coffee ran out, at the concert hall there wasn't any standing room left and the programs were not available for the operatic scenes. When the main concert started the reserved section was more than filled up and many people with reserved stubs were left standing in the rear of the shed. No one seemed to mind too much. The music could be heard as well from almost any part of the hall or its environs.

R. H.

DAYTON, OHIO NEWS
AUG 11 1950

Personalities In The News

Mrs. FDR Makes Symphonic Debut As Fantasy Narrator

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—(UP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt makes her symphonic debut tonight as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter And the Wolf" at the Tanglewood music center.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who said she knows no music, will be paid by the Boston Symphony orchestra and the RCA-Victor Co., which will record the benefit performance. She directed that her fee be given to the music center and the Wiltwyck school.

* * *

ORLANDO, FLA. [illegible]-STAR
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt at Tanglewood

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT rehearses with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., as Serge Koussevitsky conducts. The former first lady was the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" last night at the orchestra's Berkshire Music center annual benefit program. [AP Wirephoto]

STOCKTON, CAL. RECORD
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Aids in Symphony Concert

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8800.

HARTFORD, CONN. TIMES
AUG 11 1950

B Minor Mass of Bach Stirs Tanglewood Audience

They practically knocked the Music Shed down at Tanglewood last night when the time came to applaud Serge Koussevitzky and Bach's magnificent B Minor Mass.

And well earned was this ovation. Not only did the venerable ruler of the Boston Symphony Orchestra weld the massive and powerful work into a scintillating and cohesive whole, but he was able last night, as he sometimes is not with Bach, to project perfectly the sublime emotional impact of this, the greatest piece of choral music ever written.

Working a split shift — the first half of the Mass at 5, the second at 8:15 p. m.—it took all the performers most of that first part to warm up. But when they did—and by the opening bars of thundering Credo they were well on their way—the result was breathtakingly magnificent.

* * *

THE CHORUS members performed as if they had been singing the Mass for most of their lives. And except for the opening "Kyrie eleison," the orchestra was kept within perfect bounds, and not once did it force the chorus into the background or into straining for volume.

The soloists—Adele Addison, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass — after shaky starts all outbid themselves in passing the spirit of their understanding on to the eager audience. Perhaps the outstanding pieces of work were turned in by Miss Alberts on the Agnus Dei and "Qui sedes" arias, by Mr. Lloyd on his "Benedictus," and by Mr. Pease on "Et in spiritum sanctum." These were all just done up su-

Almost a major share of the credit for this overpoweringly forceful performance must rightly go to Hugh Ross who prepared the chorus for its arduous and demanding task. You could not ask for a more successful job. At all times the chorus was in perfect balance, clear and with each part impressing its individual flavor on the listener.

* * *

HE TENOR section in particular was a delight. Feeling a weakness here, Mr. Ross brought in three members of the Bethlehem (Pa.) Bach Choir to assist and succeeded in making that section the outstanding part of a chorus of over 150 people.

Though a bit shy and uncertain at first, the chorus seemed to grow in size and stature before one's very eyes, and in the "Cum sancto spiritu," and the Santus (especially "Osanna in excelsis") they were magnificent.

Dr. Koussevitzky, obviously at home in a Bach work that did not require lightness and gay spirit but power and drama and passion, might have been Bach himself last night. He knew what he wanted and what was right. He got just what he wanted and he made a sophisticated audience stand on its feet and cheer for 10 minutes.

E. C.

KANSAS CITY, MO. STAR
AUG 12 1950

MRS. F. D. R. IS A STAR.

Tanglewood Crowd Cheers Her Narration of Symphony Story.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12.(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

Howard Taubman, New York Times music critic, wrote that "Mrs. Roosevelt spoke her part simply and charmingly. She did not have the professional polish of an actor, but her unaffected approach had a special quality all its own.

"She sounded like a grandmother reading a pleasant little story to her grandchildren. She seemed to take a personal relish in the fable and she was as alert to all her musical cues as though she had always done this kind of thing."

NEW BRITAIN, CONN. HERALD
AUG 12 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT THRILLS LENOX

Hailed After Narration of Fairy Tale at Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 (UP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's debut as a symphony narrator was hailed as a triumph today after an enthusiastic audience of 8,800 called her back for repeated curtain calls at the end of her performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in a blue silk gown and speaking in a captivating grandmotherly fashion, narrated the musical fairy tale last night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The former first lady made her initial curtain call with conductor Serge Koussevitzky, but was reluctant to come from the wings alone as the audience continued to clamor for her.

Koussevitzky walked over to her, kissed her hand in continental fashion, and then virtually dragged his guest artist front and center for the repeated curtain calls.

During the performance a number of children in the audience were so moved by the narration and the ingenious music of the old fairy tale that they darted from their seats and came to rest their chins on the edge of the stage at Mrs. Roosevelt's feet.

The performance netted $19,000 for the Berkshire Music Training Center.

WATERBURY, CONN. AMERICAN
AUG 11 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt At Tanglewood

The seventh benefit program staged at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be presented today and will feature the second appearance here of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. The progam starts at 6 p. m. and will include Mrs. Roosevelt's narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

This year's program, again known as Tanglewood on Parade, will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director. A recording of the performance will be made and all participants are donating a portion of the proceeds to music schools.

The concert in the Shed will begin at 8:30 and besides the performance of "Peter and the Wolf" will also include the performance of Haydn's Oxford Symphony and Dvorak's New World Symphony, both also by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. Following the concert, there will be waltzing on the lawn overlooking the lake behind the main house at Tanglewood.

[103]

Nutmeggers at Tanglewood School

AUG 12 1950

FROM left: John Adams, Hamden, French horn; Raymond Montoni, Bridgeport, viola; Daniel George, West Hartford; Richard Chute, Falls Village, choral conductor; J. Der Magerdecian, Bridgeport, string bass; Vincent Avallone, Hartford, string bass; front row, Stella Meiss, Woodbridge, chorus, Catherine Ameer, Norwalk, French horn; Polly Clark, Hamden, opera auditor.—[Howard S. Babbitt Jr. Photo.

Tanglewood Lenox, Mass.— [illegible] students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood were from Connecticut [illegible]. They were studying under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony, and with a faculty made up from among the principals of that orchestra.

The school or Music Center located in the Berkshire Hills in Western Massachusetts is supported partly by receipts from the Festival Concerts by the Boston Symphony and partly by donations. These donors, known as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, are invited to attend the student recitals and concerts which are held almost daily throughout the summer. Some concerts draw as many as 3,000 Friends.

The students from Connecticut were studying everything from orchestral playing to the construction of scenery for operas put on by the opera department. They also attended classes in conducting, singing, opera dramatics and many other aspects of music. Open to them all were the Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony three times a week.

Not shown in the picture are Sonya Bendett, Mystic, oboe; Evelyn Fry, Greenwich, chorus; Charles Hammond, New Haven, scenic arts; Judith Thompson, Fairfield, chorus; Mac Morgan, Southport, opera dramatics.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1950

MUSIC HOUSE

RECORD REVIEW

The season at Tanglewood is almost a memory. Last night the first of the final series of three concerts was given. Or rather yesterday afternoon and last night. That was an occasion unique in the history of this well known festival. For the first time the performance straddled the dinner hour. The first half of the Bach B minor Mass was given at five o'clock and the last half at seven after an hour and a half intermission. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Tonight the big hullabaloo dubbed "Tanglewood on Parade" will be staged from six to eleven o'clock. Amidst a background of side shows and attractions ranging from excerpts from operas given in the theatre to portions of chamber music played in the little chamber music hall. The big attraction will be the performance in the Shed where the orchestra will play the "Oxford" symphony of Haydn the "New World" symphony of Dvorak and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as the narrater. This should be a show worth seeing and hearing.

Saturday night Eleazar De Carvalho will conduct the orchestra in three selections. "Harold in Italy" by Berlioz will occupy the evening up to intermission time and after that will be presented Ibert's "Escales", music for a ballet and the Brazilian composer Villa-Lobos' "Choros No. 10". On Sunday Mr. Koussevitzky will close the festival with two works, Prokofieff's Symphony number six and Brahms' Symphony number four.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1950

MUSIC-CENTER'S STUDENT CHORUS IN BACH HONOR

Student Chorus, Orchestra and Soloists Present 'Mass in B Minor'

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 10 — The Berkshire Music Center, here at Tanglewood paid its final tribute to Johann Sebastian Bach today, fittingly commemorating his death 200 years ago with a magnificient performance of the [illegible] in B minor." We are told that more than 60 concerts devoted to the music of Bach have been given during this summer session by students, faculty and orchestra of the center. No greater tribute could have been given the master than the definitive performance heard this afternoon and evening.

Student Chorus Assists

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the performance which embraced the services of the splendid student festival chorus, the orchestra and following soloists: Adel Addison of Springfield, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor and James Pease, bass. These soloists have appeared several times under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky and so a perfect accord was reached at once. The instrumental soloists, whose performances play so important a part in the whole structure of the Mass, were Richard Burgin, violin; James Stagliano, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboe, D'Amore; E. Power Biggs, organ and Erwin Body, harpsichord.

In such a revealing performance as we heard today it is difficult to pick out any particular individual or achievement, for the performance was so perfectly integrated that one listened to it as an entity, rather than to its component parts. Adel Addison's lovely soprano soared easily over the orchestra and her flawless enunciation of the Latin text was a model all might well emulate.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT AT TANGLEWOOD—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt rehearsing with the Boston Symphony orchestra at Lenox, Mass., as Serge Koussevitsky conducts. The former first lady was the narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" Friday night at the orchestra's Berkshire Music center annual benefit program. (AP Wirephoto)

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE & TIMES

AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Is Huge Success as Symphony Narrator

LENOX, Aug. 12.—(UP)—Mrs Eleanor Roosevelt's debut as a symphony narrator was hailed as a triumph to-day after an enthusiastic audience of 8800 called her back for repeated curtain calls at the end of her preformance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in a blue silk gown and speaking in a captivating grandmotherly fashion, narrated the musical-fairy tale Friday night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the [illegible] the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The former first lady made her initial curtain call with Conductor Serge Koussevitsky, but was reluctant to come from the wings alone as the audience continued to clamor for her.

Koussevitsky walked over to her, kissed her hand in continental fashion, and then virtually dragged his guest artist front and centre for the repeater curtain calls.

During the performance a number of children in the audience were so moved by the narration and the ingenious music of the old fairy tale that they darted from their seats and came to rest their chins on the edge of the stage at Mrs. Roosevelt's feet.

The performance netted $19,000 for the Berkshire music training centre.

[104]

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 1 21950

MRS. ROOSEVELT REHEARSES

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt rehearses with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox, yesterday as Serge Koussevitzky conducts. The former first lady was narrator for a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" last night at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center annual benefit program. (AP Photo)

4-Ring Musical 'Circus' Held at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Saturday—In the past, the most popular pseudonym with which the press has dubbed "Tanglewood on Parade" is the "Four-Ring Circus." This Summer's Latin-American students at the Berkshire Music Center have another name for it—the "Carnival."

No matter what you call it, the musical adventures that started at 5 and continued to an undetermined hour would have required the services of a reporter-critic-track-star. For obvious reasons, those of us who were assigned to cover this big show found it impossible to be in four places at once.

Mrs. Roosevelt

Of course, we might have pooled our reports, but that isn't done in journalistic circles, so the obvious solution was to ambulate to each auditorium, listen fast, and lunge to the next. The whole project led up to that long-awaited moment when Eleanor Roosevelt added to her numerous activities that of Boston's Symphony narrator for "Peter and The Wolf."

Last Summer, I sifted almost indecipherable notes into a fairly coherent yarn by using a kind of diary system, so I'm going to try it again. A performance of Puccini's opera, "Gianni Schicchi" was scheduled for 4.30, but at that hour a Boston Symphony-Eleanor Roosevelt recording of "Peter" was still being waxed and it wasn't until five that an audience was admitted to the Chamber Music Hall.

Apparently the set for the opera rivals that of "Gotterdamerung" because it required an hour to strike it. It can't be said that Tanglewood isn't resourceful, and so five talented singers gave a first - rate recital with a few minutes' warning.

They were Adele Addison, Sumner Crockett, Luis Pichardo, Marni Nixon, and Ewan Harbrecht. The extemporized laurels were gathered in largest quantities by Miss Nixon with a remarkably agile and secure performance of the "Bellsong" from "Lakme."

395 Students

6.—A fanfare enticed 395 students from 40 of these United States and a dozen foreign countries to an area in front of the Shed. Aaron Copland was on hand to explain what was going on. When he finished remarking, the students gathered up their skirts and reticules and streamed off to their various havens of endeavor.

Roosevelt's diction was above reproach, although the two loud speakers that carried it, one on each side of the stage, did not have the power required, particularly in heavier orchestra passages. She read from a musical score but looked to the conductor for cues, not one of which was missed. Dr. Koussevitzky gave her admirable assistance.

Gracious Reading

There wasn't a wide range of expression in her delivery—not very ominous moments, even when "Peter" is in dire danger, but in every sense it was a gracious reading and one that required precision and a certain "savoir-faire" in which the narrator was not found wanting.

Now to get back to things orchestral, a superb performance was given of the Haydn symphony. In fact, it was some of the best playing we have heard here this Summer. The adagio was played with admirable preoccupation of its quiet beauty. The sharp change to swift motion was accomplished with typical Koussevitzky finesse. He seemed to revel in miniature speeches between instruments, directing them with minutest care.

The slow movement sang with warm tone and graceful phrasing. Although a bit on the heavy side, the minuet was endowed with rare spirit and the trio was a friendly dialogue between strings and wind instruments. The finale raced with youthful enthusiasm and vitality.

To Close Sunday

The evening closed with a performance of Dvorak's "New World Symphony," dancing on the lawn, but fireworks were omitted this year. The day's events were given for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, to which an audience of 8800 contributed nineteen thousand dollars.

The second concert in the final series will be tonight, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting. Dr. Koussevitzky will bring the festival to a close Sunday afternoon.

6.15—Chamber Music Hall: Faye Friedman, Carl Kaye, and Joyce Paull gave a rather inflexible reading of Beethoven's "Trio in D Major." Its best asset was a rich tone and confident delivery from Mr. Kaye's 'cello.

6.25—The orchard: Hugh Ross conducted what was presumably an informal rehearsal of Berenece Robinson's "Psalm 113," the 40 singers were obviously in need of rehearsal and when they finished singing that generally skidded from pitch, Mr. Ross acknowledged the feeble applause with — "You're very kind. It doesn't deserve any clapping."

6.35—The Shed: We passed the theater en route and the Puccini opera was finally under way. A richly nuanced performance of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" by the orchestra of Department 11 was conducted by Charles Schiff. It was first-class playing in every sense.

Receives Ovation

8.15—The Shed—Eleanor Roosevelt received an ovation for which we can think of no precedent here at Tanglewood.

When she made her entrance, after a performance of Haydn's "Oxford Symphony," the audience was bid to stand by Dr. Koussevitzky. While the first ovation was in process, the conductor led the orchestra and audience in a lusty rendition of the National Anthem.

At its conclusion, the audience's soto voce remarks had to be silenced before the program's main feature could be gotten under way. The former First Lady appeared to be slightly nervous, and it was also clear that she took her task very seriously indeed.

It can't be said that the exploits of "Peter" were the chief subject of interest to any great extent. As a matter of fact, last night's "Peter" was a Bostonian hero. It goes without saying that Mrs.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 21950

People

Cosmopolitan Spirit Part of Tanglewood

By BARBARA GRAY

THOSE HARTFORDITES who enjoy symphonic music most when they are in a beautiful natural setting have been going north this summer to the Berkshire Hills, the home of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Tanglewood and the Berkshire Music Festival. The spacious grounds of the music school there are high and overlook a lovely lake. Before and after operas, concerts and rehearsals, visitors stroll through the formal gardens and the wooded areas surrounding the central group of buildings.

But it's more than natural beauty and perfection in music that gives Tanglewood the attraction it holds for music lovers. As Mrs. C. Arthur Hackney of Walbridge Rd., West Hartford, puts it, "The cosmopolitan crowd speaking many languages and a glorious spirit of the thing is so interesting to Hartfordites." Mr. and Mrs. Hackney have been staying at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge for a month.

* * *

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT'S narration of "Peter and the Wolf" by Prokofieff highlighted "Tanglewood on Parade" presented last night. Her day was a busy one. She arrived by plane in Pittsfield, Mass., yesterday morning and was driven to Tanglewood. After luncheon with Dr. Koussevitzky and three of the trustees of the Berkshire Music Center, she recorded "Peter and the Wolf" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Before the evening performance, Mrs. Roosevelt was the dinner guest of Dr. Koussevitzky at his home.

Tanglewood on Parade also featured a lawn party and picnic supper which preceded the concert. After the program given in the large shed, people waltzed on the lawn accompanied by an orchestra composed of some of the 395 students at the school.

Gov. Paul A. Dever of Massachusetts and his staff were on hand for the events this weekend. Dr. and Mrs. B. J. Buck of Lasalle Rd., West Hartford, will attend tomorrow's concert as will Mr. and Mrs. William Haine, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon T. Dow, all of Whiting Lane, West Hartford, and Mr. and Mrs. Francis G. Leserer of Ridgewood Rd., West Hartford.

* * *

MRS. PHILIP CHENEY of Manchester was there last weekend. Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Spoerl of North Beacon St. have been spending most of the summer in Tyringham, Mass., and have attended a great many of the concerts. Mrs. Russell J. Clinchy and Dr. Daniel F. Harvey, both of North Beacon St., have also been at Tanglewood this season.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center from this vicinity include Mrs. Philip Cheney, Max Adelson of Windsor, Mrs. Clarence F. Bennett of New Britain, Bruce E. Bidwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eliot N. Bidwell of Montclair Dr., West Hartford, Dr. and Mrs. B. J. Buck, Mrs. James E. Cooper of New Britain, Roslyn Coplan of Asylum Ave., West Hartford, Miss Susan Dannreuther, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin T. Dannreuther of the Boulevard, West Hartford, Victor F. DeNezzo of Branford St., William D. Goldstein of Colebrook St., Joseph D. Hurwitz of Pembroke St., Rosemary Jones of Kensington, Robert F. Kopelman of Westbourne Pkwy., and Dr. Herbert Levine of Middletown.

* * *

MR. AND MRS. DANIEL L. NYE of Ellsworth Rd., West Hartford; Mr. and Mrs. Philip G. Quinn of Farmington Ave., West Hartford; Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Randall of Staple Pl., West Hartford; Mrs. William Mather Lewis of Colebrook; Prudence Merritt of Litchfield; Miss Iva M. Murphy of South Main St., West Hartford; Miss Helen R. McGinnis of New Britain; Miss Nathalye Newton of Middletown, and Mrs. Ruth C. North of New Britain are also included.

Others are Mr. and Mrs. Emerson E. White of North Beacon St., Miss Anne Stafford of Elizabeth St., Miss Frances Warren of Middletown, Thomas R. Bodine of Lewis St., Mr. and Mrs. Howard W. Bodwell of Myrtle St., Dr. D. N. Shulman of Farmington Ave., Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Spoerl of North Beacon St., and Mr. and Mrs. C. Arthur Hackney of Walbridge Rd., West Hartford.

* * *

THE WAR'S OUTBREAK and the calling of the 43d National Guard Division have caused many young Hartford couples to push ahead their wedding dates. An example of this was the marriage of Miss Nancy K. Murray, daughter of Mrs. William A. Murray of Prospect Ave., West Hartford, and George T. LaBonne Jr. of Waterbury which took place this morning. The preparation time was just 10 days.

When Nancy's fiance, a member of the 43d, was alerted she advanced her bridal date from Oct. 7 to today. Mrs. Murray remarked that it was possible to have a formal wedding only through the help of her five daughters and her neighbors and the foresight of Nancy. "We all laughed a little at Nancy when she bought her wedding gown in June," she said, "but now we realize what a wise move it was." The Murrays sacrificed nothing except a large reception at a nearby country club and engraved invitations which couldn't be printed on such short notice.

EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW
AUG 1 2 1950

Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Letters For Special Delivery

Dear Ed:

I GUESS YOU noticed that recent cable from Korea about the loss of three badly-needed Sherman tanks and most of their crews due to the fact there was so much snafu back of the lines that three times the delivery of vital equipment needed to make the tanks operate got all snarled up. Planes were rushed up to drop the parts by parachute and on all three trips the stuff was not what was ordered! Twice the parachute came down with the wrong fan belts. The third package, which was supposed to contain a very important mechanical replacement, contained pistols!

It looks like what our fighting men at the front need is some protection from the men in the rear. It seems to me the snafu experts responsible for this ghastly triple error during battle should be run down and made an example of. Combat-line G.I.'s have been treated plenty rough for less.

—:—

BUT THE question I can't get out of my noggin is whether this war zone sloppiness in filling an order in the matter of mechanical parts isn't an offshoot of a slipshod mood that has become pretty routine in our whole national life. A carelessness has crept into such things all over the scene back home. Order a new carburetor for your power lawn mower and the chances are even you get back a muffler and a spark plug.

* * *

Take your car into some service stations to get the generator fixed and they tighten the steering wheel and repair a windshield wiper instead. I have had my flivver in nine times to have it fixed so the top of the trunk compartment can be closed and locked and it is still warped like the day I got it. In those nine trips the service station has checked the wheels, relined the brakes, touched up a rear fender and done six other jobs I didn't order. Ask for a new part for your icebox and see what you get back. In fact, I recently bought a new box and the dealer sent me a different model. If your deep freeze comes through defective and you call up the manufacturer what do you get? A letter thanking you for calling his attention "to your radio trouble" and assuring you that the matter is being looked into by the vice-president in charge of phonographs.

* * *

IT IS not all mechanical. The wife ordered an electric fan by mail last week and what do you think she got today? A case of electric light bulbs and a card saying the missing part for the vacuum cleaner would arrive later.

* * *

I tell you snafu has swept over America in the last few years. The oldtime fellow who got things straight the first time, saw the job through and had any sense of personal responsibility is gone with the wind. Can't we get him back?

Yours curiously,
Elmer

RACE CHART STUFF

Frozen Custard. . . . Soft spot.
Skin Tonic. . . . Capable of improvement.
Knocks Twice. . . . Not enough.
Blinker Light. . . . Unsteady.
Pigiwigi. . . . Penned in last time.
Tea Maker. . . . Godfrey up.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has taken on still another role. She has now signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's Peter And The Wolf to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

* * *

Peter And The Wolf is primarily for children. We can see how Peter gets into it and we can appreciate the importance of the wolf, but we are still puzzled as to how Mrs. Roosevelt fits in. The lady's versatility is terrific, but one of these days she is going to get all mixed up in executing her multiple assignments. We anticipate a day when she will go before the United Nations with a narration on Peter, hurry over to a Meet The Press session with a wolf and then panic a symphony concert with a lecture on European recovery.

Harry Bridges is in jail at last. This indicates that he may now not be considered any better than 100 per cent Americans.

(By The Associated Newspapers)

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES
AUG 1 21950

Koussevitzky Lauds Musical Advances

BY DR. WERNER WOLF

NEW YORK—The first remark made to me by Mr. Koussevitzky during the intermission of the concert in Tanglewood gave full proof of his rather astonishing power of memory. He recalled my playing on the piano for him some fascinating passages from Bruckner's Ninth Symphony in my mother's home not less than 40 years ago. To this Fritz Kreisler added:

"And do you remember, Werner, where and when I saw you last? It was 20 years ago when you conducted Bruckner's 'Tedeum' in the Berlin Philharmonic." (I wish Chattanooga would have the opportunity to hear this glorious piece of sacred music in the near future.)

These recollections of the two prominent men made me think of the amount of time that had elapsed since those days and of all the things that have happened to the world ever since. Our conversation turned then to the Bruckner Symphony just finished under the baton of Koussevitzky. I tried to express my admiration to the maestro for the beautiful rendition of the score, but with his natural modesty he declined any sort of compliments and wanted rather critical remarks from me.

* * *

As a matter of course we musicians are much more anxious to learn from our colleagues what they disapprove of and why than to earn general and unspecified appraisal. Politeness may be a nice thing, but it does not help us on our upward winding road. In this specific case it was not quite easy for me to find anything in the conductor's interpretation that could not be called perfect. The discipline of the orchestra the beauty of its tone and preciseness of rhythm testified to the high rank of its past and present conductors.

All three of us were happy to see the audience of habitual concert-goers pleased with the symphony to an unexpected degree. Was it to be the beginning of higher appreciation for Bruckner's music?

* * *

The second half of the program was dedicated exclusively to compositions Claude Debussy, "Two Nocturnes," "Clouds and Festivals" and the familiar "La Mer." I had anticipated that after the "heavy food" such as offered by the symphony this French dish might be too light to make any deeper impression on the audience.

But the program turned out to be the best possible compilation of contrasting masterworks. Contrast in the program is by far more impressive than a choice made from the angle of related styles or historical order as was customary in times gone by. Debussy was one of the greatest painters in music. His compositions when played on the piano never reveal the inexhaustible riches of colors to the same extent as if performed by an orchestra with its multiple shades of difference in tone quality.

Again I felt the significance of the French master for the development of music. He was a real innovator and founder of a new school that took strong influence upon a whole generation of prominent composers, such as Ravel, Busoni, Puccini and Richard Strauss, all of them being indebted to him for the inspirations they were given by his towering genius.

* * *

The next morning when I rang the bell at Koussevitzky's home the maestro himself opened the door, and this time the topic of our conversation was the musical life of Chattanooga and more specifically the operatic events there. I explained the nature of our work to him and had the satisfaction to see him growing more and more delighted with the developments in our town.

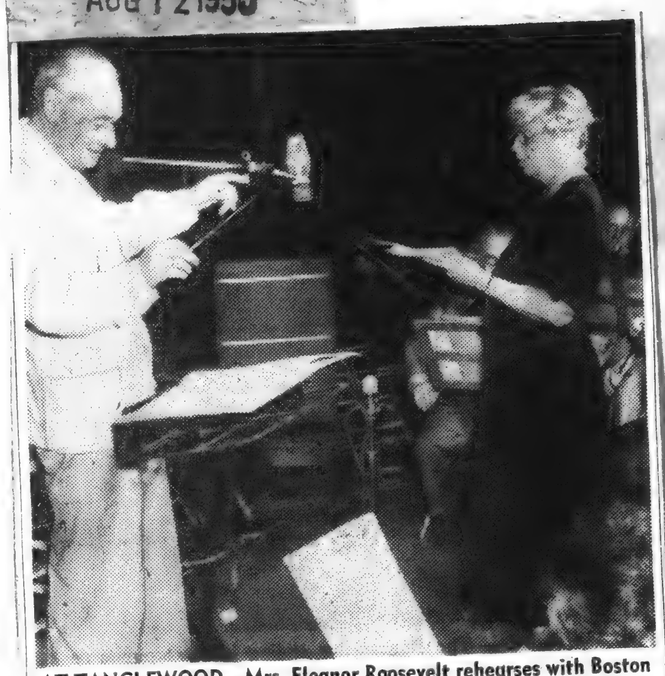
"Believe me," he said to me, "what you are doing there in the South is of far greater importance for the cultural progress of the entire country than what can be accomplished in many a big city where the audience has no right to behave as pretentious and sophisticated as they often do."

Raising his hand, he went on:

"Men of our age, such as you and I, should consider it their noblest task to pass on the talent God has bestowed on us as a heavenly gift. Let us never stop spreading musical culture throughout America. To realize this will always be the greatest reward we can expect from our artistic activities."

With these words ringing in my ears, I took leave from the prominent musician, the wonderful man and good friend of mine, Serge Koussevitzky.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 21950



AT TANGLEWOOD—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt rehearses with Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., as Serge Koussevitzky conducts. Former first lady was narrator at performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" last night at Tanglewood Music Center.—[AP (Concert review, Page 17)

Tanglewood Bach Concert

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

A fifth and last Bach chamber concert was given here on Wednesday evening through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and her foundation in the Library of Congress. The program of unusual interest was directed by Alexander Schneider, violinist, and attracted a full house to the Theatre-Concert Hall. Mrs. Coolidge personally congratulated the group of artists, composed mostly of players from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

To open the program Mr. Schneider played the Partita in E minor with Erwin Bodky at the harpsichord and Alfred Zighera on the cello providing the continuo accompaniment. Georges Laurent joined Mr. Schneider in the second number for a performance of the flute and violin Sonata in G major with the same continuo combination.

The second portion of the concert consisted of almost all of the "Musical Offering," constructed on a theme given Bach by Frederick the Great, himself a musician. The story goes that Bach first extemporized on the theme and later wrote out this set of masterly contrapuntal movements which he offered the king in gratitude for patronage.

The harpischord gave out the first fugal movement, based on the royal theme, which is syncopated and has at its center a group of descending half steps. A Trio Sonata in four movements for flute, violin, and continuo is also built on this theme. Other contrapuntal groups are similar to portions of the "Art of Fugue," in which Bach employs all the known devices to present a set of de facto musical instructions.

Some of these incomparable gems employed as many as eight players for their execution. There were two violins, two violas, two cellos, a flute, and the harpsichord. A varying number of these instruments were used for the different short movements. The last fugal variation was the exact counterpart played by the instruments of the first harpsichord movement.

The players obviously discharged their task with great enjoyment and an awareness that they were performing music of unexcelled dignity and craftsmanship. Each of the players is an artist in his own right; the "Musical Offering" gave them an opportunity to make their instruments servants to the music. Here was no display of virtuosity for its own sake, no beautifully sensuous line to enthrall the ear, but absolute music combining intelligence and sensibility in a manner unsurpassed.

The rapt audience burst into prolonged applause. This music is not often heard or played with such faultless execution and deep understanding of style and musical import.

P.G.

John Carradine to Star

John Carradine will star in "Twentieth Century" at the Brattleboro Summer Theater, Town Hall, Brattleboro, Vt., Wednesday evening through Saturday evening, Aug. 16 through 19.

TORONTO, CANADA
STAR
AUG 12 1950

Big Crowd of Children Charmed As Eleanor Recites Fairy Tale

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 — (UP) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt charmed children in the Berkshire music festival audience right out of their seats last night with her narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

A score of young music-lovers slipped down the aisles of the Tanglewood music shed to rest their chins on the edge of the stage as the former first lady recited the fairy tale to the accompaniment of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An audience of 8,800 filled the shed and overflowed to the lawn.

Conductor Serge Koussevitsky struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" as Mrs. Roosevelt took her place on the stage, and she joined the audience in singing the anthem. Mrs. Roosevelt took her first curtain call with Koussevitsky but the audience called her back again and again with applause.

The appearance marked Mrs. Roosevelt's first professional experience as a performer. Her narration was recorded by R.C.A.-Victor during an afternoon rehearsal. The recording took more than three hours.

[106]

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has taken on still another role. She has now signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 12 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT TAKES BOWS FOR "PETER AND THE WOLF"

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12. (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 12 1950

Chit Chat

Among Catskillians attending the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. on Thursday were Miss Judith Young, Clarence Warrington, Jr., Dr. A. G. Augustine, Dr. and Mrs. E. B. Van Deusen and Mrs. Frederick Fiero. They heard Bach's B Minor Mass which marked the culmination of the Berkshire Festival's observance of the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach this year. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who lead the enormous work in two sections before a crowd of thousands, announced a change for Sunday's program from Prokofiev's sixth to his fifth Symphony.

BIDDEFORD, ME.
JOURNAL
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. Roosevelt Shares Bows At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12.—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin R. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concern o fthe Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.
MESSENGER
AUG 12 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt Narrates at Festival

LENOX, (AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the World."

AUBURN, N. Y.
CITIZEN-ADVERTISER
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. F. D. R. As Narrator

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the World."

LANCASTER, PA.
NEW ERA
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. Shares Honors at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 —(AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

JAMAICA, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
AUG 12 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt Charms the Kids

LENOX, Mass. (UP) Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt charmed children in the Berkshire music festival audience right out of their seats last night with her narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

A score of young music-lovers slipped down the aisles of the Tanglewood music shed to rest their chins on the edge of the stage as the former First Lady recited the fairy tale to the accompaniment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An audience of 8,800 filled the shed and overflowed to the lawn.

Conductor Serge Koussevitsky struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" as Mrs. Roosevelt took her place on the stage, and she joined the audience in singing the anthem. Mrs. Roosevelt took her first curtain call with Koussevitsky but the audience called her back again and again with applause.

FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. F. D. R. Applauded As Concert Narrator

Lenox, Mass. — AP — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky Friday night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt was narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. Shares Bows with Conductor

Lenox, Mass. (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the World."

ATHOL, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 1 21950

SHARES BOWS

Lenox, Aug. 2 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

MARION, OHIO
STAR
AUG 1 21950

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT has taken on still another role. She has now signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

• • •

STEUBENVILLE, OHIO
HERALD-STAR
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has taken on still another role. She now has signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

"Peter and the Wolf" is primarily for children. We can see how Peter gets into it and we can appreciate the importance of the wolf but we are still puzzled as to how Mrs. Roosevelt fits in. The lady's versatility is terrific, but one of these days she is going to get all mixed up in executing her multiple assignments. We anticipate a day when she will go before the United Nations with a narration on Peter, hurry over to a "Meet The Press" session with a wolf and then panic a symphony concert with a lecture on European recovery.

* * *

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. FDR Scores As Concert Narrator

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Musical Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 12 1950

Eleanor Heard With Orchestra

By ROBERT WAHLS

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt made her debut as a concert artist at the Berkshire festival here tonight. She appeared with Serge Koussevitzky and the 100-man Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

The former First Lady, wearing a three-quarter length black lace net gown, was led to the stage by oussevitzky. Her appearance elicted a standing ovation from 9,000 music lovers, shivering in the brisk Berkshire air.

"Peter" is Soviet composer Prokofieff's fairy tale for orchestra and spoken voice. Various instruments characterize animals and humans. The bassoon, for example, is grandfather; the big, bad wolf is a French horn trio and the cat is in the low registers of the clarinet.

Mrs. Roosevelt was the narrator, a role assumed in the past by, among others, Basil Rathbone.

Her interpretation won audience approval and her appearance netted $19,000 for the Berkshire Music Center.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. FDR Shares Concert Honors

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12. (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky Friday night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's Peter And The Wolf.

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

MONTPELIER, VT.
ARGUS
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. FDR Shares Bows With Serge

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 -(AP)- Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y.
LEADER-REPUBLICAN
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. FDR Takes Bow

LENOX, Mass.—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT
AUG 12 1950

Kids Charmed By Eleanor

LENOX, Mass. —(U.P.)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt charmed children in the Berkshire Music Festival audience right out of their seats last night with her narration of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

MRS. ROOSEVELT

A score of young music-lovers slipped down the aisles of the Tanglewood music shed to rest their chins on the edge of the stage as the former first lady recited the fairy tale to the accompaniment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An audience of 8,800 filled the shed and overflowed to the lawn.

Conductor Serge Koussevitsky struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" as Mrs. Roosevelt took her place on the stage, and she joined the audience in singing the anthem. Mrs. Roosevelt took her first curtain call with Koussevitsky but the audience called her back again and again with applause.

The appearance marked Mrs. Roosevelt's first professional experience as a performer.

The performance netted $19,000 for the Berkshire Music Training Center. Mrs. Roosevelt donated half the money paid her to the center and the remainder to the Wiltwyck School for Boys.

FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. FDR Shares Bows

LENOX, Mass. — (AP) — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood. Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

GENEVA, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. FDR Narrator

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the World."

[107]

BARRE, VT.
TIMES
AUG 12 1950

MRS. F. D. R. SHARES BOWS

owd Also Honors Conductor Serge Koussevitsky

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. ranklin D. Roosevelt shared bows ith Conductor Serge Koussevit- y last night at the final concert the Berkshire Music Festival at anglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator ith the Boston Symphony orches- a's performance of Prokofieff's Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitsky, she was ecalled several times for bows by n enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
UNION
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. F.D.R. Acclaimed At Concert Appearance

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

Howard Taubman, New York Times music critic, wrote that "Mrs. Roosevelt spoke her part simply and charmingly. She did not have the professional polish of an actor, but her unaffected approach had a special quality all its own."

CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Gets Bows At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

Bridgeport Conn.
Post
AUG 1 21950

My Day

—By Eleanor Roosevelt

LENOX, Mass., Friday—Yesterday I motored to Kingston, N. Y., to speak for the Kiwanis club on European impressions and United Nations experiences. Then I went to Grossinger, N. Y., to speak in the evening. Early this morning I came to Tanglewood where I am having a busy day, rehearsing this morning with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky my small part of recitation in "Peter and the World". After lunch we do the recording and in the evening comes the regular performance.

I am really very nervous about this performance with Dr. Koussevitsky. I realize my lack of musical knowledge and how trying it may be to him. He very kindly asked me to lunch with him, and for supper my family will be coming up. We are all to have the pleasure of meeting another member of our family, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, who will arrive from New York City to be here for the night. We will go home after the performance because on Saturday morning I expect my son, James, to be in from California for a few days.

I had a most interesting letter the other day from which I want to quote. It was written by a woman whose home is in Ceylon. She says: "I have a Portuguese name because we were once ruled by them. Many of our ancestors became Roman Catholics and then adopted names given by the conquerors. From that time our families have been Roman Catholics and thus our foreign name."

The interesting thing about this letter is the warm feeling expressed for the American people, which seems to have come about because we have been fortunate enough in Ceylon to have representatives, both in government and in business, who have made friends. There is no feeling in this letter that these people have been exploited by an imperialist nation. There is a feeling quite evidently that they have been helped by a people with certain qualities which are less developed in the people of Ceylon. Now I will let her letter speak for itself.

"I am a young Sinhalese woman, am married and have a son 15 years old, and his name is Toni. My husband Elston is a motor engineer and has been closely associated with the American motor industry for the past 30 years. . . I married in 1932 when I was about 17. From that time some of my closest friends have been Americans—especially after the war we are having greater contact with the American people. The Sinhalese are beginning to appreciate American methods of business and the boundless vision your country holds out to us especially in every branch of business and industry. For us who have the slow-motion of the East in our blood, the vital quality of American thought has had an electrifying effect upon us. It is doing us good. We are beginning to see horizons beyond the shores of our little island. Achievement, not in terms of island-wide fame but international recognition. Many of our children wish to complete their studies in American universities, and some have been fortunate enough to secure scholarships that enable them to get there."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 1 21950

Bach Mass Pleases at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ

A performance of the J. S. Bach "Mass in B Minor" in its entirety is a rare event and the performance at Taglewood on Thursday evening under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky qualifies as the outstanding offering of this year's Berkshire Music Festival. One is left with the feeling that any review would be completely inadequate. Given as part of the tribute being paid to the great contrapuntalist on the occasion of the 200th anniversary of his death, the performance marked the climax of Bach events at the summer home of the Boston Symphony.

Festival Chorus

The huge festival chorus, composed of students at the Berkshire Music Center, was prepared by Hugh Ross. The Boston Orchestra was reduced to conform to the requirements of a Bache performance. Soloists for the occasion were Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Richard Burgin, violin; James Stagliano, horn; Georges Laurent, flute; Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboi d'amore; E. Power Biggs, organ, and Erwin Bodky, harpsichord.

The performance opened with the "Kyrie" and "Gloria in Excelsis" in the late afternoon, followed by a two-hour intermission for supper. The evening performance included the "Credo," "Sanctus" and "Agnus Dei." The mass, according to program notes prepared by John N. Burk, was never performed in its entirety during the lifetime of the composer. The first complete performance was given at Berlin in 1861, 106 years after J. S. Bach's death.

Note Instruments

Among the vivid memories remaining from the Thursday performance are the sudden realization of the presence of the harpsichord with its characteristic "tinny" tone, the brass in the swift-paced 'Gloria," Concert-master Burgin's duet with the alto in the 'Laudamus te," the flute solo with the soprano and tenor duet in the "Domine Deus" and the usually "reedy" quality of the tone of the oboe d'amore.

A dramatic downpour during "The Crucifixus" drove the overflow lawn audience into the shed for shelter and the rain itself drowned out some of the quieter portions of the music. The elation of the music of "Et resurrexit" carried above the rain.

The audience held all applause until the ends of the afternoon and evening portions of the mass, but then demonstrated its approval with an overwhelming ovation. One "bravo" marred the performance, even though well-earned by Burgin and Miss Alberts.

Impressive Score

Whether the auditor was most impressed by the musical or the religious aspect of the performance would undoubtedly be conditioned by his or her background. However we came away most impressed by the physical impossibility of anyone ever hearing in full the many intricate beauties of the score.

The festival will conclude with programs this evening and tomorrow afternoon. Tonight's program, to be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, will include Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with Joseph de Pasquale as the viola soloist; Escales, Ibert; and Choros 10, Villa-Lobos. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct tomorrow's program including the Prokofieff Symphony 6 and the Brahms Symphony 1.

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. Roosevelt Applauded For Berkshire Concert Act

LENOX, Mass. —(AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

ESTHERVILLE, IOWA
NEWS
AUG 12

Eleanor Shares Bows With Koussevitsky

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL
AUG 12 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Shares Bows With Koussevitzky

LENOX, Mass.—(AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 1 21950

8800 'Drag' Mrs. FDR Out To Curtain Calls

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12.—(UP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's debut as a symphony narrator was hailed as a triumph today after an enthusiastic audience of 8800 called her back for repeated curtain calls at the end of her performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and The Wolf."

Mrs. Roosevelt, dressed in a blue silk gown and speaking in a captivating grandmotherly fashion, narrated the musical fairy tale last night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the [redacted] of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The former first lady made her initial curtain call with conductor Serge Koussevitzky, but was reluctant to come from the wings alone as the audience continued to clamor for her.

Koussevitzky walked over to her, kissed her hand in continental fashion, and then virtually dragged his guest artist front and center for the repeated curtain calls.

During the performance a number of children in the audience were so moved by the narration and the ingenious music of the old fairy tale that they darted from their seats and came to rest their chins on the edge of the stage at Mrs. Roosevelt's feet.

The performance netted $19,000 for the Berkshire music training center.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL
AUG 1 21950

ACTS AS NARRATOR

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor [redacted] last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an esthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. F.D.R. Shares Bows With Serge Koussevitsky

LENOX, Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

VICKSBURG, MISS.
POST
AUG 12 1950

ELEANOR IS NARRATOR

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 —(AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

ELIZABETH, N. J.
JOURNAL
AUG 1 21950

Mrs. Roosevelt Applauded As Symphony Narrator

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

COVINGTON, VA.
VIRGINIAN
AUG 1 21950

Eleanor Shares Bows With Koussevitzky

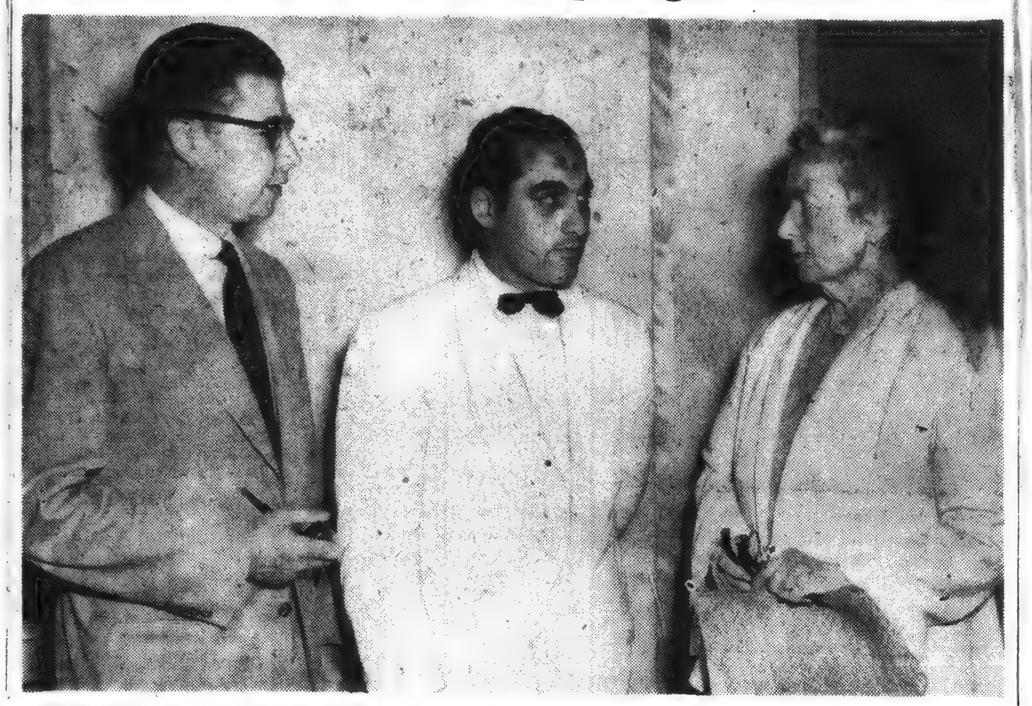
LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final [redacted] of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION-REPUBLICAN
AUG 13 1950

Tanglewood Trio of Springfield Interest



Alexander Leslie, left, Springfield Symphony Orchestra director, and Mrs. Douglas V. Wallace, symphony association leader, were at Tanglewood last night to hear Joseph de Pasquale, first violist of the Boston Symphony, play Hector Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with the orchestra, directed by Eleazar de Carvalho.

De Pasquale, a leading viola player, will appear next winter with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra at the Auditorium, playing the Berlioz work. This will be at the third concert of the 1950-51 season, Jan. 31. It will be a first performance of "Harold in Italy" in the city.

To Play at Boston

Also during the winter de Pasquale will be soloist at Symphony Hall, Boston, with the Boston Symphony directed by Charles Muench.

Other soloists for the regular concert series of the Springfield Symphony will be announced soon, as the Springfield Symphony Orchestra Association prepares for its seventh season.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 13 1950

Tanglewood Features Young Composers

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—Last night's concert at Tanglewood consisted of music written by composers in their thirties. This next to last concert of the Berkshire Music Festival was attended by 9500. An impressive figure in view of the fact that it was chilly enough for topcoats, something out of the ordinary for Tanglewood.

Eleazar De Carvalho was the conductor and Joseph De Pasquale the soloist. The Boston Symphony played Berlioz' Symphony in four movements, "Harold in Italy"; Jacques Ibert's "Ports of Call" ("Escales"); and Villa Lobos' "Chorus No. 10" ("Rend My Heart"). The Festival Chorus participated in the last.

Tanglewood Affair

The evening was close to Tanglewood. Carvalho is a student of Serge Koussevitzky, and a foremost authority on the music of Villa Lobos. De Pasquale is first violist with the Boston Symphony, and, incidentally, a nephew-by-marriage of Dr. Koussevitzky. Mr. Ibert has been a faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. These can hardly be called irrelevant factors.

As with so many of Berlioz' Symphony, you either like it or you don't. It is the kind of music that makes it easy to decide your taste for it. Personally, I find it shallow, noisy, and naively emotional. At the same time, it makes for good listening. But that's beside the point.

Series of Scenes

It consists of a series of scenes that tell poetic recollections left the composer by his wanderings in the Abruzzi. The person of Harold is represented by the viola which constantly preserves his ndividuality. The work's dramatic concepts have a wide range as they encompass conditions of joy, melancholy, incidents of romance and even a wild orgy of brigands. The problem, therefore, is to relate these sequences so that the chain of events is unbroken, or psychologically associated. Each of the four movements is a tone poem by itself and the relationship between them must be equally close.

This long preamble is to point out that although many young conductors here at Tanglewood are obsessed with interpretive methods with a strong leaning toward the bravado, Mr. Carvalho gave the refreshing experience of viewing a conductor who was primarily concerned with the music—and not his theatrical appearance.

There is fire in the young Brazilian's conducting and he employs certain maneuvers that are rather awesome to watch, but they are clearly impelled by interpretive exigencies.

Thorough Director

Mr. Carvalho is a showman who doesn't "put on a show." He is certainly thorough in his directives, an excellent feat last night as he conducted from memory. It is a rare conductor, among the young, who can elicit poetry and tenderness without appearing to be overcome by it—and who can extract stirring drama from an orchestra without being dominated by it. Such a conductor is Carvalho.

Mr. De Pasquale gave a superb performance of the solo viola score, one that rivalled that by William Primrose here four Summers ago. Employing a steady bow, he derived evenly sustained tones of rich quality, some of them closely related to the depth of the cello; others similar to the violin's for the crystalline beauty.

Brilliant Technique

Even in his numerous cadenzas, Mr. De Pasquale did not seek to emulate the viola virtuoso, yet his technique was deft to a point of brilliance.

It was with genuine regret that we had to leave the hall and report to the press room before the Ibert and Villa-Lobos scores were played. We were particularly interested in the last because a similar work by the same composer—"Mandu Carara"—is to be performed at the Worcester festival in October.

Dr. Koussevitsky will bring the Festival to a close this afternoon. There is a change in program. In place of Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony, his Symphony No. 5 will be played. The other work will be Brahms' First Symphony.

PHOENIX, ARIZ.
REPUBLIC
AUG 13 1950

Koussevitzky's Music School Holds Friends

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12—This summer marks the fifth year during which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have supported Serge Koussevitzky's music school.

By the end of the current season, the Friends of the Center will have attended nearly 40 musical events performed by musicians whose study their contributions have made possible.

Like the Berkshire Music Center itself, this group is an unusual organization, composed of persons who contribute financial support to maintain Koussevitzky's school, and serve also as the students' audience.

Among outstanding performances to be heard this year will be the American premiere of a modern European opera, Le Roi d'Yvetot, by Jacques Ibert.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM
AUG 13 1950

ORGANIST BIGGS, HERE LAST SEASON, TO PLAY IN LONDON

E. Power Biggs, organist, who played in Fort Worth last season on the TCU organ on the American Guild of Organists concert course, will perform in Royal Albert Hall, London, Aug. 23, with Sir Malcolm Sargent. He will play an American work for organ and orchestra, the "Concerto in C Major" by Leo Sowerby. He also will play "Concerto No. 10" by Handel, which he played with Charles Munch in opening the recent season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concerto also was the first to be heard in Symphony Hall in 1900. Biggs will play an all-Bach recital in Westminster Abbey.

E. POWER BIGGS.

Joseph Szigeti, violinist, know to the Fort Worth audience, will play in September on a festival series at Besancon in the Jura Mountains of France. Other programs will be given by the ballet corps of Opera Comique and the orchestras of the Society of Conservatory Concerts and Concerts of Colonne of Paris.

An event of last week was the first performance in America of Ibert's comic opera, "The King of Yvetot," at the Berkshire Music Center. The composer, on his first trip to America, is teaching composition at the center during the summer.

Igor Stravinsky conducted the Denver Symphony Orchestra in two concerts at the Aspen Institute in the mountains of Colorado.

The famous Central City (Colorado) opera season is being followed by the production, with eight performances each week Aug. 5 to 26, of Bernard Shaw's "The Devil's Disciple," starring Maurice Evans.

There is now available a miniature electric reed organ which weighs four pounds, and is of the size of a table radio. It has a range of two full chromatic octaves, from bass C to high C. The keys are large enough to be played by an adult.

VALLEJO, CALIF.
MORNING TIMES-HERALD
AUG 13 1950

Allen Features Chas. Laughton

An unique event — the dramatic reading of portions of the Bible by actor Charles Laughton, with a background of sacred music provided by the sweet young voices of the Vienna Boys' Choir—will be one of the attractions on this season's concert series of Larry Allen, Inc., at the War Memorial Opera House. This exceptional program, which is being presented in San Francisco for the first time anywhere, is scheduled for February 11, 1951.

Other concerts of the series, according to managing director Dorothy Granville, include pianist Artur Rubinstein for the opening performance on November 14, tenor Jan Peerce December 1, and pianist Vladimir Horowitz December 6.

Gregor Piatigorsky, acclaimed by Serge Koussevitzky as the greatest cellist of our day, will present a concert on January 9. Italian tenor Ferruccio Tagliavini, who is being hailed by the critics in this country, will sing on February 2. Charles Laughton and the Vienna Choir Boys will present their program on February 11, and contralto Marian Anderson closes the series with a concert on March 9.

Season tickets to the concert series may be had at a considerable savings over single admission. For full information write Larry Allen, Inc., at 79 Post street, San Francisco 4, or contact the Larry Allen Box Office at Sherman Clay.

* * *

The San Francisco Ballet, under the direction of William Christensen, will present a concert at Sigmund Stern Grove at two o'clock this afternoon.

SIDNEY, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 14 1950

Wins Success As Dramatic Narrator

Lenox, Mass., August 14—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, versatile widow of the late president, is being hailed for her success in yet one more field—dramatic narration.

The former first lady—mother, writer, world traveler and diplomat—provided the narration Friday night for the Boston Symphony orchestra's presentation of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" at the Tanglewood music festival.

Mrs. Roosevelt received four curtain calls from an audience of 8,800 which included Gov. Paul A. Dever of Massachusetts and Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, was visibly impressed by Mrs. Roosevelt's rendition, setting his seal of approval of her efforts by kissing her hand on the stage.

The conductor also brought Mrs. Roosevelt back to the center of the stage twice to acknowledge the applause and sent her out from the wings for the other two curtain calls.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
AUG 13 1950

Koussevitzky, Monteux To Conduct In Boston

Boston, Aug. 12 (AP)—Two former conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will replace Conductor Charles Munch during his midwinter vacation, Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, said today.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who retired in 1949 after 25 years as leader, and Pierre Monteux, conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra, have accepted invitations, Cabot said.

HIGH POINT, N. C.
ENTERPRISE
AUG 13 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Takes Bow With Conductor

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

FORT COLLINS, COLO.
COLORADOAN
AUG 13 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Gets New Artistic Honors

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12—(AP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky last night at the final concert of the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1950

MRS. ROOSEVELT REHEARSES FOR NARRATOR ROLE.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt rehearses with the Boston Symphony orchestra at Lenox, Mass., in her role of narrator for Saturday night's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." The performance, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor, was the orchestra's annual Berkshire Music center benefit.

—Associated Press Wirephoto.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Climax of the "Tanglewood on Parade" program Friday night was the appearance of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as narrator of Prokofieff's symphonic tale, "Peter and the Wolf." Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directed the orchestra and cued Mrs. Roosevelt on the dialogue interludes.

Among the audience of 8,800 that filled the Music Shed and part of the lawn outside were Mrs. Roosevelt's niece, Mrs. Edward Elliot, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt jr. and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt. When Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on the stage Dr. Koussevitzky led the orchestra and audience in "The Star-Spangled Banner." To insure every one in the one and one-half acre shed hearing her narration, a pencil microphone was mounted on the music stand which held Mrs. Roosevelt's script.

Mrs. Roosevelt flew from the Catskills to the Pittsfield airport Friday morning and rehearsed her role with the orchestra. In the afternoon a recording was made by RCA-Victor. Immediately after the evening performance Mrs. Roosevelt returned to Hyde Park.

"Tanglewood on Parade" was started in 1940 by Dr. Koussevitzky as a European war relief project, and the following year Mrs. Roosevelt appeared on a speaking program for the benefit of Britain and the U. S. O. Friday night's program started at 6 o'clock, with demonstrations by students simultaneously in the music shed, the theater concert hall, the chamber music hall and a chorus in the orchard music shell. Programs were informal and many patrons picnicked on the lawn preceding the main concert by the Boston orchestra in the shed at 8:30.

Proceeds from the event totaled $19,000, which goes to provide scholarships for students in the Berkshire music center which was founded by Dr. Koussevitzky ten years ago.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES
AUG 13 1950

Mrs. F. D. R. Is Success

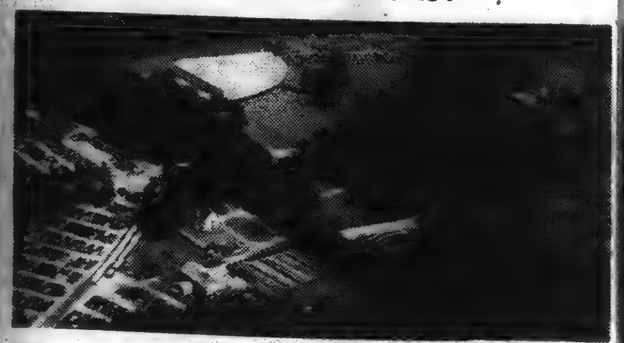
LENOX, Mass. — (AP) — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with conductor Serge Koussevitzky Friday night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 13 1950

Syracuse Symphony Plans Under Way for 1950-51 Season in Central H. S.



Gene Mitchell

The grounds of Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., as seen from the air. Berkshire Music Center, a school for near-professional musicians, and the Berkshire Festival, with concerts now in progress, exist side by side on these grounds, the one complementing the other.

By E. V. W.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CHRONICLE
AUG 13 1950

Today, all eyes are turned to Tanglewood in Western Massachusetts, as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be the narrator for "Peter and the Wolf" when Serge Koussevitsky makes his final appearance of the season at the 13th annual Berkshire Music Festival

Meanwhile, Boston interest is centered in the notable wedding on August 5 of Caroline Wilson, daughter of the Rev. Charles C. Wilson of St. Stephen's Church at Cohasset on the South Shore. For her marriage to Charles E. Rogerson II of Brookline, she had Mary Pruett of San Francisco as a bridesmaid.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION-REPUBLICAN
AUG 13 1950

Midsummer Beaux Arts Ball to Take Place at Berkshire Museum On 25th

Novelty Will Be First Large Event of Its Kind Held There; French Theme to Be Used in Decorations

Special to The Sunday Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 12—Pittsfield is to have the novelty of a mid-summer beaux arts ball at the Berkshire Museum Friday, the 25th, as a museum benefit. Cosponsors are Samuel G. Colt, Jr., and Frederick T. Francis, Jr., who for several years have made the three winter assemblies at the Sheraton Hotel, Pittsfield successful society events. Dancers are expected to appear in costume "from the neck up."

First Event of Kind

The ball will be the first large event of the kind ever held at the museum, the second floor of which will be decorated in a French theme. There is a long list of patrons from Central and Southern Berkshire including many summer colonists. Committee chairmen include Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Peter Van Santvoord Rice, Mrs. Gardner S. Morse, Mrs. Michael L. Eisner, Mrs. D. Crosby Greene, Mrs. Bruce Alexander.

Proceeds will be used for the educational fund of the museum, which provides money for free work in art and natural history among Berkshire children. The museum was founded in 1902 by Mr. Colt's maternal grandfather, the late Zenas Crane, paper manufacturer and philanthropist of Dalton.

Elm Tree Talks

History will be repeated with a series of Elm Tree talks in the gardens at Elm Court, Lenox, starting Sunday, the 20th, at 3.30 p. m. The initial speaker will be Dr. John M. Chang, Korean ambassador at Washington, who is also official Korean observer to the United Nations. Another speaker at the first meeting will be Dr. E. A. J. Johnson, director of ECA for Korea. The other meetings are listed for the 27th and Sept. 3. These talks are to be a Red Cross scholarship benefit for Korean boys in American colleges.

When Elm Court was owned by the late Mrs. Henry White her husband, one time ambassador to France, entertained there men of international distinction. The coming talks are to be conducted on the general subject of "The crisis in the world today." The locus is a giant elm a few feet south of the mansion for which the estate was named. The tree is said to be the largest of the species in America.

Wyantenuck Club Meeting

Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, organized in 1896, held its annual meeting today at the clubhouse. F. Barnard O'Connor, New York and Sheffield, is the 14th president. The first was Col. William L. Brown, at whose home, Locustwood, the initial meeting was held. The late John H. C. Church was twice president for a total of 23 years. John L. E. Pell, the first treasurer, is the only living incorporator. The others were Benjamin D. Ticknor, one time landlord of Berkshire Inn; Charles M. Gibbs, E. S. Hollister and L. L. Jenkins. Milton C. Rose is chairman of the nominating committee. Wyantenuck is an Indian word meaning "bend in the river."

Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Taft of Walnut St., Cambridge, are back from Paris and have joined the Lenox Club arrivals for the closing Tanglewood concerts, the last of which will be given tomorrow afternoon.

Others at the club include Dr. and Mrs. Curtis Prout (Daphne Brooks) of Dover, Mr. and Mrs. Howell Forbes, Mrs. Francis B. Crowninshield, Mr. and Mrs. Royal Little and Miss Augusta Little, Mrs. Thomas N. Metcalf of Mount Vernon St., Boston, Mrs. Harry S. Hall and Countess de Lusse.

The Thursday night dinners at the club have averaged 60 patrons all summer. Newcomers this week were Mr. and Mrs. William McMillan Adams, Canaan, N. Y.

Mrs. John Templeton Coolidge of Spruce St., Boston, and Mrs. Lester Harding, New York, are with Mrs. William Norton Bullard at Highwood, Lenox, for the final Tanglewood series.

Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Channing's mother, Mrs. Hayden Channing ning, Toronto, have joined Mr. Chan- at Valley Head, Lenox.

Visitors From Oxford, Eng.

Noticed at today's picnic luncheon at Mahkeenac Boat Club were Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Elliot of Oxford, Eng., and Harry Von Saldern, of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., who are with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Howard at Corby Lodge, West Stockbridge. Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin is chairman of a committee arranging a children's picnic at Mahkeenac on Tuesday, the 22d.

Mrs. Roger S. Baldwin (Mary C. Vail) of Greenwich, Conn., and Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus P. Fields, New Haven, Conn., were in the Tanglewood box of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas C. Blodgett tonight.

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett had in their box Mrs. H. M. Dingley of Auburn, Me., and Francis Hackett of Bethel, Me., also Sir John and Lady Mildred Fitzgerald of London, Countess Giovanni Cardelli of Chicago, who was with Mr. and Mrs. Barrett for a fortnight, is now with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding at Aston Magna, Great Barrington.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt had a suite at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, for her brief week end visit at Tanglewood.

Village Inn arrivals at Lenox include Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Robertson, New York; Mr. and Mrs. John B. Baxter, Garden City, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Curtis, Kew Gardens; Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Wickham, Rockville Center, L. I.

Judge Leary at Berkshire Inn

Judge George F. Leary of the Superior Court, and Mrs. Leary, Maple St., Springfield, are at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for the Tanglewood series. Lowell Thomas has joined Mrs. Thomas at the inn after a summer trip abroad. In response to the request of many patrons, Landlord James J. Joyce has decided to keep the inn open well into November.

Parties in advance of the wedding of Miss Barbara T. Gould and Samuel Riker Davis at Trinity Episcopal Church, Lenox, Sunday, the 27th, include a dinner at Mahkeenac Farm, the home of the prospective bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John H. P. Gould, the 26th, also a luncheon that day by Mrs. George K. Livermore at Lakeside, and a cocktail party earlier in the week by Mrs. Leland Stanford Briggs at The Dormers, Lenox.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Jr., of Woodberry Forest Va., left Glen Crannie Farm, the Richmond home of his parents, today for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Crocker, North Haven, Me.

Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky will be honored [illegible] which the faculty of the Tanglewood Music Center will give tomorrow night at Curtis Hotel, Lenox.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Jackson of Milton have bought a place at Wianno adjoining that of Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, III, Dalton. Mrs. Jackson is the former Mary A. Field, a sister of Mrs. Helm George Wilde, Lenox.

Mrs. Laura L. W. Scales of Smith College was a visitor this week at Berkshire Garden Center, Stockbridge. Among others noticed there were Mr. and Mrs. Roy D. Harris, Geenfield; Mr. and Mrs. James B. Hobbs, Newton Highlands; Mrs. Guy Warren Walker, Greenwich, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. John E. Lockwood, Bedford, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Stoddard, Fairfield Farms, Canaan, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Richardson Lyeth, Greenwich, Conn.

Sheffield Church Antique Show

The Candé Homestead, Under Mountain Rd., Sheffield, is to exhibit an 18th century inlaid curly maple grandfather clock at the annual antique show in the old Parish Church parlors next Friday and Saturday, the 18th and 19th, from 11 a. m. to 9 p. m. Dealers from five states will display a wide variety of articles.

Arrivals at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, include Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Howard, Mrs. George Sloan, New York, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Richards, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Moore, Boston.

KANSAS CITY, MO.
STAR
AUG 13 1950

[illegible] SUMMER MUSIC COURSE.

Ten From Missouri Enrolled at the Berkshire Center.

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 12.—Ten students from Missouri, including two from Kansas City, are enrolled in the Berkshire Music center here this summer. They are studying under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and with a faculty partly drawn from the orchestra.

The Missouri students are Gertrude Benjamin, 809 West Fifty-second street terrace, and Stanley Hoffman, 3711 the Paseo, Kansas City; Leontone Meyer, Annette Nahmensen, Alfred Schneider and Suzanne Wilmers, of St. Louis; Dorothy Millar, Webster Groves; John Patterson, Carthage, and Gene Yenni, St. Joseph.

TELEPHONE your Want Ad to The Star Call HA. 1200, ask for an Ad Taker.

[110]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 14 1950

Koussevitzky At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14. — Koussevitzky rounded out the 13th Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon. The weather, the place, and the program proved so inviting that a record crowd of 12,600 people turned out.

Under such favorable circumstances, the event had its memorable aspects.

Two Koussevitzky war-horses comprise the program. Both works would be called standard fare: Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, already accepted as a contemporary "classic" and Brahms' First Symphony. They were wonderfully contrasted with the grim foreboding quality of the Prokofieff balanced by the secure, majestic quality of the Brahms.

The performance of the Prokofieff vibrated with tremendous feeling. Its tragic power has perhaps never been so powerfully communicated. Not only did the music convey how much the times are out of joint but the virtuoso performance of the orchestra admirably sustained the fateful outpouring.

The Symphony sounded unified emotionally as I have never heard it before. It was magnificently sinister and exceptionally moving. Koussevitzky outdid himself and the orchestra gave him everything it had. The Brahms came as something of a benediction after a fiery pronouncement of disillusionment.

• • •

Eleazar de Carvalho conducted the Saturday night concert attended by 9,500 people. A lineup

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 13 1950

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final Berkshire Festival concert of 1950 Sunday afternoon. The program will consist of Brahms' First Symphony and Prokofievs Fifth Symphony. . . . "The Funnies" by Frederick Piket will get its world premiere performance by the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra under Franco Autori Sunday afternoon. The Suite is based on five famous comic strip characters, Superman, The Gumps, Little Orphan Annie, Gasoline Alley, Silly Milly. Piket, who was born and educated in Vienna, has had works played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra under Dimitri Mitropoulos.

THE ORIANA A Cappella Choir of Chicago is offering a cash award of fifty dollars for an original unpublished composition for unaccompanied mixed chorus, suitable for concert performance. The winning work will be published by the H. T. FitzSimons Company in Chicago and will be given its first performance by the Oriana Choir conducted by Paul Vernon. Further information is available from Marjorie Edwards, Secretary Oriana A Cappella Choir, 631 North Central Avenue, Chicago 44, Ill.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 14 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

Berkshire Festival Ends

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought the thirteenth Berkshire Festival to a close here today, playing before an audience of 12,600, a record for the season.

The final concert was comprised of Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Op. 11 and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Op. 68. At the conclusion, the seventy-six-year-old director was recalled by a cheering audience for seven bows.

The two week-end concerts attracted a total of more than 22,000 persons; 9,500 atteending the Saturday night program directed by Eleazar de Carvalho, with Joseph de Pasquale, Boston Orchestra first viola, as soloist. Mr. de Carvalho is a former student of the Berkshire Music Center, and was a student conductor before his selection by Dr. Koussevitzky as a guest conductor two years ago.

Total Tanglewood attendance this year was 178,700, a slight drop from last year's 181,350. Ticket sales grossed $243,100, however, an increase over last year's total of $235,300. This was brought about by increasing the number of Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-concert hall from four to six. Most of the attendance drop occurred in special programs by students given for the friends of the music center. A slight decline in the main-shed concerts also was seen, attributed by Tanglewood officials to threatening weather for five of the nine programs.

Since the shed was built in 1938, the attendance trend, however, has been increasing; starting with an initial season total of 38,000. Tanglewood figures show that some 500,000 persons have attended Boston Symphony concerts in the twelve years to date. In addition, the students of the music center present some forty choral, opera and chamber music events during a season.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 13 1950

MRS. FDR SCORES—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shares platform honors with Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, on podium, at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Mrs. Roosevelt is shown as she acted as narrator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

Will Plouffe Photo

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 14 1950

'Koussy' Won't Play Double Bill With Movies at Lenox

By ROBERT WAHLS

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—Serge Koussevitzky, the 76-year-old Pooh-Bah of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, dropped his baton on the final concert of the 1950 series this afternoon. About 175,000 music lovers shelled out between $1 and $5 to attend during the three-week season.

For pure showmanship, Koussevitzky has no close rival with the possible exception of Leopold Stokowski. He rules the festival with an iron hand. Earlier this season the trustees engaged Victor de Sabata, flashy Italian conductor, as a guest, Koussy hit the ceiling of his 6,000-seat music shed.

(By Acme)

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt
Challenging the "Wolf."

When it was suggested that movies follow the concerts so as to break up the mass departure and reduce snarls in getaway traffic, the director threatened to leave Lenox flat. He'd move Tanglewood to some point where the local cops could handle their highways while he handled his musicians.

Door Prizes.

While he hasn't succumbed to movies, Koussy isn't above the door prize. Arriving at Friday night's, Tanglewood on Parade," this reporter was startled by the gateman who said, "hold on to your ticket stub. You may win a grand piano or a package of Victor records."

Perhaps the greatest coup of the season was the conductor's persuasive ways which induced Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt to take over as narrator while he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Her appearance was the climax of Tanglewood on Parade, a five-hour program of student works topped by an evening concert.

Although an annual benefit for the Music Center, the program has never drawn well. The former first lady and current U. S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly brought 9,000 flocking. The take for the evening was a cool $19,000.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been briefed for her debut by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, composer and Koussevitzky's assistant, who drove down earlier in the week to deliver the script. When Mrs. Roosevelt arrived Friday morning she went through a rehearsal and then an afternoon session during which she recorded her effort for RCA Victor.

There followed a dinner with Koussy which those who should know tell us is almost as arduous as a full scale rehearsal. The evening performance over, Mrs. Roosevelt drove quickly from the grounds, almost before the applause for her had died away.

The Berkshire Inn at nearby Great Barrington is an excellent base of operations for Tanglewood, the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Lee and the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge. James L. Joyce, former ski champ who has run the inn for 12 years, tells us that businessmen of the area wish Koussevitzky would stretch the season over the Summer.

Three weeks isn't long enough, Joyce says. He thinks the Tanglewood facilities should be used for other purposes. In fact he thinks a championship fight would be just fine. He would also like a barbershop quartet competition, or something of the kind.

"But," says Joyce, "I don't know that Koussevitzky would go for it."

AUG 13 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Shares Bows With Conductor

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt shared bows with Conductor Serge Kous sevitzky Friday night at the final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Roosevelt acted as narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Pro kofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

With Dr. Koussevitzky, she was recalled several times for bows by an enthusiastic crowd of 8,800.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 14 1950

Tanglewood Closes Its 13th Festival, 12,600 In Audience

As they closed the 13th annual music festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were given a spirited farewell by an audience of 12,600. The final program included Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony and the First Sympsony of Brahms.

The Brazilian conductor, Eleazar De Carvalho received warm applause Saturday night for a program which included "Harold in Italy," by Berlioz Jacques Ibert's "Escales," and Villa-Lobos' Chorous No. 10 for chorus and orchestra.

An estimated 178,700 people paid a total $243,100 for the Tanglewood concerts this season. Last season the total attendance was 181,350.

The Bach-Mozart series attracted 23,500 music lovers, while 88,500 attended the regular orchestral series in the large shed. Mrs Eleanor Roosevelt's narration of "Peter and the Wolf" brough 8800 to the Tanglewood-on-Parade program Friday night. Orchestra rehearsals for the benefit of the pension fund were heard by 6000.

Bach's music was heard more often this season, with 60 concerts devoted to the 200th anniversary of the composer's death.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 41950

Tanglewood Concludes Successful 1950 Season

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Tanglewood has closed another season—unique like all the others in that here summer music out-of-doors does not imply cotton candy programs superficially prepared.

The greatest masterpieces, such as Bach's B minor Mass, are given performances on the festival level. As on Saturday evening, neglected symphonies of panoramic proportions—Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," for instance—are matched with an exotic Villa-Lobos Choros No. 10, a work of symphonic-choral dimensions. Where else on the summer concert stage will you find two symphonies like the First of Brahms and the Fifth of Prokofieff programed together as Koussevitzky did Sunday afternoon?

The Berkshire Festival has become what it is by reason of definitive utterance of the greatest music.

* * *

ELEAZAR DE CARVALHO, Brazilian protege of Koussevitzky was most cordially received Saturday night. He conducts without score and without baton. He is poised but expressive; explicit but not acrobatic; intent upon a fine interpretation, but without tension. Like many Latin artists, he looks deceptively like a business man.

His best re-creation was the Choros of his countryman, Villa-Lobos, after which the large body of singers acclaimed him as clamorously as the team and fans holler for the coach.

Choros No. 10 is a rhythmic conception. Even the voices are used percussively in a drum-like ostinato. A melody burgeons and takes dominance in the climax but the over-all impression was of a jungle Indian scene, a celebration. It was joyously received and its impact may be judged by the fact that I heard a departing victim humming the chief motif—not often the case with any modern, to say nothing of Villa-Lobos.

* * *

MELODY IS, of course, somewhat a matter of period and fashion for we sing today what our forebears would have taken for some kind of lyrical delirium. But there is a universal and timeless melos, too, and at the moment I can think of nothing more durably beautiful than the second movement of Berlioz' "Harold," the "March of the Pilgrims Singing Their Evening Hymn." It was so breathlessly played that it was impossible to separate the enchantment of the music from the Tanglewood nocturne itself.

De Carvalho presented three master painters of symphony — Berlioz, Jasques Ibert (who was present to acknowledge, if rather modestly, a wild demonstration after his three orchestral pictures, "Ports of Call") and finally Villa-Lobos.

And, although Berlioz was the first of them, the passage of more than a century has only brightened his renown as a colorist. His orchestral pigments are superbly luminous, exquisitely defined. Something depends upon the conductor too, and if Berlioz never wrote a muddy measure, neither did de Carvalho permit any but the most transparent instrumental play.

He related Ibert's Escales rather to Ravel than Debussy. This was scarcely impressionistic but a frankly scenic canvas — Palermo, Tunis-Nefta and Valencia—and I must say that de Carvalho came nearest to the Iberian spirit of the last piece.

Villa-Lobos would have sounded better following Brahms or Piston or Robert Schumann or some other composer too intent upon substance to worry greatly about technical refinements. He splashes about in sound, wasting it prodigally. Even with a skillful conductor you hear only half the notes he writes, instead of each one of them in full value as with Berlioz and Ibert.

* * *

THIS BUSINESS of covering other instrumental voices reminds me of the Sunday morning performance of Schubert's F major Octet which I heard in the Theater-Concert Hall performed by Berkshire Music Center students.

They were all deft performers—the string quartet, bass, clarinet, bassoon and horn—for attendance at this Tanglewood course presupposes extraordinary talent. It is a graduate school of American music study.

There was an excellent hornist but he played solo throughout. Even the merest accessory notes, meant to fill in a harmony, were voiced as though they comprised the main theme. Result was that I never once heard either the bassoon or the cellist and little enough of the clarinet.

Previously another set of ensemblists gave a journeyman account of Prokofieff's "Overture on Hebrew Themes."

* * *

EVEN THE prospect of hearing Koussevitzky conduct two symphonies was not sufficient to keep your reviewer away from the most novel song recital announced in a long while.

You don't often get the following names all on one program. Harold Laudenslager, Paul Chancellor, Charles Ives, Darius Milhaud, Hugo Weisgall, Paul Bowles and Virgil Thomson.

This was at Cummington, Mass., where the Cummington School of the Arts has been doing this sort of thing all summer.

It was Dorothy Goodman who subjected a most beguiling and expertly managed mezzo-soprano voice to the rigors of an hour and a half of modernism. She is a black-haired girl with charming dimples and seemed to enjoy tremendously what she was doing—especially such things as Paul Chancellor's "Cousin Nancy," "Aunt Helen" and "The Boston Evening Transcript."

The composer was there to take a bow and so was Mr. Weisgall whose settings of two Adelaide Crapsey verses and a couple of 'Soldier Songs" were largely atonal or might as well have been. "Oh lady, let the sad tears fall" was musically poetic, even on first hearing.

By and large the program was composed of cynical verse set to music which depended upon involved and outre piano accompaniment for commentary. That extends to Milhaud's six song "Dreams on anonymous twentieth century texts" and he is perhaps the most articulate of the composers represented. Five Ives songs dating from 1899 to 192 were uneven as you would expect them to be. Virgil Thomson's setting of Gertrude Stein's Susi Asado is—as to words and music—sophisticated bebop.

Joel Spiegelman had a busy afternoon of it at the piano. He and Miss Goodman are expert. They earned all of the vehement applause they received. More too but much modern music, like virtue, must be its own reward.

—C. E. L.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 14 1950

FESTIVAL DRAWS 12,600 AT FINALE

Tanglewood Total Attendance Is 178,700—Koussevitzky Leads Closing Program

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13—The Berkshire festival ended this afternoon with a concert that drew 12,600, the largest audience of the season. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made it a memorable occasion with stirring performances of two large-voiced symphonies — Serge Prokofieff's Fifth and Brahms' First.

At last night's concert there was an audience of 9,500 which heard Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor and one of Mr. Koussevitzky's proteges, lead an absorbing program consisting of Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' Choros No. 10, "Rasga O. Caracao," for chorus and orchestra.

With the figures in for this thirteenth annual festival, it was made clear once again that music in the Berkshires is here to stay. The season's total attendance at Tanglewood was 178,700, and the receipts for all the festival concerts amounted to $243,100, about $8,000 more than last year's record-breaking returns.

Center Strongly Supported

The Berkshire Music Center, which is so distinctive an adjunct of the festival, received encouraging support on its own. The friends of the center, an organization of people who contribute varying sums each year and are admitted, in return, to the students' events, raised $27,000, and another $18,800 was earned for the center by last Friday night's "Tanglewood on Parade" program.

The figures tell a success story, and they are supported by the quality of the performances that have been heard here. Mr. Koussevitsky and his orchestra this afternoon showed that summer concerts need not depend entirely on the beauty of the landscape for their appeal. Here was music-making of a high order—devoted, dignified and concerned with expression momentous for the hearts of men.

Consider Prokofieff's Fifth. This is a major symphony. It is the lofty and searching outpouring of one of the great composers of our time. This symphony was written in 1944, at the height of the Russians' struggle with the Germans, and it said things for all of us. The slow movement is tragic and moving without a shred of sentimentality or self-pity. There is strength in the music—and pain. And all these things were eloquently projected today.

The Brahms First, his grandest score in this form, needs no comment at this date, save that the orchestra and conductor gave it a spacious, ennobling performance.

Saturday Night's Program

Mr. de Carvalho's program last night was well suited to his talents as a conductor. He knows how to keep music moving, how to build dramatic effects, how to project vivid, jagged rhythms. Each work gave him and the orchestra an opportunity to show their virtuosity.

In the Berlioz score, which employs the orchestra with a boldness that still seems daring today, Joseph di Pasquale, the orchestra's first viola player, was the soloist. He handled his assignment intelligently and mellifluously. But it was the drive and passion of the orchestra in the last movement that made the dominant impression.

Jacques Ibert, guest teacher at the Center this summer, was in the audience to acknowledge the applause of the audience for his sparkling and vivacious "Escales," and it was played with immense relish.

In the Villa-Lobos Mr. de Carvalho really let himself go and the authentic Brazilian rhythms brought the audience to its feet, shouting and applauding. The festival chorus sang the choral part in this piece with savor; one had the feeling that the several hundred young men and women would break out into a spontaneous conga line at any moment, and if they had, some 9,000 in the audience might have been tempted to join.

of Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Symphony, Ibert's "Escales" and Villa-Lobos' Chorus No. 10 made an attractive program. The music was the more satisfying element, for the performances lacked the finesse and dramatic quality the scores demanded.

Even the Villa-Lobos, which came off most successfully from an audience point of view, lacked some of the color and vitality the score has. Carvalho beat time and gave cues well enough throughout the evening, but for all his motions, he did not succeed in projecting the music. He achieved effectiveness at times without benefit of logical or emotional build-up.

His conducting carried more weight with the Boston Symphony than it did earlier this season with the Philharmonic-Symphony, therefore the concert was far more satisfactory; he is nevertheless a problematic conductor.

* * *

Mrs. Roosevelt Stars

Eleanor Roosevelt was the star of "Tanglewood on Parade" on Friday night. Her role was that of narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." She won her audience with the simplicity and charm of her story-telling and it followed her every word intently. Koussevitzky also conducted Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony and Dvorak's New York Symphony.

Overall attendance at all events of the Berkshire Music Center this year totaled 178,700 people. The largest single audience attended yesterday's concert. "Tanglewood on Parade" drew 8,800, some 3,000 more than last year. Undoubtedly Mrs. Roosevelt's appearance was a contributing factor. It happens that her "unique" performance was recorded and will be available for a still larger audience later in the year.

Rent that extra room for extra income! Place a Journal-American Want Ad today. Just call COrtlandt 7-1212 and ask for an Ad-Taker.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 1 41950

Season Closes At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13—(INS)—The 1950 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was brought to a close today by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra before a crowd of 12,600 music lovers.

Ticket receipts for the entire season, which opened July 8, totaled $243,100. Total attendance was 178,000.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 14 1950

Tanglewood Season Ends; Total Attendance 178,700

The 13th annual Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood came to a close yesterday afternoon when 12,600 persons attended the final concert. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra played Prokofieff's Symphony No. 6, and the Symphony No. 1 of Brahms.

Attendance Slightly Lower

Saturday night, 8,350 heard the orchestra, conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, guest conductor, in Berlioz' "Harold in Italy," with Joseph de Pasquale, 'cellist, as soloist; Ibert's "Escales;" and the "Choros 10" of Villa-Lobos.

Total attendance this year was 178,700, slightly less than last year's 181,350. Admissions this year, however, brought in $243,100, a little more than last year.

Of the total attendance, 23,500 attended the six concerts in the Bach-Mozart series while 88,500 persons attended the nine orchestral concerts in the music shed. Friday night's "Tanglewood on Parade" program drew 8,000, and 6,000 attended the orchestra rehearsals.

Guest conductors this year have included Victor de Sabata, Leonard Bernstein, who formerly conducted a boys' camp orchestra near Pittsfield, and Eleazar de Carvalho.

Three Operas Given

In the opera department under Dr. Jan Popper, three new works to Tanglewood were given during the season, including the Mozart "The Make-Believe Gardener;" Lukas Foss' "The Jumping Frog;" and Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetat." Puccini's "Gianni Sheecci" also was given. All operas given were sung in English.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who was 76 years old July 26, was said by concert-goers to have been at his best all season. He no longer is the regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, but continues to conduct for the Tanglewood series. It has been announced, however, that he has been invited to conduct the orchestra during the mid-winter vacation of the conductor, Charles Munch.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 1 41950

Tanglewood Festival Ends; 178,000 Attend

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14—(INS)—The 1950 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood was brought to a close yesterday by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra before a crowd of 12,600 music lovers.

Ticket receipts for the entire season, which opened July 8, totaled $243,100. Total attendance was 178,000.

[112]

THE ROVING EYE

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Eleanor Roosevelt And the Record Session

It is very strange how, no matter what your private opinion of a very famous personage may be, a personal encounter produces a sense of awe verging on paralysis. An encounter with Eleanor Roosevelt, for instance.

Although I have always held her in the highest regard as one of the foremost women in the world today, and perhaps one of the great women of history, I have always somehow considered her accomplishments with that benevolent smile attained by all men reflecting on a woman's political or semi-political activities. Then, all of a sudden, there we were, face to face.

Everyone Awed

That is to say I was face to face with her; she didn't even see me as, with Serge Koussevitzky on one side and a couple of Victor recording technicians on the other, she walked across the lawn of Tanglewood to the opera theater to begin the recording of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." But the instant I saw her, her name, her fame and her person produced that peculiar sense of deference. Somebody asked me if I'd like to meet her. I said no; since it was not a working interview on a specific issue, what was there to say? The fact was she frightened me.

I trailed unobtrusively along with the party. There weren't many people around as the recording session was to be decidedly private and the public had been excluded, but what few there were seemed equally awed. They moved as close as they dared and stared at her with expressions of mingled curiosity and genuine interest. They also seemed to sense that whatever their attitude to her politics, her activities, her ideas and ideals, she was history, as indeed she is.

Although her appearance is as familiar to me as the nearest newsreel could make it these 18 years or so, she seemed somehow different in person. She was very tall and very pale and there was about her face an expression of intense pre-occupation. Her hair was faintly blonde, touched only here and there with gray, and she walked with her head cast down.

Even on the stage of the opera theater, cluttered with a wild assortment of microphones, signal lights, loud speakers and wires, she maintained this attitude of withdrawal, of concentration. But for a very fleeting, wan smile, she hardly noticed the men of the orchestra, who rose as she entered. She went directly to a chair near the conductor's stand and sat down, her face buried in the orchestral score in which the words she was to recite were pencilled in blue for the passages to be read without orchestra, in red for those to be recited with.

Three-Hour Job

There was a good deal of bustle as the Victor technicians made their final check of the forest of recording apparatus. The recording was to be made on tape on two separate tape recording machines, but in "sides," that is in about four-minute takes to accommodate Victor's 45 RPM discs and, when run continuously, the long playing discs as well.

The technicians took the recording level of the instruments and Mrs. Roosevelt's voice first, then they began. There was, from the first, a very engaging quality of naivete in her recitation of this familiar musical tale of a little boy who captures a wolf with a lasso let down from a tree. For here was no professional actor wringing the yarn dry of its every melodramatic moment with elocution, but a gentle old lady telling a simple little story to her grandchildren before the fireplace, and the simplicity of her narration brought out as never before the detail of the music itself.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST HOME NEWS
AUG 14 1950

The Lyons Den

By Leonard Lyons

RCA-Victor will release an album of Eleanor Roosevelt narrating "Peter and The Wolf," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony accompanying her. It was recorded last Friday, at Tanglewood . . . The album of songs which Margaret Truman will record won't be operatic or classical pieces. They'll be early American songs, mainly those of the 18th Century . . . The President's new Mobilization Committee will meet in Washington this week . . . The President may see Elliott Roosevelt this week, about a new type of ship invented by a group with which he is associated. Their claim is that it can cross the ocean in three days.

Jim Hearn, the Giants star pitcher, who was acquired from the Cards, had a contract with St. Louis which provided that he would receive a $500 bonus if the team played to over a million customers. This contract was assigned to the Giants. For the first time, therefore, a big league ball club will pay an employe a bonus based on the attendance at a rival park . . . Stuart Symington's son, Jim, is following in the footsteps of his mother, Eve Symington, the first of New York's society singers. He's taking voice lessons in N. Y. . . . Peter Pirogov, the Soviet flyer who escaped to the U. S. Zone, now is a civilian employe of the Air Forces. His job is to tour the bases, giving instruction in Soviet flying tactics.

When Sen. Bill Benton learned that golf pros at Connecticut country clubs have received letters urging their support of his opponent, Prescott Bush—ex-president of the U. S. Golf Assn., who shoots in the low 70's—Sen. Benton said: "All I ask is the votes of all those who can't break 100" . . . Groucho Marx saw Geene Courtney slink into a Hollywood night club and told her: "One false move—and I'll appreciate it" . . . Paul Porter, the ex-OPA Administrator, was asked for advice about the Ideal Man to put in charge of rationing now. "They ought to get some one with no experience," said the Washington battle-scarred Porter, "a man who thinks it's manageable and can be achieved without hardships or injustices."

Gloria Swanson and Fleur & Gardner Cowles will be among the winners of the Neiman-Marcus Fashion Awards . . . The newspapers erred in reporting that Ray Robinson's purse, donated to the Runyon Fund, was 30% of the gross, in his fight with Charley Fusari last week. It's 40%—the champ's end . . . Robinson, incidentally, told his wife after the fight: "Go home and say your prayers—that you're grateful to be the wife of the welterweight champion of the world. That should cover us both" . . . A member of the American delegation to the U.N. said: "I'd call Jacob Malik a match even for Tallulah Bankhead."

Eleanor Roosevelt was so impressed with Perle Mesta's talent in her diplomatic post in Luxembourg that she's reported on this to the White House, and is writing an article about Mrs. Mesta for Look magazine . . . The Yugoslav delegate to the U.N. asked Mrs. Roosevelt about the measures taken for her protection. She assured him that she has no bodyguards assigned to her. "But what about the people who might be in disagreement with you?" asked the Yugoslav . . . "I talk to them," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "In fact, on my way out here I talked to the cab driver" . . . "What about?" asked the Yugoslav. Mrs. Roosevelt told him: "Politics, of course."

Joe Benjamin, the ex-lightweight who once took on Jack Dempsey in a hotel-room free-for-all, was at the bar of Toots Shor's last night. Jackie Gleason, the comic, and a lady were at the adjoining stools. "Jackie," said the lady, "don't you take umbrage at what Mr. Benjamin is saying?" Gleason replied: "Honey, I only take umbrage when I'm positive I can lick the guy" . . . Rocky Graziano is suffering from a virus infection. His fight this month will be postponed . . . Anglo-American film negotiations still are unsettled. J. Arthur Rank suggested: "Maybe they should be handled by the Kennel club"—because "Dimple," an Anglo-American setter out of an English female and an American male given him by Eric Johnston just won the United Kingdom championship.

Robert Rossen, who won a number of Academy Awards for his "All The King's Men," has just completed the filming of "The Brave Bulls." For the bull fight sequences he hired men who, with 16 mm. cameras strapped to their chests, clicked the machine with one hand and operated the cape with the other . . . Rossen bought newsreels showing scenes of a bull goring a matador. He picked the four best goring scenes, then re-enacted the preliminaries, with Mel Ferrer, the star, wearing the costumes worn by the matadors in the newsreels . . . The A.S.P.C.A.'s objections to the bandilleros in the bull were overcome when Rossen had blow-ups made of the old movie, "Blood & Sand," showing the bandilleros in the bull.

Caroline Burke, the NBC-TV producer, needed a boy for the program starring Betty Field. She asked Miss Field's husband, playwright Elmer Rice, about their son, John. Rice ruled against it: "One actor in the family is enough" . . . Jan Garber, now celebrating his 33d year as a bandleader, has laid off less than a month during that period . . . The "Stork Club" television show is the No. 1 program—for CBS' technicians. They covet the assignment because Billingsley gives them caviar, champagne and pheasant meals during rehearsals . . . The GI song in South Korea is: "The Dhow, The Gizo and Rhee, What Do They Want From Me? My Heart Is in Tucson, My Feet Are in Pusan, You Can't Get a Kiss From a Flea."

Myron McCormick of "South Pacific" was persuaded by Jose Ferrer to exercise by learning to play squash at the Princeton Club, to which they both belong. McCormick bought a racquet, took a lesson from the pro, and went to the squash court to practice. McCormick hit the ball once, then gave away the racquet: "I want no part of a sport where, if I'm alone in the room and hit the ball, it bounces against the walls eight times and then hits me."

THE ROVING EYE

By RUDOLPH ELIE

Eleanor Roosevelt And the Record Session

It is very strange how, no matter what your private opinion of a very famous personage may be, a personal encounter produces a sense of awe verging on paralysis. An encounter with Eleanor Roosevelt, for instance.

Although I have always held her in the highest regard as one of the foremost women in the world today, and perhaps one of the great women of history, I have always somehow considered her accomplishments with that benevolent smile attained by all men reflecting on a woman's political or semi-political activities. Then, all of a sudden, there we were, face to face.

Everyone Awed

That is to say I was face to face with her; she didn't even see me as, with Serge Koussevitzky on one side and a couple of Victor recording technicians on the other, she walked across the lawn of Tanglewood to the opera theater to begin the recording of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." But the instant I saw her, her name, her fame and her person produced that peculiar sense of deference. Somebody asked me if I'd like to meet her. I said no; since it was not a working interview on a specific issue, what was there to say? The fact was she frightened me.

I trailed unobtrusively along with the party. There weren't many people around as the recording session was to be decidedly private and the public had been excluded, but what few there were seemed equally awed. They moved as close as they dared and stared at her with expressions of mingled curiosity and genuine interest. They also seemed to sense that whatever their attitude to her politics, her activities, her ideas and ideals, she was history, as indeed she is.

Although her appearance is as familiar to me as the nearest newsreel could make it these 18 years or so, she seemed somehow different in person. She was very tall and very pale and there was about her face an expression of intense pre-occupation. Her hair was faintly blonde, touched only here and there with gray, and she walked with her head cast down.

Even on the stage of the opera theater, cluttered with a wild assortment of microphones, signal lights, loud speakers and wires, she maintained this attitude of withdrawal, of concentration. But for a very fleeting, wan smile, she hardly noticed the men of the orchestra, who rose as she entered. She went directly to a chair near the conductor's stand and sat down, her face buried in the orchestral score in which the words she was to recite were pencilled in blue for the passages to be read without orchestra, in red for those to be recited with.

Three-Hour Job

There was a good deal of bustle as the Victor technicians made their final check of the forest of recording apparatus. The recording was to be made on tape on two separate tape recording machines, but in "sides," that is in about four-minute takes to accommodate Victor's 45 RPM discs and, when run continuously, the long playing discs as well.

The technicians took the recording level of the instruments and Mrs. Roosevelt's voice first, then they began. There was, from the first, a very engaging quality of naivete in her recitation of this familiar musical tale of a little boy who captures a wolf with a lasso let down from a tree. For here was no professional actor wringing the yarn dry of its every melodramatic moment with elocution, but a gentle old lady telling a simple little story to her grandchildren before the fireplace, and the simplicity of her narration brought out as never before the detail of the music itself.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST HOME NEWS
AUG 14 1950

The Lyons Den

By Leonard Lyons

RCA-Victor will release an album of Eleanor Roosevelt narrating "Peter and The Wolf," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony accompanying her. It was recorded last Friday, at Tanglewood . . . The album of songs which Margaret Truman will record won't be operatic or classical pieces. They'll be early American songs, mainly those of the 18th Century . . . The President's new Mobilization Committee will meet in Washington this week . . . The President may see Elliott Roosevelt this week, about a new type of ship invented by a group with which he is associated. Their claim is that it can cross the ocean in three days.

Jim Hearn, the Giants star pitcher, who was acquired from the Cards, had a contract with St. Louis which provided that he would receive a $500 bonus if the team played to over a million customers. This contract was assigned to the Giants. For the first time, therefore, a big league ball club will pay an employe a bonus based on the attendance at a rival park . . . Stuart Symington's son, Jim, is following in the footsteps of his mother, Eve Symington, the first of New York's society singers. He's taking voice lessons in N. Y. . . . Peter Pirogov, the Soviet flyer who escaped to the U. S. Zone, now is a civilian employe of the Air Forces. His job is to tour the bases, giving instruction in Soviet flying tactics.

When Sen. Bill Benton learned that golf pros at Connecticut country clubs have received letters urging their support of his opponent, Prescott Bush—ex-president of the U. S. Golf Assn., who shoots in the low 70's—Sen. Benton said: "All I ask is the votes of all those who can't break 100" . . . Groucho Marx saw Geene Courtney slink into a Hollywood night club and told her: "One false move—and I'll appreciate it" . . . Paul Porter, the ex-OPA Administrator, was asked for advice about the Ideal Man to put in charge of rationing now. "They ought to get some one with no experience," said the Washington battle-scarred Porter, "a man who thinks it's manageable and can be achieved without hardships or injustices."

Gloria Swanson and Fleur & Gardner Cowles will be among the winners of the Neiman-Marcus Fashion Awards . . . The newspapers erred in reporting that Ray Robinson's purse, donated to the Runyon Fund, was 30% of the gross, in his fight with Charley Fusari last week. It's 40%—the champ's end . . . Robinson, incidentally, told his wife after the fight: "Go home and say your prayers—that you're grateful to be the wife of the welterweight champion of the world. That should cover us both" . . . A member of the American delegation to the U.N. said: "I'd call Jacob Malik a match even for Tallulah Bankhead."

Eleanor Roosevelt was so impressed with Perle Mesta's talent in her diplomatic post in Luxembourg that she's reported on this to the White House, and is writing an article about Mrs. Mesta for Look magazine . . . The Yugoslav delegate to the U.N. asked Mrs. Roosevelt about the measures taken for her protection. She assured him that she has no bodyguards assigned to her. "But what about the people who might be in disagreement with you?" asked the Yugoslav . . . "I talk to them," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "In fact, on my way out here I talked to the cab driver" . . . "What about?" asked the Yugoslav. Mrs. Roosevelt told him: "Politics, of course."

Joe Benjamin, the ex-lightweight who once took on Jack Dempsey in a hotel-room free-for-all, was at the bar of Toots Shor's last night. Jackie Gleason, the comic, and a lady were at the adjoining stools. "Jackie," said the lady, "don't you take umbrage at what Mr. Benjamin is saying?" Gleason replied: "Honey, I only take umbrage when I'm positive I can lick the guy" . . . Rocky Graziano is suffering from a virus infection. His fight this month will be postponed . . . Anglo-American film negotiations still are unsettled. J. Arthur Rank suggested: "Maybe they should be handled by the Kennel club"—because "Dimple," an Anglo-American setter out of an English female and an American male given him by Eric Johnston just won the United Kingdom championship.

Robert Rossen, who won a number of Academy Awards for his "All The King's Men," has just completed the filming of "The Brave Bulls." For the bull fight sequences he hired men who, with 16 mm. cameras strapped to their chests, clicked the machine with one hand and operated the cape with the other . . . Rossen bought newsreels showing scenes of a bull goring a matador. He picked the four best goring scenes, then re-enacted the preliminaries, with Mel Ferrer, the star, wearing the costumes worn by the matadors in the newsreels . . . The A.S.P.C.A.'s objections to the bandilleros in the bull were overcome when Rossen had blow-ups made of the old movie, "Blood & Sand," showing the bandilleros in the bull.

Caroline Burke, the NBC-TV producer, needed a boy for the program starring Betty Field. She asked Miss Field's husband, playwright Elmer Rice, about their son, John. Rice ruled against it: "One actor in the family is enough" . . . Jan Garber, now celebrating his 33d year as a bandleader, has laid off less than a month during that period . . . The "Stork Club" television show is the No. 1 program—for CBS' technicians. They covet the assignment because Billingsley gives them caviar, champagne and pheasant meals during rehearsals . . . The GI song in South Korea is: "The Dhow, The Gizo and Rhee, What Do They Want From Me? My Heart Is in Tucson, My Feet Are in Pusan, You Can't Get a Kiss From a Flea."

Myron McCormick of "South Pacific" was persuaded by Jose Ferrer to exercise by learning to play squash at the Princeton Club, to which they both belong. McCormick bought a racquet, took a lesson from the pro, and went to the squash court to practice. McCormick hit the ball once, then gave away the racquet: "I want no part of a sport where, if I'm alone in the room and hit the ball, it bounces against the walls eight times and then hits me."

OIL CITY, PA.
DERRICK
AUG 1 41950

The Once Over

By H. I. PHILLIPS

Letters for Special Delivery

I guess you noticed that recent cable from Korea about the loss of three badly needed Sherman tanks and most of their crews due to the fact there was so much snafu back of the lines that three times the delivery of vital equipment needed to make the tanks operate got all snarled up. Planes were rushed up to drop the parts by parachute and on all three trips the stuff was not what was ordered! Twice the parachute came down with the wrong fan belts. The third package, which was supposed to contain a very important mechanical replacement, contained PISTOLS!

H. I. PHILLIPS

* * *

It looks like what our fighting men at the front need is some protection from the men in the rear. It seems to me the snafu experts responsible for this ghastly triple error during battle should be run down and made an example of. Combat-line G. I.s have been treated plenty rough for less.

* * *

But the question I can't get out of my noggin is whether this war zone sloppiness in filling an order in the matter of mechanical parts isn't an offshoot of a slipshod mood that has become pretty routine in our whole national life. A carelessness has crept into such things all over the scene back home. Order a new carburetor for your power lawn mower and the chances are even you get back a muffler and a spark plug. Take your car into some service stations to get the generator fixed and they tighten the steering wheel and repair a windshield wiper instead. I have had my flivver in nine times to have it fixed so the top of the trunk compartment can be closed and locked and it is still warped like the day I got it. In those nine trips the service station has checked the wheels, relined the brakes, touched up a rear fender and done six other jobs I didn't order. Ask for a new part for your icebox and see what you get back. (In fact, I recently bought a new box and the dealer sent me a different model.) If your deep freeze comes through defective and you call up the manufacturer what do you get? A letter thanking you for calling his attention "to your trouble" and assuring you that the matter is being looked into by the vice-president in charge of phonographs.

* * *

It is not all mechanical. The wife ordered an electric fan by mail last week and what do you think she got today. A case of electric light bulbs and a card saying the missing part for the vacuum cleaner would arrive later.

* * *

I tell you snafu has swept over America in the last few years. The old-time fellow who got things straight the first time, saw the job through and had any sense of personal responsibility is gone with the wind. Can't we get him back?

Yours curiously,
Elmer

Race Chart Stuff

Frozen Custard .....Soft spot.
Skin Tonic ..Capable of improvement.
Knocks Twice .....Not enough.
Blinker Light .....Unsteady.
Pigiwigi ..Penned in last time.
Tea maker .....Godfrey up.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has taken on still another role. She has now signed up as narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires this month. All Republicans in the area are reported fleeing from the lower Berkshires to the peaks.

"Peter and the Wolf" is primarily for children. We can see how Peter gets into it and we can appreciate the importance of the wolf but we are still puzzled as to how Mrs. Roosevelt fits in. The lady's versatility is terrific, but one of these days she is going to get all mixed up in executing her multiple assignments. We anticipate a day when she will go before the United Nations with a narration on Peter, hurry over to a "Meet The Press" session with a wolf and then panic a symphony concert with a lecture on European recovery.

Harry Bridges is in jail at last. This indicates that he may now not be considered any better than 100 per cent. Americans.

In Great Neck, L. I., the other day, Christmas mail meant for 1947 was delivered. It consisted of a thousand cards, letters, and gifts, found in an abandoned auto. Why the surprise? Two and half years isn't long to wait for the mail these days.

Again and again they listened to the play-backs of the takes recorded; again and again they did them over. In the first of the play-back sessions the men of the orchestra crowded around Mrs. Roosevelt and Koussevitzky as they listened and took candid photos. She never once noticed, or looked up from her score; her ability to concentrate seemed endless. Only once, in the nerve-wracking and exhausting process of capturing a perfect performance on records, was the error hers. It was the only time she smiled, or seemed aware of the circumstances. "Oh, dear," she said, "I can't imagine why I should ever confuse a bass drum with a 'bahse.' That's a fish, isn't it?" The men laughed.

"My dear children," she began again, "all the characters in the story are represented by instruments of the orchestra . . ." Three hours later they had the voice of Mrs. Roosevelt and the music of Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on record for history's grandchildren. She was the only one, figuratively speaking, still on her feet.

THE BOSTON HERALD
TUESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1950

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE & POST
AUG 1 41950

Koussevitzky Scores Hit In Final Concert

(Special to The Evening Gazette)

LENOX, Aug. 14 — As if to affirm Serge Koussevitzky's status at the Berkshire Music Festival, an audience of 12,600 brought him back to the stage for eight curtain calls, following the performance of Brahms' First Symphony yesterday afternoon, in the festival's final concert.

The Brahms' was given a heroic reading, exploiting to the fullest the conductor's deep concern over its long vistas' grave meditations, and majestic sweeps of sound.

The most spectacular performance of the afternoon, however, was Prokofieff's "Symphony No. 5." Here the conductor determined to expose fully its brazen vindictiveness, murkiness, and sharp dissonance. The first movement was incisive and intense, declaring itself with harshness and energy.

Undercurrent of Tension

The chattering Scherzo-like second movement fairly stampeded with hammer-like beats, building to great climaxes and relenting its drive briefly as if for respite. The slow movement indulged in melodic coherence, but beneath its disarming statement ran a deep undercurrent of tragic tension. Referring to brutal warfare, the final movement reached the zenith of its ominous message.

By and large this was the best playing of the entire festival, and it is significant that Koussevitzky chose these two stress-impacted works with which to close six weeks of activity.

Income Exceeds Last Year's

The festival box-office took in $243,100 this Summer as compared with $235,300 last year. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center contributed $27,000. Total attendance for the 16 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the 37 events of the center was 178,700—or 2650 less than last Summer. The increased revenue is attributed to greater purchase of more expensive seats.

Last weekend was heavy-laden with music. Thursday night, Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony and festival chorus of 160 voices in Bach's "Mass in B Minor." The stupendous work was given proportions of nobility and grandeur.

A slight feeling of apprehension was conveyed by the chorus, mainly attributable to concentration on the printed text. This may be explained, in part at least, to late revisions made by Koussevitzky of instructions issued by Hugh Ross, who prepared the singers.

Adel Addision, Eunice Alberts, David Lloyd and James Pease sang the solo roles with uneven merit. Miss Addison and Mr. Lloyd gave the most satisfactory performances. The difficult contralto assignment appeared to tax Miss Albert's capacities, although her tones were, for the most part, rich and well articulated. Mr. Peace sang the florid passages with rhythmic security, but his intonation was less reliable.

Mrs. Roosevelt Acclaimed

Eleanor Roosevelt received a resounding welcome on Friday night (five curtain calls) for her narration of "Peter and the Wolf" at the "Tanglewood on Parade" jamboree.

A rapid and prolific number of events, beginning at five in the afternoon and lasting until nearly midnight, gave the various departments of the center opportunities to reveal the fruits of their studies to their patrons.

At the theater, the opera department, headed by Jan Popper, highlighted several scenes with Puccini's one-act opera, "Gianni Schicchi," directed by Sarah Caldwell.

In the chamber music hall, Robert Parris played a piano sonata by Wilding-White (student of Jacques Ibert) and a piano-violin duo by Druckman (student of Aaron Copland) featured Zvi Zeitlin and Jurriaan Andriessen.

Andriessen, an unusually gifted young Dutch composer, had previously conducted the orchestra from Department 88 at The Shed in the first of his "Berkshire Symphonies." The playing of Brahms' "Concerto for Violin" by Robert Gerle was difficult to judge because of a noisy and shifting audience.

On the rehearsal stage in the orchard, Hugh Ross attempted an informal rehearsal that was too rudimentary to be classed with the other demonstrations. Applause was as feeble as was interest.

Brazilian Well Received

At Saturday night's concert Eleazar de Carvalho was properly rewarded by heavy applauded for lucid, controlled, undemonstrative, and musicianly conducting of scores by Berlioz Ibert and Villa-Lobos. The young Brazilian set an excellent example of individuality, having retained the basic fundamentals of his training with Koussevitzky but showing a cultivated personality and stylistic flair of his own.

Joseph DePasquale played the solo viola part for Berlioz' "Harold in Italy" with great beauty of tone, sterile technique, and dignified, engaging manner.

A final word about this Summer's audiences. There have been occasions when concerts were interrupted by showers and it is naturally impossible for several hundred persons to silently seek shelter in such emergencies.

Audiences Not Well Behaved

However, every conductor this Summer has had reason to feel resentment against audiences that have persistently refused to remain quiet between movements of symphonies.

Every one of these conductors has been compelled to raise a protesting hand several times before the loud mutterings were silenced. On one occasion it appeared likely that Koussevitzky would leave the stage in a warranted huff, and on another Leonard Bernstein actually did.

It is a curious thing that these same audiences have extravagantly applauded every performance at every opportunity.

It is the policy at Tanglewood to exhibit no signs, but for the comfort and consideration of its conductors, it would seem that what's needed isn't a course in appreciation, but one in audience deportment.

[114]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (Morn. 84,738)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 15 1950

NATHANSONS GIVE FAREWELL PARTY FOR DE CARVALHO

About 150 Musicians and Concert Goers Honor Brazilian Conductor

By ED TOOLE

Stockbridge, Aug. 14—The unique Paddock Club here was the scene tonight of a triumphant farewell party given the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Nathanson of Springfield.

About 150 Present

It was attended by some 150 musicians, arts and concert goers following de Carvalho's final and greatest performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this festival season. Following the repast the guests enjoyed dancing to South American tango music.

Seen at the party was Joseph De Pasquale, viola soloist who was featured in De Carvalho's programs; James Stagliano, principal horn player of the BSO; Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his charming wife, noted pianist; Harry Shapiro, violin and his wife, a former ballerina.

Brazilian Ambassador There

A surprise attendant was the Brazilian ambassador to the United States Francisco Gomes Cardim and Bhering of the embassy staff who attended the final series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. They attended with Dr. and Mrs. Edward Forsley of Lenox, personal physician of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. From Great Barrington, as a guest, was Miss Cathy Baker.

During the course of the party the guests were treated to a piano recital by De Carvalho, who later played while Margo Stagliano, a concert singer, entertained.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 404,513) (S 792,062)
This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES
AUG 15 1950

'VAGABOND' TO OPEN BOWL RUN TONIGHT

Hollywood Bowl tonight opens its sixth week of Symphonies under the Stars with the Rudolf Friml musical play, "The Vagabond King," produced for the Hollywood Bowl Association by James A. Doolittle.

The musical will be given every night this week through Sunday and will have a cast of 300 headed by Nadine Conner of the Metropolitan Opera Co., Lucille Norman, Leif Erickson, Don Wilson, Francis X. Bushman and others. Kenneth Burton is stage director and James Guthrie will conduct the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra. Hugo Strelitzer is conductor of the large chorus and lighting and artistic effects were designed by Rita Glover.

Five hundred members of 12 Kiwanis Clubs in the Los Angeles area will attend the opening performance of the musical tonight.

Final two weeks of the Bowl season will start Aug. 22, with Jose Iturbi scheduled to appear as piano soloist and conductor on the 22nd and conductor on the 24th.

In the final two weeks, Vladimir Horowitz, Jasha Heifetz, Isaac Stern, Serge Koussevitzky and a Rodgers and Hammerstein program are planned.

Cir. (D 93,055)
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
AUG 15 1950

My Day—

'Peter and the Wolf' Music Recorded at Tanglewood

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK, Aug. 15—We got back from Tanglewood at a fairly reasonable hour Friday night. I will frankly say it was a surprise to me to find how much interest there seemed to be in the playing of "Peter and the Wolf."

It is charming music, however, and I enjoyed reciting the words and listening to the wonderful performance of the orchestra, led by Dr. Koussevitzky. I have never recorded anything with an orchestra before and did not realize how difficult it is to get so many human beings to perform correctly.

But it was finally achieved, and I hope the record will bring pleasure to a great many young people in the years to come.

Yesterday morning I went to the Roosevelt School here in Hyde Park, where during the summer session many high school students are taking their college board exams. They come not only from many different states, but from many different countries.

I enjoyed being with them and trying to answer their questions. Afterward I went to look at their pool, which is the only steel pool I know of anywhere around here. I must say it looked marvelous. The water was clear and sparkling and I felt anyone would enjoy swimming in it.

Tanglewood on Parade

Mrs. Roosevelt Wins Ovation As Narrator

By Paul Giuliana
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

"Tanglewood on Parade" is an established tradition here. It is held on the last Friday of the Berkshire Music Center's six-week session, and its purpose is twofold—to raise money and to give a public exhibition of the curriculum. The ticket holder is entitled to a kind of whirlwind inspection of the five departments of the school.

On Friday the program opened with a trumpet fanfare composed by Aaron Copland. While a holiday atmosphere prevailed, many thousands wandered in and out of activities held simultaneously by the two student orchestras, the chamber music group, the chorus, and the opera department. For those who wished to see and hear a complete opera, there was a performance of Puccini's delightful one-act comedy, "Gianni Schicchi." A friendly spirit of rivalry existed between the various departments to capture the attention of the largest audience. Many of the spectators preferred to sit in small groups, enjoying a picnic on the beautiful grounds while in earshot of a madrigal group or the not-too-distant strains of a student symphony orchestra.

But the greatest interest was focused on a kind of Pops concert held in the evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The important attraction was the presence of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator in Prokofiev's symphonic story, "Peter and the Wolf."

After Dr. Koussevitzky opened with Haydn's "Oxford" Symphony, Mrs. Roosevelt appeared and was given a tumultuous ovation. Dr. Koussevitzky brought the great audience to its feet with a down beat for "The Star-Spangled Banner." The singing of the National Anthem by the 9,000 present was most impressive.

Mrs. Roosevelt's first words (about Peter who captures the wolf with the aid of a bird and a rope) were not too clear, largely owing to the fact that she seemed deeply moved by the reception given her. As the story progressed her tone took on the ingratiating naiveté of a grandmother delighting the children with a favorite story. In several places the audience was moved to mass amusement by the charm of her delivery and her pointed vocal emphasis. Many children were in the audience, including her own young grandson, David, son of Elliot Roosevelt. The conductor shared the demonstration of approval with Mrs. Roosevelt.

The program closed with a fine performance of Dvořák's "New World" Symphony, after which Dr. Koussevitzky further heightened the excitement by conducting Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" as an encore.

Afterward there was waltzing on the lawn to the two-piano music of Lukas Foss and Irving Fine of the faculty.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 6,462) (S 6,381)
This Clipping From
WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN
AUG 15 1950

Orchestra Conductor Plans Full Season

Pittsfield, Mass., August 15 (AP)—Retired Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, 76, today mapped out a crowded season that will take him from coast to coast and twice to Europe.

The founder-director of the Berkshire Music Center in nearby Lenox also told the Berkshire Eagle of plans to invite the famed French conductor, Nadia Boulanger, as guest faculty member next year.

She was reputedly the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony as Koussevitzky's guest in the 1938 season.

The sprightly ageless "Koussy" planned to set off August 23 for Los Angeles to conduct four concerts at the Hollywood Bowl, starting August 29.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 150,154) (S 159,533)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 15 1950

Boston Symphony Engaes 2 Full-Ins

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP).—Two former conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been engaged to replace Conductor Charles Munch during his mid-winter vacation, Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, has announced.

Serge Koussevitzky, who retired in 1949 after twenty-five years as leader, and Pierre Monteux, conductor of the San Francisco orchestra, have accepted invitations, Cabot said.

Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony for five years, 1919 through 1924, and was succeeded by Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (3,500)
This Clipping From
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
CHRONICLE
AUG 15 1950

BUSY SEASON AHEAD FOR KOUSSEVITZKY

To Cross Continent, Visit Europe Twice

Retired Boston Symphony orchestra Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, 76, today [illegible] a crowded season that will take him from coast to coast and twice to Europe.

The founder-director of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, also told of plans to invite the famed French conductor, Nadia Boulanger, as guest faculty member next year.

She was reputedly the first woman to conduct the Boston symphony as Koussevitzky's guest in the 1938 season.

The sprightly ageless "Koussy" planned to set off Aug. 23 for Los Angeles to conduct four concerts at the Hollywood bowl starting Aug. 29.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 80,485)
This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN
AUG 1 1950

AS IT SOUNDS

To Bruno — Ussher

Mrs. Roosevelt Goes Wolf-Hunting: Once or twice each year, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., entertains the summer music festival audiences with a concert followed by a party. The Center and the internationally famous summer festival series of the Boston in the "shed" were established by Kouusse-Vitzky who still conducts a good deal and supervises the classes at the Center. Last week another "Tanglewood On Parade" program was offered the public. The chief attraction of the concert was Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt as narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in the Prokofieff score. After the concert, (Haydn's "Oxford," Dvorak's "New World") listeners participated in a lawn party, picnic supper and waltzing on the grass. And ladies received door prizes. Incidentally, Mrs. Roosevelt's wolf-hunt will soon appear on an R C-Victor Disk.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 282,229)
This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
AUG 15 1950

Mrs. Roosevelt Scores Again

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt appeared last Friday night with Serge Koussevitzky and the great Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, famous summer music retreat in Massachusetts. She was the narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Earlier she had recorded the work with the same artists. The old as well as the young enjoyed this fine old children's tale in music.

Now that Mrs. Roosevelt has shown her ability in yet another medium, perhaps she can next do "Red Riding Hood" or "The Goose That Laid the Golden Egg" or even return to another Russian author, and do "War and Peace" by Tolstoy and send a recording to the Kremlin.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 330,240) (S 677,761)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1950

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

* * *

Berkshire Festival Ends

Special to the Herald Tribune

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 13.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra brought the thirteenth Berkshire Festival to a close here Sunday, playing before an audience of 12,600, a record for the season.

The final concert was comprised of Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Op. 11 and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Op. 68. At the conclusion, the seventy-six-year-old director was recalled by a cheering audience for seven bows.

The two week-end concerts attracted a total of more than 22,000 persons; 9,500 atteending the Saturday night program directed by Eleazar de Carvalho, with Joseph de Pasquale, Boston Orchestra first viola, as soloist. Mr. de Carvalho is a former student of the Berkshire Music Center, and was a student conductor before his selection by Dr. Koussevitzky as a guest conductor two years ago.

Total Tanglewood attendance this year was 178,700, a slight drop from last year's 181,350. Ticket sales grossed $243,100, however, an increase over last year's total of $235,300. This was brought about by increasing the number of Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-concert hall from four to six. Most of the attendance drop occurred in special programs by students given for the friends of the music center. A slight decline in the main-shed concerts also was seen, attributed by Tanglewood officials to threatening weather for five of the nine programs.

Since the shed was built in 1938, the attendance trend, however, has been increasing; starting with an initial season total of 38,000. Tanglewood figures show that some 500,000 persons have attended Boston Symphony concerts in the twelve years to date. In addition, the students of the music center present some forty choral, opera and chamber music events during a season.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 54,563) (S 112,033)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 15 1950

KOUSSEVITZKY GIVEN OVATION

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The 1950 festival of music ended in a blaze of glory, Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was recalled to the podium repeatedly to acknowledge the ovation he received after his playing of the Brahms' "First" symphony. Staid New Englanders so far forgot their decorum as to cheer, whistle and wave their programs at the maestro in an almost hysterical outburst of enthusiasm. Sunday's concert was the finale of tht very successful season.

PERHAPS THE applause was the result of the melodic beauty of Brahms, set against the rhythmic dissonances of Prokofieff's Symphony, No. 5, the work which preceded it. The Russian composer's work was a tour de force of the resources of the orchestra-exciting music but which was thoroughly whitewashed by the performance of the German composer's monumental, mighty "First." Dr. Koussevitzky was using good psychology for next year's box office in programming Brahms as the composer whose final work of the season will be remembered long after Prokofieff's work is gathering dust in the orchestra's library.

Saturday night's program was directed by Eleazer de Carhalho, the brilliant South American conductor, who played the interesting "Harold in Italy" symphony, in which the first violist of the orchestra, Joseph de Pasquale, scored as soloist: Ibert's "Escales" was the second work, with the composer receiving just acclaim from his seat in the auditorium.

THE FINAL WORK on Saturday night's program was Villa-Lobos' "CHOROS, No. 10" at which time the orchestra was augmented by a 200-voice mixed chorus. It is, technically, a very difficult work, but Mr. de Carvalho, conducting entirely without score, kept the vocalists and instrumentalists under perfect control, no mean accomplishment in any music league. But in the last analysis, it was the Brahms' "Second" symphony which brought the three-weeks' incomparable music festival to a dynamic and utterly satisfying conclusion.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,990)
This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
AUG 15 1950

KOUSSEVITSKI MAPS PLANS

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP)—Retired Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Serge Koussevitzky, 76, today mapped out a crowded season that will take him from coast to coast and twice to Europe.

The founder-director of the Berkshire Music Center in nearby Lenox also told the Berkshire Eagel of plans to invite the famed French conductor Nadia Boulanger as guest faculty member next year.

She was reputedly the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony as Koussevitzky's guest in the 1938 season.

The sprighty ageless "Koussy" planned to set off Aug. 23 for Los Angeles to conduct four concerts at the Hollywood Bowl starting Aug. 29.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,427)
This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS-TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1950

Noted Woman Composer Due At Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 15 (U.P.)—Nadia Boulanger, French woman composed and conductor, will be next year's guest faculty member at the Berkshire Music Center, Director Serge Koussevitzky announced today.

Miss Boulanger, teacher at the Paris Conservatory of Music, was the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when she appeared at Symphony Hall in Boston in 1938.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 14 1950

Babb

FAREWELL: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Berkshire Music Center, bi[ds] farewell to a group of his students as the 1950 season came to a close at Tanglewood over the week en[d]. The group gathered in the Tanglewood garden to listen to their leader.

[116]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 155,553) (S 168,002)
This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG 15 1950

Boston Orchestra Appeals For Gifts To Meet Deficit

BOSTON, Aug 14—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is asking season ticket holders for its 1950-51 concert series to donate 20 per cent over the price of their tickets in order to avoid an increase in its box office prices.

The orchestra is without available funds to meet deficits.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, sent a letter to subscribers last week, calling attention to the fact that the orchestra will lose an expected $165,000 of income which would have been the result of tax exemption. The proposed tax-relief measure has been ruled out by the national emergency.

Instead of raising the price of tickets, Cabot has asked those who renew their subscriptions to add 20 per cent as a voluntary gift, to make up the amount which had been hoped for through tax repeal.

Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra, has invited Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux to conduct concerts in Boston and other cities during the weeks of his midseason vacation this winter.

Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in its own city for the first time since his retirement as its leader in the spring of 1949. Pierre Monteux, who was the conductor of this orchestra for five years (1919-24), will return after many years of distinguished service in his present post as conductor of the San Francisco orchestra.

Munch is now resting at his country home in Alsace, after a notable season of concerts in France and Belgium. He will return to this country next month to open the orchestra's 70th season in Symphony Hall on Oct 6, beginning his second season as its conductor.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 180,019) (S 278,899)
This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CHRONICLE
AUG 17 1950

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,100)
This Clipping From
WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES
AUG 15 1950

Music

KOUSSEVITZKY, MONTEUX WILL BE CONDUCTORS

Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has invited Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux to conduct the concerts in Boston and other cities during the weeks of his mid-season vacation, according to a letter just sent to each season subscriber by Henry B. Cabot, the president of the board of trustees. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in its own city for the first time since his retirement as its leader in the spring of 1949. Pierre Monteux, who was the conductor of this orchestra for five years (1919-24), will return after many years of distinguished service in his present post as the conductor of the San Francisco Orchestra.

Charles Munch is now resting at his country home in Alsace, after a notable season of concerts in France and Belgium. He will return to this country next month to open this orchestra's 70th season in Symphony Hall on Oct. 6, beginning his second season as its conductor.

In his letter to the season ticket holders, Mr. Cabot drew attention to the fact that the Boston Orchestra will lose an expected $165,000 of additional income which would have been the result of tax exemption — the proposed federal measure ruled out by the national emergency. The orchestra is without available funds to meet its deficits. Instead of raising the price of tickets, Cabot has asked those who renew their subscriptions to add 20 per cent as a voluntary gift, to make up the amount which had been hoped for through tax repeal.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 25,402)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1950

BUSY SEASON MAPPED OUT BY KOUSSEVITZKY

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—Retired Boston symphony orchestra conductor Serge Koussevitzky, 76, today mapped out a crowded season that will take him from coast to coast and twice to Europe.

The founder-director of the Berkshire Music Center in nearby Lenox also told the Berkshire Eagle of plans to invite the famed French conductor Nadia Boulanger as guest faculty member next year.

She was reputedly the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony as Koussevitzky's guest in the 1938 season.

The sprighty ageless "Koussy" planned to set off Aug. 23 for Los Angeles to conduct four concerts at the Hollywood Bowl starting Aug. 29.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 30,821)
This Clipping From
QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER
AUG 17 1950

RCA-Victor will release an album of Eleanor Roosevelt narrating "Peter and The Wolf," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony accompanying her. It was recorded at Tanglewood . . . The album of songs which Margaret Truman will record won't be operatic or classical pieces. They'll be early American songs, mainly those of the 18th Century. . . . The President's new Mobilization committee will meet in Washington this week . . . The President may see Elliott Roosevelt this week about a new type of ship invented by a group with which he is associated. Their claim is that it can cross the ocean in three days.

LYONS

Jim Hearn, the Giants star pitcher, who was acquired from the Cards, had a contract with St. Louis which provided that he would receive a $500 bonus if the team played to over a million customers. This contract was assigned to the Giants. For the first time, therefore, a big league ball club will pay an employe a bonus based on the attendance at a rival park . . . Stuart Symington's son, Jim, is following in the footsteps of his mother, Eve Symington, the first of New York's society singers. He's taking voice lessons in N. Y. . . . Peter Pirogov, the Soviet flyer who escaped to the U. S. Zone, now is a civilian employe of the Air Forces. His job is to tour the bases, giving instruction in Soviet flying tac-

LEONARD LYONS
The LYONS DEN

RCA-Victor will release an album of Eleanor Roosevelt narrating "Peter and The Wolf," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony accompanying her. It was recorded last Friday, at Tanglewood . . . The album of songs which Margaret Truman will record won't be operatic or classical pieces. They'll be early American songs, mainly those of the 18th Century . . . The President's new Mobilization Committee will meet in Washington this week . . . The President may see Elliott Roosevelt this week, about a new type of ship invented by a group with which he is associated. Their claim is that it can cross the ocean in three days.

☆ ☆ ☆

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 26,159)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 17 1950

Mrs. F.D.R. 'Terrified' Before Appearance At Tanglewood

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was "terrified" before her performance as narrator for "Peter and the Wolf," with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last Friday, but she credited both the conductor and orchestra for putting her at ease.

In her United Feature syndicated column today Mrs. Roosevelt, writing on her day at Tanglewood, said in part:

"Dr. Koussevitzky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and orchestra itself. They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (21,590)
This Clipping From
Martins Ferry-Bellaire, Ohio
TIMES-LEADER
AUG 17 1950

Eleanor Scores Again

MRS. FRANKLIN D. Roosevelt appeared last Friday night with Serge Koussevitzky and the great Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, famous summer music retreat in Massachusetts. She was the narrator of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Earlier she had recorded the work with the same artists. The old as well as the young enjoyed this fine old children's tale in music.

Now that Mrs. Roosevelt has shown her ability in yet another medium, perhaps she can next do "Red Riding Hood" or "The Goose That Laid the Golden Egg" or even return to another Russian author, and do "War and Peace" by Tolstoy and send a recording to the Kremlin.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 218,403) (S 273,302)
This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
AUG 17 1950

In and Out of the Lyons Den

NEW YORK, Aug. 16—RCA-Victor will release an album of Eleanor Roosevelt narrating "Peter and The Wolf," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony accompanying her. It was recorded last Friday at Tanglewood . . . The album of songs which Margaret Truman will record won't be operatic or classical pieces. They'll be early American songs, mainly those of the 18th century.

The president's new mobilization committee will meet in Washington this week . . . The president may see Elliott Roosevent soon about a new type of ship invented by a group with which he is associated. Their claim is that it can cross the ocean in three days.

Jim Hearn, the Giants' star pitcher, who was acquired from the Cards, had a contract with St. Louis which provided that he would receive a $500 bonus if the team played to over a million customers. This contract was assigned to the Giants. For the first time, therefore, a big league ball club will pay an employe a bonus based on the attendance at a rival park.

Paul Porter, the ex-OPA administrator, was asked for advice about the ideal man to put in charge of rationing now. "They ought to get some one with no experience," said the Washington battle-scared Porter, "a man who thinks it's manageable and can be achieved without hardships or injustices."

A biography of Dr. Charles A. Beard, the historian, is being written, and it will include his story of the New England town in which he lived, where the old postmaster once asked him: "What kind of a doctor are you?" Dr. Beard said he was a doctor of philisophy, and the postmaster said: "Don't seem to recollect we ever had a case of that here."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 16 1950

Berkshire Festival, 'U.S. Salzburg,' In Record $243,100 Take For 6-Wk. Season

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.

The Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, near here, closed its 13th season Sunday (13) with a record take of $243,100 for its six weekends of concerts and some added lustre to its tag as the "Salzburg of America." Take was about $8,000 more than last year's previous record-breaker. Largest crowd of the season—12,600—attended Sunday's final concert, which Serge Koussevitzky conducted. Attendance for the six-week season was 178,700, with top longhairs mingling with tourists from widespread areas at what has now become the leading summer music attraction in America.

Festival this year was interesting for several sidelights to the regular draw of concerts by the ace Boston Symphony Orchestra. Setup consisted of three pairs of Bach-Mozart concerts in the 1,160-seater theatre-concert hall the first three weekends, and nine concerts the last three weekends in the 6,060-seater Shed. At some concerts there was more overflow audience on the lawn than in the Shed.

Koussevitzky, who quit the Boston symph a year ago after 25 years' service, but who retained directorship of the Festival (and its school, or Music Center) which he founded, was back after a year for two of the final three weekends, and received a boisterous welcome. His protest at the hiring of Victor de Sabata for a pair of concerts on grounds of the latter being an "outsider" also stirred things up a bit.

Mrs. FDR's $18,800 Draw

Engagement of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt to narrate Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with the orch on its special "Tanglewood on Parade" day (to raise funds for the Center), and subsequently record the work with the orch for Victor, proved a 10-strike. The special "Parade" concert drew 8,800 people (as against last year's 5,000), with $18,800 taken in for the Center. (Mrs. FDR donated her services for "Parade" day. She also split her recording fees, half going to the Center, half to the Wiltwyck School for Boys.)

The Festival, with its nine concerts, made a profit, but due to the expenses of the Music Center, or school, which is run for six weeks in conjunction with the Festival concerts, the overall season ends in a deficit. Same was true this season. This year the Center's students numbered 395, but 156 of these were on scholarship.

The Center, in addition to tuition of about $135 from the paying students, and the $18,800 from "Parade" day, also received about $27,000 from Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, these being voluntary contributions from music-lovers for the privilege of attending the many varied student concerts. Attendance at these events (which is different from the Festival series of paid concerts) totaled 50,000.

The Bach-Mozart series presented in the 1,160-seater theatre (with sometimes 3,000 more on the outside lawn), set a new record this year with a 23,500 attendance. Breakdown of the Festival's $243,100 receipts is: Bach-Mozart series, $41,100; Shed series, $177,000; "Parade," $18,800, and Pension Fund rehearsals, $6,200. Top for the Shed Concerts was $3 (with $6 for boxes), and $4 for the theatre (Bach-Mozart) series. General admission to the grounds was $2, with $1 charge for the Festival rehearsals.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 5,454)
This Clipping From HARRISBURG, ILL.
REGISTER
AUG 17 1950

★ IN HOLLYWOOD ★

Old Platter and Lanza Patter Work Successful Record Ruse

By ERSKINE JOHNSON
NEA Staff Correspondent

HOLLYWOOD—(NEA)—Not in the Script:

Dennis O'Keefe tells about the time his agent tried to sell him to a producer for a $1 million production.

"Dennis is perfect for the role," said the agent. "He's never made a picture that's lost money. His last four are still mopping up."

The producer shrugged, sat back in his chair and said:

"That's the trouble. His pictures make money. I'm not interested in little pictures that make money. I'd give the role to Dennis O'Keefe in one minute if he had just appeared in one lousy prestige stinker."

A RECORD TRY

M-G-M has writers working on a screen play based on the life of Mario Lanza.

One incident that Mario will disclose is the truth about how he got to Hollywood. It happened when Mario was stationed in Texas during the war. His throat was badly inflamed from dust when a USO troupe looking for GI talent came through.

Mario couldn't sing—but he had a Caruso record in his locker. He cut out some phony labels, pasted them over the Caruso tags and wrote on them that they were audition records made by Mario Lanza with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Next day he played the records for Peter Lind Hayes — and was promptly assigned to the troupe, which wound up in Hollywood.

* * *

Lou Costello felt anything but funny at the London Palladium after reading this wire:

"Resent your use of my special brand of cigars in your act. Unless you desist at once I shall turn the matter over to Scotland Yard. (Signed) W. Churchill."

Lou was just on the verge of trying to contract Churchill with an apology when Bud Abbott confessed he had sent the wire.

* * *

Jerry Lewis blew a fuse on the "At War With the Army" set when an assistant director tried to eject a group of visitors.

"But this is a closed set," pleaded the director.

"Closed set, nothing," howled Jerry. "You know I can work better when lots of people are around. Go out on the street and bring in some more."

* * *

Overheard at the Mocambo:

"She's wearing one of those dresses that keeps everybody warm but her."

* * *

Robert Ryan was telling the family that he had just been cast in a movie titled "Best of the Badmen."

His four-year-old sony, Timmy, looked obviously worried. Finally Timmy said:

"Best of the Badmen"?

"Yes," said Bob, "that's the title of the picture."

"You're going to be the best, aren't you, Daddy?" frowned Tiimmy.

High in the hills above Hollywood and Vine on a 45-degree slope, John Lucas reports a small home is a-building. A narrow-gauge track runs up the hill from the road to the front door. On the track sits a little open-air cable car with its name, written in chalk: "DESIRE."

KING OF THE LINES

Andrea King gives it a you-all Southern drawl for her role in "The Lemon Drop Kid." When Bob Hope asked her if she knew her dialog, she ricocheted with a neat:

"You mean my Mason and Dixon lines?"

* * *

John Wayne's explanation of his nickname, Duke:

"I think it has something to do with the fact that my real name is Marion Michael Morrison."

* * *

Harry Redman, Jr., the Hollywood explosion genius and special effects expert, worked with army engineers on the battle scenes for the movie, "G. I. Joe." One big scene required two cases of nitro starch and a case and a half of 60 per cent dynamite. The army engineers were all for planting even more high explosives until Redman pleaded:

"Look, boys. This is only a motion picture. We're just blowing up the set—not Hollywood."

* * *

Binnie Barnes, talking about a Hollywood hero:

"He's the kind of a bore who's here today and here tomorrow."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 87,425)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 18 1950

Whimsey

Some worry over the H-bomb, some over the soaring cost of existence, and a post card to a western answers man asks "What's Acheson dean of?"

Always, war brings strange new facts to light, and we never dreamed millinery could be funnier till we saw the Korean.

A big shakeup is announced in the R.F.C., that recently cut itself in on a Nevada gambling joint, and any rattling sound you hear could be dice.

The myth that totalitarians are more efficient has been many times exploded, as when it was found that the Duce's trains that arrived on time were yesterday's.

"The true boa constrictor is found only in the new world." But to even it up, only in the old world do they have Russia.

Bringing Turkey into an Atlantic Pact will be by far the biggest thing in that line since Hitler proposed the Japs for membership in the Aryan Race, Far Eastern sun-tan division.

The great symphony conductor, Koussevitsky, says the Russians are making a play for time—this evidently being one of those dreamy large movements, that precede the big roof-raising finale con brio.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 85,344)
This Clipping From
HARRISBURG, PA.
NEWS
AUG 18 1950

Tea Table Topics

Return From Tanglewood

AFTER a six weeks' study course in music and costuming at Tanglewood at Lenox, Mass., the Misses Mary and Suzanne Denison are at the home of their parents, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Denison, of Wildwood Lake. They motored here with their parents, who were in Lenox for a week.

The Misses Denison sang in the chorus at a presentation last week of the Bach B Minor Mass by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Hugh Ross, English choral director, is in charge of the chorus, which comprises 200 young women and men, who are students at Tanglewood, the Summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tangle[redacted]tion of Dr. Serge Koussivitsky.

A highlight of last week's concert by the Orchestra was the rendition of "Peter and the Wolf" for which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was narrator.

* * *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 96,045) (S 140,836)
This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
AUG 20 1950

Koussevitzky, Monteux Will Guest-Lead In Boston

BOSTON, Aug. 19. — Charles Munch, the conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has invited Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux to conduct the concerts in Boston and other cities during the weeks of his mid-season vacation, according to a letter just sent to each season subscriber by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra in its own city for the first time since his retirement as its leader in the spring of 1949. Pierre Monteux, who was conductor of this orchestra for five years (1919-24), will return after many years of distinguished service in his present post as the conductor of the San Francisco orchestra.

Charles Munch is now resting at his country home in Alsace, after a notable season of concerts in France and Belgium. He will return to this country next month to open this orchestra's 70th season in Symphony hall Oct. 6, thus beginning his second season as its conductor.

In his letter to the season ticket holders, Cabot drew attention to the fact that the Boston orchestra will lose an expected $165,000 of additional income, which would have been the result of tax exemption—the proposed Federal measure ruled out by the national emergency. The orchestra is without available funds to meet its deficits. Instead of raising the price of tickets, he has asked those who renew their season tickets to add 20 per cent as a voluntary gift to their checks to make up the amount which had been hoped for through tax repeal.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 46,049) (S 164,683)
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 22 1950

DR. KOUSSEVITSKY AGAIN TO CONDUCT

Will Direct Boston Symphony During Charles Munch's Coming Holidays

At the invitation of Charles Munch his successor. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when the former's holiday occurs during the coming season, and this return of the celebrated conductor will include the second concert of the Providence series.

This announcement to subscribers has been made by H. B. Cabot, president, in a letter which contains, in addition, an appeal for co-operation in a unique plan for coping with the orchestra's financial difficulties.

The orchestra is requesting a voluntary gift amounting to 20 per cent of the cost of season ticket, exclusive of federal tax, and this amount has been added to the bills accompanying Cabot's letter.

He explains that last spring there was confident expectation that the federal ticket tax would be repealed, resulting in additional revenue to meet the orchestra's greatly increased expenses.

"The national emergency has ruled out tax relief," he continues. "Therefore we must immediately seek added revenue, for we have expended all available funds to meet the deficits of recent years." The 20 per cent voluntary gift is therefore proposed.

Cabot says further, however, that even if there is a unanimously favorable response to the request, the orchestra will still be obliged to ask subscribers to join the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from whom funds with which to finance operating deficits are solicited annually.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 136,031)
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 21 1950

Koussevitsky To Be Guest

Will Conduct Boston Symphony During Munch's Holidays

At the invitation of Charles Munch, his successor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra when the former's holiday occurs during the coming season, and this return of the celebrated conductor will include the second concert of the Providence series.

This announcement to subscribers has been made by H. B. Cabot, president, in a letter which contains, in addition, an appeal for co-operation in a unique plan for coping with the orchestra's financial difficulties.

The orchestra is requesting a voluntary gift amounting to 20 per cent of the cost of season ticket, exclusive of federal tax, and this amount has been added to the bills accompanying Cabot's letter.

He explains that last spring there was confident expectation that the federal ticket tax would be repealed, resulting in additional revenue to meet the orchestra's greatly increased expenses.

"The national emergency has ruled out tax relief," he continues. "Therefore we must immediately seek added revenue, for we have expended all available funds to meet the deficits of recent years." The 20 per cent voluntary gift is therefore proposed.

Cabot says further, however, that even if there is a unanimously favorable response to the request, the orchestra will still be obliged to ask subscribers to join the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from whom funds with which to finance operating deficits are solicited annually.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 36,208)
This Clipping From
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 19 1950

JOHN R. PANDOLFI

Pandolfi To Play At Band Concert

Manville Clarinetist, Scholarship Winner, To Present Solos

John Pandolfi, outstanding young clarinetist, will perform with the Pawtucket and Central Falls veterans band at tomorrow afternoon's concert at Slater Park.

Mr. Pandolfi, 20, resides at 129 Church street, Manville. He began his musical studies at Mount St. Charles' Academy, Woonsocket, and is a student at the New England Conservatory of Music under Professor Rosario Mazzeo, base clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was awarded a summer scholarship to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood last year, and won the $500 American Federation of Music Clubs award this year. He is solo clarinetist with the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra.

Tomorrow, Mr. Pandolfi will offer Offenbach's "Orpheus In Der Unterwelt" and Rossini's "Barber of Seville." Other pieces include two marches, "Boston Commandery" and "Up The Street."

The complete program:

Second Connecticut March, Reeves; Barber of Seville, overture, Rossini; Dolores, waltz, Waldteufel; March From Tannhauser, selection, Wagner; Up The Street, march, Morse; Cowboy's Wedding, overture, Hegal; Humoresque, sketch, Dvorak; Them Basses, march, Huffine; intermission; Black Horse Troop, march, Sousa; Orpheus In Der Underwelt, overture, Offenbach; Trombone Special, march, Keller; Hunting Scene, descriptive sketch, Bucalacci; Boston Commandery, march, Evans, and Star Spangled Banner.

THE ROVING EYE

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The Never-Never Land Beyond the Berkshires

If anybody in this end of Massachusetts has been wondering where, if anywhere, there is virgin territory to be explored, I think I know just the place. It is (now hold your breath and close your eyes) none other than Berkshire County.

It is all conjecture, of course, but something tells me that the vast majority of Massachusettensians living on this side of the Connecticut river have little idea what a jewel they have on the other side of the Berkshire hills. It wouldn't surprise me in the least to learn that only a handful of Greater Bostonians have ever even been in Berkshire County, for the summer exodus is north to Cape Ann, New Hampshire and the Maine seaboard; south to the Cape and the Islands. Even the casual Sunday or weekend traveler seems to head north or south; the idea of going west seldom occurs to him.

Yet, little more than a hundred miles from Boston, there begins to unfold along the three main passes over the mountains a world of bright green countryside, of open rolling meadows, of enchanting villages, of beautiful colonial houses and of well-kept grounds and lawns. It is a world free of the hideous roadside billboards that despoil the face of America (for, as in Portugal, they are prohibited); it is a world where polluted rivers are rapidly becoming a thing of the past (though the Housatonic is still pretty foul), and it is a world where most of householders seem to take fierce pride in keeping their houses more newly painted than their neighbors.

No Grand Canyon

The natural wonders are certainly not the most exciting. There is no Grand Canyon of the Colorado to take the breath away, but Bish Bash falls in Egremont is by no means an insignificant sight. There's a legend about a love-sick Indian girl leaping to her death into the pool below to go with it, too. Another love-sick Indian girl is supposed to have jumped off Monument Mountain nearby. Indeed, there are so many places where love-sick Indians are supposed to have jumped off cliffs in New England it would seem that race suicide accounted for more of them than rum ever did.

Wahconah falls (also involving a love-sick Indian girl) in Dalton is very handsome, and there's a 100-foot cascade in Savoy that is supposed to be quite spectacular; I've never visited it myself. There are any number of state forests, such as the October Mountain State Forest in Washington, the Beartown State Forest in Monterey, Swann Forest with its preserve for wild game and the Pittsfield State Forest, containing the largest concentration of azaleas in New England.

Then there are any number of private reservations, all open to the public for visiting and picnicking. Among them are the Pleasant Valley Sanctuary in Lenox, with its beaver dams and its fine nature museum, and Bartholomew's Cobble in Sheffield, an interesting natural rock garden. But the scenery, which differs considerably from that of the eastern counties, is consistently beautiful.

Many Fabulous Estates

Besides the music festival of Tanglewood, which this year attracted nearly 180,000 people (practically none of them from this area), the county is the home of Mrs. Coolidge's chamber music festival at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's dance festival at Jacob's Pillow, the summer art school of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge and a good many other affairs. It is also the location of such fabulous estates (many of them now schools open to visitors) as the former mansions of the Stokes, the Carnegies, the Fosters, the Westinghouses and the Stanleys. At the turn of the century, in fact, Lenox all but out-Newported that Rhode Island seaport.

As for its literary associations, few places could boast a more brilliant collection of names. For besides Hawthorne, whose cottage still stands on the grounds of Tanglewood, it was the sometime home of Melville, Longfellow, Holmes, Henry James, Edith Wharton, William Cullen Bryant, Mark Twain, Henry Adams and John Burroughs. Many of their homes and haunts may still be seen; most of them are marked.

As for its historical background, they'll have you know, sir, that the first armed resistance to British rule in America took place in Great Barrington, and that a couple of Sheffield men, Col. John Ashley and Theodore Sedgwick, wrote a Declaration of Independence three years before John Hancock put his signature on the one that got the reputation. The Philadelphia job was practically plagiarism, too.

And so is this, come to think of it. For some of the material came from Ruth Noble's exceedingly literate little guidebook to the Berkshires, but if it will induce more people from this area to take a good look at their unknown western frontier, maybe she'll let me get away with it.

[119]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 83,520)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 20 1950

Berkshire Festival Unique In Beauty Of Surroundings

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Another Berkshire Music Festival is over. The writer had the pleasure of attending the final program last Sunday afternoon when 12,600 music lovers were in attendance to give Serge Koussevitzky a rousing "send off." While this was not a record crowd, it was by far the largest gathering at any of this season's Festival events. The overall attendance figures for this year were 178,700, just slightly below last year's record attendance of 181,000 people. Despite, that fact, the receipts from ticket sales were around $8,000 more this season than last.

One could hardly ask for a more beautiful natural setting than the festival grounds. The Music Shed, to the left of the main gate and set on the high point of the estate, looks down over a beautiful lake with picturesque hills in the background. The main building, where are centered the activities of the school, the Berkshire Music Center is in the center of the grounds, with the Concert Hall over to the right. Amidst the famed beauty of the Berkshires, certainly the setting of the Festival grounds is unrivaled.

Though I have seen many pictures of crowds lounging on the lawns utside the open air Music Shed, I must confess that I was somewhat nprepared for the informality in attire of many at last Sunday's oncert. Every conceivable kind of a rig was in evidence, even some-hing that looked like a gay nineties bathing suit, without the stockings nd shoes. Informal attire is understandable and, in fact, desirable hen you consider that thousands have to sit in the sun and want to e as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. Many bring ankets and camp chairs and of course many bring picnic lunches. To read your way through the sprawling throng without stepping on omebody or something is quite a feat. If you want to take your shoes and stockings off—many do—that's quite alright, too. I've always advocated informality at musical programs and this is IT!

The fact that thousands can hear the music from the lawns surrounding the Music Shed is a tribute to its remarkable acoustical properties. Eliel Saarinen, Finnish architect, designed the building and Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology devised the acoustics. The orchestra plays in a shell somewhat like the one used in the Yale Bowl for the "Pop" concerts and the resonance is increased by the wooden roof. During the intermission at last Sunday's concert, I enquired from listeners who were sitting on the lawn at a considerable distance from the Shed and was informed that they could hear the music perfectly.

SHED ACOUSTICS NEAR PERFECT

Inside the Shed, of course, it became increasingly apparent as the opening work, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, progressed, that the sound properties of the Shed were well nigh perfect. The slightest pianissimo came through beautifully and though one never had to strain to hear the Koussevitzy brasses here, they at no time overpowered the strings but rather assumed their rightful volume to make tonal balances according to the score's demands. This was my first hearing of the symphony which has its moments of terrifying grandeur, reminiscent of characteristic Shostakovich brutalities in harmonic thrusts. I was particularly taken with the Scherzo, which is perhaps the most inspired movement of the work in a melodic sense and in many ways the most interesting.

It is hardly necessary to say that Brahms' First Symphony, the other work in the program, offered a decided contrast to the Prokofieff Symphony. While the performance of a work which is an outstanding representative of the classic symphony was invested with all the usual Koussevitzkian genius in interpretation, the performance was somewhat tempered from the usual "fireworks" brand of projection for which the conductor is famous. Withal, the performance was as completely satisfying as any that might be called more spirited, for there was a mellowness and a serenity to the music that more than compensated for previous and expected liberties in tempos. The "grand old man of music" received a lengthy and heart-warming ovation at the conclusion of the work, which also signalled the close of this year's festival. The applause was richly deserved.

After the concert, a visit to The Little Red House, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the 1850's was a must for this listener. This lies just in the rear of the Festival grounds on Hawthorne Street, across from the box-holder's entrance to Tanglewood. As a Bowdoin alumnus, I am inordinately proud of this greater American writer, who with another American literary figure, Henry Longfellow, was of the Bowdoin class of 1825.

STUDENTS USE HAWTHORNE COTTAGE

The "Hawthorne Cottage," where the author planned "Tanglewood Tales," wrote the "Wonder Book" and assembled the material for "The House of Seven Gables," was destroyed by fire on June 22, 1890. A replica of the Little Red House was built through the courtesy of the National Federation of Music Clubs and presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948. The building is now used for studies by students of the Berkshire Music Center. Possibly some budding composer may find the inspiration there to write a great musical masterpiece even as Hawthorne received the call to write there some of his literary gems.

Today's Berkshire Festival is a far cry from the original three concert series in 1934. These first concerts were given on the Dan Hanna estate at Interlaken in the nearby Township of Stockbridge. Here a wooden shell was erected and benches with a seating capacity of 2,000 were installed. Henry Hadley conducted an orchestra composed of 65 players from the New York Philharmonic Society. The total attendance for this first festival was about 5,000. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was incorporated late in that year as a non-profit organization.

After a second series of three concerts the following Summer, this time with the protection of a rented tent (it rained at the concluding concert), the Festival Committee invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take over the three concerts for the 1936 season. This year, the three concerts were given on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge (with tent and shell) and drew 15,000 listeners.

In 1937, the site of the Festival was shifted to its present location through the gift to the orchestra of the "Tanglewood" estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. Six concerts were given that year but a downpour at the fourth program interrupted the performance and prompted the Festival Committee to take steps for erecting a permanent auditorium. 80,000 dollars were raised by subscription and the present Shed was built and in readiness for the 1938 series of six concerts. Incidentally, the Shed has a seating accommodation for a little over 6,000 people.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 172,548) (S 200,772)
This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 18 1950

Seeking Light Reading? Mrs. F.D.R. Much Amused By 'Noah And His Ark'

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK—If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which will you will enjoy too, read "Noah And His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much — "An Eye For Music" by the artist, Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her.

It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the drawings I like best is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearsing.

The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all."

Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I took a personal interest in them after having recorded "Peter And The Wolf" with the orchestra at Tanglewood recently under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky. It is charming music and I enjoyed reciting the words. I hope the record will bring pleasure to a great many young people.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself.

They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 71,787) (S 53,968)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 21 1950

STRANGE NEWS

Recent Announcements Draw Comment from 'Old Nutmegger'

To the Editor:

Due to the Korean fracas we note some strange news items on which we would like to comment.

First, we note, if the Korean war has done nothing else it has brought Henry Agard Wallace to his senses momentarily and has supplied the errant one with an out which permits him to return to the fold and away from his insane leanings of the past. We trust his reconversion is sincere and will be complete.

Then his erstwhile pals, O. John Rogge and Lee Pressman, show signs of following the new trend back to normalcy, and it may be expected, since his defeat in the Idaho primaries, that Senator Glen Taylor, Wallace's running mate in 1948, will shortly announce that he too has seen the error of his ways and will seek foregiveness. All of which proves the age old saying: "Chickens will come home to roost."

Another news item of prime importance is the announcement that Empress Eleanor has completed her record of "Peter and the Wolf" to an orchestral accompaniment led by Dr. Koussevitsky. May we suggest that she do a companion piece for the other side of the record entitled "Franklin and the Bear" to the accompaniment of the haunting strains of the "Bums Symphony Band" to be conducted by the same Russian, or possibly a piano accompaniment by H.S.T. would be more appropriate.

Then we would have a double disc record that would break all sales records and which would bring pleasure to our musically inclined posterity. What price Kulture?

OLD NUTMEGGER

[120]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 83,520)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 20 1950

Berkshire Festival Unique In Beauty Of Surroundings

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Another Berkshire Music Festival is over. The writer had the pleasure of attending the final program last Sunday afternoon when 12,600 music lovers were in attendance to give Serge Koussevitzky a rousing "send off." While this was not a record crowd, it was by far the largest gathering at any of this season's Festival events. The overall attendance figures for this year were 178,700, just slightly below last year's record attendance of 181,000 people. Despite, that fact, the receipts from ticket sales were around $8,000 more this season than last.

One could hardly ask for a more beautiful natural setting than the festival grounds. The Music Shed, to the left of the main gate and set on the high point of the estate, looks down over a beautiful lake with picturesque hills in the background. The main building, where are centered the activities of the school, the Berkshire Music Center is in the center of the grounds, with the Concert Hall over to the right. Amidst the famed beauty of the Berkshires, certainly the setting of the Festival grounds is unrivaled.

Though I have seen many pictures of crowds lounging on the lawns outside the open air Music Shed, I must confess that I was somewhat unprepared for the informality in attire of many at last Sunday's concert. Every conceivable kind of a rig was in evidence, even something that looked like a gay nineties bathing suit, without the stockings and shoes. Informal attire is understandable and, in fact, desirable when you consider that thousands have to sit in the sun and want to be as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. Many bring blankets and camp chairs and of course many bring picnic lunches. To thread your way through the sprawling throng without stepping on somebody or something is quite a feat. If you want to take your shoes and stockings off—many do—that's quite alright, too. I've always advocated informality at musical programs and this is IT!

The fact that thousands can hear the music from the lawns surrounding the Music Shed is a tribute to its remarkable acoustical properties. Eliel Saarinen, Finnish architect, designed the building and Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology devised the acoustics. The orchestra plays in a shell somewhat like the one used in the Yale Bowl for the "Pop" concerts and the resonance is increased by the wooden roof. During the intermission at last Sunday's concert, I enquired from listeners who were sitting on the lawn at a considerable distance from the Shed and was informed that they could hear the music perfectly.

SHED ACOUSTICS NEAR PERFECT

Inside the Shed, of course, it became increasingly apparent as the opening work, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, progressed, that the sound properties of the Shed were well nigh perfect. The slightest pianissimo came through beautifully and though one never had to strain to hear the Koussevitzy brasses here, they at no time overpowered the strings but rather assumed their rightful volume to make tonal balances according to the score's demands. This was my first hearing of the symphony which has its moments of terrifying grandeur, reminiscent of characteristic Shostakovich brutalities in harmonic thrusts. I was particularly taken with the Scherzo, which is perhaps the most inspired movement of the work in a melodic sense and in many ways the most interesting.

It is hardly necessary to say that Brahms' First Symphony, the other work in the program, offered a decided contrast to the Prokofieff Symphony. While the performance of a work which is an outstanding representative of the classic symphony was invested with all the usual Koussevitzkian genius in interpretation, the performance was somewhat tempered from the usual "fireworks" brand of projection for which the conducter is famous. Withal, the performance was as completely satisfying as any that might be called more spirited, for there was a mellowness and a serenity to the music that more than compensated for previous and expected liberties in tempos. The "grand old man of music" received a lengthy and heart-warming ovation at the conclusion of the work, which also signalled the close of this year's festival. The applause was richly deserved.

After the concert, a visit to The Little Red House, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the 1850's was a must for this listener. This lies just in the rear of the Festival grounds on Hawthorne Street, across from the box-holder's entrance to Tanglewood. As a Bowdoin alumnus, I am inordinately proud of this greater American writer, who with another American literary figure, Henry Longfellow, was of the Bowdoin class of 1825.

STUDENTS USE HAWTHORNE COTTAGE

The "Hawthorne Cottage," where the author planned "Tanglewood Tales," wrote the "Wonder Book" and assembled the material for "The House of Seven Gables," was destroyed by fire on June 22, 1890. A replica of the Little Red House was built through the courtesy of the National Federation of Music Clubs and presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948. The building is now used for studies by students of the Berkshire Music Center. Possibly some budding composer may find the inspiration there to write a great musical masterpiece even as Hawthorne received the call to write there some of his literary gems.

Today's Berkshire Festival is a far cry from the original three concert series in 1934. These first concerts were given on the Dan Hanna estate at Interlaken in the nearby Township of Stockbridge. Here a wooden shell was erected and benches with a seating capacity of 2,000 were installed. Henry Hadley conducted an orchestra composed of 65 players from the New York Philharmonic Society. The total attendance for this first festival was about 5,000. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was incorporated late in that year as a non-profit organization.

After a second series of three concerts the following Summer, this time with the protection of a rented tent (it rained at the concluding concert), the Festival Committee invited Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take over the three concerts for the 1936 season. This year, the three concerts were given on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge (with tent and shell) and drew 15,000 listeners.

In 1937, the site of the Festival was shifted to its present location through the gift to the orchestra of the "Tanglewood" estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. Six concerts were given that year but a downpour at the fourth program interrupted the performance and prompted the Festival Committee to take steps for erecting a permanent auditorium. 80,000 dollars were raised by subscription and the present Shed was built and in readiness for the 1938 series of six concerts. Incidentally, the Shed has a seating accommodation for a little over 6,000 people.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 172,848) (S 200,772)
This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 18 1950

Seeking Light Reading? Mrs. F.D.R. Much Amused By 'Noah And His Ark'

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK—If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which will you will enjoy too, read "Noah And His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much — "An Eye For Music" by the artist, Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her.

It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the [illegible] is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearsing.

The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all."

Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I took a personal interest in them after having recorded "Peter And The Wolf" with the orchestra at Tanglewood recently under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky. It is charming music and I enjoyed reciting the words. I hope the record will bring pleasure to a great many young people.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself.

They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 71,787) (S 53,968)
This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
AUG 21 1950

STRANGE NEWS

Recent Announcements Draw Comment from 'Old Nutmegger'

To the Editor:

Due to the Korean fracas we note some strange news items on which we would like to comment.

First, we note, if the Korean war has done nothing else it has brought Henry Agard Wallace to his senses momentarily and has supplied the errant one with an out which permits him to return to the fold and away from his insane leanings of the past. We trust his reconversion is sincere and will be complete.

Then his erstwhile pals, O. John Rogge and Lee Pressman, show signs of following the new trend back to normalcy, and it may be expected, since his defeat in the Idaho primaries, that Senator Glen Taylor, Wallace's running mate in 1948, will shortly announce that he too has seen the error of his ways and will seek foregiveness. All of which proves the age old saying: "Chickens will come home to roost."

Another news item of prime importance is the announcement that Empress Eleanor has completed her record of "Peter and the Wolf" to an orchestral accompaniment led by Dr. Koussevitsky. May we suggest that she do a companion piece for the other side of the record entitled "Franklin and the Bear" to the accompaniment of the haunting strains of the "Bums Symphony Band" to be conducted by the same Russian, or possibly a piano accompaniment by H.S.T. would be more appropriate.

Then we would have a double disc record that would break all sales records and which would bring pleasure to our musically inclined posterity. What price Kulture?

OLD NUTMEGGER

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 700,722) (S 1,210,507)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 22 1950

Sokolsky's THESE DAYS:

Not All the Great Live in Big Cities

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

SOMETIMES, I am asked why I like to wander away from great topics in the news to the simplicities of life in the Berkshires, where the pine and maple blend with oak, birch and wild cherry to make an atmosphere.

Reporters, like motion picture actors, are typed in the minds of readers. If a peep-hole columnist writes a serious thought, he is sometimes charged with stepping out of his role. If what Pegler calls a double-dome wanders into the by-paths of human interest, he is accused sometimes of deserting his post.

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Life is not a mosaic of big events, which look little, almost microscopic, in history, nor is it the tale of great men who, for a moment only, bestride the pages of newspapers to disappear forever in their obituary columns.

To popularize a Vice-President for a few seconds of eternity, they called him a Veep, but most of our Vice-Presidents, no matter what their ponderosity, are forgotten even in their own generation.

Historic life is a continuous story of a whole people, of simple people as well as those who clamor in the spotlight often of their own devising. I feel that so strongly each Summer as I work in these Berkshire Hills, reading the books, pamphlets and monographs that have accumulated over the season when perhaps the legs move more often than the mind.

AND here, too, there has been the leisure, in the midst of a war, to listen to an enormous quantity of Bach, done as only Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony can do it at Tanglewood. It is so difficult to listen to music in a hall, in a big city, after having heard Bach's B Minor Mass, with a chorus trained by Hugh Ross, at Tanglewood.

The mountains do something to music, and listening without pressure and leaving the place, without street noises and street smells, gives the listener a chance to recall and to remember not only the music but his emotional responses.

Up here, the folks are simple, too. The other day, my friend, Edward S. Rogers, died at the age of 86. He had, for decades, been the treasurer of the mutual Savings Bank in Lee.

He did not change the world nor leave his impress on the map of nations, but he helped folks when they could not meet their mortgages or when they had to send a better-than-ordinary child to school, or when the husband died and the widow knew nothing about handling her small savings.

That was his job in life and he developed a personality to meet his social responsibilities.

In this very small town, he was a very big man, but that hardly mattered. For his was one of those prodigious memories that knew not about literature and history, but the very essence of our culture.

He could recite most of the best poetry and I have often suspected that some that he quoted to make a point was of his own composition. He was more than acquainted with Beethoven, Brahms, Bach and Mozart. He was one of the founders of Tanglewood.

HE also could recount the genealogy and history of every family in these parts and trusted men by their character rather than by a bank statement. Big city bankers can hardly do that these days, because bank examiners know nothing about character but only read reports. Yet, many a man who failed, and therefore needed help, eventually contributed brilliantly: I cite Thomas Edison as one example.

So Edward Rogers is dead and a new generation steps in with adding machines and even mechanical brains to aid them, but with less of the softness, gentleness and, at the same time, tough common sense that produced the old New England that, it seems centuries ago, built Ohio and Michigan and so much else of America.

One who deals with mighty events needs this respite, or else the perspective is gone and everything seems so important and everybody so colossal.

Perhaps it is because so few of those of us who dwell and toil in cities leave them, as though on retreat, that humility has disappeared from our lives, particularly among our rulers. They strut their little stages, forgetting that as compared with one mountain peak, we are all pigmies in time and space.

(Copyright, 1950, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Only the Journal-American brings you George E. Sokolsky's brilliant critiques on world affairs. Enjoying them? Stay with them!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 104,811) (S 155,723)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
AUG 22 1950

10 Top Soloists, Ensembles Booked for Concert Season

Ten of the top soloists and ensembles now appearing on European and American concert stages will be featured in the 1950-51 Eastman Theater Concert Series A and B, Art hur M. See, executive director of the Rochester Civic Music Association, announced yesterday.

Highlighting the Artists' Series will be a concert presentation of Puccini's "La Boheme" with Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic, as musical director. It will be Leinsdorf's first appearance in this series and will also mark his return to the local scene in that role from which, as principal conductor of the Wagnerian wing of the Metropolitan Opera, he gained fame.

Featured with Leinsdorf in the same performance of "La Boheme," which he directed in the Summer series at Chicago's Grant Park, will be the original stars of that production, Rudolf Petrak as Rodofolo and Nancy Carr as Mimi.

Sang Bach Here

Petrak, who was last heard as tenor soloist with the Rochester Philharmonic in Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," also has appeared with the Baltimore Symphony, Philadelphia La Scala Opera Company and the Pittsburgh Opera Company. Miss Carr, a young radio and concert stage star, who will be making her Rochester debut, is rapidly attaining national fame through her regular appearances on the "Chicago Theater of the Air."

In addition to such returning favorites as the Boston Symphony, Artur Rubinstein, the Ballet Theater, Joseph Szigeti and Marian Anderson, See announced that four artists and ensembles will appear before Eastman audiences for the first time. The Philharmonic Piano Quartet, a group of talented young artists whose wide range of music from the classic repertory to contemporary works has captivated audiences throughout the United States and Canada, will be heard on Nov. 10.

Spanish Troupe Booked

Ann Maria's Spanish Ballet, led by one of Spain's foremost dancers and widely acclaimed while on tour in Central and South America for its brilliant performance of its native flamenco dances, is coming on Dec. 6. Elena Nikoladi, the Greek contralto who won countless laurels in Europe as a star of the Vienna Opera, will appear on Oct. 12, and Tossy Spivakovsky, the young violinist who has been hailed as technically the equal of Paganini and Joachim, is scheduled to be heard on Feb. 23.

See also called attention to the fact that four of the 10 Series Concerts will be heard on nights other than Friday. The complete schedules for both series follow:

Series A

Elena Nikoladi, Thursday, Oct. 12.
Joseph Szigeti, Friday, Nov. 24.
La Boheme, Friday, Jan. 19.
Ballet Theater, Friday, Mar. 9.
Artur Rubinstein, Thursday, Mar. 29.

Series B

Boston Symphony, Thursday, Oct. 19.
Philharmonic Piano Quartet, Friday, Nov. 10.
Ana Maria's Spanish Ballet, Wednesday, Dec. 6.
Marian Anderson, Friday, Feb. 2.
Tossy Spivakovsky, Friday, Feb. 23.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 35,874)
This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 23 1950

43

Social

Alfred Weiss Completes Season at Tanglewood

Alfred Weiss, Eastside High School faculty member, has returned home recently after spending the Summer season at Tanglewood, scene of the Berkshire Musical Festival, in Massachusetts.

During his six weeks stay at Tanglewood, Mr. Weiss was assigned as the librettist for Jacques Ibet's opera, "Le Roi D'Yvetot". The King of Yvetot, which had its American premiere at the festival. He also had a speaking role as one of the four elders in the presentation of "The King."

The translation of Moussourghsky's "Songs and Dances of Death" and the writing of program notes also were part of Mr. Weiss's work at Tanglewood.

Mr. Weiss reported that the most thrilling experience at Tanglewood was his association with some of the world's most famous artists. He was directly affiliated with Ibet while doing the opera translation and wrote under the supervision of Dr. John Popper, acting head of the opera department at Tanglewood.

Admission to Tanglewood as an active participant demands not only talent, but the ability to apply oneself laboriously to one's assignment. Difficult to obtain, entrance to the workshop is gained only after the applicant has had samples of his material accepted by a board of review and is interviewed by experts in his particular field. Participants are restricted to approximately 395, and this year's group represented 40 States and many foreign nations.

Weiss' work samples were reviewed by Arnold Sungaard, advisor to the librettists, and he was interviewed by Boris Godovsky, radio program director for the Metropolitan Opera Company.

During his six-weeks' stay at the seat of the famous festival Weiss met three Paterson teachers who attended programs there including Harry Levin, Fred Coyle and Ethel Berman. He also reported that one of the administrators of the festival is Miss Gloria Gray, a former Patersonian.

Weiss, who resides with his sister, Mrs. Carl Berkowitz, 395 E. 28th St., is a graduate of New York City College, where he received his B.A. in liberal arts, and Columbia University, where he received an M.A. in English. Born in New York City, he has resided locally for the past five years. His major interests are theater, creative English, ballet and music.

[121]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 172,548) (S 200,772)
This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
AUG 18 1950

Seeking Light Reading? Mrs. F.D.R. Much Amused By 'Noah And His Ark'

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK—If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which will you will enjoy too, read "Noah And His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much — "An Eye For Music" by the artist, Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her.

It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the drawings I like best is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearsing.

The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all."

Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I took a personal interest in them after having recorded "Peter And The Wolf" with the orchestra at Tanglewood recently under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky. It is charming music and I enjoyed reciting the words. I hope the record will bring pleasure to a great many young people.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself.

They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Clr. (D 83,520)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 20 1950

Berkshire Festival Unique In Beauty Of Surroundings

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Another Berkshire Music Festival is over. The writer had the pleasure of attending the final program last Sunday afternoon when 12,600 music lovers were in attendance to give Serge Koussevitzky a rousing "send off." While this was not a record crowd, it was by far the largest gathering at any of this season's Festival events. The overall attendance figures for this year were 178,700, just slightly below last year's record attendance of 181,000 people. Despite, that fact, the receipts from ticket sales were around $8,000 more this season than last.

One could hardly ask for a more beautiful natural setting than the festival grounds. The Music Shed, to the left of the main gate and set on the high point of the estate, looks down over a beautiful lake with picturesque hills in the background. The main building, where are centered the activities of the school, the Berkshire Music Center is in the center of the grounds, with the Concert Hall over to the right. Amidst the famed beauty of the Berkshires, certainly the setting of the Festival grounds is unrivaled.

Though I have seen many pictures of crowds lounging on the lawns outside the open air Music Shed, I must confess that I was somewhat unprepared for the informality in attire of many at last Sunday's concert. Every conceivable kind of a rig was in evidence, even something that looked like a gay nineties bathing suit, without the stockings and shoes. Informal attire is understandable and, in fact, desirable when you consider that thousands have to sit in the sun and want to be as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. Many bring blankets and camp chairs and of course many bring picnic lunches. To thread your way through the sprawling throng without stepping on somebody or something is quite a feat. If you want to take your shoes and stockings off—many do—that's quite alright, too. I've always advocated informality at musical programs and this is IT!

The fact that thousands can hear the music from the lawns surrounding the Music Shed is a tribute to its remarkable acoustical properties. Eliel Saarinen, Finnish architect, designed the building and Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology devised the acoustics. The orchestra plays in a shell somewhat like the one used in the Yale Bowl for the "Pop" concerts and the resonance is increased by the wooden roof. During the intermission at last Sunday's concert, I enquired from listeners who were sitting on the lawn at a considerable distance from the Shed and was informed that they could hear the music perfectly.

SHED ACOUSTICS NEAR PERFECT

Inside the Shed, of course, it became increasingly apparent as the opening work, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, progressed, that the sound properties of the Shed were well nigh perfect. The slightest pianissimo came through beautifully and though one never had to strain to hear the Koussevitzy brasses here, they at no time overpowered the strings but rather assumed their rightful volume to make tonal balances according to the score's demands. This was my first hearing of the symphony which has its moments of terrifying grandeur, reminiscent of characteristic Shostakovich brutalities in harmonic thrusts. I was particularly taken with the Scherzo, which is perhaps the most inspired movement of the work in a melodic sense and in many ways the most interesting.

It is hardly necessary to say that Brahms' First Symphony, the other work in the program, offered a decided contrast to the Prokofieff Symphony. While the performance of a work which is an outstanding representative of the classic symphony was invested with all the usual Koussevitzkian genius in interpretation, the performance was somewhat tempered from the usual "fireworks" brand of projection for which the conductor is famous. Withal, the performance was as completely satisfying as any that might be called more spirited, for there was a mellowness and a serenity to the music that more than compensated for previous and expected liberties in tempos. The "grand old man of music" received a lengthy and heart-warming ovation at the conclusion of the work, which also signalled the close of this year's festival. The applause was richly deserved.

After the concert, a visit to The Little Red House, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in the 1850's was a must for this listener. This lies just in the rear of the Festival grounds on Hawthorne Street, across from the box-holder's entrance to Tanglewood. As a Bowdoin alumnus, I am inordinately proud of this greater American writer, who with another American literary figure, Henry Longfellow, was of the Bowdoin class of 1825.

STUDENTS USE HAWTHORNE COTTAGE

The "Hawthorne Cottage," where the author planned "Tanglewood Tales," wrote the "Wonder Book" and assembled the material for "The House of Seven Gables," was destroyed by fire on June 22, 1890. A replica of the Little Red House was built through the courtesy of the National Federation of Music Clubs and presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948. The building is now used for studies by students of the Berkshire Music Center. Possibly some budding composer may find the inspiration there to write a great musical masterpiece even as Hawthorne received the call to write there some of his literary gems.

Today's Berkshire Festival is a far cry from the original three concert series in 1934. These first concerts were given on the Dan Hanna estate at Interlaken in the nearby Township of Stockbridge. Here a wooden shell was erected and benches with a seating capacity of 2,000 were installed. Henry Hadley conducted an orchestra composed of 65 players from the New York Philharmonic Society. The total attendance for this first festival was about 5,000. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival was incorporated late in that year as a non-profit organization.

After a second series of three concerts the following Summer, this time with the protection of a rented tent (it rained at the concluding concert), the Festival Committee invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to take over the three concerts for the 1936 season. This year, the three concerts were given on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson in Stockbridge (with tent and shell) and drew 15,000 listeners.

In 1937, the site of the Festival was shifted to its present location through the gift to the orchestra of the "Tanglewood" estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. Six concerts were given that year but a downpour at the fourth program interrupted the performance and prompted the Festival Committee to take steps for erecting a permanent auditorium. 80,000 dollars were raised by subscription and the present Shed was built and in readiness for the 1938 series of six concerts. Incidentally, the Shed has a seating accommodation for a little over 6,000 people.

[120]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 700,722) (S 1,210,507)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 22 1950

Sokolsky's THESE DAYS:

Not All the Great Live in Big Cities

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

SOMETIMES, I am asked why I like to wander away from great topics in the news to the simplicities of life in the Berkshires, where the pine and maple blend with oak, birch and wild cherry to make an atmosphere.

Reporters, like motion picture actors, are typed in the minds of readers. If a peep-hole columnist writes a serious thought, he is sometimes charged with stepping out of his role. If what Pegler calls a double-dome wanders into the by-paths of human interest, he is accused sometimes of deserting his post.

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Life is not a mosaic of big events, which look little, almost microscopic, in history, nor is it the tale of great men who, for a moment only, bestride the pages of newspapers to disappear forever in their obituary columns.

To popularize a Vice-President for a few seconds of eternity, they called him a Veep, but most of our Vice-Presidents, no matter what their ponderosity, are forgotten even in their own generation.

Historic life is a continuous story of a whole people, of simple people as well as those who clamor in the spotlight often of their own devising. I feel that so strongly each Summer as I work in these Berkshire Hills, reading the books, pamphlets and monographs that have accumulated over the season when perhaps the legs move more often than the mind.

AND here, too, there has been the leisure, in the midst of a war, to listen to an enormous quantity of Bach, done as only Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony can do it at Tanglewood. It is so difficult to listen to music in a hall, in a big city, after having heard Bach's B Minor Mass, with a chorus trained by Hugh Ross, at Tanglewood.

The mountains do something to music, and listening without pressure and leaving the place, without street noises and street smells, gives the listener a chance to recall and to remember not only the music but his emotional responses.

Up here, the folks are simple, too. The other day, my friend, Edward S. Rogers, died at the age of 86. He had, for decades, been the treasurer of the mutual Savings Bank in Lee.

He did not change the world nor leave his impress on the map of nations, but he helped folks when they could not meet their mortgages or when they had to send a better-than-ordinary child to school, or when the husband died and the widow knew nothing about handling her small savings.

That was his job in life and he developed a personality to meet his social responsibilities.

In this very small town, he was a very big man, but that hardly mattered. For his was one of those prodigious memories that knew not about literature and history, but the very essence of our culture.

He could recite most of the best poetry and I have often suspected that some that he quoted to make a point was of his own composition. He was more than acquainted with Beethoven, Brahms, Bach and Mozart. He was one of the founders of Tanglewood.

HE also could recount the genealogy and history of every family in these parts and trusted men by their character rather than by a bank statement. Big city bankers can hardly do that these days, because bank examiners know nothing about character but only read reports. Yet, many a man who failed, and therefore needed help, eventually contributed brilliantly: I cite Thomas Edison as one example.

So Edward Rogers is dead and a new generation steps in with adding machines and even mechanical brains to aid them, but with less of the softness, gentleness and, at the same time, tough common sense that produced the old New England that, it seems centuries ago, built Ohio and Michigan and so much else of America.

One who deals with mighty events needs this respite, or else the perspective is gone and everything seems so important and everybody so colossal.

Perhaps it is because so few of those of us who dwell and toil in cities leave them, as though on retreat, that humility has disappeared from our lives, particularly among our rulers. They strut their little stages, forgetting that as compared with one mountain peak, we are all pigmies in time and space.

(Copyright, 1950, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Only the Journal-American brings you George E. Sokolsky's brilliant critiques on world affairs. Enjoying them? Stay with them!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 104,811) (S 155,723)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
AUG 22 1950

10 Top Soloists, Ensembles Booked for Concert Season

Ten of the top soloists and ensembles now appearing on European and American concert stages will be featured in the 1950-51 Eastman Theater Concert Series A and B, Art hur M. See, executive director of the Rochester Civic Music Association, announced yesterday.

Highlighting the Artists' Series will be a concert presentation of Puccini's "La Boheme" with Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic, as musical director. It will be Leinsdorf's first appearance in this series and will also mark his return to the local scene in that role from which, as principal conductor of the Wagnerian wing of the Metropolitan Opera, he gained fame.

Featured with Leinsdorf in the same performance of "La Boheme," which he directed in the Summer series at Chicago's Grant Park, will be the original stars of that production, Rudolf Petrak as Rodofolo and Nancy Carr as Mimi.

Sang Bach Here

Petrak, who was last heard as tenor soloist with the Rochester Philharmonic in Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion," also has appeared with the Baltimore Symphony, Philadelphia La Scala Opera Company and the Pittsburgh Opera Company. Miss Carr, a young radio and concert stage star, who will be making her Rochester debut, is rapidly attaining national fame through her regular appearances on the "Chicago Theater of the Air."

In addition to such returning favorites as the Boston Symphony, Artur Rubinstein, the Ballet Theater, Joseph Szigeti and Marian Anderson, See announced that four artists and ensembles will appear before Eastman audiences for the first time. The Philharmonic Piano Quartet, a group of talented young artists whose wide range of music from the classic repertory to contemporary works has captivated audiences throughout the United States and Canada, will be heard on Nov. 10.

Spanish Troupe Booked

Ann Maria's Spanish Ballet, led by one of Spain's foremost dancers and widely acclaimed while on tour in Central and South America for its brilliant performance of its native flamenco dances, is coming on Dec. 6. Elena Nikoladi, the Greek contralto who won countless laurels in Europe as a star of the Vienna Opera, will appear on Oct. 12, and Tossy Spivakovsky, the young violinist who has been hailed as technically the equal of Paganini and Joachim, is scheduled to be heard on Feb. 23.

See also called attention to the fact that four of the 10 Series Concerts will be heard on nights other than Friday. The complete schedules for both series follow:

Series A

Elena Nikoladi, Thursday, Oct. 12.
Joseph Szigeti, Friday, Nov. 24.
La Boheme, Friday, Jan. 19.
Ballet Theater, Friday, Mar. 9.
Artur Rubinstein, Thursday, Mar. 29.

Series B

Boston Symphony, Thursday, Oct. 19.
Philharmonic Piano Quartet, Friday, Nov. 10.
Ana Maria's Spanish Ballet, Wednesday, Dec. 6.
Marian Anderson, Friday, Feb. 2.
Tossy Spivakovsky, Friday, Feb. 23.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,874)
This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 23 1950

Social

Alfred Weiss Completes Season at Tanglewood

Alfred Weiss, Eastside High School faculty member, has returned home recently after spending the Summer season at Tanglewood, scene of the Berkshire Musical Festival, in Massachusetts.

During his six weeks stay at Tanglewood, Mr. Weiss was assigned as the librettist for Jacques Ibet's opera, "Le Roi D'Yvetot", The King of Yvetot, which had its American premiere at the festival. He also had a speaking role as one of the four elders in the presentation of "The King."

The translation of Moussourghsky's "Songs and Dances of Death" and the writing of program notes also were part of Mr. Weiss's work at Tanglewood.

Mr. Weiss reported that the most thrilling experience at Tanglewood was his association with some of the world's most famous artists. He was directly affiliated with Ibet while doing the opera translation and wrote under the supervision of Dr. John Popper, acting head of the opera department at Tanglewood.

Admission to Tanglewood as an active participant demands not only talent, but the ability to apply oneself laboriously to one's assignment. Difficult to obtain, entrance to the workshop is gained only after the applicant has had samples of his material accepted by a board of review and is interviewed by experts in his particular field. Participants are restricted to approximately 395, and this year's group represented 40 States and many foreign nations.

Weiss' work samples were reviewed by Arnold Sungaard, advisor to the librettists, and he was interviewed by Boris Godovsky, radio program director for the Metropolitan Opera Company.

During his six-weeks' stay at the seat of the famous festival Weiss met three Paterson teachers who attended programs there including Harry Levin, Fred Coyle and Ethel Berman. He also reported that one of the administrators of the festival is Miss Gloria Gray, a former Patersonian.

Weiss, who resides with his sister, Mrs. Carl Berkowitz, 295 E. 28th St., is a graduate of New York City College, where he received his B.A. in liberal arts, and Columbia University, where he received an M.A. in English. Born in New York City, he has resided locally for the past five years. His major interests are theater, creative English, ballet and music.

[12]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 985,523) (S 1,644,847)
This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL. TRIBUNE
AUG 27 1950

Tanglewood Is the Model Music Fete

By Seymour Raven

While yearning for a music festival in fact as well as in name the least we can do is look around us to see how it is being done by those who have wanted one badly enough to make one. The model continues to be the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood largely because of the enlightened leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, but also because significant groups of Musicians, students, and supporters have learned that the only glad hand worth getting is in the waving motion of a great director, the only lip service to be tolerated is the kind that plays clarinets and French horns, and that the only advertising needed is the kind that makes itself out of accomplishment, not proclamations.

In its summer season just ended, the Berkshire festival—if you like to look first at dollars and attendance—drew more than $240,000 to its box office, representing the spending of almost 179,000 customers. This does not include the 50,000 or so who gained admittance to the separate students' concerts as donors—"Friends of the Berkshire Music Center" they are called.

• • •

The big attraction, of course, is the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Mr. Koussevitzky and guest conductors on the podium. But it is not the only draw. There are smaller scale concerts, chamber music programs, recitals, and operatic presentations. Some of these are staged as fully professional offerings; others are part of student activity.

Students are numerous and active. There were 395 of them at the center this year, streaming in from 37 states and 15 foreign countries. Of these, 156 had scholarships. It is worth a chuckle to those who do not swoon at the sight of a cap and gown to learn that "accreditation," that element in education which is supposed to "open doors," rates something like a yawn at the Berkshire center. Surely accreditation and diplomas have their value, but where first things are truly first the prior consideration continues to be education. That has it, and in a new experience, which is an initiation, it earns its own way. They brought Jacques Ibert from France this summer to be their composer in residence. It was his first American visit and they honored him with the production of his opera "Le Roi d'Yvetot."

But Tanglewood also staged "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," Lukas Foss' comic opera by way of Mark Twain. Who is Mr. Foss? Living in Chicago you might have scant way of knowing. Born in 1922, he was the youngest composer ever to have won the Guggenheim fellowship, and gained a Prix de Rome besides. Mr. Foss now is on the Berkshire faculty. His orchestral music has been performed by Fritz Reiner, Pierre Monteux, Artur Rodzinski and Mr. Koussevitzky, four conductors who are quite unlike each other in many respects but at the very top in public choice.

• • •

Mr. Foss must have something of what it takes, and thus you find him and his music at Tanglewood. But not to the exclusion of Bach or Mozart, or other great composers of earlier eras.

Of Bach alone the Berkshire festival performed six Brandenburg concertos, four suites, six other concertos for various instrumental groupings, eight cantatas, a whole string of organ works, several piano pieces, The Art of the Fugue arranged for string quartet, four partitas and three sonatas for violin, miscellaneous vocal music, AND lectures on Bach by Arthur Mendel, Hans David, and Julius Herford.

Serge Koussevitzky

• • •

Mozart, Beethoven, Debussy, Bruckner, Berlioz—these and many more of the established repertory while the newest composers get their hearings, too. The list cannot be complete in this article, nor can a full description of the activities be undertaken. The file of one season's activities is several inches thick—for even many of the "press handouts" make good reading.

This, you see, is indeed a festival in fact. It has a great director, but more. It has a great professional orchestra, but much more. It has a flourishing school, but much beyond this. It has a comprehensive repertory, but still more. It has scores of thousands of patrons. But beyond this it has countless thousands all over America who hope and plan for their first opportunity to visit Tanglewood and hear its music. THAT is what you call a festival.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 216,147) (S 349,956)
This Clipping From
DENVER, COLO. POST
AUG 22 1950

'These Days,' by George E. Sokolsky

Respite in the Hills Restores Perspective on Life

SOMETIMES, I am asked why I like to wander away from great topics in the news to the simplicities of life in the Berkshires, where the pine and maple blend with oak, birch and wild cherry to make an atmosphere.

Sokolsky.

Reporters, like motion picture actors, are typed in the minds of readers. If a peep-hole columnist writes a serious thought, he is sometimes charged with stepping out of his role. If what Pegler calls a double-dome wanders into the bypaths of human interest, he is accused sometimes of deserting his post.

Life is not a mosaic of big events, which look little, almost microscopic, in history, nor is it the tale of great men who, for a moment only, bestride the pages of newspapers to disappear forever in their obituary columns. To popularize a vice president for a few seconds of eternity, they call him a veep, but most of our vice presidents, no matter what their ponderosity, are forgotten even in their own generation.

Historic life is a continuous story of a whole people, of simple people as well as those who clamor in the spotlight often of their own devising. I feel that so strongly each summer as I work in these Berkshire hills, reading the books, pamphlets and monographs that have accumulated over the season when perhaps the legs move more often than the mind.

•

AND here, too, there has been the leisure, in the midst of a war, to listen to an enormous quantity of Bach, done as only Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony can do it at Tanglewood. It is so difficult to listen to music in a hall, in a big city, after having heard Bach's B minor mass, with a chorus trained by Hugh Ross, at Tanglewood. The mountains do something to the music, and listening without pressure and leaving the place, without street noises and street smells, gives the listener a chance to recall and remember not only the music but his emotional responses.

Up here, the folks are simple, too. The other day, my friend, Edward S. Rogers, died at the age of 86. He had, for decades, been the treasurer of the Mutual Savings bank in Lee. He did not change the world nor leave his impress on the map of nations, but he helped folks when they could not meet their mortgages or when they had to send a better-than-ordinary child to school, or when the husband died and the widow knew nothing about handling her small savings. That was his job in life and he developed a personality to meet his social responsibilities.

In this very small town, he was a very big man, but that hardly mattered. For his was one of those prodigious memories that knew not about literature and history but the very essence of our culture. He could recite most of the best poetry and I have often suspected that some that he quoted to make a point was of his own composition. He was more than acquainted with Beethoven, Brahms, Bach and Mozart. He was one of the founders of Tanglewood.

•

HE also could recount the genealogy and history of every family in these parts and trusted men by their character rather than by a bank statement. Big city bankers can hardly do that these days, because bank examiners know nothing about character but only read reports. Yet, many a man who failed, and therefore needed help, eventually contributed brilliantly: I cite Thomas Edison as one example.

So Edward Rogers is dead and a new generation steps in with adding machines and even mechanical brains to aid them, but with less of the softness, gentleness and, at the same time, tough common sense that produced the old New England that, it seems centuries ago, built Ohio and Michigan and so much else of America.

One who deals with mighty events needs this respite, or else the perspective is gone and everything seems so important and everybody so colossal. Perhaps it is because so few of those of us who dwell and toil in cities leave them, as though on retreat, that humility has disappeared from our lives, particularly among our rulers. They strut their little stages, forgetting that as compared with one mountain peak we are all pigmies in time and space.

Copyright, 1950, King Features Synd., Inc.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,080) (S 23,192)
This Clipping From
OGDEN, UTAH STANDARD-EXAMINER
AUG 23 1950

Strange Behavior

Serge Prokofieff, Russian composer, was applauded by Americans this month, along with Mrs. Elinor Roosevelt and the Boston Symphony orchestra, the occasion being a gala performance of the Russian's "Peter and the Wolf" story for narrator and orchestra, Mrs. Roosevelt being the story teller.

It now appears that at the very moment Americans were saying what a charming composer Prokofieff was, the Russian music writer was announcing that he had written a new oratorio, "On Guard of Peace," eulogizing Soviet peace efforts and "depicting the sinister, evil voices of the warmongers and Wall Street merchants on their way to Korea."

If Prokofieff made the statement about Russian peace yearnings and Wall Street warmongers without promptings, the utterance adds up to peculiar behavior for an artist of Prokofieff's stature. If he was required by the kremlin to make the statement, that order amounts to ugly behavior by a government toward an artist, but the action would not be unusual in a communist regime where science as well as art are now in the realm of politics.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 404,513) (S 793,062)
This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL. TIMES
AUG 27 1950

Orchestra Invites Two

Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux, both former conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been invited by Charles Munch the present conductor, to conduct concerts in Boston and other cities next season while he is on a midyear vacation. Munch will return to this country to open the orchestra's 70th season on Oct. 6.

According to announcement by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the organization will lose an expected $165,000 of additional income which would have been the result of tax exemption—the proposed Federal measure ruled out by the war emergency. Cabot states the orchestra is without funds to meet its deficits.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 238,914) (S 176,041)
This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 23 1950

Versatile Singer

Manfred Hecht, Newark Cantor, Doubles in Ope
Preparing Town Hall Recital

BY DAVID STEINBERG

New Jersey music lovers, making the Summer pilgrimage to the final week of Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, [illegible]side Lenox, Mass., were rewarded with the premiere American performance of Jacques Ibert's opera, "The King of Yvetot," with the composer conducting. Some may have recognized the big barytone who sang the title role effectively. He was Manfred Hecht, cantor of Temple B'nai Jeshurun in Newark who was featured in "Bittersweet" and "New Moon" at the Paper Mill Playhouse in 1946. He sang at last year's combined Thanksgiving Day services in Newark and has been heard elsewhere in concerts.

"The King of Yvetot" was the second opera premiered at Tanglewood in which Hecht was prominent. At Boris Goldovsky's invitation last Summer he created the role of Sid in Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring," offered for the first time in America. He repeated the role for the New England Opera Theater Company's production of the work at the Boston Opera House. Another premiere in which Hecht figured prominently was the Television Opera Theater version of "La Traviata," broadcast over CBS.

Because of his success in the Britten work, Hecht was invited to participate in the Ibert opera. "Goldovsky asked me to sing 'Yvetot,'" the black-haired singer told us the other day. "He spoke to me about it last April. It was a thrill for me to sing the opera with Ibert conducting."

Cantor in '48

Hecht, who became cantor at B'nai Jeshurun in 1948, 10 years after arriving in this country from his native Vienna, had originally studied to be a physician. His mother, Ada Hecht, was a well-known soprano, saw to it that he combined musical education with his medical studies. When he entered medical school, after graduation from high school, he continued his vocal studies extra-curricularly.

"Most of my important voice training was obtained in America," Hecht pointed out. "When I came here in 1938 I concentrated on acquiring a repertoire for concert and opera."

Instead of concert and opera, he was signed for the Broadway show, 'Lady in the Dark," in 1940. He continued studying opera during the run of the show and gave his first full-length concert recital at Friendship House in New York in 1941.

In 'Follies'

Then came other engagements—soloist with the New York City Symphony; leads in Pergolese's "La Serva Padrona," and Hindemith's "Hin Und Zurueck" at the Adirondacks Music Festival; a Fall engagement with the New Opera Company, and back to Broadway again in the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1943," which starred Milton Berle.

In the Army, Hecht served in the Intelligence Department but found time to sing in 300 bond shows. Discharged in 1945, he resumed his interrupted career. The Cuban composer Ernesto Lecnona arranged for Hecht to sing on the sound track of the movie "Carnival in Costa Rica." His engagement at the Paper Mill was interrupted when he had to fly to New Orleans to appear as soloist with the New Orleans Summer Symphony.

MANFRED HECHT

After further study at the American Theater Wing, he made his debut with the New York City Opera Company in "Salome," and followed that with concert appearances at Carnegie Hall, Town Hall, the Brooklyn Museum, toured in "My Romance," sang the buffo lead in Strauss's "Gypsy Baron" and the dramatic lead in D'Albert's "Tiefland," staged by Opera '48, which he helped organize.

Right now, he's preparing for a recital at Town Hall October 8. "My program," he said, "will include contemporary selections by Norman Dello Joio and Max Helfman of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark as well as 16th Century songs. But remember," he cautioned, "I'm still cantor at B'nai Jeshurun and I never allow my concert or opera engagements to interfere with my cantorial duties."

NEWARK

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
PRESS
AUG 24 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt: My Day—

Order of Eagles Ceremony

On Sunday I went over to assist at a ceremony which the Fraternal Order of Eagles observe. They hold an annual ceremony on the Sunday nearest to the date of the signing of the Social Security Bill, in the grounds of the memorial to my husband.

I had not known before that this organization had been particularly active in backing the Social Security Bill or that my husband had presented them with the pen with which he signed the bill when it became a law.

After the first ceremony out on the lawn we went to the rose garden and they laid a wreath on the grave. I then returned to my guests who were keeping an eye on all the children in the swimming pool—our usual Sunday afternoon occupation.

* * *

WE HAD the pleasure of seeing once more Mr. and Mrs. Roberto Fontaina of Uruguay who are soon returning to their own country. I shall miss my contact with Mr. Fontaina in the United Nations for he was always a delightful colleague with whom to work. We all enjoyed having him here with his wife and little boy for a final picnic. I hope they will often return as visitors as he tells me he is giving up official life.

If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which you will enjoy too, read "Noah and His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much—"An Eye for Music" by the artist Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her. It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the [illegible]ings I like best is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearing. The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all." Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

NOW THAT I am successfully through my one performance of reading with the orchestra I can say that I wish I were a part of this book or some future book, but I quite realize I am too much of an amateur to claim a place among the artists whom Mrs. Humphrey sketches with her pencil and in her words.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself. They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

I could judge by looking beyond the particulars of the Tanglewood production, is a bright and blithe little work of the kind that keeps the Opera-Comique going when it has nothing more ponderable on its mind. For the most part, Ibert is not gifted with winged inspiration. But he can write tunes that sing and dance—the Napoleonic folk ballad entitled "Le Roi d'Yvetot" figures importantly, along with the composer's own melodies—and he can make something clear and sonorous of an ensemble of soloists and chorus. At its best, his orchestration is ravishing, and it is always cleanly scored and nicely related to the volume and texture of the vocal parts. Ibert also commands the craft of keeping a musical stage piece alive by well-planned shifts in pace, dynamics and density. He knows his business, and "Le Roi d'Yvetot," properly done, should be fun for everybody.

The opera was staged in token of Ibert's presence at the Berkshire Music Center as a visiting instructor in composition. I am sure his influence upon the younger generation of get-famous-quick composers has been salutary. He is an admirable representative of the central tradition of French musicianship, which demands thorough technical competence in every nook and cranny of the musical profession. In the view of this tradition, a lack of novelty can be forgiven in a composer, but not a deficiency in journeyman skills.

The students at Tanglewood to whom the full exigencies of the composer's vocation have been revealed—at least by example—by Ibert this summer and by Olivier Messiaen and Darius Milhaud in other years, should have learned the most important preliminary lesson of all. Those who have merely turned into sophisticated Francophiles probably were never worth bothering about anyway.

CECIL SMITH

MOVIES:

[123]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 238,914) (S 178,041)
This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 23 1950

Versatile Singer

Manfred Hecht, Newark Cantor, Doubles in Opera Preparing Town Hall Recital

BY DAVID STEINBERG

New Jersey music lovers, making the Summer pilgrimage to the final week of Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, outside Lenox, Mass., were rewarded with the premiere American performance of Jacques Ibert's opera, "The King of Yvetot," with the composer conducting. Some may have recognized the big barytone who sang the title role effectively. He was Manfred Hecht, cantor of Temple B'nai Jeshurun in Newark who was featured in "Bittersweet" and "New Moon" at the Paper Mill Playhouse in 1946. He sang at last year's combined Thanksgiving Day services in Newark and has been heard elsewhere in concerts.

"The King of Yvetot" was the second opera premiered at Tanglewood in which Hecht was prominent. At Boris Goldovsky's invitation last Summer he created the role of Sid in Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring," offered for the first time in America. He repeated the role for the New England Opera Theater Company's production of the work at the Boston Opera House. Another premiere in which Hecht figured prominently was the Television Opera Theater version of "La Traviata," broadcast over CBS.

Because of his success in the Britten work, Hecht was invited to participate in the Ibert opera. "Goldovsky asked me to sing 'Yvetot,'" the black-haired singer told us the other day. "He spoke to me about it last April. It was a thrill for me to sing the opera with Ibert conducting."

Cantor in '48

Hecht, who became cantor at B'nai Jeshurun in 1948, 10 years after arriving in this country from his native Vienna, had originally studied to be a physician. His mother, Ada Hecht, was a well-known soprano, saw to it that he combined musical education with his medical studies. When he entered medical school, after graduation from high school, he continued his vocal studies extra-curricularly.

"Most of my important voice training was obtained in America," Hecht pointed out. "When I came here in 1938 I concentrated on acquiring a repertoire for concert and opera."

Instead of concert and opera, he was signed for the Broadway show, 'Lady in the Dark," in 1940. He continued studying opera during the run of the show and gave his first full-length concert recital at Friendship House in New York in 1941.

In 'Follies'

Then came other engagements—soloist with the New York City Symphony; leads in Pergolese's "La Serva Padrona," and Hindemith's "Hin Und Zurueck" at the Adirondacks Music Festival; a Fall engagement with the New Opera Company, and back to Broadway again in the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1943," which starred Milton Berle.

In the Army, Hecht served in the Intelligence Department but found time to sing in 300 bond shows. Discharged in 1945, he resumed his interrupted career. The Cuban composer Ernesto Lecuona arranged for Hecht to sing on the sound track of the movie "Carnival in Costa Rica." His engagement at the Paper Mill was interrupted when he had to fly to New Orleans to appear as soloist with the New Orleans Summer Symphony.

MANFRED HECHT

After further study at the American Theater Wing, he made his debut with the New York City Opera Company in "Salome," and followed that with concert appearances at Carnegie Hall, Town Hall, the Brooklyn Museum, toured in "My Romance," sang the buffo lead in Strauss's "Gypsy Baron" and the dramatic lead in D'Albert's "Tiefland," staged by Opera '48, which he helped organize.

Right now, he's preparing for a recital at Town Hall October 8. "My program," he said, "will include contemporary selections by Norman Dello Joio and Max Helfman of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark as well as 16th Century songs. But remember," he cautioned, "I'm still cantor at B'nai Jeshurun and I never allow my concert or opera engagements to interfere with my cantorial duties."

NEWARK

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
PRESS
AUG 24 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt: My Day—

Order of Eagles Ceremony

On Sunday I went over to assist at a ceremony which the Fraternal Order of Eagles observe. They hold an annual ceremony on the Sunday nearest to the date of the signing of the Social Security Bill, in the grounds of the memorial to my husband.

I had not known before that this organization had been particularly active in backing the Social Security Bill or that my husband had presented them with the pen with which he signed the bill when it became a law.

After the first ceremony out on the lawn we went to the rose garden and they laid a wreath on the grave. I then returned to my guests who were keeping an eye on all the children in the swimming pool—our usual Sunday afternoon occupation.

* * *

WE HAD the pleasure of seeing once more Mr. and Mrs. Roberto Fontaina of Uruguay who are soon returning to their own country. I shall miss my contact with Mr. Fontaina in the United Nations for he was always a delightful colleague with whom to work. We all enjoyed having him here with his wife and little boy for a final picnic. I hope they will often return as visitors as he tells me he is giving up official life.

If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which you will enjoy too, read "Noah and His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much—"An Eye for Music" by the artist Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her. It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the drawings I like best is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearing. The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all." Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

NOW THAT I am successfully through my one performance of reading with the orchestra I can say that I wish I were a part of this book or some future book, but I quite realize I am too much of an amateur to claim a place among the artists whom Mrs. Humphrey sketches with her pencil and in her words.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself. They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

I could judge by looking beyond the particulars of the Tanglewood production, is a bright and blithe little work of the kind that keeps the Opera-Comique going when it has nothing more ponderable on its mind. For the most part, Ibert is not gifted with winged inspiration. But he can write tunes that sing and dance—the Napoleonic folk ballad entitled "Le Roi d'Yvetot" figures importantly, along with the composer's own melodies—and he can make something clear and sonorous of an ensemble of soloists and chorus. At its best, his orchestration is ravishing, and it is always cleanly scored and nicely related to the volume and texture of the vocal parts. Ibert also commands the craft of keeping a musical stage piece alive by well-planned shifts in pace, dynamics and density. He knows his business, and "Le Roi d'Yvetot," properly done, should be fun for everybody.

The opera was staged in token of Ibert's presence at the Berkshire Music Center as a visiting instructor in composition. I am sure his influence upon the younger generation of get-famous-quick composers has been salutary. He is an admirable representative of the central tradition of French musicianship, which demands thorough technical competence in every nook and cranny of the musical profession. In the view of this tradition, a lack of novelty can be forgiven in a composer, but not a deficiency in journeyman skills.

The students at Tanglewood to whom the full exigencies of the composer's vocation have been revealed—at least by example—by Ibert this summer and by Olivier Messiaen and Darius Milhaud in other years, should have learned the most important preliminary lesson of all. Those who have merely turned into sophisticated Francophiles probably were never worth bothering about anyway.

CECIL SMITH

MOVIES:

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 238,914) (S 176,041)
This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 23 1950

Versatile Singer

Manfred Hecht, Newark Cantor, Doubles in Ope
Preparing Town Hall Recital

BY DAVID STEINBERG

New Jersey music lovers, making the Summer pilgrimage to the final week of Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, outside Lenox, Mass., were rewarded with the premiere American performance of Jacques Ibert's opera, "The King of Yvetot," with the composer conducting. Some may have recognized the big barytone who sang the title role effectively. He was Manfred Hecht, cantor of Temple B'nai Jeshurun in Newark who was featured in "Bittersweet" and "New Moon" at the Paper Mill Playhouse n 1946. He sang at last year's ombined Thanksgiving Day servces in Newark and has been heard lsewhere in concerts.

"The King of Yvetot" was the second opera premiered at Tanglewood in which Hecht was prominent. At Boris Goldovsky's invitation last Summer he created the role of Sid in Benjamin Britten's "Albert Herring," offered for the first time in America. He repeated the role for the New England Opera Theater Company's production of the work at the Boston Opera House. Another premiere in which Hecht figured prominently was the Television Opera Theater version of "La Traviata," broadcast over CBS.

Because of his success in the Britten work, Hecht was invited o participate in the Ibert opera. Goldovsky asked me to sing Yvetot,'" the black-haired singer old us the other day. "He spoke o, me about it last April. It was thrill for me to sing the opera with Ibert conducting."

Cantor in '48

Hecht, who became cantor at B'nai Jeshurun in 1948, 10 years fter arriving in this country from is native Vienna, had originally tudied to be a physician. His nother, Ada Hecht, was a well-known soprano, saw to it that he ombined musical education with is medical studies. When he entered medical school, after graduation from high school, he continued his vocal studies extra-curricularly.

"Most of my important voice training was obtained in America," Hecht pointed out. "When I came here in 1938 I concentrated on acquiring a repertoire for concert and opera."

Instead of concert and opera, he was signed for the Broadway show, 'Lady in the Dark," in 1940. He continued studying opera during the run of the show and gave his first full-length concert recital at Friendship House in New York in 1941.

In 'Follies'

Then came other engagements—soloist with the New York City Symphony; leads in Pergolese's "La Serva Padrona," and Hindemith's "Hin Und Zurueck" at the Adirondacks Music Festival; a Fall engagement with the New Opera Company, and back to Broadway again in the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1943," which starred Milton Berle.

In the Army, Hecht served in the Intelligence Department but found time to sing in 300 bond shows. Discharged in 1945, he resumed his interrupted career. The Cuban composer Ernesto Lecuona arranged for Hecht to sing on the sound track of the movie "Carnival in Costa Rica." His engagement at the Paper Mill was interrupted when he had to fly to New Orleans to appear as soloist with the New Orleans Summer Symphony.

MANFRED HECHT

After further study at the American Theater Wing, he made his debut with the New York City Opera Company in "Salome," and followed that with concert appearances at Carnegie Hall, Town Hall, the Brooklyn Museum, toured in "My Romance," sang the buffo lead in Strauss's "Gypsy Baron" and the dramatic lead in D'Albert's "Tiefland," staged by Opera '48, which he helped organize.

Right now, he's preparing for a recital at Town Hall October 8. "My program," he said, "will include contemporary selections by Norman Dello Joio and Max Helfman of Temple B'nai Abraham in Newark as well as 16th Century songs. But remember," he cautioned, "I'm still cantor at B'nai Jeshurun and I never allow my concert or opera engagements to interfere with my cantorial duties."

NEWARK

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
PRESS
AUG 24 1950

Eleanor Roosevelt: My Day—

Order of Eagles Ceremony

On Sunday I went over to assist at a ceremony which the Fraternal Order of Eagles observe. They hold an annual ceremony on the Sunday nearest to the date of the signing of the Social Security Bill, in the grounds of the memorial to my husband.

I had not known before that this organization had been particularly active in backing the Social Security Bill or that my husband had presented them with the pen with which he signed the bill when it became a law.

After the first ceremony out on the lawn we went to the rose garden and they laid a wreath on the grave. I then returned to my guests who were keeping an eye on all the children in the swimming pool—our usual Sunday afternoon occupation.

* * *

WE HAD the pleasure of seeing once more Mr. and Mrs. Roberto Fontaina of Uruguay who are soon returning to their own country. I shall miss my contact with Mr. Fontaina in the United Nations for he was always a delightful colleague with whom to work. We all enjoyed having him here with his wife and little boy for a final picnic. I hope they will often return as visitors as he tells me he is giving up official life.

If, on these summer days, you want a book which will entertain your children of various ages and one which you will enjoy too, read "Noah and His Ark" by George Holt. I think the drawings will amuse you as much as the story itself. The animals are a joy though they do not always behave as you might expect.

When I was up at Tanglewood I was given another book which I enjoyed very much—"An Eye for Music" by the artist Martha Burnham Humphrey. Both the drawings and text are by her. It is a story of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. One of the drawings I like best is that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky rehearing. The author has certainly paid Dr. Koussevitsky a delightful tribute at the end: "By thy art, thou called forth concourses of sweet sound to succor those whose life's aim is to comfort and to cure; and so do we, humble disciples of the healing art, acclaim thee as master of us all." Much of the book, of course, contains sketches of people who have played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

NOW THAT I am successfully through my one performance of reading with the orchestra I can say that I wish I were a part of this book or some future book, but I quite realize I am too much of an amateur to claim a place among the artists whom Mrs. Humphrey sketches with her pencil and in her words.

Dr. Koussevitsky was so kind to me that I really enjoyed every minute of my day in Tanglewood. I had been terrified beforehand but he guided me so well and was so patient when I made mistakes that I got through the whole performance with a heart full of gratitude to both the leader of the orchestra and the orchestra itself. They must have been worn and weary because they first consented to rehearse and record and then had an evening performance which they played magnificently.

Lenin's error, Johnson writes, was the historical equivalent of Alexander's drunkenness. So, he might have added, is our own; and now the horrors are upon us. Johnson's book is in part the story of what brought them on, and in part an account of the developing political wisdom with which Americans may fight them off.

Shrewdly and wittily told, it is a story which he unfolds as a synoptic view of these 50 years as reflected in the four giants, Wilson, Lenin, Roosevelt and Stalin, some of whose doings Johnson has chosen to inspect. As one reads these pages against the current headlines and their threat of things to come, one becomes aware of a frightening gap—not in the telling, but in the tale itself: Americans have never had a really tough time of it, in sharp and willing sacrifice in the face of sustained and present danger. With such a time now near, the average American seems instead preoccupied with 50 pounds of Los Angeles, failed to pace the music with enough spirit, and kept his nose buried in the score so continually that he could not give much help or stimulus to the people on the stage.

The singers had been properly coached to reproduce the correct notes, but they delivered the English translation with appalling care to be intelligible, and as a result the lyric flow of the very pretty music was obstructed. The translator, Henry Reese, vacillated between filling out trite rhyme patterns and endeavoring to limber up the diction with coarse touches of Americanese. Except in the orchestra pit, where a student orchestra inferior to those in other years nevertheless struggled honorably to measure up to the presumptions of the vivid instrumentation, little that happened bore much relation to the work Ibert conceived. Out in the audience, Ibert, wearing a beret and a short raincoat, sought to look happy as he sat the evening out with Serge Koussevitzky, under whose administration the miscarriage of operatic justice took place.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-6860
Cir. (D $4,383)
This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
SEP 2 - 1950

CANADIAN IN TANGLEWOOD: Fernand Martel holds a score of Jacques Ibert's Le Roi d'Yvetot, while the composer (back centre) looks over his shoulder. Mr. Martel is the young Canadian baritone who was especially chosen by Serge Koussevitsky for the North American premiere of Ibert's opera at the Berkshire Festival this summer. Ibert is one of the most distinguished contemporary French composers and Le Roi d'Yvetot was the featured opera at Tanglewood following the productions of Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes and Albert Herring. Others in the picture are (left to right) Gaston Allaire, organist in Holyoke, Mass., Claude Letourneau, violonist and conductor from Quebec City, and Fernand Graton, conductor of the Montreal Youth Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Martel's next local appearance will be with the Minute Opera Company in Menotti's The Old Maid and the Thief. He was last starred here in Milhaud's Poor Sailor.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (20,781)
This Clipping From
NEW REPUBLIC
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 4 - 1950

MUSIC: Made in France

Virgil Thomson, in the New York Herald Tribune, has often complained of the neglect of French lyric drama in this country. The literature of the last hundred years at the Opera and the Opera-Comique should be made familiar here, he maintains, because it illustrates forcefully the equal partnership of music and drama which is the present aim of Gian-Carlo Menotti, Thomson himself, and other composers for the American opera-theatre.

If he had heard "Le Roi d'Yvetot" at Tanglewood, Thomson would have realized how stubbornly the very qualities that make French opera perfect for its own audience resist transmutation into the terms of another language and culture. The satiric edge of the libretto, a jeu d'esprit about politics and revolution laid in the fourteenth-century principality of Yvetot, was hopelessly dulled. References to legend and parallels with history went over the heads of the audience; the English words substituted slapstick for wit; and the actors indulged desperately in horseplay in an effort to make the story funny on the surface, since they could not get to the heart of it.

"Le Roi d'Yvetot" itself, as far as

THE FIRST American performance of Jacques Ibert's opera comique, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," given at Tanglewood early in August by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, served mainly to demonstrate the near impossibility of transplanting the French lyric stage to the United States. Nobody connected with the production understood much of the style and spirit of the opera, or the tradition of theatre music to which it belongs.

The stage director (in the sabbatical absence of Boris Goldovsky), F. Cowles Strickland of the Stanford University faculty, treated the ensembles—of which "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is largely composed—much as though he planned to send photographs of the production to the annual Tributary Theatre issue of the old Theatre Arts magazine. He tried to dress up the stage without, seemingly, having read the libretto carefully enough to find out what the lines and action meant. The conductor, Jan Popper of the University of California at

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 54,383)
This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
SEP 2 - 1950

CANADIAN IN TANGLEWOOD: Fernand Martel holds a score of Jacques Ibert's Le Roi d'Yvetot, while the composer (back centre) looks over his shoulder. Mr. Martel is the young Canadian baritone who was especially chosen by Serge Koussevitsky for the North American premiere of Ibert's opera at the Berkshire Festival this summer. Ibert is one of the most distinguished contemporary French composers and Le Roi d'Yvetot was the featured opera at Tanglewood following the productions of Benjamin Britten's Peter Grimes and Albert Herring. Others in the picture are (left to right) Gaston Allaire, organist in Holyoke, Mass., Claude Letourneau, violonist and conductor from Quebec City, and Fernand Graton, conductor of the Montreal Youth Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Martel's next local appearance will be with the Minute Opera Company in Menotti's The Old Maid and the Thief. He was last starred here in Milhaud's Poor Sailor.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (28,781)
This Clipping From
NEW REPUBLIC
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 4 - 1950

MUSIC: Made in France

THE FIRST American performance of Jacques Ibert's opera comique, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," given at Tanglewood early in August by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, served mainly to demonstrate the near impossibility of transplanting the French lyric stage to the United States. Nobody connected with the production understood much of the style and spirit of the opera, or the tradition of theatre music to which it belongs.

The stage director (in the sabbatical absence of Boris Goldovsky), F. Cowles Strickland of the Stanford University faculty, treated the ensembles—of which "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is largely composed—much as though he planned to send photographs of the production to the annual Tributary Theatre issue of the old Theatre Arts magazine. He tried to dress up the stage without, seemingly, having read the libretto carefully enough to find out what the lines and action meant. The conductor, Jan Popper of the University of California at

Virgil Thomson, in the New York Herald Tribune, has often complained of the neglect of French lyric drama in this country. The literature of the last hundred years at the Opera and the Opera-Comique should be made familiar here, he maintains, because it illustrates forcefully the equal partnership of music and drama which is the present aim of Gian-Carlo Menotti, Thomson himself, and other composers for the American opera-theatre.

If he had heard "Le Roi d'Yvetot" at Tanglewood, Thomson would have realized how stubbornly the very qualities that make French opera perfect for its own audience resist transmutation into the terms of another language and culture. The satiric edge of the libretto, a jeu d'esprit about politics and revolution laid in the fourteenth-century principality of Yvetot, was hopelessly dulled. References to legend and parallels with history went over the heads of the audience; the English words substituted slapstick for wit; and the actors indulged desperately in horseplay in an effort to make the story funny on the surface, since they could not get to the heart of it.

"Le Roi d'Yvetot" itself, as far as

GUNNAR LEISTIKOW
248 WEST 10TH STREET
NEW YORK 14, N. Y.

Musikalske festspill i Amerika

For dem som liker å legge seg ned når de hører musikk, og som alltid har syntes at konsertsalene burde utstyres med divaner til dette bruk, er dette her det helt riktige. Det bare forhøyer nytelsen av Brandenburgerkonsertene eller Mozarts Jupiter-symfoni samtidig å se de høye almetrærsgrener og blader svaie i vinden. Eller plutselig å få uventet visitt av en chipmonk, et av de diminutive amerikanske ekorn med lang, hvit stripe ned over ryggen. Her er de nesten tamme, tydelig innstilt på at mennesker som hører musikk ikke kan bevege seg og derfor er helt ufarlige for små, vimsete gnagere.

Her: det er plassen utenfor konserthuset i Tanglewood. Den er laget for dette, den er velholdt og nystelt, og konserthusets dører står vidt åpne, så ikke bare festspillenes stamgjester på de dyrt reserverte plasser inne i salen, men også de 5—6000 ganske alminnelige mennesker som leirer seg utenfor, kan høre.

A oppføre symfonikonserter i det grønne, i forbindelse med noe som nærmest kan kalles friluftskonservatorium, det var en ønskedrøm som Serge Koussevitzky allerede hadde før første verdenskrig, da han som ung dirigent reiste med sitt symfoniorkester rundt i hele tsarens Russland. Men det måtte ganske spesielle forutsetninger til før han kunne tenke på å virkeliggjøre sitt ønske.

Det gikk 20 år før sjansen bød seg. Og det var ikke i Kuossevitzkys hjemland, men i Amerika at han fant de nødvendige økonomiske, sosiale og klimatiske forutsetninger.

Festspill om sommeren er ikke noe nytt i Amerika. I mer enn én generasjon har sommerteatrene vært et fast begrep i USA. Det alminnelige teater er fortrengt av kinoene i nesten alle andre byer enn New York. Men om sommeren feirer dramaets muse sin oppstandelse. Hva grunnen enn kan være, landliggerlivet ser ut til å gjenopplive amerikanernes interesse for teatret. Over hele landet kan en om sommeren, selv på de minste steder, finne teatre, ofte av en forbausende høy kvalitet. Det er teatre som ikke eksisterer om vinteren, og en finner dem ofte i en tilfeldig foreningssal eller i en låve.

Det er bilene som har gjort denne sesongmessige renessanse av teaterlivet mulig. Sommerteatrene henvender seg ikke bare til sommergjestene på stedet, men til et publikum i 2—3 mils omkrets. Alle har bil, og landliggerne kjører gjerne en tur om kvelden. Men amerikanerne skal alltid ha et bestemt mål for ferden. Bare en tur i det grønne appellerer ikke til deres sans for det benektsmessige. Men en tur i teatret går en ikke av veien for å forbinde med ét par timers bilkjøring. En stor parkeringsplass ved siden av teatret er derfor det direktøren for et amerikansk sommerteater først sørger for.

Men når folk gidder å kjøre en viss distanse for å se en teaterforestilling — som kanskje bare er et uttrykk for noen lokale amatørers kunstneriske aspirasjoner, — skulle de så ikke gidde kjøre kanskje et betydelig stykke lenger for å høre et så berømt orkester som Boston symfoniorkester? Især i Ny-England, hvor de gamle sær-

Fra V. G.s korrespondent
Gunnar Leistikow

verdige universiteter som Harvard og Yale opprettholder et visst kulturnivå, og hvor folk er stolte over landsdelens tradisjoner, skulle det være muligheter.

Bostonorkesterets dirigent, Serge Koussevitzky, kunne ikke få tanken ut av hodet. Men det var mange praktiske vanskeligheter. Man trengte et større areal i landlige omgivelser ikke alt for langt borte fra Boston og New York. Man måtte oppføre de nødven-dige bygninger osv. osv. Og til alt dette trengtes penger, så mange at det måtte volde hodebry selv for lederen av et av Amerikas mest ansette orkestre.

Dirigenten Serge Koussevitzky, festspillenes kunstneriske leder.

Da kom tilfellet ham til hjelp. Det var andre som hadde hatt liknende ideer. Sommeren 1934 var 65 musikere fra New Yorks filharmoniske orkester blitt engasjert til å spille på en privat eiendom i nærheten av Stockbridge, en liten by i de vidunderlig vakre Berkshirefjell vest i Massachusetts. Det ble stor suksess. Over 6000 mennesker overvar 3 konserter, og om høsten ble et selskap registrert under navnet «Berkshire Symphonic Festival».

Følgende år spilte samme selskap igjen. Men året etter vågde man mer, man inviterte selveste Boston symfoniorkester til Berkshire-festspillene.

Koussevitzky nølte ikke med å slå til. Endelig skulle hans gamle drøm bli til virkelighet! Denne gang kom det 15 000 til hans 3 konserter.

Det var en suksess som fikk vidtrekkende følger. Om vinteren samme år, 1936, fikk Bostonorkesteret 86 hektar jord i gave fra 2 rike amerikanske damer, Mrs. Gorham Brooks og Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. En innsamling blant interesserte innbrakte 80 000 dollar til bygging av et konserthus etter tegning av den finske arkitekt Eliel Saarinen. Bygningen ble oppført tidsnok ferdig til festspillene året etter, og den har noen forbløffende enkeltheter som forbedrer akustikken.

Tanglewood — som stedet heter — blir så langt som mulig bevart som før, med kjempemessige ahorns-alleer, utstrakte gressplener og hekker rundt terrassene som har vidunderlig utsikt over sjø og fjell. Hovedbygningen ble for 100 år siden oppført av familien Tappan på et sted som hadde vært leirplass for mohikanerne. Den er nå innredet til kontorbygning. Rundt huset, omkring i hjørner av fruktlhagen og andre skjulte steder, er det bygd øverom og mindre trehus for kammermusikk.

Nå var alt klart til å realisere Koussevitzkys kjærkomne tanke, og sommeren 1940 ble friluftskonservatoriet åpnet. Det var 2 elev-symfoniorkestre, og en gruppe dirigentelever som Koussevitzky hadde valt ut og undervist selv. Det var et festspillkor, en operaskole og kursus i komponering og kordireksjon. Året etter kom en avdeling for kammermusikk til. Den var ledet av Gregor Piatigorsky.

Alt ettersom det faller en inn, kan en stå, sitte eller ligge når en lytter til konsertene i Tanglewood.

Elevene strømmet til fra hele verden, og mange måtte avvises fordi det ikke var plass. Da Amerika kom med i krigen lukket skolen. I juli 1946 ble den åpnet igjen. Nå er der bortimot 500 elever fra 16 forskjellige land. Men en kan heller ikke tenke seg mer inspirerende omgivelser til kunstnerisk utfoldelse enn Berkshirefjellenes smilende skjønnhet.

Mesteparten av undervisningen i friluftskonservatoriet i Tanglewood foregår på gressplenene.

Traveler, July 11

[125]

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SEP 29 1950

FESTIVAL END BRINGS SLUMP TO TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Promoters Cast About For Ways to Extend Short Season

Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 23—(AP)—The Berkshire summer season, which used to extend from July 4 to Labor Day, now is lopped off in early August by the very bonanza that put it in the $15,000,000 class.

The closing of Tanglewood after the second weekend of August nearly prostrates the resort season here at a time when Cape Cod, still knee-deep in tourists, is gleefully laying snares for the late-September trade.

Seek New Means

Now Berkshire promoters are casting about for means to plug the entertainment gap between the final Tanglewood concert and the Labor Day weekend.

No question about it, Tanglewood put the Berkshire hotel business back on its feet and made tourists the country's second largest industry. Tanglewood, innkeepers say, it is great—as far as it goes. That's the point.

The summer trade once kept hostelries here comfortably filled for three months, and dowagers rocked on hotel porches from mid-June into September, in the days when Lenox was the landlocked Newport. In the slump that followed, the birth of Tanglewood came as a high-octane reviver. Hotels expanded to take on the new business. Private estates were sold and adapted to roomers. Overnight cabins sprang up and tourist signs appeared before every home with an extra bedroom.

The Berkshire Festival, however, has concentrated the season into preliminary early-July concerts and the three peak weekends of programs in the shed. As soon as they stop the music, the customers leave, and managers of big summer hotels and converted estates look glumly through rooms that too often remain empty till the following year.

Tourists Drop Off

A few of the inns withstand the tourist drop-off by offering a package of organized entertainment. Not depending on the festival alone to amuse their guests, they set up a relatively inexpensive program of hayrides, barbeques, horseback riding and the sort, and in mid-September they're still going strong.

The bigger hotels are looking to conventions to put them back over the break-even mark. In fact, they've been so successful in this field, that southern Berkshire will have more convening delegates this month and next than ever before.

But the real answer to an extension of the summer season lies, many observers feel, not in conventions, but in a practical idea for use of the 6,000-seat shed on the Tanglewood grounds.

To this problem, the Berkshire Hills Conference, the country's promotion agency, has applied itself for a half-dozen years. Suggestions have not been lacking from organizations eager to lease the well-publicized shed, and after the latest proposal the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra probably feels it has heard everything. It listens sympathetically to each new proposition, then gently urges the necessity of maintaining the classical atmosphere of Tanglewood.

The hard-worked Boston Symphony itself wants to give its players a vacation between the festival closing and the orchestra's opening at home. Other symphony orchestras, it has been suggested here, might be invited to appear at Lenox in programs following the regular season. This, though, could mean that Summer receipts, while extended over a longer period, would be spread thinner; and an objection is foreseen from the Boston Symphony, which weathered the rough going in the early lean years and established the prestige of the place.

Whatever the answer, until it is found, the bridging of the late-Summer gap will remain the biggest resort problem facing this area.

PERSONAL POSTCARD

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY,
Conductor, Boston Symphony,
Retired,
Boston, Mass.
Dear Dr. Koussevitzky:

We read that you are not happy about the action of the trustees of the Berkshire Music Festival in getting a guest conductor without consulting you. We don't know the merits of the issue. But we do know that we hope nothing mars the harmony of the festival or detracts in any way from your important service to that great occasion.

BOSTON COMMON.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D. 191,252) (S 302,826)
This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 25 1950

Postscript On Tanglewood

Hard Working Music Center

By ELLIOTT KIRK VERNER

TANGLEWOOD.

THE Berkshire Music Center has just completed another six weeks' session of classes and concerts, ranging from recital to full orchestra programs played by professionals and students. In that short period 400 students registered, 550 musicians played, and 200,000 listened to 60 concerts.

The scene of the festival is a spacious tract high in the Berkshire Mountains. There are three concert halls and many practice rooms as well as a large cafeteria and music store. The shed alone contains 6,000 seats with room for 8,000 more on the green lawns.

Tanglewood is primarily a music school for advanced students, who may be vocalists, instrumentalists, composers, or conductors.

In this setting the young musicians break away from the private lessons and classes on theory which they encounter during the winter. Applying their years of training to actual performances, they learn to work under the hard, fast-moving conditions which they will meet in professional life.

—o—

For all those in training, there was a hard daily grind. Members of the student orchestra rehearsed daily for their Friday night concert. Others played in the opera orchestra or practiced for the Sunday morning chamber music concerts. The advanced vocalist might have been in several operas and many opera scenes, which was taxing on both mind and body, but the result was practical operatic experience. The student composer had his works performed by the orchestra or in the Composers' Forum on Sunday nights, where they were discussed by musicians and observers. The conductor works with the student orchestra under the personal supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Each department is headed by some of the great figures in the musical field. Jacques Ibert and Aaron Copland are in charge of composition; Boris Goldovsky, Jan Popper and Sarah Caldwell direct the opera department. The roster of the conducting staff contained names such as Leonard Bernstein, Eleazor de Carvalho, Richard Burgin, Lukas Foss, and Dr. Koussevitzky himself, all of whom conducted portions of the student orchestra programs.

William Kroll and Gregor Piatigorsky were chamber music coaches, E. Power Biggs was organist, and Hugh Ross choral conductor. This impressive list was strengthened by many fine musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and schools such as Juilliard and Curtis.

Many people think that the season at Tanglewood is but three weeks in length with not more than ten concerts. The reason is that the publicity centers on the big festival concerts. However, there are six full weeks with concerts by students and visiting artists. The Boston Symphony has a six-concert Bach-Mozart series. There are the Coolidge Chamber Music concerts, as well as operas, choral concerts and recitals. In the smaller concerts, works by lesser-known composers are played, or rare music by the masters is heard. More than 225 works of Bach were played during the season, yet only one appeared on large concert programs.

The history of this great music festival began eighteen years ago. In 1932, the late Henry Hadley formed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Hanna Farm near the present site of the festival. Sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic gave four to eight concerts in the open. This organization was eventually taken over by the Boston Symphony in 1936. Serge Koussevitzky became director and immediately started to build a large enterprise. He secured the money and grounds that were necessary for the project. The Tappen family of Boston willed their Lenox estate to the orchestra, and soon tents and buildings were erected. Eight years ago a school for advanced students was formed and the dream was realized.

First, the shed was built by Eliel Sarrianin and Joseph Franz with donations made by the people who were thoroughly drenched in a storm that washed out the tent where the first concerts were held. The storm was the start of the development that eventually gave Tanglewood the extensive physical plant which it has today.

A chamber music hall with 300 seats inside and an equal number outside was designed and built by Sarrianin. It featured a suspended roof, making it unnecessary to have supporting pillars in the hall. This was a unique acoustical engineering project. Several years later, the same principle was applied to the theater-concert-hall. This building, having 1,200 seats and accommodations for 5,000 on the lawn, added greatly to the number of people that could attend the smaller concerts.

—o—

The theater is used primarily by the opera department but the Boston Symphony's Bach-Mozart concerts and Coolidge concerts are also presented here. The orchestra does most of its recording in the hall. They have just completed a four-day session which included the making of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," narrated by Eleanor Roosevelt to commemorate her historic performance of the work on August 11.

During the school day the public is not allowed to enter the grounds unless guided by one of the young college students, who is employed by Boston Symphony Orchestra. This ban is intended to allow the classes and rehearsals to go on unhampered.

However, there are three public Boston Symphony rehearsals and a day is set aside for public inspection of the facilities, which is appropriately called "Tanglewood on Parade." So with these unique offerings plus 60 concerts, one can hardly call Tanglewood the home of the few and privileged.

The beautiful setting is ideal for those who wish to sit on the lawns for the concerts and for the students who may want to practice under a tree or in a clump of bushes. Thousands utilize this unusual privilege, some from necessity, most from volition.

GUNNAR LEISTIKOW
248 WEST 10TH STREET
NEW YORK 14, N. Y.

VERDENS GANG Lørdag, Oslo, Norway

Lørdag 26. august 1950

Musikalske festspill i Amerika

For dem som liker å legge seg ned når de hører musikk, og som alltid har syntes at konsertsalene burde utstyres med divaner til dette bruk, er dette her det helt riktige. Det bare forhøyer nytelsen av Brandenburgerkonsertene eller Mozarts Jupiter-symfoni samtidig å se de høye almetrærsgrener og blader svaie i vinden. Eller plutselig å få uventet visitt av en chipmonk, et av de diminutive amerikanske ekorn med lang, hvit stripe ned over ryggen. Her er de nesten tamme, tydelig innstilt på at mennesker som hører musikk ikke kan bevege seg og derfor er helt ufarlige for små, vimsete gnagere.

Her: det er plassen utenfor konserthuset i Tanglewood. Den er laget for dette, den er vellholdt og nystelt, og konserthusets dører står vidt åpne, så ikke bare festspillenes stamgjester på de dyrt reserverte plasser inne i salen, men også de 5—6000 ganske alminnelige mennesker som leirer seg utenfor, kan høre.

A oppføre symfonikonserter i det grønne, i forbindelse med noe som nærmest kan kalles friluftskonservatorium, det var en ønskedrøm som Serge Koussevitzky allerede hadde før første verdenskrig, da han som ung dirigent reiste med sitt symfoniorkester rundt i hele tsarens Russland. Men det måtte ganske spesielle forutsetninger til før han kunne tenke på å virkeliggjøre sitt ønske.

Det gikk 20 år før sjansen bød seg. Og det var ikke i Koussevitzkys hjemland, men i Amerika at han fant de nødvendige økonomiske, sosiale og klimatiske forutsetninger.

Festspill om sommeren er ikke noe nytt i Amerika. I mer enn én generasjon har sommerteatrene vært et fast begrep i USA. Det alminnelige teater er fortrengt av kinoene i nesten alle andre byer enn New York. Men om sommeren feirer dramaets muse sin oppstandelse. Hva grunnen enn kan være, landliggerlivet ser ut til å gjenopplive amerikanernes interesse for teatret. Over hele landet kan en om sommeren, selv på de minste steder, finne teatre, ofte av en forbausende høy kvalitet. Det er teatre som ikke eksisterer om vinteren, og en finner dem ofte i en tilfeldig foreningssal eller i en låve.

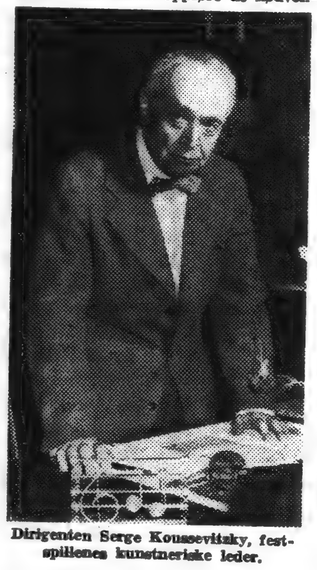
Det er bilene som har gjort denne sesongmessige renessanse av teaterlivet mulig. Sommerteatrene henvender seg ikke bare til sommergjestene på stedet, men til et publikum i 2—3 mils omkreta. Alle har bil, og landliggerne kjører gjerne en tur om kvelden. Men amerikanerne skal alltid ha et bestemt mål for ferden. Bare en tur i det grønne appellerer ikke til deres sans for det hensiktsmessige. Men en tur i teatret går en ikke av veien for å forbinde med et par timers bilkjøring. En stor parkeringsplass ved siden av teatret er derfor det direktøren for et amerikansk sommerteater først sørger for.

Men når folk gidder å kjøre en viss distanse for å se en teaterforestilling — som kanskje bare er et uttrykk for noen lokale amatørers kunstneriske aspirasjoner, — skulle de så ikke gidde kjøre kanskje et betydelig stykke lenger for å høre et så berømt orkester som Boston symfoniorkester? Især i Ny-England, hvor de gamle sær-

Fra V. G.s korrespondent
Gunnar Leistikow

verdige universiteter som Harvard og Yale opprettholder et visst kulturnivå, og hvor folk er stolte over landsdelens tradisjoner, skulle det være muligheter.

Bostonorkesterets dirigent, Serge Koussevitzky, kunne ikke få tanken ut av hodet. Men det var mange praktiske vanskeligheter. Man trengte et større areal i landlige omgivelser ikke alt for langt borte fra Boston og New York. Man måtte oppføre de nødvendige bygninger osv. osv. Og til alt dette trengtes penger, så mange at det måtte volde hodepy selv for lederen av et av Amerikas mest ansette orkestre.



Dirigenten Serge Koussevitzky, festspillenes kunstneriske leder.

Da kom tilfellet ham til hjelp. Det var andre som hadde hatt liknende ideer. Sommeren 1934 var 65 musikere fra New Yorks filharmoniske orkester blitt engasjert til å spille på en privat eiendom i nærheten av Stockbridge, en liten by i de vidunderlig vakre Berkshirefjell vest i Massachusetts. Det ble stor suksess. Over 5000 mennesker overvar 3 konserter, og om høsten ble et selskap registrert under navnet «Berkshire Symphonic Festival».

Følgende år spilte samme selskap igjen. Men året etter vågde man mer, man inviterte selveste Boston symfoniorkester til Berkshire-festspillene.

Koussevitzky nølte ikke med å slå til. Endelig skulle hans gamle drøm bli til virkelighet! Denne gang kom det 15 000 til hans 3 konserter.

Det var en suksess som fikk vidtrekkende følger. Om vinteren samme år, 1936, fikk Bostonorkesteret 86 hektar jord i gave fra 2 rike amerikanske damer, Mrs. Gorham Brooks og Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. En innsamling blant interesserte innbrakte 80 000 dollar til bygging av et konserthus etter tegning av den finske arkitekt Eliel Saarinen. Bygningen ble oppført tidsnok ferdig til festspillene året etter, og den har noen fortreffende enkeltheter som forbedrer akustikken.

Tanglewood — som stedet heter — blir så langt som mulig bevart som før, med kjempemessige ahorns-alleer, utstrakte gresplener og hekker rundt terrassene som har vidunderlig utsikt over sjø og fjell. Hovedbygningen ble for 100 år siden oppført av familien Tappan på et sted som hadde vært leirplass for mohikanerne. Den er nå innredet til kontorbygning. Rundt huset, omkring i hjørner av fruktlagen og andre skjulte steder, er det bygd øverom og mindre trehus for kammermusikk.

Nå var alt klart til å realisere Koussevitzkys kjærtanke, og sommeren 1940 ble friluftskonservatoriet åpnet. Det var 2 elev-symfoniorkestre, og en gruppe dirigentelever som Koussevitzky hadde valt ut og undervist selv. Det var et festspillkor, en operaskole og kursus i komponering og kordireksjon. Året etter kom en avdeling for kammermusikk til. Den var ledet av Gregor Piatigorsky.

Alt ettersom det faller en inn, kan en stå, sitte eller ligge når en lytter til konsertene i Tanglewood.

Elevene strømmet til fra hele verden, og mange måtte avvises fordi det ikke var plass. Da Amerika kom med i krigen lukket skolen. I juli 1946 ble den åpnet igjen. Nå er der bortimot 500 elever fra 16 forskjellige land. Men en kan heller ikke tenke seg mer inspirerende omgivelser til kunstnerisk utfoldelse enn Berkshirefjellenes smilende skjønnhet.

Musikerarten av undervisningen i friluftskonservatoriet i Tanglewood foregår på gressplenene.

Traveler, July 11

[125]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 191,252) (S 302,826)
This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 25 1950

Postscript On Tanglewood

Hard Working Music Center

By ELLIOTT KIRK VERNER

TANGLEWOOD.

THE Berkshire Music Center has just ~~completed~~ another six weeks' session of classes and concerts, ranging from recital to full orchestra programs played by professionals and students. In that short period 400 students registered, 550 musicians played, and 200,000 listened to 60 concerts.

The scene of the festival is a spacious tract high in the Berkshire Mountains. There are three concert halls and many practice rooms as well as a large cafeteria and music store. The shed alone contains 6,000 seats with room for 8,000 more on the green lawns.

Tanglewood is primarily a music school for advanced students, who may be vocalists, instrumentalists, composers, or conductors.

In this setting the young musicians break away from the private lessons and classes on theory which they encounter during the winter. Applying their years of training to actual performances, they learn to work under the hard, fast-moving conditions which they will meet in professional life.

—o—

For all those in training, there was a hard daily grind. Members of the student orchestra rehearsed daily for their Friday night concert. Others played in the opera orchestra or practiced for the Sunday morning chamber music concerts. The advanced vocalist might have been in several operas and many opera scenes, which was taxing on both mind and body, but the result was practical operatic experience. The student composer had his works performed by the orchestra or in the Composers' Forum on Sunday nights, where they were discussed by musicians and observers. The conductor works with the student orchestra under the personal supervision of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Each department is headed by some of the great figures in the musical field. Jacques Ibert and Aaron Copland are in charge of composition; Boris Goldovsky, Jan Popper and Sarah Caldwell direct the opera department. The roster of the conducting staff contained names such as Leonard Bernstein, Eleazor de Carvalho, Richard Burgin, Lukas Foss, and Dr. Koussevitzky himself, all of whom conducted portions of the student orchestra programs.

William Kroll and Gregor Piatigorsky were chamber music coaches, E. Power Biggs was organist, and Hugh Ross choral conductor. This impressive list was strengthened by many fine musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and schools such as Juilliard and Curtis.

Many people think that the season at Tanglewood is but three weeks in length with not more than ten concerts. The reason is that the publicity centers on the big festival concerts. However, there are six full weeks with concerts by students and visiting artists. The Boston Symphony has a six-concert Bach-Mozart series. There are the Coolidge Chamber Music concerts, as well as operas, choral concerts and recitals. In the smaller concerts, works by lesser-known composers are played, or rare music by the masters is heard. More than 225 works of Bach were played during the season, yet only one appeared on large concert programs.

The history of this great music festival began eighteen years ago. In 1932, the late Henry Hadley formed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Hanna Farm near the present site of the festival. Sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic gave four to eight concerts in the open. This organization was eventually taken over by the Boston Symphony in 1936. Serge Koussevitzky became director and immediately started to build a large enterprise. He secured the money and grounds that were necessary for the project. The Tappen family of Boston willed their Lenox estate to the orchestra, and soon tents and buildings were erected. Eight years ago a school for advanced students was formed and the dream was realized.

First, the shed was built by Eliel Sarrianin and Joseph Franz with donations made by the people who were thoroughly drenched in a storm that washed out the tent where the first concerts were held. The storm was the start of the development that eventually gave Tanglewood the extensive physical plant which it has today.

A chamber music hall with 300 seats inside and an equal number outside was designed and built by Sarrianin. It featured a suspended roof, making it unnecessary to have supporting pillars in the hall. This was a unique acoustical engineering project. Several years later, the same principle was applied to the theater-concert-hall. This building, having 1,200 seats and accommodations for 5,000 on the lawn, added greatly to the number of people that could attend the smaller concerts.

—o—

The theater is used primarily by the opera department but the Boston Symphony's Bach-Mozart concerts and Coolidge concerts are also presented here. The orchestra does most of its recording in the hall. They have just completed a four-day session which included the making of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," narrated by Eleanor Roosevelt to commemorate her historic performance of the work on August 11.

During the school day the public is not allowed to enter the grounds unless guided by one of the young college students, who is employed by Boston Symphony Orchestra. This ban is intended to allow the classes and rehearsals to go on unhampered.

However, there are three public Boston Symphony rehearsals and a day is set aside for public inspection of the facilities, which is appropriately called "Tanglewood on Parade." So with these unique offerings plus 60 concerts, one can hardly call Tanglewood the home of the few and privileged.

The beautiful setting is ideal for those who wish to sit on the lawns for the concerts and for the students who may want to practice under a tree or in a clump of bushes. Thousands utilize this unusual privilege, some from necessity, most from volition.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SEP 23 1950

FESTIVAL END BRINGS SLUMP TO TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Promoters Cast About For Ways to Extend Short Season

Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 23—(AP)—The Berkshire summer season, which used to extend from July 4 to Labor Day, now is lopped off in early August by the very bonanza that put it in the $15,000,000 class.

The closing of Tanglewood after the second weekend of August nearly prostrates the resort season here at a time when Cape Cod, still knee-deep in tourists, is gleefully laying snares for the late-September trade.

Seek New Means

Now Berkshire promoters are casting about for means to plug the entertainment gap between the final Tanglewood concert and the Labor Day weekend.

No question about it, Tanglewood put the Berkshire hotel business back on its feet and made tourists the country's second largest industry. Tanglewood, innkeepers say, it is great—as far as it goes. That's the point.

The summer trade once kept hostelries here comfortably filled for three months, and dowagers rocked on hotel porches from mid-June into September, in the days when Lenox was the landlocked Newport. In the slump that followed, the birth of Tanglewood came as a high-octane reviver. Hotels expanded to take on the new business. Private estates were sold and adapted to roomers. Overnight cabins sprang up and tourist signs appeared before every home with an extra bedroom.

The Berkshire Festival, however, has concentrated the season into preliminary early-July concerts and the three peak weekends of programs in the shed. As soon as they stop the music, the customers leave, and managers of big summer hotels and converted estates look glumly through rooms that too often remain empty till the following year.

Tourists Drop Off

A few of the inns withstand the tourist drop-off by offering a package of organized entertainment. Not depending on the festival alone to amuse their guests, they set up a relatively inexpensive program of hayrides, barbeques, horseback riding and the sort, and in mid-September they're still going strong.

The bigger hotels are looking to conventions to put them back over the break-even mark. In fact, they've been so successful in this field, that southern Berkshire will have more convening delegates this month and next than ever before.

But the real answer to an extension of the summer season lies, many observers feel, not in conventions, but in a practical idea for use of the 6,000-seat shed on the Tanglewood grounds.

To this problem, the Berkshire Hills Conference, the country's promotion agency, has applied itself for a half-dozen years. Suggestions have not been lacking from organizations eager to lease the well-publicized shed, and after the latest proposal the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra probably feels it has heard everything. It listens sympathetically to each new proposition, then gently urges the necessity of maintaining the classical atmosphere of Tanglewood.

The hard-worked Boston Symphony itself wants to give its players a vacation between the festival closing and the orchestra's opening at home. Other symphony orchestras, it has been suggested here, might be invited to appear at Lenox in programs following the regular season. This, though, could mean that Summer receipts, while extended over a longer period, would be spread thinner; and an objection is foreseen from the Boston Symphony, which weathered the rough going in the early lean years and established the prestige of the place.

Whatever the answer, until it is found, the bridging of the late-Summer gap will remain the biggest resort problem facing this area.

PERSONAL POSTCARD

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY,
Conductor, Boston Symphony,
Retired,
Boston, Mass.

Dear Dr. Koussevitzky:

We read that you are not happy about the action of the trustees of the Berkshire Music Festival in getting a guest conductor without consulting you. We don't know the merits of the issue. But we do know that we hope nothing mars the harmony of the festival or detracts in any way from your important service to that great occasion.

BOSTON COMMON.

BLANK PAGE

1951

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUL 30 1951

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TENDERS TRIBUTE TO KOUSSEVITZKY

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Music Critic.

LENOX, Mass., July 30. — "We shall play Mozart's Masonic funeral music in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. We ask when this music is over that you do not applaud but that you keep standing for a moment of silence."

With these words prefacing the initial work on the program, Charles Munch set the solemn mood that pervaded the opening concert of the main series of the Berkshire Festival concerts.

During the moment of silence there must have been in every concert-goer's mind warm thoughts of Dr. Koussevitzky, the man of inexhaustible spirit who had made the Boston Symphony one of the world's greatest orchestras — the man whose deep dedication to music had made come true the dreams of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

Munch Is Worthy Successor

Present in her box with friends and relatives to hear the memorial to her husband and to witness the impressive tribute by the more than 7000 silent-standing concert-goers was Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky.

As it happened, the day would have been her husband's 77th birthday. Old timers at Tanglewood, and center faculty and staff members found themselves reminiscing about birthday celebrations of previous years.

Mr. Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony since Dr. Koussevitzky became its conductor emeritus two years ago, is, as Buffalonians have noted at his two concerts with the Bostonian in Kleinhans Music Hall, an eminently worthy successor to his distinguished colleague.

Thursday evening this listener was impressed anew with the warmth and strength of his musical feeling, with his dynamic interpretations and also with the delicacy and sensitiveness of his approach.

Makes Program Glow

Completely absorbed in his music, he retains what many conductors do not—an enthusiasm so youthful and so enthusiastic that frequently he is carried away completely and you hear an interpretation quite different from the accepted one.

The other works on Thursday's program—Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony—glowed under his directing.

The Schumann reflects the joy and happiness of the time of its composition, which was within a year of Robert's marriage to Clara Wieck. It is a young, romantic work, overflowing with song and quite free of moody introspection or melancholy. And so it was played, with enthusiasm, warmth and a kind of bursting gladness.

The impact of the Berlioz was little short of stunning. We have heard Mr. Munch and the orchestra play this in Buffalo, and were overwhelmed by it. On this occasion, though, the Bostonians practically "raised the roof" with it.

American Works Given

There was an ovation for Mr. Munch and the players at the close of the program. The brilliant audience included many notables, among them Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the French ambassador to the U. S., Henri Bonnet, and his wife.

A sensitive performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto by the Chilean virtuoso, Claudio Arrau, made Saturday evening's concert also memorable. Other works were Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony, brilliantly performed, and Weber Oberon Overture, a delightful reading.

Works by two leading American composers opened Sunday afternoon's concert—Samuel Barber's overture, "The School for Scandal," and Aaron Copland's "Quiet City."

Mr. Munch's distinctive fits and the Boston Symphony's new-found freedom were beautifully in evidence in the two symphonies — Schubert's Fourth ("tragic") symphony and Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Dramatically Effective

The Schubert, which is "tragic" only in the brief opening adagio, sang its way with delicious simplicity and dignity into the listeners' hearts.

The Franck was another story. This reading was no solemn testament of religious faith, nor a studied presentation of rich and lush tonal texture per se. Mr. Munch made it an outpouring so ebullient, so impetuous and at times so exaggerated that one heard it as for the first time. Even if one felt some misgivings about the interpretation, there was no denying its dramatic effectiveness.

A tremendous ovation was accorded the director and players at the close of this concert.

Mr. Munch will conduct four of the remaining festival concerts Thursday and Saturday and Aug. 11 and 12. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct next Sunday afternoon and Leonard Bernstein on the evening of Aug. 9, when Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be performed in memory of Dr. Koussevitzky.

This evening Boris Goldovsky will conduct the first of two performances of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," the opera which was to have marked Dr. Koussevitzky's debut in this country as an opera-conductor.

N.Y. Times Sunday June 24 1951

ADAGIO

A Wreath for Serge Koussevitzky

How often have we seen him lay aside
His baton in the little interlude
Of silence, marking the unbroken mood
Wherein it had bound his hearers. Then, full-tide,
Crashed the applause that would not be denied
For such another moment;—still renewed
Through many more, till Music's happy brood
With their own tribute had been satisfied.
Great master, say we "Hail," but not "Farewell"!
No connotation of forgetfulness
Shall cloud our parting; an undying ember
Glows in our hearts. We can evoke the spell
Of flame,—of fury,—or of quietness
You laid upon our souls. We shall remember.

—GORDON CREIGHTON.

THE ART
NEW YOR
AUG 1 - 1951

Berkshire Center to Be 'A Tanglewood'

LOCATED ON THE SHORES of Queechy Lake at Canaan, N. Y., the Berkshire Art Center is holding through Labor Day its 4th annual show of contemporary art. The gallery, just off Route 295, is open daily each afternoon under the direction of Edward Gustave Jacobsson, founder and internationally known packaging and merchandising consultant.

The 1951 exhibition, assembled through the assistance of Joseph Luyber, former director of the Luyber Gallery, includes loans from the Rehn, Babcock, Macbeth, Midtown, Passedoit, Kraushaar and Contemporary Arts galleries of New York.

Among the artists represented in this summer annual are Hopper, Marsh, Speicher, Pleissner, Carroll, Bouché, Heliker, Mattson, Dodd, Sol Wilson and Charlot. A total of 67 paintings is augmented by Stow Wengenroth lithographs and Joseph Barber watercolors.

Objective of the art center, according to Jacobsson, is "to fill the same place in the art world that the nearby Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood fills in the music world . . . an objective based on a real need rather than the simple coincidence of geographical location."

14

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 3 - 1951

Cool Weather Chills Crowd At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3 — Cool weather yesterday, with almost autumnal chill after sundown, cut anticipated attendance last night for the 10th program of the 1951 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Plenty of seats were available in the lofty Music Shed at concert time. However, the hardy souls swathed in blankets, topcoats and heavy wool sweaters, listening from the spacious lawns, raised audience figures to a respectable 7,600.

Charles Munch, who has directed all the festival concerts so far this season, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again last night. His two-part program went from the classic lyricism of Schumann and Beethoven before intermission, to the cacophonic frenzy of Ravel and Roussel as the concert closed.

Opening with Schumann's "Genoveva" overture and the familiar, beloved "Pastorale" of Beethoven, Mr. Munch brilliantly displayed the orchestra's famed string section.

It was in Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" and Roussel's Symphony No. 3 in G minor, though, that he reached the evening's peak. No soothing soporifics, their stimulation and excitement were powerfully conveyed to the audience.

The week-end concert series continues tomorrow night, when Mr. Munch will conduct music by Handel, Bartok, Raxel and Saint-Saens, and Sunday afternoon, with Eleazar de Carvalho taking over as conductor.

Announcement has been made of the program for "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual musical jamboree arranged as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center. With events starting at 6 p. m. next Friday, the program will offer direction by Tanglewood's three resident conductors, Mr. Munch, Mr. de Carvalho and Leonard Bernstein, with Concertmaster Richard Burgin also conducting. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will speak, and activities are scheduled by all departments of the Music Center.

FZ

HOLYOKE TRANSCRIPT

6 June 1951

Serge Koussevitzky

Serge Koussevitzky is dead as a human being. What he has given to the world of music, and with it to human freedom, is undying.

We here in Holyoke have felt the magic of his surpassing reach as an interpreter of great music. He has drawn thousands of us to Tanglewood during the past dozen years.

Scores of students have gone up to Tanglewood for the Berkshire Music Center. There they could have for teachers the men and women that Koussevitzky, as the great maestro of the times, summoned to expand what music means among the young students of America.

This was the one country ready, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, for years the most secure in greatness of American orchestras, was seeking a new conductor when Koussevitzky was also ready for a new land.

He had been driven from his beloved Mother Russia by the new Soviet order. He was Russia's sensation in music. The people wanted to listen to him. The Soviet would not let him have the money he was earning. He wanted to be free.

The rest of Europe was applauding as he went from Berlin to Paris, and back and forth to build great orchestras.

But the Boston Symphony was calling. He made it one of the greatest Symphony orchestras in the world. He re-invigorated it. It was his idea that music cannot be a static art. It must express each era and period while it holds to the great immortal classics.

Beyond his passion for music Koussevitzky was through his life a leader of men. He could move his orchestra to absolute following. He understood his men. He understood his audiences as well. He could compel something like adoration from his audiences as well as his men with their eyes on his baton. He was so sure of his men that they did incredibly noble work backed up by that faith.

Koussevitzky with all his dynamic powers was not of the showman type. Of course he loved the adulation of his orchestra and his audiences. Who doesn't? No one who has been following music as an outsider, as well as the growing musical factors in American life but can sense that there is something more stirring in American culture since Koussevitzky came here twenty-seven years ago.

One reason is that the maestro chose to use his great orchestra to teach music lovers the new creations of the new composers. He invited gifted men to lead his orchestra. He liked to go visiting with other musical groups. He had tremendous interest in the music of new Israel. It was something for him to go to Israel last summer and train a great orchestra and bring it to the United States, and that with the support of the other American orchestra leaders.

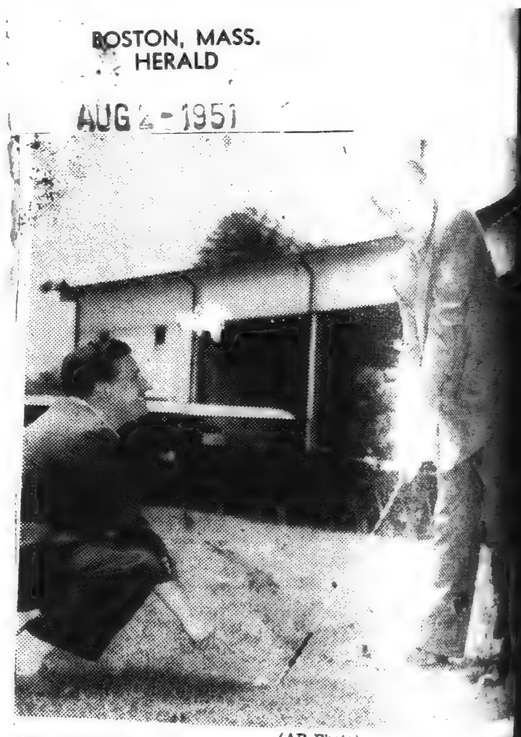
The impulse that we, here in Holyoke, have had from Serge Koussevitzky is world wide. There were a few months last year when there seemed a breach between the management of the Boston Symphony and the greatest of the long line of great musicians they have brought to Boston. Happily, that was healed. The programs for the next Tanglewood season give Koussevitzky as the conductor for the final concert just as he was last year and the year before.

The maestro had no plan to be closing his high career in this June time. He was happy to be an American citizen. Tomorrow he will lie in state in the Church of the Advent in Boston, where the rector of that church and the Right Rev. Bishop John of the Russian Orthodox church will say the last offices for the dead. Then they will take his body to the Berkshires, where it will be given rest close to the scene of what he considered the triumph of his life —the Berkshire Music Center.

There he had his permanent home in the last years of his life. There he could say with the Psalmist, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." It is all very fitting. It is like the grand Amen to one of the very great leaders of music in the current period of the world with so much that is new pressing on the great old world of music and making it the richer.

That the people of New England, of cultured Boston, and of the Berkshire Hills alike, should have the privilege of closeness to Serge Koussevitzky is one of the blessings which cannot end with the garlands laid on his bier today.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 2 - 1951



(AP Photo)

SWITCHES BATON FOR GOLF CLUB—Boston S... Orchestra conductor Charles Munch ... rhythm in a golf club as he takes a few practice swings ... ing a break in a rehearsal at Tanglewood, Lenox, ... Stagliano, who recently made a 160-yard hole-in-one ... Stockbridge Country Club, coaches the maestro. Stag... plays a horn in the orchestra.

[129]

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

JUL 30 1951

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TENDERS TRIBUTE TO KOUSSEVITZKY

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

Buffalo Evening News Music Critic.

LENOX, Mass., July 30. — "We will play Mozart's Masonic funeral music in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. We ask when this music is over that you do not applaud but that you keep standing for a moment of silence."

With these words prefacing the initial work on the program, Charles Munch set the solemn mood that pervaded the opening concert of the main series of the Berkshire Festival concerts.

During the moment of silence there must have been in every concert-goer's mind warm thoughts of Dr. Koussevitzky, the man of inexhaustible spirit who had made the Boston Symphony one of the world's greatest orchestras — the man whose deep dedication to music had made come true the dreams of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

Munch Is Worthy Successor

Present in her box with friends and relatives to hear the memorial to her husband and to witness the impressive tribute by the more than 7000 silent-standing concert-goers was Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky.

As it happened, the day would have been her husband's 77th birthday. Old timers at Tanglewood, and center faculty and staff members found themselves reminiscing about birthday celebrations of previous years.

Mr. Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony since Dr. Koussevitzky became its conductor emeritus two years ago, is, as Buffalonians have noted at his two concerts with the Bostonian in Kleinhans Music Hall, an eminently worthy successor to his distinguished colleague.

Thursday evening this listener was impressed anew with the warmth and strength of his musical feeling, with his dynamic interpretations and also with the delicacy and sensitiveness of his approach.

Makes Program Glow

Completely absorbed in his music, he retains what many conductors do not—an enthusiasm so youthful and so enthusiastic that frequently he is carried away completely and you hear an interpretation quite different from the accepted one.

The other works on Thursday's program—Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony—glowed under his directing.

The Schumann reflects the joy and happiness of the time of its composition, which was within a year of Robert's marriage to Clara Wieck. It is a young, romantic work, overflowing with song and quite free of moody introspection or melancholy. And so it was played, with enthusiasm, warmth and a kind of bursting gladness.

The impact of the Berlioz was little short of stunning. We have heard Mr. Munch and the orchestra play this in Buffalo, and were overwhelmed by it. On this occasion, though, the Bostonians practically "raised the roof" with it.

American Works Given

There was an ovation for Mr. Munch and the players at the close of the program. The brilliant audience included many notables, among them Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the French ambassador to the U. S., Henri Bonnet, and his wife.

A sensitive performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto by the Chilean virtuoso, Claudio Arrau, made Saturday evening's concert also memorable. Other works were Prokofieff's Sixth Symphony brilliantly performed, and Weber's Oberon Overture, a delightful reading.

Works by two leading American composers opened Sunday afternoon's concert—Samuel Barber's overture, "The School for Scandal," and Aaron Copland's "Quiet City."

Mr. Munch's distinctive fits and the Boston Symphony's new-found freedom were beautifully in evidence in the two symphonies — Schubert's Fourth ("tragic") symphony and Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Dramatically Effective

The Schubert, which is "tragic" only in the brief opening adagio, sang its way with delicious simplicity and dignity into the listeners' hearts.

The Franck was another story. This reading was no solemn testament of religious faith, nor a studied presentation of rich and lush tonal texture per se. Mr. Munch made it an outpouring so ebullient, so impetuous and at times so exaggerated that one heard it as for the first time. Even if one felt some misgivings about the interpretation, there was no denying its dramatic effectiveness.

A tremendous ovation was accorded the director and players at the close of this concert.

Mr. Munch will conduct four of the remaining festival concerts Thursday and Saturday and Aug. 11 and 12. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct next Sunday afternoon and Leonard Bernstein on the evening of Aug. 9, when Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be performed in memory of Dr. Koussevitzky.

This evening Boris Goldovsky will conduct the first of two performances of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," the opera which was to have marked Dr. Koussevitzky's debut in this country as an opera conductor.

NEW YORK TIMES
Sunday, June 24, 1951

ADAGIO

A Wreath for Serge Koussevitzky

How often have we seen him lay aside
His baton in the little interlude
Of silence, marking the unbroken mood
Wherein it had bound his hearers. Then, full-tide,
Crashed the applause that would not be denied
For such another moment;—still renewed
Through many more, till Music's happy brood
With their own tribute had been satisfied.
Great master, say we "Hail," but not "Farewell"!
No connotation of forgetfulness
Shall cloud our parting; an undying ember
Glows in our hearts. We can evoke the spell
Of flame,—of fury,—or of quietness
Upon our souls. We shall remember.

—GORDON CREIGHTON.

THE ART DIGEST
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 1 - 1951

Berkshire Center to Be 'A Tanglewood'

LOCATED ON THE SHORES of Queechy Lake at Canaan, N. Y., the Berkshire Art Center is holding through Labor Day its 4th annual show of contemporary art. The gallery, just off Route 295, is open daily each afternoon under the direction of Edward Gustave Jacobsson, founder and internationally known packaging and merchandising consultant.

The 1951 exhibition, assembled through the assistance of Joseph Luyber, former director of the Luyber Gallery, includes loans from the Rehn, Babcock, Macbeth, Midtown, Passedoit, Kraushaar and Contemporary Arts galleries of New York.

Among the artists represented in this summer annual are Hopper, Marsh, Speicher, Pleissner, Carroll, Bouché, Heliker, Mattson, Dodd, Sol Wilson and Charlot. A total of 67 paintings is augmented by Stow Wengenroth lithographs and Joseph Barber watercolors.

Objective of the art center, according to Jacobsson, is "to fill the same place in the art world that the nearby Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood fills in the music world . . . an objective based on a real need rather than the simple coincidence of geographical location."

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 3 - 1951

Cool Weather Chills Crowd At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3 — Cool weather yesterday, with almost autumnal chill after sundown, cut anticipated attendance last night for the 10th program of the 1951 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Plenty of seats were available in the lofty Music Shed at concert time. However, the hardy souls swathed in blankets, topcoats and heavy wool sweaters, listening from the spacious lawns, raised audience figures to a respectable 7,600.

Charles Munch, who has directed all the festival concerts so far this season, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra again last night. [redacted] part program went from the classic lyricism of Schumann and Beethoven before intermission, to the cacophonic frenzy of Ravel and Roussel as the concert closed.

Opening with Schumann's "Genoveva" overture and the familiar, beloved "Pastorale" of Beethoven, Mr. Munch brilliantly displayed the orchestra's famed string section.

It was in Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole" and Roussel's Symphony No. 3 in G minor, though, that he reached the evening's peak. No soothing soporifics, their stimulation and excitement were powerfully conveyed to the audience.

The week-end concert series continues tomorrow night, when Mr. Munch will conduct music by Handel, Bartok, Raxel and Saint-Saens, and Sunday afternoon, with Eleazar de Carvalho taking over as conductor.

Announcement has been made of the program for "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual musical jamboree arranged as a benefit for the Berkshire Music Center. With events starting at 6 p. m. next Friday, the program will offer direction by Tanglewood's three resident conductors, Mr. Munch, Mr. de Carvalho and Leonard Bernstein, with Concertmaster Richard Burgin also conducting. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt will speak, and activities are scheduled by all departments of the Music Center.

F'2

HOLYOKE TRANSCRIPT

6 June 1951

Serge Koussevitzky

Serge Koussevitzky is dead as a human being. What he has given to the world of music, and with it to human freedom, is undying.

We here in Holyoke have felt the magic of his surpassing reach as an interpreter of great music. He has drawn thousands of us to Tanglewood during the past dozen years.

Scores of students have gone up to Tanglewood for the Berkshire Music Center. There they could have for teachers the men and women that Koussevitzky, as the great maestro of the times, summoned to expand what music means among the young students of America.

This was the one country ready, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, for years the most secure in greatness of American orchestras, was seeking a new conductor when Koussevitzky was also ready for a new land.

He had been driven from his beloved Mother Russia by the new Soviet order. He was Russia's sensation in music. The people wanted to listen to him. The Soviet would not let him have the money he was earning. He wanted to be free.

The rest of Europe was applauding as he went from Berlin to Paris, and back and forth to build great orchestras.

But the Boston Symphony was calling. He made it one of the greatest Symphony orchestras in the world. He re-invigorated it. It was his idea that music cannot be a static art. It must express each era and period while it holds to the great immortal classics.

Beyond his passion for music Koussevitzky was through his life a leader of men. He could move his orchestra to absolute following. He understood his men. He understood his audiences as well. He could compel something like adoration from his audiences as well as his men with their eyes on his baton. He was so sure of his men that they did incredibly noble work backed up by that faith.

Koussevitzky with all his dynamic powers was not of the showman type. Of course he loved the adulation of his orchestra and his audiences. Who doesn't? No one who has been following music as an outsider, as well as the growing musical factors in American life but can sense that there is something more stirring in American culture since Koussevitzky came here twenty-seven years ago.

One reason is that the maestro chose to use his great orchestra to teach music lovers the new creations of the new composers. He invited gifted men to lead his orchestra. He liked to go visiting with other musical groups. He had tremendous interest in the music of new Israel. It was something for him to go to Israel last summer and train a great orchestra and bring it to the United States, and that with the support of the other American orchestra leaders.

The impulse that we, here in Holyoke, have had from Serge Koussevitzky is world wide. There were a few months last year when there seemed a breach between the management of the Boston Symphony and the greatest of the long line of great musicians they have brought to Boston. Happily, that was healed. The programs for the next Tanglewood season give Koussevitzky as the conductor for the final concert just as he was last year and the year before.

The maestro had no plan to be closing his high career in this June time. He was happy to be an American citizen. Tomorrow he will lie in state in the Church of the Advent in Boston, where the rector of that church and the Right Rev. Bishop John of the Russian Orthodox church will say the last offices for the dead. Then they will take his body to the Berkshires, where it will be given rest close to the scene of what he considered the triumph of his life —the Berkshire Music Center.

There he had his permanent home in the last years of his life. There he could say with the Psalmist, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." It is all very fitting. It is like the grand Amen to one of the very great leaders of music in the current period of the world with so much that is new pressing on the great old world of music and making it the richer.

That the people of New England, of cultured Boston, and of the Berkshire Hills alike, should have the privilege of closeness to Serge Koussevitzky is one of the blessings which cannot end with the garlands laid on his bier today.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 2 - 1951

(AP Photo)

SWITCHES BATON FOR GOLF CLUB—Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Charles Munch (right) tries to get rhythm in a golf club as he takes a few practice swings during a break in a rehearsal at Tanglewood, Lenox. Leo Stagliano, who recently made a 160-yard hole-in-one at Stockbridge Country Club, coaches the maestro. Stagliano plays a horn in the orchestra.

[129]

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

Leonard Bernstein, at the piano, with Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass and David Lloyd, tennor, left to right, go over the score of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in preparation for a memorial concert to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in Tanglewood's Music Shed next Thursday night, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Civic University Orchestra Will Close Season Aug. 8; Music in 'Tanglewood'

By E. V. W.

This [illegible] 1826. Mendelssohn, 17, about to finish the [illegible] Night's Dream" overture. In 1935, in [illegible] Nazi settings by Weissmann and Wagner-Regent, commissioned by the Nazis, were ordered played to replace the original.

THE FINAL CONCERT of the summer series of the Civic [illegible] Symphony Orchestra is set for Wednesday night at 8:15 [illegible] Thornden Park Amphitheater, Dr. Alexander Capurso [illegible]. Should weather be rainy, the concert will be moved [illegible] Crouse auditorium.

THE CONCERT series is pre- [illegible] of the Syracuse Depart- [illegible] Parks Thomas A. Barry; [illegible] and the College of [illegible] Syracuse University, L. [illegible] with Mrs. H. Win- [illegible] Civic Music Committee chairman; [illegible] O'Brien, orchestral [illegible] Syracuse Trust [illegible] and Deposit Co. [illegible] Bank and Trust [illegible] Savings Bank.

THE PROGRAM Aug. 8 will [illegible] symphonic selec- [illegible] and Ludmilla," [illegible] Italian Sym- [illegible] Marriage" [illegible] Caesar [illegible] Smith [illegible]

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

Women of Audiences at Tanglewood Get Real Dressing-Down

LENOX Aug. 2—Sibelius and [illegible] Stravinsky and slacks [illegible] don't mix. It's . . . well, [illegible]

[illegible]B—Boston Symphon [illegible] (right) tries to finc [illegible]w practice swings dur- [illegible]wood, Lenox. James [illegible]ard hole-in-one at the [illegible]e maestro. Stagliano

[illegible] Madam Would . . .

[illegible]—Please [illegible] the sum-

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

AUG 5 - 1951

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

THOUGH Tchaikowsky's symphonic and ballet music is very well known, his operas have apparently waned in popularity. Of his 11 works in this form, only "Eugene Onegin" and "Pique Dame" have survived. Even these have been almost superseded by the operas of other Russian composers.

Over 40 years have passed since "Pique Dame" had its Metropolitan premiere; over 30 since "Eugene Onegin" received its first Metropolitan mounting. "Onegin" received seven performances in two seasons. Tchaikowsky did not gain any security in the favor of New York operagoers.

Revivals of both works in recent years suggest that they are not destined to be completely forgotten. One of the New Opera Company's most successful productions was that of "Pique Dame." The New York City Opera Company may be credited for resuscitating "Eugene Onegin." The production of "Pique Dame" by the students of the Berkshire Music Center this last week is, therefore, of more than passing interest.

* * *

LESS well-known, "Pique Dame" or "The Queen of Spades" may be well worth cultivating. In the English translation by Boris Goldovsky it disclosed itself as a piece of musical theatre full of atmosphere and potential excitement.

The work has enough dramatic or melodramatic qualities to fuse with its lyricism and make possible a first-class production. Perhaps its elaborate scenic demands of seven sets have proved a handicap in its recreation, but the lavish simplicity of the Tanglewood production showed what can be done when the spirit is willing.

This is not the first time that the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center has made a definite contribution toward operatic enterprise. The performance of "The Queen of Spades" last Monday night took two acts to get underway, but the third act caught fire.

With all the impetus of Tchaikowsky's gift and all the facilities of modern opera production, it suggested what might be done under professional auspices. Serge Koussevitzky's desire to produce the work and Mr. Goldovsky's achievement in bringing it to fruition resulted in a most stimulating achievement.

[illegible] from
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 1 - 1951

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 6 - 1951

Music

Munch Scales Heights at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—It is quite evident that Charles Munch has made the grade (as if he needed to) as the successor to as the successor to Serge Koussevitzky here at the Tanglewood Symphonic Concerts.

The public receives him with enthusiasm the moment he appears on stage, and his contducting, which so far has been first class, often gets thunderous demonstrations.

On Saturday evening he led the Boston Symphony through a well varied program. It began with Handel "Water Music" suite, on to Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta, arrived at Ravel's "Daphnis and Chole" (Suite No. 2) and wound up with Saint-Saens Third symphony.

Splendid Variety.

Now, if you like variety there it is, nicely packaged, all shiny and, if not new, attractive anyway.

We had a perfectly swell opportunity to observe Mr. Munch's intelligent restraint in a work like Ravel's ballet music. If, on occasion this piece has enthralled us by the lushness of a performance, the emphasizing of its sensuous lyricism, it showed that one could take it very much in stride in the manner of batonist Munch, a manner thoroughly unmannered, yet, as in this work, completely expressive.

The Ravel score had the advantage of voices, supported by the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross). Not always do we receive this vocal dividend, since most of the time the work is done purely instrumentally.

Another Quality Added.

I think that the human sounds added another quality to the music, a sort of eerie, faroff thing that seems to fit its mercurial phrases compellingly, indeed.

Also, and this is something of a confession, I hadn't expected the conductor's rendering to come up to his own brilliant version on London Decca records. Why I should not, I'll never know, but that was my attitude pre-performance.

I must say, however, that not only did Mr. Munch equal but—in some respect—actually surpassed himself. And the more the pleasure, of course.

The Bartok, a strangely compact, tightly knit creation (that's what it is), made me think of such things as all the ills of the world held in check by the lid of Pandora's Box. The tension is terrific, close, trembling with anxiety to burst loose. It's an amazing work, and it was given an amazing performance, filled with extraordinary playing by the Bostonians, who—believe me—must have been quite happy when the music ended.

Genially Treated.

Handel and Saint-Saens were genially treated, as you might expect. The latter calling for the services of E. Power Biggs at the organ.

Yesterday afternoon Eleazar De Carvalho led the orchestra through four familiar pices—the overture to Weber's "Euryanthe," the Strauss tone poem "Death and Transfiguration," the Prokofieff piano concerto in G minor, No. 2. Op. 16, and the Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" (as orchestrated by Ravel).

Mr. De Carvalho, a solid musician, often most delicate and flowery in measures to which such treatment is logical, gave a generally workmanlike rendering of the Strauss. I thought that some of it was rather dragged, that there might have been a closer approach to the real Strauss had this not been so, and yet the performance, all in all, could not be said to be anything but respectable. He made his big points anyway, and that is more or less the foundation for a profound understanding of this composer and his work.

Ovation for Bolet.

Jorge Bolet, a young Cuban pianist, whose debut in New York, quite a few years ago, I heard with pleasure, played the Prokofieff "like he owned him." The concerto, composed in 1916, lost and re-composed later, is a far cry from the Prokofieff of today. Even so it has a striking originality, which in those days hit the first listeners rather hard.

A precise, utterly flawless performance by the soloist and the orchestra brought an ovation from the audience of 10,000.

LANCASTER, OHIO
EAGLE-GAZETTE
JUL 25 1951

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

A BOSTON dowager presented herself at the Pearly Gates, and when Saint Peter asked for her credentials, proudly presented a membership card to the Boston Symphony, ditto to the Athaneum, a pass to the Lowell Lectures at Harvard, and a key to the private park adjoining her Beacon Street domicile.

Saint Peter, duly impressed, remarked, "Come in, madam, by all means—but I don't think you'll like it!"

* * *

David Appel's new book, "Commanche," is a story of Custer's Last Stand, as told from the standpoint of the horse who was the only living creature to survive the attack. On the radio, Mary Margaret McBride asked Appel, "Do you give your readers the real low down on what actually transpired?" "Straight from the horse's mouth," quipped Appel.

Music

Tanglewood Triumphs Over Adversity

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—The performance given Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame" in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood last Monday evening was, in a way, a triumph over adversity. You will remember that Serge Koussevitsky, scheduled to conduct the work, was suddenly taken from mundane activity, thus leaving the musical supervision entirely in the hands of his aids.

It would have been an interesting experience to observe his stick work with an opera, an art in which he had not been altogether unpracticed. But we were deprived of that, and the loss is undoubtedly ours.

Goldovsky Praised.

Boris Goldovsky, who did conduct the work besides being its stage director, the translator of the libretto and general esthetic factotum, did well, indeed, with an orchestra which, though adequate, was far from the equal of previous student aggregations at the Berkshire Music Center.

I was glad of the opportunity to hear this piece, which had not been given in New York since 1940, I believe. I enjoyed it then, and I enjoyed it at Tanglewood. It is an excitingly dramatic work, often melodically folkish, in the Tschaikowsky manner, which is to say that the folkishness is probably very good imitation, yet not entirely based on actual sources.

There are excellent arias, one by Pauline, Lisa's friend, which she sings seated at the piano on stage. There is a completely fine duet between Lisa and Hermann in the second scene of the third act, there are engaging orchestral sequences throughout.

Rhapsodic Score.

It is a rhapsodic score Tschaikowsky wrote, as I previously remarked, and a score expressive of elemental passions among the higher circles of Czaristic Russia. Hence, it would seem that the delivery of the music by the singers should be consistent with those dramatic factors.

Young singers, student singers, for all their superior musical training at such a place as the Berkshire Music Center, may not be expected to conduct themselves with the savoir faire of the seasoned, the polished trouper in opera. Yet there are student singers and student singers, and there have been times when one or even two in a cast of trainees did come up to emotional, as well as musical expectations.

I wish that this could be said of the youngsters so earnestly trying to fulfill their vocal-histrionic obligations in this performance. There was neatness of style, phrase-tuning in good taste. Nor could one object to the animation they demonstrated. But with all that, the central fire was lacking in their contributions.

Speaks of Students.

I speak, of course, of the purely student members of the cast, for that, as you are aware, did hold several professional artists in the persons, for example, of the wonderfully poised James Pease, dependable David Lloyd.

In saying all this, I wish it understood that no amount of praise could be enough for the very serious, dedicated work of the young singers. Critical standards for the professional are not being applied here, though the Berkshire Music Center's opera department has consistently in the past come up with quite finished productions, and most worthy of such treatment.

[130]

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 5 - 1951

Leonard Bernstein, at the piano, with Adele Addison, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; James Pease, bass and David Lloyd, tennor, left to right, go over the score of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in preparation for a memorial concert to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in Tanglewood's Music Shed next Thursday night, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Civic University Orchestra Will Close Season Aug. 8; Music in 'Tanglewood'

By E. V. W.

This date in music: 1826, Mendelssohn, 17, about to finish the score of his "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture. In 1935, in Dusseldorf, new Aryan settings by Weissmann and Wagner-Regent, commissioned by the Nazis, were ordered played to replace the original.

THE FINAL CONCERT of the summer series of the Civic University Symphony Orchestra is set for Wednesday night at 8:15 o'clock in Thornden Park Amphitheater, Dr. Alexander Capurso conducting. Should weather be rainy, the concert will be moved to Crouse auditorium.

THE CONCERT series is presented by the Syracuse Department of Parks, William A. Barry, commissioner, and the College of the Arts, Syracuse University, L. Dillenback, dean. Mrs. H. Winfield Chapin is honorary chairman; William S. O'Brien, orchestra manager. Patrons: Syracuse Trust Co., First Trust and Deposit Co., Lincoln National Bank and Trust Co., Syracuse Savings Bank.

THE PROGRAM Aug. 8 will comprise these symphonic selections: "Russlan and Ludmilla," Glinka; Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony; "The Secret Marriage," Cimarosa and a symphonic arrangement by Bennett of "South Pacific," Broadway hit.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
AUG 5 - 1951

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

THOUGH Tchaikowsky's symphonic and ballet music is very well known, his operas have apparently waned in popularity. Of his 11 works in this form, only "Eugene Onegin" and "Pique Dame" have survived. Even these have been almost superseded by the operas of other Russian composers.

Over 40 years have passed since "Pique Dame" had its Metropolitan premiere; over 30 since "Eugene Onegin" received its first Metropolitan mounting. "Onegin" received seven performances in two seasons. Tchaikowsky did not gain any security in the favor of New York operagoers.

Revivals of both works in recent years suggest that they are not destined to be completely forgotten. One of the New Opera Company's most successful productions was that of "Pique Dame." The New York City Opera Company may be credited for resuscitating "Eugene Onegin." The production of "Pique Dame" by the students of the Berkshire Music Center this last week is, therefore, of more than passing interest.

* * *

LESS well-known, "Pique Dame" or "The Queen of Spades" may be well worth cultivating. In the English translation by Boris Goldovsky it disclosed itself as a piece of musical theatre full of atmosphere and potential excitement.

The work has enough dramatic or melodramatic qualities to fuse with its lyricism and make possible a first-class production. Perhaps its elaborate scenic demands of seven acts have proved a handicap in its recreation, but the lavish simplicity of the Tanglewood production showed what can be done when the spirit is willing.

This is not the first time that the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center has made a definite contribution toward operatic enterprise. The performance of "The Queen of Spades" last Monday night took two acts to get underway, but the third act caught fire.

With all the impetus of Tchaikowsky's gift and all the facilities of modern opera production, it suggested what might be done under professional auspices. Serge Koussevitzky's desire to produce the work and Mr. Goldovsky's achievement in bringing it to fruition [illegible] most stimulating achievement.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
AUG 4 - 1951

Music

Tanglewood Triumphs Over Adversity

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—The performance given Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame" in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood last Monday evening was, in a way, a triumph over adversity. You will remember that Serge Koussevitsky, scheduled to conduct the work, was suddenly taken from mundane activity, thus leaving the musical supervision entirely in the hands of his aids.

It would have been an interesting experience to observe his stick work with an opera, an art in which he had not been altogether unpracticed. But we were deprived of that, and the loss is undoubtedly ours.

Goldovsky Praised.

Boris Goldovsky, who did conduct the work besides being its stage director, the translator of the libretto and general esthetic factotum, did well, indeed, with an orchestra which, though adequate, was far from the equal of previous student aggregations at the Berkshire Music Center.

I was glad of the opportunity to hear this piece, which had not been given in New York since 1940, I believe. I enjoyed it then, and I enjoyed it at Tanglewood. It is an excitingly dramatic work, often melodically folkish, in the Tschaikowsky manner, which is to say that the folkishness is probably very good imitation, yet not entirely based on actual sources.

There are excellent arias, one by Pauline, Lisa's friend, which she sings seated at the piano on stage. There is a completely fine duet between Lisa and Hermann in the second scene of the third act, there are engaging orchestral sequences throughout.

Rhapsodic Score.

It is a rhapsodic score Tschaikowsky wrote, as I previously remarked, and a score expressive of elemental passions among the higher circles of Czaristic Russia. Hence, it would seem that the delivery of the music by the singers should be consistent with those dramatic factors.

Young singers, student singers, for all their superior musical training at such a place as the Berkshire Music Center, may not be expected to conduct themselves with the savoir faire of the seasoned, the polished trouper in opera. Yet there are student singers and student singers, and there have been times when one or even two in a cast of trainees did come up to emotional, as well as musical expectations.

I wish that this could be said of the youngsters so earnestly trying to fulfill their vocal-histrionic obligations in this performance. There was neatness of style, phrase-tuning in good taste. Nor could one object to the animation they demonstrated. But with all that, the central fire was lacking in their contributions.

Speaks of Students.

I speak, of course, of the purely student members of the cast, for that, as you are aware, did hold several professional artists in the persons, for example, of the wonderfully poised James Pease, dependable David Lloyd.

In saying all this, I wish it understood that no amount of praise could be enough for the very serious, dedicated work of the young singers. Critical standards for the professional are not being applied here, though the Berkshire Music Center's opera department has consistently in the past come up with quite finished productions, and most worthy of such treatment.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
AUG 6 - 1951

Music

Munch Scales Heights at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—It is quite evident that Charles Munch has made the grade (as if he needed to) as the successor to as the successor to Serge Koussevitzky here at the Tanglewood Symphonic Concerts.

The public receives him with enthusiasm the moment he appears on stage, and his contducting, which so far has been first class, often gets thunderous demonstrations.

On Saturday evening he led the Boston Symphony through a well varied program. It began with Handel "Water Music" suite, on to Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta, arrived at Ravel's "Daphnis and Chole" (Suite No. 2) and wound up with Saint-Saens Third symphony.

Splendid Variety.

Now, if you like variety there it is, nicely packaged, all shiny and, if not new, attractive anyway.

We had a perfectly swell opportunity to observe Mr. Munch's intelligent restraint in a work like Ravel's ballet music. If, on occasion this piece has enthralled us by the lushness of a performance, the emphasizing of its sensuous lyricism, it showed that one could take it very much in stride in the manner of batonist Munch, a manner thoroughly unmannered, yet, as in this work, completely expressive.

The Ravel score had the advantage of voices, supported by the Festival Chorus (prepared by Hugh Ross). Not always do we receive this vocal dividend, since most of the time the work is done purely instrumentally.

Another Quality Added.

I think that the human sounds added another quality to the music, a sort of eerie, faroff thing that seems to fit its mercurial phrases compellingly, indeed.

Also, and this is something of a confession, I hadn't expected the conductor's rendering to come up to his own brilliant version on London Decca records. Why I should not, I'll never know, but that was my attitude pre-performance.

I must say, however, that not only did Mr. Munch equal but—in some respect—actually surpassed himself. And the more the pleasure, of course.

The Bartok, a strangely compact, tightly knit creation (that's what it is), made me think of such things as all the ills of the world held in check by the lid of Pandora's Box. The tension is terrific, close, trembling with anxiety to burst loose. It's an amazing work, and it was given an amazing performance, filled with extraordinary playing by the Bostonians, who—believe me—must have been quite happy when the music ended.

Genially Treated.

Handel and Saint-Saens were genially treated, as you might expect. The latter calling for the services of E. Power Biggs at the organ.

Yesterday afternoon Eleazar De Carvalho led the orchestra through four familiar pices—the overture to Weber's "Euryanthe," the Strauss tone poem "Death and Transfiguration," the Prokofieff piano concerto in G minor, No. 2, Op. 16, and the Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition" (as orchestrated by Ravel).

Mr. De Carvalho, a solid musician, often most delicate and flowery in measures to which such treatment is logical, gave a generally workmanlike rendering of the Strauss. I thought that some of it was rather dragged, that there might have been a closer approach to the real Strauss had this not been so, and yet the performance, all in all, could not be said to be anything but respectable. He made his big points anyway, and that is more or less the foundation for a profound understanding of this composer and his work.

Ovation for Bolet.

Jorge Bolet, a young Cuban pianist, whose debut in New York, quite a few years ago, I heard with pleasure, played the Prokofieff "like he owned him." The concerto, composed in 1916, lost and re-composed later, is a far cry from the Prokofieff of today. Even so it has a striking originality, which in those days hit the first listeners rather hard.

A precise, utterly flawless performance by the soloist and the orchestra brought an ovation from the audience of 10,000.

LANCASTER, OHIO
EAGLE-GAZETTE
JUL 25 1951

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

A BOSTON dowager presented herself at the Pearly Gates, and when Saint Peter asked for her credentials, proudly presented a membership card to the Boston Symphony, ditto to the Athaneum, a pass to the Lowell Lectures at Harvard, and a key to the private park adjoining her Beacon Street domicile.

Saint Peter, duly impressed, remarked, "Come in, madam, by all means—but I don't think you'll like it!"

* * *

David Appel's new book, "Commanche," is a story of Custer's Last Stand, as told from the standpoint of the horse who was the only living creature to survive the attack. On the radio, Mary Margaret McBride asked Appel, "Do you give your readers the real low down on what actually transpired?" "Straight from the horse's mouth," quipped Appel.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
AUG 3 - [illegible]

Women of Audiences at Tanglewood Get Real Dressing-Down

LENOX, Aug. 2—Sibelius and shorts, Stravinsky and slacks really don't mix. It's . . . well, it's just not chic.

One would sooner think of strolling down Tremont st., Boston, in the altogether than appear at Symphony Hall in shorts or slacks.

But at the famous Tanglewood concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a good many women, obviously not Bostonians, have been appearing in outfits more appropriate for the tennis court or the beach.

[illegible] has passed concert offi[illegible] — for they now believe [illegible] even have the tactful solution. [illegible] short wrap-around skirts—sizes [illegible] and large—have been [illegible] and will be discreetly issued to women whose costumes are considered not de[illegible] for listening to classical [illegible].

[illegible] Perhaps Madam Would . . ."

[illegible] Boston Symphony (right) tries to find [illegible] practice swings during [illegible] Lenox. James [illegible] hard hole-in-one at the [illegible] maestro. Stagliano [illegible] exclusive [illegible] the Berkshire Music [illegible] shoes to give [illegible] appearance to conform to [illegible] The eight [illegible] were swapped [illegible] for opened one on a [illegible] some [illegible] served [illegible] There [illegible] no [illegible] The ushers [illegible] suggest decorously that [illegible] madam would care for a [illegible] Jazz [illegible] lovers may wear outlandish costumes listening to their [illegible] music, but at the symphony—please!

[130]

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
MAR 4 - 1951

Koussevitzky Announces Summer Plans for the Berkshire Music Center

The Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, has announced that students are already enrolling for its ninth session, July 2 to August 12. The Center is a Summer music school maintained at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts.

A special feature will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," to be conducted by Dr Koussevitzky and staged by Boris Goldovsky. This will mark Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera. Another innovation will be a special course for music teachers, called "Music for Music Educators," to be sponsored by Augustus D. Zanzig, the director of music in the Brookline Public Schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky as director, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join the composition department. In the department of instrumental music and conducting will be Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet.

Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty, will be away on a leave of absence. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the choral activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson. The Festival Chorus will perform Beethoven's Missa Solemnis under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The Small Choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart Mass in the Bach-Mozart series.

The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

Student aid grants from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund are available for all departments, as well as such special awards as the Heifetz Award for violinists, the Crofts and Wechsler prizes in composition and the Mann awards for instrumental players. Inquiries should be addressed to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
MAR 6 - 1951

Students are enrolling now for the ninth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the six-week summer school directed by Dr, Serge Koussevitzky in the Berkshires. An announcement from Boston Symphony Hall in Boston states that student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments and that special awards include the Heifetz Award for violinists, the Crofts and Wechsler prizes in composition and the Mann awards for instrumental players.

Inquiries regarding the school should be addressed to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

The school will open July 2 and continue sessions through Aug. 12. A special feature this summer will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame", with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting and Boris Goldovsky as stage director. Another innovation will be a special course for music teachers, called Music for Music Educators. This will be supervised by Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music in the Brookline, Mass., public schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland serving as assistant director. Luigi Dallapiccola, Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Mr. Copland in the composition department In the department of instrumental music and conducting Dr. Koussevitzky will have Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet as assistants.

Hugh Ross will again be in charge of choral activities with Alfred Nash Patterson as assistant. The Festival Chorus will perform Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in the Berkshire Festival series. The small choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart Mass in the Bach-Mozart series.

Principal players of the Boston Symphony will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division headed by Gregor Piatigorsky and William Kroll. Other teachers in this department will be Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
FEB 11 1951

Tanglewood Pupils Enroll

Special to The Blade

LENOX, Mass., March 10—The Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, has announced that students are already enrolling for its ninth session, July 2 to Aug. 12. The Center is a summer music school maintained at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts.

A special feature of this summer's session will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and staged by Boris Goldovsky. This will mark Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera.

Another innovation will be a special course for music teachers, called Music for Music Educators, to be supervised by Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music in the Brookline, Mass., public schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky as director with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Luigi Dallapiccola, Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Mr. Copland in the composition department. In the department of instrumental music and conducting, Dr. Koussevitzky will have as assistants Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet.

Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty, will be away on a leave of absence. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the choral activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson.

The Festival Chorus will perform Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The Small Choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart mass in the Bach-Mozart series. The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
3/8/51

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Faculty For Music Center

The Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Director, has announced that students are already enrolling for its ninth session, July 2 to August 12. The Center is a summer music school maintained at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts. A special feature of this summer's session will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame", to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and staged by Boris Goldovsky. This will mark Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera. Another innovation will be a special course for music teachers, called Music for Music Educators, to be supervised by Augustus D. Zanzig, the director of music in the Brookline (Mass.) public schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky as Director with Aaron Copland as Assistant Director. Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Mr. Copland in the Composition Department. In the department of instrumental music and conducting, Dr. Koussevitzky will have as assistants Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet. Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty will be away on a leave of absence. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the choral activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson. The Festival Chorus will perform Beethoven's Missa Solemnis under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The Small Choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart Mass in the Bach-Mozart series. The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillett and Ruth Posselt.

(Continued from Page One)

Students at the Music Center will attend the fifteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival (July 7-August 12) conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, who will visit Tanglewood for the first time, and Eleazar de Carvalho. The school will present about 40 performances during its six week session, including choral, operatic, orchestral and chamber-music concerts. Music lovers who contribute to the support of the school through the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to these concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments, as well as such special awards as the Heifetz Award for violinists, the Crofts and Wechsler prizes in composition and the Mann awards for instrumental players. Inquiries should be addressed to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAR 11 1951

Tanglewood School Set For Summer

THE Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director, has announced that students are already enrolling for its ninth session, July 2 to Aug. 12. The Center is a summer music school maintained at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts. A special feature of this summer's session will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and staged by Boris Goldovsky. This will mark Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera. Another innovation will be a special course for music teachers, called Music for Music Educators, to be supervised by Augustus D. Zanzig, the director of music in the Brookline, Mass., public schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky as director with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Mr. Copland in the Composition Department. In the department of instrumental music and conducting, Dr. Koussevitzky will have as assistants Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet. Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty will be away on a leave of absence.

HUGH ROSS will again be in charge of the special activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson. The Festival Chorus will perform Beethoven's Missa Solemnis under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The Small Choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart Mass in the Bach-Mozart series. The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

Students at the Music Center will attend the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival (July 7-Aug. 12) conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, who will visit Tanglewood for the first time, and Eleazar de Carvalho. The school will present about 40 performances during its six week session, including choral, operatic, orchestral and chamber-music concerts. Music lovers who contribute to the support of the school through the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to these concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments, as well as such special awards as the Heifetz Award for violinists, the Crofts and Wechsler prizes in composition and the Mann awards for instrumental players. Inquiries should be addressed to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAR 5 - 1951

Session Berkshire Summer

...o The Hartford Times
... The Berkshire Music
...r. Serge Koussevitzky
...as announced that stu-
...already enrolling for its
...ion, July 2 to Aug. 12.
...r is a summer music
...intained at Tanglewood
...ton Symphony Orches-
...nection with its Berk-
...val concerts.
...l feature of this sum-
...on will be a production
...and 31 of Tchaikovsky's
...me," to be conducted
...oussevitzky and staged
... Goldovsky. This will
... Koussevitzky's first
... in this country as a
...of opera. Another in-
...ill be a special course
... teachers, called Music
... Educators, to be super-
...ugustus D. Zanzig, the ... music in the Brookline
...ublic schools and lec-
... music education at
...niversity.

* * *

...CULTY will be headed
...ussevitzky as director,
... Copland as assistant
...
...lapiccola, eminent Ital-
...er, will come to this
... the first time to join
...d in the Cosmopolitan
...
...lepartment of instru-
...ic and conducting, Dr.
...y will have as as-
...chard Burgin, Eleazar
..., Lukas Foss, Seymour
...d Howard Shanet.
...ernstein, for several
...mber of the conducting
...ll be away on a leave
...
...oss will again be in
... the choral activities,
... Alfred Nash Patterson.
...l Chorus will perform
...s Missa Solemnis un-
...ection of Dr. Koussevit-
...he Berkshire Festival
... Small Choir will per-
...al Bach choral works
...art Mass in the Bach-
...ies.
...ncipal players of the
...mphony Orchestra will
...ction in orchestral play-
... chamber music in the
...t which Gregor Piati-
...head and William Kroll
...head. Other teachers
...department are Jean
...alph Berkowitz, Lukas
...nand Gillet and Ruth

* * *

...NTS at the Music Cen-
...ttend the 15 concerts of ...hire Festival (July 7-
...conducted by Dr. Kous-
... Charles Munch, who will
...lewood for the first time,
...ar de Carvalho. The ...ll present about 40 per-
... during its six week
...cluding choral, operatic,
... and chamber-music
... Music lovers who con-
... the support of the school
...he Friends of the Berk-
...ic Center are invited to
...certs.
... aid grants from the
...d Revolving Scholarship
... available for all depart-
... well as such special
... the Heifetz Award for
... the Crofts and Wechs-
... in composition and the
...ards for instrumental
... Inquiries should be ad-
...o the Berkshire Music
...ymphony Hall, Boston

This Clipping From
JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN PATRIOT
APR 5 - 1951

The Berkshire music center, the summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra in connection with its Berkshire festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will hold auditions for admission to its opera department on Saturday, April 14, in Chicago. The auditions will be held in Roosevelt college recital hall, Room 745, 430 S. Michigan Ave. An accompanist will be present.

The music center's ninth session will open at Tanglewood July 2 and continue until Aug. 12.

Among the school's major opera productions in recent seasons have "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring" by Benjamin Britten, Mozart's "Idomeneo and "La Finta Giardiniera," Rossini's "Turk in Italy," Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris" and Ibert's "The King of Yvetot." In addition, students in the opera department present programs of shorter works and opera scenes.

Singers who plan to audition, should, if possible, notify the school office in advance—Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Music lovers heard with regret Kirsten Flagstad's decision to end her association with the Metropolitan Opera. She announced her decision last week in an interview with newsmen in her dressing room between acts of "Tristan und Isolde." She said that would be her final appearance with the Met.

This Clipping From
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAR 1 - 1951

MUSIC CENTER PLEAS ALREADY ROLLING IN

Opening at Tanglewood Still Four Months Away

The 1951 opening of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood is still four months away but its director, Serge Koussevitzky, said in Boston today that applications already are being received.

The center, an advanced school for serious students of music, usually accepts about 450 students for its courses which run from July 2 to Aug. 12, ending simultaneously with the final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky will head the faculty, assisted by Aaron Copland, American composer. To the usual courses in orchestra and chamber music performance and conducting, the opera, choral music and composition, there will be added this year a new one in music for the music educator.

Students at the school will take part in about 40 productions, incidental to their studies, which will be open to Friends of the Music Center, an organization composed of those who contribute to the support of the school in any amount.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
MAR 20 1951

The Berkshire Music Center, the summer music school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced auditions for admission to its opera department. They will be held March 28 at 1 p.m. in the chapter room of Carnegie Hall, 154 West 57th street, New York; and in Carnegie recital hall, 154 West 57th street, New York, on March 29 at 1 p.m. An accompanist will be present.

Those planning to audition should notify the school office, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass., by March 26.

The Center's ninth session will open at Tanglewood on July 2 and continue for six weeks to Aug. 12.

Major productions of the department in recent seasons have included "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring" by Benjaming Britten, Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "Finta Giardiniera,," Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris" and Ibert's "The King of Yvetot."

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAR 11 1951

Tanglewood School Set For Summe

THE Berkshire Music Cent
Serge Koussevitzky, d has announced that studen
already enrolling for its session, July 2 to Aug. 12.
Center is a summer music maintained at Tanglewood
Boston Symphony Orches connection with its Berkshir tival concerts. A special fea this summer's session will production on July 30 and Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dam be conducted by Dr. Kouss and staged by Boris Gold
This will mark Dr. Koussev first appearance in this cou a conductor of opera. Anot novation will be a special for music teachers, called for Music Educators, to be vised by Augustus D. Zanz director of music in the Br
Mass., public schools and on music education at University.

The faculty will be he
Dr. Koussevitzky as direc
Aaron Copland as assista
tor; Luigi Dallapiccola,
Italian composer, will co country for the first tim
Mr. Copland in the Co
Department. In the depa instrumental music and ing, Dr. Koussevitzky wi assistants Richard Burgi de Carvalho, Lukas Foss
Lipkin and Howard Sha ard Bernstein, for seve member of the conduct will be away on a leave

HUGH ROSS will a charge of the sp ties, assisted by Alfred terson. The Festival perform Beethoven's M nis under the direct Koussevitzky in the Festival series. The S will perform several works and a Mozart
Bach-Mozart series. T players of the Boston
Orchestra will give ins orchestral playing and music in the division
Gregor Piatigorsky is William Kroll asso
Other teachers in this are Jean Bedetti, Ral witz, Lukas Foss, Fer and Ruth Posselt.

Students at the Mu will attend the 15 conc Berkshire Festival (Ju
12) conducted by Dr.
zky, Charles Munch, wh
Tanglewood for the first Eleazar de Carvalho. T will present about 40 per during its six-week sea
ing choral, operatic, and chamber-music conc lovers who contribute to port of the school thr
Friends of the Berkshi Center are invited to t certs. Student aid grants
Tanglewood Revolving S Fund are available for ments, as well as such awards as the Heifetz A violinists, the Crofts and prizes in composition
Mann awards for ins players. Inquiries shou dressed to the Berkshi
Center, Symphony Hall,
15, Mass.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

inth Session or Berkshire his Summer

pecial to The Hartford Times
oston — The Berkshire Music
nter, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, ector, has announced that stunts are already enrolling for its th session, July 2 to Aug. 12.
e Center is a summer music
ool maintained at Tanglewood
the Boston Symphony Orches-in connection with its Berkre Festival concerts.
A special feature of this sum-r's session will be a production
July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's ique Dame," to be conducted
Dr. Koussevitzky and staged Boris Goldovsky. This will rk Dr. Koussevitzky's first pearance in this country as a nductor of opera. Another in-vation will be a special course
r music teachers, called Music r Music Educators, to be super-ed by Augustus D. Zanzig, the rector of music in the Brookline
Mass. public schools and lecrer on music education at arvard University.

• • •

THE FACULTY will be headed
Dr. Koussevitzky as director,
th Aaron Copland as assistant rector.
Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Ital-n composer, will come to this ountry for the first time to join
Mr. Copland in the Cosmopolitan Department.
In the department of instruental music and conducting, Dr.
Koussevitzky will have as assistants Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour
Lipkin and Howard Shanet.
Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty, will be away on a leave of absence.
Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the choral activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson.
The Festival Chorus will perform
Beethoven's Missa Solemnis under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The Small Choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart Mass in the Bach-
Mozart series.
The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean
Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas
Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

• • •

STUDENTS at the Music Cener will attend the 15 concerts of he Berkshire Festival (July 7-ug. 12) conducted by Dr. Kousevitzky, Charles Munch, who will isit Tanglewood for the first time, nd Eleazar de Carvalho. The chool will present about 40 perormances during its six week ession, including choral, operatic, rchestral and chamber-music oncerts. Music lovers who con-ribute to the support of the school hrough the Friends of the Berk-hire Music Center are invited to hese concerts.
Student aid grants from the anglewood Revolving Scholarship und are available for all depart-ents, as well as such special wards as the Heifetz Award for olinists, the Crofts and Wechsr prizes in composition and the ann awards for instrumental yers. Inquiries should be adssed to the Berkshire Music
nter, Symphony Hall, Boston
Mass.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
MAR 2 - 1951

Music Center Plans Course For Teachers

BOSTON—A special course for music teachers, to be called "Music for Music Educators," will be inaugurated at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this season, it was announced today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director.

The course will be supervised by Augustus D. Zanzig, director of music in the Brookline public schools and lecturer on music education at Harvard University. The Center season will run from July 2 to Aug. 12.

The faculty will be headed by Dr. Koussevitzky as director with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Mr. Copland in the composition department. In the department of instrumental music and conducting, Dr. Koussevitzky will have as assistants Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet. Leonard Bernstein, for several years a member of the conducting faculty, will be away on a leave of absence.

Ross Here Again

Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the choral activities, assisted by Alfred Nash Patterson. The Festival chorus will perform Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky in the Berkshire Festival series. The small choir will perform several Bach choral works and a Mozart mass in the Bach-Mozart series. The principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give instruction in orchestral playing and in chamber music in the division of which Gregor Piatigorsky is head and William Kroll associate head. Other teachers in this department are Jean Bedetti, Ralph Berkowitz, Lukas Foss, Fernand Gillet and Ruth Posselt.

Students at the Music Center will attend the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival (July 7-Aug. 12) conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, who will visit Tanglewood for the first time, and Eleazar de Carvalho. The school will present about 40 performances during its six-week session, including choral, operatic, orchestral and chamber-music concerts. Music lovers who contribute to the support of the school through the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to these concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund are available for all departments, as well as such special awards as the Heifetz award for violinists, the Crofts and Wechsler prizes in composition and the Mann awards for instrumental players.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 59,933) (S 74,779)

This Clipping From PHOENIX, ARIZ.
REPUBLIC
MAY 1-1 1951

3 Young Symphony Members Win Berkshire Scholarships

Three Phoenix Symphony Orchestra players, who are students at Arizona State College at Tempe, have won scholarships for six-week summer sessions at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass.

Interviewed by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Phoenix winter resident, who heads the center, the boys are Neil Shafer, 806 East Cambridge Avenue; James, Mooney, 1909 West Monte Vista Road; and Fred Bradford, Yuma.

SHAFER, 18 YEARS old, a violinist, became a member of the Phoenix Symphony at the age of 14 and for two years was its youngest player. In 1950, he won a scholarship to the Tempe college Music Camp and another to the Music Academy of the West, Santa Barbara, Calif.

His brother, Morton, French horn player, is in his third year scholarship at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y. They are the sons of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Shafer.

Mooney, 21, solo clarinetist with the Phoenix orchestra, has won several music scholarships, including those to the music camps at Tempe and Arrowhead in California.

BRADFORD, ALSO 21, has been a member of the Phoenix Symphony three years as a French horn player. Previously, he studied with Joseph Eger, formerly first French horn player in the Los Angeles Philharmonic, now with the Israel Philharmonic.

Although the three have won tuition scholarships, they will need financial assistance for traveling and maintaining residence at the Massachusetts music center. Anyone interested in helping them may call Mrs. Albert Speetor, 933 West Willetta Street, or the Phoenix Jewish News Office, 528 West Granada Road.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 1 - 1951

TANGLEWOOD ALUMNI GIVE CHORAL CONCERT

The Tanglewood Alumni Chorus a group of nineteen women and eleven men who at one time or other have studied at the Berkshire Music Center, gave a program last night at Times Hall that was billed as its "First Annual Spring Concert." The chorus was led by its organizer, Margaret Hillis, a former student of Robert Shaw.

Excellent taste characterized both the music selected and the way it was performed. The group is not a virtuoso chorus that goes in for trick effects, but it is versatile enough to sing in a variety of styles. It produced a blended tone that was responsive to shading. Its enunciation was clear and its intonation true, and, although nearly everything was in foreign languages, there was an unusual sensitivity to textual meanings.

Bach's Cantata No. 21, "Ich hatte viel Bekuemerniss," was the major item of the program. For this, the singers enlisted the cooperation of a chamber orchestra of instrumentalists who also have attended the Berkshire Music Center. Louise Leckland stepped out of the chorus to sing the alto solos. The more exacting solos were sung by Erna Gwillim, a talented singer with a clear flexible soprano; Simon George, tenor, and Douglas Sarchet, bass.

The reverent approach and the close following of the work's moods, from introspective personal grief to a joyous, reaffirmation of faith, made the cantata have some of the moving power Bach planned for it.

Marenzio Gesuldo, des Pres, Le Jeune and Costeley were the early composers represented on the program. The chorus also sang Brahms' Five Part-Songs, Op. 104; Three Chansons by Debussy and Robert Starer's attractive Five Proverbs on Love, in which each of the proverbs was sung in a different language.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUL 29 1951

Berkshire Students To Give 'Pique Dame'

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 28. — Under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, nationally-known opera expert and head of the Tanglewood opera department, students at the Berkshire Music Center this week will give two performances of Tchaikovsky's Pique Dame, or, The Queen of Spades.

Written and first produced in Russia in 1890, this melodramatic story of a tragedy and mystery is regarded as one of Tchaikovsky's best works. Its Tanglewood production, originally scheduled to be Serge Koussevitzky's first direction of opera in America, before his death June 4, will be held on Monday and Tuesday evenings with audiences primarily composed of members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose voluntary contributions help support the work of the school, now in its ninth season.

Three Berkshire Festival symphony concerts will be given in Tanglewood's Music Shed this week. Charles Munch, music director, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two of these concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct on Sunday afternoon, with Jorge Bolet as piano soloist on part of that program.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH
APR 15 1951

Music And Music Makers

Boris Goldovsky

By Thomas B. Sherman

AT a time when many of our larger musical institutions, including the Metropolitan Opera Company, are facing a possible curtailment of their activities or worse, it is distinctly refreshing—if only for its novelty—to encounter an optimist in the field of music. So without further ado let's introduce our optimist. He is Boris Goldovsky, head of the Opera Division of the Berkshire Music Center, director of the Opera School at the New England Conservatory of Music and the founder and director of the New England Opera Theater.

As a result of his experiences in all three institutions, Goldovsky not only believes that it is possible to establish and maintain opera in America, on a fairly widespread scale, but that the process has already started. "Something is cooking," he says. "It may not be a Lucullan feast, but it's a beginning."

Goldovsky made two speeches at Washington University last week on opera and later on, in conversation, expanded a number of his central ideas. First of all he is hopeful about opera in the United States because of his own success in Boston. The New England Opera Theater has been in operation for five years, presenting a repertory consisting in equal parts of novelties and established favorites. This theater has already found its public. About 20 performances were given last season in Boston and other New England cities. They were all attended and in most cases were sold out.

★ ★ ★

THIS OPERA does not "pay for itself." It isn't possible for this form of art to be self-sustaining, he says, if it is presented under respectable artistic conditions which would necessarily include the use of an auditorium of not more than 3000 seats and appropriately thorough preparation. Even so the New England Opera Company subsists on a remarkably small budget and the deficit hasn't been difficult to raise because the public response to opera as good theater has been so enthusiastic.

Opera as good theater is the controlling idea.

"Any form of art is moribund" he said, "if it is not alive in all its parts. It isn't artistic opera and it isn't live theater if the production is carried solely by a few beautiful voices or an imported personality from Hollywood or fancy settings."

Opera must be dramatically believable and it can be made so in our time only by applying fundamental principles of good singing and good acting through modern techniques.

★ ★ ★

IN HIS OWN PRODUCTIONS Goldovsky naturally assembles the best voices he can command. Stars are not essential, and in some cases the purely vocal aspects of some individual performances may be short of the highest standard. But when the opera as a whole is ablaze with life and the dramatic narrative is being transmitted vividly and intelligibly to the audience, single performances as such become secondary.

Moreover Goldovsky has found that a singer's voice improves when he knows—really knows—and therefore feels what he is singing and is not engaged in articulating vowels separated by consonants.

A fundamental principle of his operatic theater, therefore, is that the singing actor must not only know his own part—its text, its music, its psychological motivation, its appropriate gestures and movements—but the whole opera. No prompter is used and no assistant director is backstage to see that the actors make their entrances on time. Goldovsky believes from experience that the initiative of the singer who knows the opera can be relied on.

★ ★ ★

A COLLATERAL PRINCIPLE is that the life of the play originates with the player. "All the music" he says "must be the result of the action on the stage. All action, of course, is not movement. It may be in the idea expressed by words."

The singer therefore doesn't wait for a cue chord. It's a matter of microscopic timing but the singer sings when his time comes and what the orchestra plays is a reinforcement and an intensification. The singing actor doesn't look at the conductor.

Goldovsky asks too that the singer should "have no thoughts, while on the stage except for the part he is playing."

★ ★ ★

OPERA IN ENGLISH, in an English speaking country is an essential to Goldovsky's conception of live, believable opera. He approaches it, however, from a personal angle. "It's more important" he says, "that it should be sung in the language of the singers than of the audience." The audience should know what's happening; but it's even more fundamental that there should be an immediacy of feeling between the singer and the words he uses.

Goldovsky believes that conditions in many American communities are not essentially different from Boston; and he says that many operatic activities are in progress in schools and universities. None of these may be earth shaking at the moment. But the seeds have been planted.

One of Goldovsky's chief reasons for coming to Washington University was to give encouragement and counsel to incipient operatic plans of the institution's Music Department. Funds are already available for one full scale production next season to be accompanied by intensive study of scenes from other operas. The cast will be chosen by auditions from singers throughout the St. Louis area.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,424) (S 23,016)

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT
MAY 6 1951

AUDITIONS FOR

. . . players of all orchestral instruments interested in application and scholarships at the summer session of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Mass will be held at Orchestra Hall in Chicago on Thursday May 10 at 1:00 p. m. The center's ninth session will open on July 2 and close on August 12. The Berkshire Music center is the summer school of music maintained at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky is director of the Center and heads its department of instrumental music. Aaron Copland is assistant director and head of the composition department. The instrumental faculty includes Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll and 23 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Applicants, if possible, should notify the school office that they will attend these auditions. The address is Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, 15, Mass.

EUGENE ORMANDY

. . . music director of the Philadelphia orchestra will conduct [illegible] concerts in eight European [illegible] June and Se[illegible] [illegible] in

[13a]

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
APR 7 - 1951

Berkshire Music Center To Have Auditions In Buffalo

THE Berkshire Music Center, which opens its ninth session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on July 2, will hold auditions in Buffalo for instrumental musicians interested in attending the center, on Saturday afternoon, May 12, the time and place to be announced later.

The Center is maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with the Berkshire Festival concerts. Serge Koussevitzky is director and head of the orchestral conducting department. Members of the faculty include the first-desk men and leading players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The work of the Center is carried on through five departments: Instrumental Music, Choral Music, Composition, Opera and a department for the music educator and the general student and amateur.

Boris Goldovsky heads the Opera Department, and Augustus D. Zanzig will supervise the work of that for educators. Assisting Dr. Koussevitzky will be Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin and Howard Shanet. Leonard Bernstein is on leave of absence.

Luigi Dallapiccola, leading Italian composer, will be, with Aaron Copland, composer-in-residence at the school this year. Mr. Dallapiccola's new opera, "The Prisoner," was presented for the first time in this hemisphere in March by the Juilliard School of Music.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 156,554) (S 207,593)

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAY 1 - 1951

Auditions for Tanglewood

Auditions for players of all orchestral instruments who are interested in attending this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held in the Cleveland area at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music Warner Hall on Saturday, May 5, from 9 a. m. to 11 a. m. and in Cincinnati at the Baldwin Piano Company store, 142 West 4th St on Saturday, May 6 at 10 a. m.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 54,383)

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
MAY 5 - 1951

Auditions in Toronto For Berkshire Centre

Auditions for players of all orchestral instruments who are interested in applying for admission and scholarship at the Berkshire Music Centre, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, will be held in Toronto at the Royal Conservatory of Music on Saturday, May 12, at 9:00 a.m.

The Centre's ninth session will open on July 2 and close on August 12.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER
APR 28 1951

Hold Audition For Berkshire Center

Auditions for players of all orchestral instruments who wish to enter the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., will be held in Cincinnati at the Baldwin Piano Co. store, 142 W. Fourth St. on Sunday, May 6, at 10 a. m. This also applies to those wishing scholarship aid.

The Berkshire Music Center is the summer music school maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in connection with its Berkshire Festival Concerts there. The school's ninth session will open on July 2 and close August 12.

Serge Koussevitzsky, Director of the Music Center, heads its Department of Instrumental Music. Aaron Copland, assistant director, heads the Composition Department. The instrumental faculty includes Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll and 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS
APR 26 1951

Auditions Set May 11 For Music Center

Auditions for instrumental applicants for the Berkshire Music Center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directing, will be held Friday, May 11, in Hill Auditorium under auspices of a Boston Symphony Orchestra committee.

Students already are enrolling for the ninth session of the Music Center, scheduled July 2 to Aug. 12 at Tanglewood, Mass.

There are three orchestras, a chorus, and departments for composing, conducting, opera and chamber music. There also will be provision for music teachers.

Information may be obtained through G. W. Rector, assistant to the president of the University Musical Society, Burton Memorial Tower.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
APR 16 1951

Tanglewood School Holds Auditions

BOSTON — Final auditions for applicants for the student orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center will be held in Boston at Symphony Hall Friday, April 20 at 10 AM by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are members of the Music Center faculty.

The Music Center, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, is directed by Serge Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland as assistant director. The school's ninth session will open July 2 and continue until Aug. 12.

Candidates should, if possible, notify the school office in advance of their intention to appear.

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
MAY 2 - 1951

Berkshire Center To Test Applicants

Auditions for instrumentalists applying for admission and scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held here 2 p. m. Friday at Carnegie Institute of Technology. The center is the summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival Concerts. Serge Koussevitzky is director.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
APR 7 - 1951

Berkshire Opera Auditions at Chicago

The Berkshire Music Center, summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, will hold auditions for admission to its opera department Saturday, April 14, at Roosevelt College recital hall, room 745, 450 South Michigan Ave., Chicago. An accompanist will be present.

Singers who plan to attend the auditions should, if possible, notify the school office in advance: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
APR 15 1951

Auditions Friday for Berkshire Orchestras

Final auditions for applicants for the student orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center will be held in Boston at Symphony Hall next Friday at 10 a. m. by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are members of the Music Center faculty.

The Music Center, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood, is directed by Serge Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland as assistant director. The school's ninth session will open on July 2 and continue until Aug. 12.

Candidates should, if possible, notify the school office in advance of their intention to appear. Address Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 16 1951

Tanglewood Tryouts Friday at Symphony

Final auditions for applicants for the student orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center will be held in Boston at Symphony Hall next Friday, at 10 A. M., by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are members of the Music Center faculty.

The Music Center, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood, is directed by Serge Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland as assistant director. The school's ninth session will open on July 2 and continue until Aug. 12.

Candidates should, if possible, notify the school office in advance of their intention to appear. Address Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
APR 15 1951

TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL AUDITIONS FRIDAY

Final auditions for applicants for the student orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center will be held in Boston at Symphony Hall on Friday, at 10 a. m. by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who are members of the Music Center faculty.

The Music Center, maintained by the Boston Symphony in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, is directed by Serge Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland as assistant director. The school's ninth session will open July 2 and continue until Aug. 12. Candidates should, if possible, notify the school office in advance of their intention to appear. Address Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
MAR 25 1951

Berkshire Center To Hold Auditions

The Berkshire Music Center, the summer music school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will hold auditions for admission to the opera department Friday morning, starting at 10 o'clock, in Symphony Hall, Boston. An accompanist will be present. Those who plan to attend the auditions should notify the school office, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

This summer's major opera production will be Tschaikowski's "Pique Dame" which will be prepared under the direction of Boris Goldovsky. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct performances of the opera July 30 and 31 and Aug. 1. Students in the opera department also present programs of shorter works and opera scenes.

Among the department's opera productions in recent seasons were Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring," Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "Finta Giardiniera," Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris" and Ibert's "The King of Yvetot."

This Clipping From LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL
APR 29 1951

Auditions Opened to Area Musicians

The Berkshire Music center, which annually is held at Tanglewood, Mass., announces opportunity for auditions for instrumental applicants in this area. The center opens July 2.

Romeo Tata, conductor of the Lansing symphony, has received announcements of auditions to be held in Ann Arbor, May 11. An accompanist is provided.

Pianists may also enter. The auditions will be conducted by a faculty committee from the Boston symphony orchestra.

The Berkshire Music Center has three orchestras, a chorus, and departments for composing, conducting, opera and chamber music. Special provision for music teachers is made. G. W. Rector, Burton Tower, Ann Arbor, is in charge of audition appointments.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 11 1951

Berkshire Auditions

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold auditions for instrumentalists who wish to join the student orchestras at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for this summer's session next Wednesday and Thursday in Carnegie Hall. Tympanists and harpists will be heard backstage in the main hall Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock; stringed instrument players will be heard in the Recital Hall Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, followed by woodwind players at 11 o'clock, and brass instrument players and pianists at noon. If possible, candidates should notify the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, in advance.

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
MAR 16 1951

Tanglewood Audition Dates Announced

The Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, will hold auditions in New York for admission to its opera department March 28 and 29, it was announced today. Auditions will be held in the chapter room of Carnegie Hall, 154 West 57th street at 1 p. m. An accompanist will be present.

If possible, those planning to attend the audition should notify the school office: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, by Monday, March 26.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
APR 2[illegible] 1951

Music Center Auditions May 10

Times Special

CHICAGO, Apr. 28— Auditions for orchestral instrument students seeking admission or scholarships to this summer's Berkshire Music Center term will be held in Orchestra Hall here May 10 at 1 p. m.

The Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is the summer music school maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts. With Serge Koussevitzky as director and Aaron Copland as assistant director, the school numbers Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll and 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its faculty.

Inquiries should be addressed to: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
[illegible] 1951

Berkshire Center Auditions Scheduled

Auditions for admission to the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will take place in New York at 1 p. m. on Wednesday, Mar. 28, in the Chapter Room of Carnegie Hall and on Thursday, Mar. 29, in Carnegie Recital Hall. An accompanist will be present.

Candidates who plan to attend should, if possible, notify the school office, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, not later than Mar. 26. The opera department, which offers major full-length opera productions each season, as well as shorter works and scenes, will this year produce Tchaikovsky's "Pigue Dame," staged by Boris Goldovsky and with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting opera for the first time in this country.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

Berkshire Auditions to Be Held Friday

The Berkshire Music Center, the Summer Music School of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will hold auditions in Boston for admission to the Opera Department, next Friday at 10 a. m. at Symphony Hall. An accompanist will be present.

The Center's ninth session will open at Tanglewood on July 2 and continue for six weeks to Aug. 12.

Among the department's major productions of full-length operas in recent seasons have been "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring" by Benjamin Britten; Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "Finta Giardiniera"; Rossini's "The Turk in Italy"; Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tauris" and Ibert's "The King of Yvetot." In addition the students in the Opera Department present programs of shorter works and opera scenes.

Those who plan to come to the auditions should, if possible, notify the school office—Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass., by Monday.

SONNTAGSB
Schauplatz

Die T usikfeste i
ED LOW
haben über die bevorste-Musikfeste in Deutsch-d Österreich berichtet und reiche Programm der ein-Veranstaltungen in großen n bekanntgegeben. Die ochen in Amerika be-ten sich im Wesentlichen ei Veranstaltungen, deren

THE ORIGIN
ROME
PRESS CLIPP
220 W. 19th St., NEW YO
Tel. CHelsea 3-
Cir. (D 151,192

This Clipping Fro
MINNEAPOLIS, M
MORNING TRIB
JUN 3 - 1951

Music Fe Peak Here

LATE SPRING and music festivals, in the States and abroad, will in greater profusion
riety, and in more place at any time since the the war. Among the A festivals are:

St. Louis Municipal une 7-Sept. 12: Eleven ttas and musicals in op
heater, Forest park.

Tanglewood season,
ire Music Center,
ly 7-Aug. 12; Bach-Hayd rt series under Serge vitzky (three week-ends
ree series of three co
ch (July 26-Aug. 12) ussevitzky, Charles M d others.

Aspen, Colo., Summer festival, July 2 to Aug.
certs, courses, lectures, n Rosenstock, musical or.

ourteenth annual Bach
, Carmel, Calif., July
Gastone Usigli, conducto

th annual composers nce and chamber mus ter, Bennington college, V
Aug. 12-25.

Among the European fe
s are:

stival of Britain, Ju October: British conte music, Cheltenha
2-13; Benjamin Britt
l, Aldeburgh June 8-1 choirs' festival, Worce
pt. 2-7; Welsh Nation
od, Llanrwst Aug. 6-1
ral concerts, opera a London, June and July burgh International fe
Aug. 19-Sept. 8;

Schauplatz der Festkonzerte in Tanglewood

Die Theaterhalle und das Rasenvorgelände

Musikfeste in Amerika und Europa

Von FRED LOW

Wir haben über die bevorstehenden Musikfeste in Deutschland und Österreich berichtet und das überreiche Programm der einzelnen Veranstaltungen in großen Umrissen bekanntgegeben. Die Musikwochen in Amerika beschränken sich im Wesentlichen auf zwei Veranstaltungen, deren eine in Tanglewood, die andere in Aspen (Colorado) stattfinden. Das genaue Programm der Berkshire Festspiele die vom Boston Symphonie Orchester ausgeführt werden, liegt nun vor. Die Hauptdirigenten sind Serge Koussevitzky und Charles Munch, die Serie der ersten sechs Veranstaltungen die von Koussevitzky geleitet werden umfaßt Kompositionen von Bach, Haydn und Mozart. Hervorzuheben sind die beiden Konzerte für drei Klaviere von Bach (C-Dur und D-Moll) von Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz vorgetragen, Seymour Lipkin spielt das Klavierkonzert D-Dur und Gregor Piatigorsky das Cellokonzert von Haydn, Lukas Foss ist im Klavierkonzert in Es (K 271) von Mozart zu hören. Die sechs Veranstaltungen nehmen Samstag, 7. Juli ihren Anfang und werden durch drei Wochen fortgesetzt, die Konzerte sind Samstag abend und Sonntag nachmittag.

Die großen Konzerte beginnen Donnerstag, 26. Juli, mit einer Serie von fünf Veranstaltungen von Charles Munch und einem Konzert von Eleazar de Carvalho dirigiert. Das Programm umfaßt zum großen Teil Werke, die anläßlich der Bostoner Abonnementskonzerte in New York schon zu hören waren. — Erwähnenswert die "Symphonie Fantastique" von Berlioz, und Kompositionen von Barber, Copland, Mennin, Bartok als Vertreter der Zeitgenossen. Mitwirkende Solisten sind Claudio Arrau, und Jorge Bolet. — Das Finale der Berkshire Festspiele sind drei Veranstaltungen von Koussevitzky dirigiert mit der Missa Solemnis Beethovens als Höhepunkt. Die Konzerte finden an Donnerstagen, Samstagen und Sonntag nachmittagen statt.

Die Berkshire Festspiele sind trotz ihrer großen Anziehungskraft auf die Konzerte des Boston Symphonie Orchesters und einige wenige Veranstaltungen des Music Center und Operndepartments limitiert. Ralph Hawkes schreibt in der ausgezeichneten Musikzeitschrift "Tempo" in Heft 16 eine sehr interessante Abhandlung über die Bedeutung der Festspiele in Tanglewood und wie diese wesentlich größeren Umfang gewinnen könnten. Die Mischung von professionellen und Amateurmusikern in den Veranstaltungen des Music Center und des Operndepartments wird kritisiert, das einzige Berufsorchester sind die Bostoner. Die große Idee, Festwochen, wie sie in Salzburg geboten werden, zu veranstalten, steht zur Diskussion. Interessante Opernwerke in erstklassigen Aufführungen sollten geboten, hervorragende Künstler engagiert und die prachtvolle Landschaft als Rahmen für Freilichtspiele benützt werden. Diese große Idee würde sicherlich die Beachtung aller interessierten Kreise verdienen. Tanglewood könnte so zum Zentrum internationaler Festwochen werden, der Ausbau des Theaters mit nicht allzu großen Kosten erfolgen und erstrangige Künstler, Solisten, Bühnenbildner, Regisseure würden mit Freude den Ruf zur Mitarbeit annehmen. Die internationalen Festspiele in Tanglewood sind vorderhand nur ein Traum, der allerdings bei einigem guten Willen zur Wirklichkeit werden könnte.

Festwochen in England

Die Festwochen 1951 in England bringen eine Flut von Veranstaltungen, Konzerte, Opernaufführungen und Kurse, die dem Besucher die Wahl erschweren. Die großen Orchestervereinigungen haben sich in den Dienst des Komitees gestellt, Solisten von Namen sind als Teilnehmer genannt, die Liste der Dirigenten enthält unter anderen: Serge Koussevitzky, Pierre Monteux, Sir Adrian Boult, Leopold Stokowski, Sir John Barbirolli, Josef Krips, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Walter Susskind und Eduard von Beinum. — Fritz Busch wird die Mozartspiele in Glyndebourne leiten, Carl Ebert hat die Regie und das berühmte Sadler Wells Ballett wird eine Reihe neuer Schaffungen vorführen.

Der "Arts Council of Great Britain" hat eine umfangreiche Broschüre erscheinen lassen, die die musikalischen Ereignisse in 23 Städten Großbritanniens im Detail anführt und dem Besucher einen guten Überblick bietet. 17 Orchester sind genannt, Musikfeste, die den großen Komponisten gewidmet sind, wetteifern an Quantität und Qualität. Aufführungen der H-moll-Messe von Bach, des Oratoriums "Elias" von Mendelssohn, vieler Opernwerke Verdis, Mozarts, Kammermusikveranstaltungen sind geplant, eine Fülle, die in der Geschichte der Musikfeste nicht ihresgleichen hat. Einer der Höhepunkte der Saison werden die Edinburgh-Festspiele sein, die vom 19. August bis 8. September stattfinden und das erste europäische Gastspiel der New Yorker Philharmoniker unter den Dirigenten Bruno Walter und Dimitri Mitropoulos bringen; drei Solisten werden an den Konzerten des New Yorker Ensembles teilnehmen: Dame Myra Hess, Zino Francescatti und Rudolf Serkin. Sir Thomas Beecham erscheint mit dem Royal Philharmonic Orchester und Sir John Barbirolli mit dem Halle-Orchester. Die Festwochen Großbritanniens beginnen am 3. Mai und werden bis 30. September fortgeführt.

Frankreich, Italien, Schweiz

Die französischen Musikfeste werden im kommenden Sommer in Perpignan (Casals), Aix en Provence, Toulouse, Bordeaux und Strasbourg abgehalten. Einzelheiten sind bisher nur von den Veranstaltungen in Perpignan veröffentlicht worden. Pablo Casals hat als Leiter der Festwochen (10. Juni bis 5. Juli) Werke von Bach, Beethoven und Mozart in das Programm aufgenommen, die Konzerte werden in dem alten Palast der Könige von Mallorca abgehalten, als Mitwirkende sind unter anderen die Pianisten Myra Hess, Miecislaw Hoszowski, Rudolf Serkin, Leopold Mannes, Eugene Istomin, die Geiger Alexander Schneider, Erica Morini, Isaac Stern, ferner William Primrose (Viola) Jennie Tourel (Sopran) in Aussicht genommen, Pablo Casals leitet das Orchester und wird auch in Solovorträgen zu hören sein; er hat im allgemeinen die gleichen Künstler, die schon im Vorjahr im Bachfest tätig waren für die Veranstaltung in Perpignan wieder verpflichtet.

Während der Sommermonate ist der Schwerpunkt der verschiedenen Feste nach dem Süden verlegt, in Monte Carlo, Nizza, Cannes, Marseille, Toulouse, Aix de Provence, etc., sind eine ganze Reihe größerer Musikveranstaltungen geplant. Festwochen finden auch in Bordeaux und Straßburg statt.

In Italien gibt es in Florenz, neben dem achten Internationalen Musikkongreß große Konzerte und Opernaufführungen, an denen viele ausländische Künstler mitwirken, das ganze Programm ist bis zur Stunde noch nicht erhältlich, doch verdient eine Veranstaltung besonders erwähnt zu werden, da sie etwas aus dem gewöhnlichen Rahmen derartiger Feste fällt. In Ravenna ist die "Byzantinische Woche" vom 6.-13. Mai, in der Konzerte geistlicher Byzantinischer Musik veranstaltet werden.

Die Schweiz ladet zu bedeutenden musikalischen Festen ein, die im Juni stattfinden und gleichzeitig den 600. Jahrestag des Staates Zürich in die Confederation (1351) begehen. Im Stadttheater gibt es Aufführungen von "Othello", mit italienischen Solisten und Fritz Busch als Dirigenten, "Intermezzo" von Richard Strauß, "Entführung aus dem Serail" von Mozart, das moderne Ballett "Abraxas" von Werner Egk, Freilichtaufführungen des "Zigeunerbaron" von Johann Strauß, neue Werke von Frank Martin, Othmar Schoeck, Paul Burghardt, Konzerte von Wiener und Schweizer Orchester. In Luzern dirigieren Furtwängler, Stokowski, Markevitch, Sacher, Schuricht und Karajan vom 11. August bis 2. September; Interlaken bringt Tell-Festspiele.

In unserer Aufstellung fehlen noch viele andere bedeutende Feste, Musikwochen in Holland, Belgien, in den nordischen Staaten, aber der Besucher Europas hat schon ohnehin eine sehr schwierige Wahl, wo er wirklich Auserlesenes finden kann.

Nach den Nachrichten aus Deutschland und Österreich sind die Festspiele in Bayreuth und Salzburg fast ausverkauft, die Nachfrage nach Karten war noch niemals so stark wie für die kommende Saison, und die beiden Städe werden wie bisher die Zentren der musikalischen Feste in Europa sein. — Es ist nur zu hoffen, daß die Erwartungen der Veranstalter in jeder Weise erfüllt werden und die Überfülle der Ereignisse sich nicht negativ auswirkt.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAR 18 1951

Lester Roberts Again to Manage Restaurant for Orchestra, School

Mr., Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely Will Occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge for Summer

Special to The Sunday Republican

Berkshire Hills, March 17—Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, who have a winter home in Mount Dora, Fla., are to return to Lenox the coming season and Mr. Roberts again will be in charge of the Tanglewood cafeteria and restaurant for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music School. For many years Mr. Roberts was manager and part owner of Curtis Hotel and after that property was sold George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, secured the services of Mr. Roberts to establish the restaurant, which has facilities for handling the summer music school with membership of about 500, the faculty and many visitors. Mr. Roberts did such a fine job, not only in establishment, but in seasonal operation that Mr. Judd asked him to come back.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and family of Lake Cottage, Stockbridge, flew this week from La Guardia Field for a two weeks' spring vacation in Bermuda.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely are to occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge the coming season. This is the former summer home of Mrs. Deely's father, Owen Johnson, now of Nantucket.

Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop S. Emmet, New York, who have been spending the winter at Hillfields, Yale Hill, Stockbridge, are to continue their winter occupancy of the house now owned by Miss Rosamond Sherwood. Hillfields was the one time summer home of Miss Helen J. Kobbe and the late Miss Marie O. Kobbe of New York.

Mrs. Peabody Looram is back in Great Barrington from New York, where she met her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Looram, who flew from Rome, where Mr. Looram is vice-consul in the foreign service of the State Department. They expect to be in Washington the coming three months.

Albert Spalding, the violinist, will be the guest of honor at a dinner on April 24 in the Jade Roo msuite of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York, given under auspices of the Musicians Emergency Fund. Mrs. Lytle Hull is president of the fund, Mr. Spalding, vice-president, and Mrs. Frederick Steinway, chairman of the ticket committee.

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
MAR 1 2 1951

Berkshire Music Center To Audition This Week

Westchester instrumentalists who would like to join the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for this Summer's session, may take part in the auditions to be held Wednesday and Thursday in Carnegie Hall.

Tympanists and harpists will be heard backstage in the main hall on Wednesday at 7 P.M. Stringed instrument players will be auditioned in the Recital Hall Thursday at 10 A.M.; followed by woodwind players at 11 A.M.; and brass instrument and pianists at noon.

If possible, candidates should notify the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, prior to appearing for an audition.

This Clipping From ALBANY
KNICKERBOCKER
MAR 15

Berkshire Cen

Auditions Sche

Auditions for adm
opera department
shire Music Cent school of the Boston
Orchestra, will take pl
York at 1 p. m. on We
Mar. 28, in the Chapte of Carnegie Hall and o day, Mar. 29, in Carnegie Hall. An accompanist present.

Candidates who plan t should, if possible, no school office, Berkshir
Center, Symphony Hall
15, not later than Mar.
opera department, whic major full-length opera tions each season, as shorter works and scen this year produce Tchai
"Pigue Dame," staged b
Goldovsky and with Dr
Koussevitzky conducting for the first time in

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 151,192)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
JUN 3 - 1951

Music Fes

IGINAL
EIKE
IPPINGS
W YORK 11, N.Y. ea 3-8860 26,159)
ping From
D, MASS.
RE EAGLE
18 1951

osed Tax Repeal to BSO, Schools

od, the Pittsfield Community Concert Assocical school boards throughout the county will antial savings if Congress acts favorably on a and Means Committee recommendation re- Washington today.

avored

ee voted tentative- 20 per cent federal from high school sts and from other ere all the proceeds t educational, chargious institutions.

er in this area would n Symphony Orches- currently paying out 000 a year in admis- Tanglewood, in Bos- the road. A spokes- BSO said in Boston that the orchestra ely be included under ndation of the Ways Committee.

Summer Schools: Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer whose opera, "The Prisoner," will be given at the Juilliard School of Music March 16, will not be able to be here for that occasion, as he had originally planned, but he will come later on, to join Aaron Copland in the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center, which opens July 2. . . . The new music school in Aspen, Col., will begin its sessions the same day, and, like the Berkshire school, will operate in conjunction with the annual music festival. Darius Milhaud and Charles Jones are the members of its composition department, and, in addition to courses in vocal and instrumental music, there will be an opera department with Madeleine Milhaud, Joseph Rosenstock (the school's director), Herta Glaz and Martial Singher as its staff.

This Clipping From MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 1951

dern. Come July, America will have one of major contemporary composers on hand, Luigi ccola. He's to be a member of the Berkshire Center faculty during the festival season. Last Juilliard made music history by premiering Prisoner, an opera with a sixteenth-century Dallapiccola's music is romantic, atonal and ly reminiscent of Monteverdi.

If possible, those planning to attend the audition should notify the school office: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, by Monday, March 26.

Festkonzerte in Tanglewood

Die großen Konzerte beginnen Donnerstag, 26. Juli, mit einer Serie von fünf Veranstaltungen unter Charles Munch und einem Konzert von Eleazar de Carvalho dirigiert. Das Programm umfaßt zum großen Teil Werke, die anläßlich der Bostoner Abonnementskonzerte in New York schon zu hören waren. — Erwähnenswert die "Symphonie Fantastique" von Berlioz, und Kompositionen von Barber, Copland, Menin, Bartok als Vertreter der Zeitgenossen. Mitwirkende Solisten sind Claudio Arrau, und Jorge Bolet. — Das Finale der Berkshire Festspiele sind drei Veranstaltungen von Koussevitzky dirigiert mit der Missa Solemnis Beethovens als Höhepunkt. Die Konzerte finden an Donnerstagen, Samstagen und Sonntag nachmittagen statt.

Die Berkshire Festspiele sind trotz ihrer großen Anziehungskraft auf die Konzerte des Boston Symphonie Orchesters und seine wenige Veranstaltungen im Music Center und Operndepartments limitiert. Ralph Hawkes schreibt in der ausgezeichneten Musikzeitschrift "Tempo" in Heft 16 eine sehr interessante Abhandlung über die Bedeutung der Festspiele in Tanglewood und wie diese wesentlich größeren Umfang gewinnen könnten. Die Verschung von professionellen und Amateurmusikern in den Veranstaltungen des Music Center und der Operndepartments wird kritisiert, das einzige Berufsorchester für die Bostoner. Die große Idee, zwei Wochen, wie sie in Salzburg geboten werden, zu veranstalten, bleibt zur Diskussion. Interessante Aufführungen, [illegible] Veranstaltungen, [illegible] Ruhe, die in der Geschichte der Musikfeste nicht ihresgleichen hat. Einer der Höhepunkte der Saison werden die Edinburgh-Festspiele sein, die vom 19. August bis 8. September stattfinden und das erste europäische Gastspiel der New Yorker Philharmoniker unter den Dirigenten Bruno Walter und Dimitri Mitropoulos bringen; drei Solisten werden an den Konzerten des New Yorker Ensembles teilnehmen: Dame Myra Hess, Zino Francescatti und Rudolf Serkin. Sir Thomas Beecham erscheint mit dem Royal Philharmonic Orchester und Sir John Barbirolli mit dem Halle-Orchester. Die Festwochen Großbritanniens beginnen am 3. Mai und werden bis 30. September fortgeführt.

Frankreich, Italien, Schweiz

Die französischen Musikfeste werden im kommenden Sommer in Perpignan (Casals), Aix en Provence, Toulouse, Bordeaux und Strasbourg abgehalten. Einzelheiten sind bisher nur von den Veranstaltungen in Perpignan veröffentlicht worden. Pablo Casals hat als Leiter der Festwochen (10. Juni bis 5. Juli) Werke von Bach, Beethoven und Mozart in das Programm aufgenommen, die Konzerte werden in dem alten Palast der Könige von Mallorca abgehalten, als Mitwirkende sind unter anderen die Pianisten Myra Hess, Schnabel, Schnabel, Schuricht und Karajan vo[r] August bis 2. September; laken bringt Tell-Festspiele.

In unserer Aufstellung f[ehlen] noch viele andere bedeut[ende] Feste, Musikwochen in Holl[and], Belgien, in den nordischen St[aa]ten, aber der Besucher Euro[pas] hat schon ohnehin eine s[chwe]re schwierige Wahl, wo er wirkli[ch] Auserlesenes finden kann.

Nach den Nachrichten a[us] Deutschland und Österreich sin[d] die Festspiele in Bayreuth und Salzburg fast ausverkauft, die Nachfrage nach Karten war noch niemals so stark wie für die kommende Saison, und die beiden Städe werden wie bisher die Zentren der musikalischen Feste in Europa sein. — Es ist nur zu hoffen, daß die Erwartungen der Veranstalter in jeder Weise erfüllt werden und die Überfülle der Ereignisse sich nicht negativ auswirkt.

Sonnabend Frühlingsfest des

Brooklyner H

...ren Mitbürgern zeigen, daß es uns wirklich ernst ist, für Verständigung und Frieden zu arbeiten.

Der 6. Mai soll als ein Ehrentag des Deutschamerikanertums in die Geschichte eingehen. Um dies Tatsache werden zu lassen, brauchen wir die geschlossene Unterstützung von ganz Deutsch-Amerika. Durch Harmonie und Eintracht läßt sich viel erreichen. Daher noch einmal die herzlichste Einladung an alle und jeden: Kommt, und kommt in Massen! Am Freitag, den 4. Mai, veranstaltet der DAFB für die Gäste aus Frankfurt einen Begrüßungs-

Auch die Sangesvereinigungen werden hiermit nochmals gebeten, unbedingt am Sonntag ihre Banner mitzubringen.

Donnerstag Probe

Die New Yorker Großvereinigung hat für kommenden Donnerstag, den 3. Mai, eine Massenchorprobe unter Dirigent Leonard Temme im Saale der Kreuzzeitung, 154 Nassau Street, angesetzt.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 151,192)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
JUN 5 - 1951

Music Festivals Reach Peak Here and Abroad

LATE SPRING and summer music festivals in the United States and abroad will be held in greater profusion and variety, and in more places, than at any time since the end of the war. Among the American festivals are:

St. Louis Municipal Opera, June 7-Sept. 12: Eleven operettas and musicals in open air theater. Forest park.

Tanglewood season, Berkshire Music Center, Mass., July 7-Aug. 12; Bach-Haydn-Mozart series under Serge Koussevitzky (three week-ends) and three series of three concerts each (July 26-Aug. 12) under Koussevitzky, Charles Munch and others.

Aspen, Colo., Summer music festival, July 2 to Aug. 27: Concerts, courses, lectures. Joseph Rosenstock, musical director.

Fourteenth annual Bach festival, Carmel, Calif., July 16-22. Gastone Usigli, conductor.

Sixth annual composers conference and chamber music [illegible] Bennington college, Vermont, [illegible].

Among the European festivals are:

Festival of Britain, June until October: British contemporary music, Cheltenham, July 2-13; Benjamin Britten festival, Aldeburgh June 8-17; three choirs' festival, Worcester, Sept. 2-7; Welsh National festival, Llanrwst Aug. 6-11; Stratford, orchestral concerts, opera and ballet, London, June and July.

Edinburgh International festival, Aug. 19-Sept. 8: New York Philharmonic and five British orchestras; chamber concerts; instrumental and vocal recitals.

Two-thousandth Anniversary of Paris: Music in the Place des Vosges, Sainte Chapelle, St. Gervais, court of the Louvre, Palais de Chaillot, Debussy music in Debussy's home, and other events.

Casals Music festival, Perpignan, Pyrenees Orientales, France, July 7-26: Bach, Mozart and Beethoven music in six orchestral and six chamber music programs; Pablo Casals, musical director.

Bayreuth, Germany, Wagner festivals, July 29-Aug. 19: Seven Wagner music dramas and Beethoven's Ninth symphony under Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

Salzburg, Austria, 1951 festival July 27-Aug. 31: Operas, plays, orchestral and chamber music; Vienna Philharmonic orchestra, seven conductors.

Florence, Italy, Music festival, May and June.

Sibelius festival, Helsinki, Finland, June.

Richard Strauss week, Cologne, June 11-19.

Song festival of German General Singers association, Frankfurt June 15-19.

Holland Festival, June: Hague orchestra under Antal Dorati, Scheveningen, June 15, 16, 21.

1951 Mozart Festival, June 22-25, at Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt, Germany.

Berlin Festival Weeks, Sept. 6-16.

Bach Week, July 27-Aug. 3, at Ansbach, Germany.

This Clipping Fr[om]
BOSTON, MAS[S.]
MORNING GL[OBE]
MAR 5 1951

Berkshire Auditi[ons] to Be Held Friday

The Berkshire Music Ce[nter] Summer Music School of t[he] ton Symphony Orchestra, w[ill] auditions in Boston for a[ll] to the Opera Department, [on] day at 10 a. m. at Symphon[y] An accompanist will be pr[o]

The Center's ninth sess[ion] open at Tanglewood on Ju[ly] continue for six weeks to [Aug.]

Among the department's productions of full-length [operas] recent seasons have been [Gian-] Grimes" and "Albert Herr[ing]" Benjamin Britten; Mozart's "[Cosi fan] meneo" and "Finta Giar[dino]" Rossini's "The Turk in [Italy]" Gluck's "Iphigenia in Tau[ris]" Ibert's "The King of Yv[etot]" addition the students in th[e] Department present prog[rams] shorter works and opera [scenes]

Those who plan to com[pete] auditions should, if possibl[e], the school office—Berkshi[re] Center, Symphony Hall, B[oston] Mass., by Monday.

If possible, those planning to attend the audition should notify the school office: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, by Monday, March 26.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAR 18 1951

Lester Roberts Again to Manage Restaurant for Orchestra, School

Mr., Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely Will Occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge for Summer

Special to The Sunday Republican

Berkshire Hills, March 17—Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, who have a winter home in Mount Dora, Fla., are to return to Lenox the coming season and Mr. Roberts again will be in charge of the Tanglewood cafeteria and restaurant for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music School. For many years Mr. Roberts was manager and part owner of Curtis Hotel and after that property was sold George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, secured the services of Mr. Roberts to establish the restaurant, which has facilities for handling the summer music school with membership of about 500, the faculty and many visitors. Mr. Roberts did such a fine job, not only in establishment, but in seasonal operation that Mr. Judd asked him to come back.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and family of Lake Cottage, Stockbridge, flew this week from La Guardia Field for a two weeks' spring vacation in Bermuda.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely are to occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge the coming season. This is the former summer home of Mrs. Deely's father, Owen Johnson, now of Nantucket.

Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop S. Emmet, New York, who have been spending the winter at Hillfields, Yale Hill, Stockbridge, are to continue their winter occupancy of the house now owned by Miss Rosamond Sherwood. Hillfields was the one time summer home of Miss Helen J. Kobbe and the late Miss Marie O. Kobbe of New York.

Mrs. Peabody Looram is back in Great Barrington from New York, where she met her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Looram, who flew from Rome, where Mr. Looram is vice-consul in the foreign service of the State Department. They expect to be in Washington the coming three months.

Albert Spalding, the violinist, will be the guest of honor at a dinner on April 24 in the Jade Room suite of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York, given under auspices of the Musicians Emergency Fund. Mrs. Lytle Hull is president of the fund, Mr. Spalding, vice-president, and Mrs. Frederick Steinway, chairman of the ticket committee.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 26,159)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
MAY 18 1951

Proposed Tax Repeal Boon to BSO, Schools

Tanglewood, the Pittsfield Community Concert Association, and local school boards throughout the county will realize substantial savings if Congress acts favorably on a House Ways and Means Committee recommendation reported from Washington today.

Tentatively Favored

The committee voted tentatively to lift the 20 per cent federal admission tax from high school athletic contests and from other gatherings where all the proceeds go to nonprofit educational, charitable and religious institutions.

Biggest gainer in this area would be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is currently paying out close to $200,000 a year in admission taxes at Tanglewood, in Boston and on the road. A spokesman for the BSO said in Boston this morning that the orchestra would definitely be included under the recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee.

This Clipping From MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MAY 1951

A modern. Come July, America will have one of Italy's major contemporary composers on hand, Luigi Dallapiccola. He's to be a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty during the festival season. Last March Juilliard made music history by premiering his The Prisoner, an opera with a sixteenth-century setting. Dallapiccola's music is romantic, atonal and definitely reminiscent of Monteverdi.

[134].

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
MAR 1 21951

Berkshire Music Center To Audition This Week

West[illegible] instrumentalists who would like to join the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Le[nox] this Summer's session, are to take part in the auditions to be held Wednesday and Thursday in Carnegie Hall.

Tympanists and harpists will be heard backstage in the main hall on Wednesday at 7 P.M. Stringed instrument players will be auditioned in the Recital Hall Thursday at 10 A.M.; followed by woodwind players at 11 A.M.; and brass instrument and pianists at noon.

If possible, candidates should notify the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, prior to appearing for an audition.

Summer Schools: Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer whose opera, "The Prisoner," will be given at the Juilliard School of Music March 16, will not be able to be here for that occasion, as he had originally planned, but he will come later on, to join Aaron Copland in the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center, which opens July 2. . . . The new music school in Aspen, Col., will begin its sessions the same day, and, like the Berkshire school, will operate in conjunction with the annual music festival. Darius Milhaud and Charles Jones are the members of its composition department, and, in addition to courses in vocal and instrumental music, there will be an opera department with Madeleine Milhaud, Joseph Rosenstock (the school's director), Herta Glaz and Martial Singher as its staff.

...n" beginnen Donnerstag, 26. Juli, mit einer ... von fünf Veranstaltungen ... Charles Munch und einem Konzert von Eleazar de Carvalho ...igiert. Das Programm umfaßt ... großen Teil Werke, die an... der Bostoner Abonnementskonzerte in New York ...en zu hören waren. — Erwähnenswert die "Symphonie Fantastique" von Berlioz, und Kompositionen von Barber, Copland, ...nin, Bartok als Vertreter der ...eigenossen. Mitwirkende Solisten ...d Claudio Arrau, und Jorge ...let. — Das Finale der Berkshire Festspiele sind drei Veranstaltungen von Koussevitzky ...igiert mit der Missa Solemnis ...thovens als Höhepunkt. Die Konzerte finden an Donnerstagen, Samstagen und Sonntag nachmittagen statt.

Die Berkshire Festspiele sind ...trotz ihrer großen Anziehungskraft auf die Konzerte des Boston Symphonie Orchesters und einige wenige Veranstaltungen des Music Center und Operndepartments limitiert. Ralph Hawkes schreibt in der ausgezeichneten Musikzeitschrift "Tempo" in Heft 16 eine sehr interessante Abhandlung über die Bedeutung der Festspiele in Tanglewood und wie diese wesentlich größeren Umfang gewinnen könnten. Die Einbeziehung von professionellen und Amateurmusikern in den Veranstaltungen des Music Center und der Operndepartments wird kritisiert, das einzige Berufsorchester ist die Bostoner. Die große Idee, zwei Wochen, wie sie in Salzburg ...oten werden, zu veranstalten, ...nt zur Diskussion. Interessante ...auf den Veranstaltungen.

...Fülle, die in der Geschichte der ... Musikfeste nicht ihresgleichen hat. Einer der Höhepunkte der Saison werden die Edinburgh-Festspiele sein, die vom 19. August bis 8. September stattfinden und das erste europäische Gastspiel der New Yorker Philharmoniker unter den Dirigenten Bruno Walter und Dimitri Mitropoulos bringen; drei Solisten werden an den Konzerten des New Yorker Ensembles teilnehmen: Dame Myra Hess, Zino Francescatti und Rudolf Serkin. Sir Thomas Beecham erscheint mit dem Royal Philharmonic Orchester und Sir John Barbirolli mit dem Halle-Orchester. Die Festwochen Großbritanniens beginnen am 3. Mai und werden bis 30. September fortgeführt.

Frankreich, Italien, Schweiz

Die französischen Musikfeste werden im kommenden Sommer in Perpignan (Casals), Aix en Provence, Toulouse, Bordeaux und Strasbourg abgehalten. Einzelheiten sind bisher nur von den Veranstaltungen in Perpignan veröffentlicht worden. Pablo Casals hat als Leiter der Festwochen (10. Juni bis 5. Juli) Werke von Bach, Beethoven und Mozart in das Programm aufgenommen, die Konzerte werden in dem alten Palast der Könige von Mallorca abgehalten, als Mitwirkende sind unter anderen die Pianisten Myra ...Schnürcht und Karajan ... August bis 2. September; ...laken bringt Tell-Festspiele.

In unserer Aufstellung ... noch viele andere bedeut... Feste, Musikwochen in Holl... Belgien, in den nordischen S... ten, aber der Besucher Euro... hat schon ohnehin eine s... schwierige Wahl, wo er wirkli... Auserlesenes finden kann.

Nach den Nachrichten a... Deutschland und Österreich sin... die Festspiele in Bayreuth und Salzburg fast ausverkauft, die Nachfrage nach Karten war noch niemals so stark wie für die kommende Saison, und die beiden Städe werden wie bisher die Zentren der musikalischen Feste in Europa sein. — Es ist nur zu hoffen, daß die Erwartungen der Veranstalter in jeder Weise erfüllt werden und die Überfülle der Ereignisse sich nicht negativ auswirkt.

Sonnabend Frühlingsfest des

Brooklyner F...

...Chorchores unter Dirigent Leonard ...nstag, den 3. Mai, eine Massen... gung hat für kommenden Don... hiermit nochmals gebeten, unbe... dingt am Sonntag ihre Banner mitzubringen.

Donnerstag Probe

Die New Yorker Großveranst... gung hat für kommenden Don... nerstag, den 3. Mai, eine Massen... chorprobe unter Dirigent Leonard ...Temme im Saale der Kreuzer...

Lester Roberts Again to Manage Restaurant for Orchestra, School

Mr., Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely Will Occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge for Summer

Special to The Sunday Republican

Berkshire Hills, March 17—Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, who have a winter home in Mount Dora, Fla., are to return to Lenox the coming season and Mr. Roberts again will be in charge of the Tanglewood cafeteria and restaurant for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music School. For many years Mr. Roberts was manager and part owner of Curtis Hotel and after that property was sold George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, secured the services of Mr. Roberts to establish the restaurant, which has facilities for handling the summer music school with membership of about 500, the faculty and many visitors. Mr. Roberts did such a fine job, not only in establishment, but in seasonal operation that Mr. Judd asked him to come back.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and family of Lake Cottage, Stockbridge, flew this week from La Guardia Field for a two weeks' spring vacation in Bermuda.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sedgwick Deely are to occupy Ingleside at Stockbridge the coming season. This is the former summer home of Mrs. Deely's father, Owen Johnson, now of Nantucket.

Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop S. Emmet, New York, who have been spending the winter at Hillfields, Yale Hill, Stockbridge, are to continue their winter occupancy of the house now owned by Miss Rosamond Sherwood. Hillfields was the one time summer home of Miss Helen J. Kobbe and the late Miss Marie O. Kobbe of New York.

Mrs. Peabody Looram is back in Great Barrington from New York, where she met her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Looram, who flew from Rome, where Mr. Looram is vice-consul in the foreign service of the State Department. They expect to be in Washington the coming three months.

Albert Spalding, the violinist, will be the guest of honor at a dinner on April 24 in the Jade Roo suuite of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York, given under auspices of the Musicians Emergency Fund. Mrs. Lytle Hull is president of the fund, Mr. Spalding, vice-president, and Mrs. Frederick Steinway, chairman of the ticket committee.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAR 18 1951

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 151,192)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
JUN 3 - 1951

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 26,159)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
MAY 18 1951

This Clipping From
WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
REPORTER-DISPATCH
MAR 1 2 1951

Berkshire Music Center To Audition This Week

Westchester instrumentalists who would like to join the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for this Summer's session, may take part in the auditions to be held Wednesday and Thursday in Carnegie Hall.

Tympanists and harpists will be heard backstage in the main hall on Wednesday at 7 P.M. Stringed instrument players will be auditioned in the Recital Hall Thursday at 10 A.M.; followed by woodwind players at 11 A.M.; and brass instruments and pianists at noon.

If possible, candidates should notify the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, prior to appearing for an audition.

Music Festivals Reach Peak Here and Abroad

LATE SPRING and summer music festivals, in the United States and abroad, will be held in greater profusion and variety, and in more places, than at any time since the end of the war. Among the American festivals are:

St. Louis Municipal Opera, June 7-Sept. 12: Eleven operettas and musicals in open air theater, Forest park.

Tanglewood season, Berkshire Music Center, Mass., July 7-Aug. 12; Bach-Haydn-Mozart series under Serge Koussevitzky (three week-ends) and three series of three concerts each (July 26-Aug. 12) under Koussevitzky, Charles Munch and others.

Aspen, Colo., Summer music festival, July 2 to Aug. 27: Concerts, courses, lectures, Joseph Rosenstock, musical director.

Fourteenth annual Bach festival, Carmel, Calif., July 16-22, Gastone Usigli, conductor.

Sixth annual composers conference and chamber music center, Bennington college, Vermont, Aug. 12-25.

Among the European festivals are:

Festival of Britain, June ...til October: British contemporary music, Cheltenham, ...y 2-13; Benjamin Britten ...tival, Aldeburgh June 8-17; ...choirs' festival, Worcester, Sept. 2-7; Welsh National ...eddfod, Llanrwst Aug. 6-11; ...estral concerts, opera and ...et, London, June and July.

...dinburgh International festival, Aug. 19-Sept. 8: New York Philharmonic and five British orchestras; chamber concerts; instrumental and vocal recitals.

Two-thousandth Anniversary of Paris: Music in the Place des Vosges, Sainte Chapelle, St. Gervais, court of the Louvre, Palais de Chaillot, Debussy music in Debussy's home, and other events.

Casals Music festival, Perpignan, Pyrenees Orientales, France, July 7-26: Bach, Mozart and Beethoven music in six orchestral and six chamber music programs; Pablo Casals, musical director.

Bayreuth, Germany, Wagner festivals, July 29-Aug. 19: Seven Wagner music dramas and Beethoven's Ninth symphony under Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

Salzburg, Austria, 1951 festival July 27-Aug. 31: Operas, plays, orchestral and chamber music; Vienna Philharmonic orchestra, seven conductors.

Florence, Italy, Music festival, May and June.

Sibelius festival, Helsinki, Finland, June.

Richard Strauss week, Cologne, June 11-19.

Song festival of German General Singers association, Frankfurt June 15-19.

Holland Festival, June: Hague orchestra under Antal Dorati, Scheveningen, June 15, 16, 21.

1951 Mozart Festival, June 22-25, at Stuttgart-Bad Cannstatt, Germany.

Berlin Festival Weeks, Sept. 6-16.

Bach Week, July 27-Aug. 3, at Ansbach, Germany.

Proposed Tax Repeal Boon to BSO, Schools

Tanglewood, the Pittsfield Community Concert Association, and local school boards throughout the county will realize substantial savings if Congress acts favorably on a House Ways and Means Committee recommendation reported from Washington today.

Tentatively Favored

The committee voted tentatively to lift the 20 per cent federal admission tax from high school athletic contests and from other gatherings where all the proceeds go to nonprofit educational, charitable and religious institutions.

Biggest gainer in this area would be the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is currently paying out close to $200,000 a year in admission taxes at Tanglewood, in Boston and on the road. A spokesman for the BSO said in Boston this morning that the orchestra would definitely be included under the recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee.

Summer Schools: Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer whose opera, "The Prisoner," will be given at the Juilliard School of Music March 16, will not be able to be here for that occasion, as he had originally planned, but he will come later on, to join Aaron Copland in the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center, which opens July 2. ... The new music school in Aspen, Col., will begin its sessions the same day, and, like the Berkshire school, will operate in conjunction with the annual music festival. Darius Milhaud and Charles Jones are the members of its composition department, and, in addition to courses in vocal and instrumental music, there will be an opera department with Madeleine Milhaud, Joseph Rosenstock (the school's director), Herta Glaz and Martial Singher as its staff.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLO...
MAR 25 1951

Berkshire Auditi... to Be Held Frida...

The Berkshire Music Ce... Summer Music School at ... ton Symphony Orchestra, ... auditions in Boston for a... to the Opera Department. ... ay at 10 a. m. at Sympho... An accompanist will be pr... The Center's ninth sess... pen at Tanglewood on Ju... ontinue for six weeks to ... Among the department ... productions of full-length ... ecent seasons have been ... rimes" and "Albert Her... enjamain Britten; Mozar... enco" and "Finta Gia... ossini's "The Turk in ... luck's "Iphigenia in Tau... ert's "The King of Yv... dition the students in t... epartment present pro... orter works and opera ... Those who plan to com... ditions should, if possib... e school office—Berkshi... enter, Symphony Hall, ... ass., by Monday,

If possible, those planning to attend the audition should notify the school office: Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, by Monday, March 26.

This Clipping From
...ELLE"
..., N. Y.

A modern. Come July, America will have one of Italy's major contemporary composers on hand, Luigi Dallapiccola. He's to be a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty during the festival season. Last March Juilliard made music history by premiering his The Prisoner, an opera with a sixteenth-century setting. Dallapiccola's music is romantic, atonal and defi... reminiscent of Monteverdi.

[134]

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
MAR 11 195

THE COLUMN

On the Square

By Ed Brooks

We've long been eager to have some of the nation's musical leaders come down and hear the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra, now that it has become such a consistent dispenser of high quality symphonic music. And it appears we're going to get our wish—with lagniappe.

Virgil Thomson, the eminent American composer and music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, has accepted the symphony's invitation to guest conduct his own "Louisiana Suite," which he wrote for the fine motion picture, "The Louisiana Story."

Dr. Massimo Freccia, conductor and musical director, had scheduled the Thomson work for inclusion on the program of the final concert of the 1950-51 season Tuesday, March 20, and it occurred to some of the Symphony Society executives that it would be a good idea to invite Thomson to conduct it.

They made contact with him and after a couple of days he wired that he will be "delighted" to conduct the work here.

We have long contended that it takes outside recognition to fully waken some people to the fact that a local attraction is a really major one which rates their attention and patronage.

The Square believes that has been the case with some who have not given the New Orleans Symphony their full support. So we have advocated bringing the orchestra to the attention of some of the "name" critics and national musical opinion-moulders, believing that their stamp of approval on the New Orleans Symphony would be favorable if they only heard it. And that their endorsement would heat up some of the lukewarm New Orleanians who have hung back from full support of the Symphony.

It appears that the Symphony has hit the nail on the noggin with their invitation of Thomson to conduct his own work here. In conducting, he will have an even closer insight into the orchestra's capabilties than if he just sat in the audience and listened. And the caliber of the orchestra is such that we believe he will return to New York with some good impressions of symphonic music in the Crescent City. And it won't hurt to have such impressions going around in the mind of Thomson, whose opinions on music are among the most widely discussed and publicized.

* * * * * *

This is a bit belated, but we would like to point out that the little girl who played "Trouble" in the New Orleans Opera House Association production recently of "Madame Butterfly" was Di Ann Sneed, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Sneed, 2231 Gen. Pershing.

We were captivated by the child's performance and in our review listed the name which appeared on the program—which was wrong. Little Di Ann not only won praise from critics and audience, but Dorothy Kirsten, the Metropolitan Opera star who sang the title role, requested the child to repeat her performance several nights later in Shreveport. The admiration was mutual and when Miss Kirsten autographed the tot's program, she wrote, "To the sweetest little girl in the world."

* * * * * *

The top-grossing motion pictures in the nation during February were: "At War with the Army," "Born Yesterday," "Halls of Montezuma," "Kim," "Operation Pacific," and "Tomahawk." How does that list fit in with the movies you saw recently? The selections are based on Motion Picture Herald's monthly survey of box office grosses at first and second-run theaters in the 31 film exchange centers.

* * * * * *

Armand Hug, the outstanding purveyor of jazz piano, currently playing with Sharkey's Kings of Dixieland in the Blue Room of the Roosevelt hotel, got a turnabout reaction from Barry Ulanov, caustic jazz critic of the magazine Metronome.

Ulanov panned some records which Armand made some time ago, not realizing that the recording quality of those particular discs was poor. Some months ago he visited New Orleans and heard Hug play, in person. And in the current issue of Metronome he is full of unreserved praise for Hug. He says things like, "Whatever Armand plays, at whatever tempo, in whatever groove, he gets a beat, he demonstrates a lovely touch and a fine sense of jazz continuity." And we agree.

* * * * * *

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced plans for the summer music school at Tanglewood, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The faculty will be headed by Koussevitzky with composer Aaron Copland as assistant director and Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Copland in the composition department.

The New Orleans Symphony premiered one of Dallapiccola's works early in the season. He is the friend and former conservatory classmate of Dr. Massimo Freccia.

* * * * * *

Life in show business department: One of the national news magazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed its doors for keeps, on Broadway." The play had just opened (to mixed reviews) when the magazine picked it, and the ink hardly was dry on said amgazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed it's doors for keeps.

company will broadcast the final matinee in its regular season on Saturday afternoon March 17 beginning at one o'clock, when "La Boheme" is presented on the Metropolitan stage. This is the last week but one of the regular season and will present Victoria De Los Angeles, Spanish soprano making her opera debut. She already has sung in recital in New York. Miss De
Los Angeles will be heard as Marguerite in "Faust" in its last performance of the season on Saturday night March 17. Other operas during the week are Monday "Siegfried"; Tuesday "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci";
Wednesday "Fidelio"; Thursday
"Don Giovanni" and Friday "Fidelio."

THERE WILL BE ONLY

. . . four performances by the Metropolitan when it stops in Chicago while on its transcontinental tour. The dates are May 10, 11 and 12 with two performances, matinee and night on Friday May 11. Victoria De Los Angeles, Spanish soprano will make her Chicago debut in "La Boheme" on May 12 as will the Italian baritone Giuseppe Valdengo and Cesare Siepie, altho the latter will be heard when the Chicago symphony presents Mozart's "Requiem" on March 29 and 30. "Fledermaus" will be heard on the opening night and at the matinee on May 11 and "La Traviata" will be sung on Friday night May 11. Ferruccio Tagliavini will be heard in "La Boehme" and Marguerite Piazza will have the role of Rosalinda in "Fledermaus."

THE ITALIAN

. . . composer, Luigi Dallapiccola, will come to this country for the first time this summer to be a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. The faculty will be headed by Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky and will include Richard Burgin, Eleanor De Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Hugh Ross, Gregor Piatigorsky, Ruth Posselt and others. One of the features of the Music Center season will be a production of Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame" on July 30 and 31, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky, who will be making his first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera. The Berkshire Music center will present 40 performances in its six-week season, including choral, operatic and chamber music concerts. Student grants from the Tanglewood revolving fund are available for all departments, as well as special awards.

on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 12.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAR 2 - 1951

DALLAPICCOLA SIGNED FOR BERKSHIRE STAFF

Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time this summer as a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, it was announced yesterday by Serge Koussevitzky.

The season will last from July 2 through Aug. 12, and a special feature will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," staged by Boris Goldovsky and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. This will be the conductor's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera.

The faculty, headed by Dr. Koussevitzky ,will include, in addition to Mr. Dallapiccola, Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Howard Shanet, Hugh Ross, Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Jean Bendetti and Ruth Posselt.

The Berkshire Music Center will present forty performances during its six-week season, including choral, operatic and chamber music concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments, as well as special awards.

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES
FEB 11 1951

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & The Sun
FEB 9 - 1951

Give Jazz the Gate, Rep. Judd Demands

By the United Press

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The State Department today defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs Committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize.

The State Department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Mr. Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State Department said, was titled, "Tanglewood," and was a documentary on the annual music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The State Department noted that Mr. Koussevitzky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on a European tour he made.

"There was," the State Department acknowledged "a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session during their lunch hour."

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

Judd's complaint got short shrift in Hollywood. Curvaceous Marie Wilson and Jane Russell both thought that "beauty, like art, is universal."

Judd's fears that American pictures of girls in bathing suits might offend Orientals didn't impress Miss Russell's studio.

"She gets 40 fan letters a week from the Orient," a man in the fan mail department said.

Judd, as a matter of fact, failed to get much congressional support for his anti-girl complaint.

Democratic Representative A. S. J. Carnahan, from the show-me state of Missouri, argued that it wasn't up to the State department to conceal American well-rounded ladies.

No, replied Judd, but then the United States government shouldn't have to exploit barely-clad girls.

America's strength, Judd felt, was based on freedom—not what you see on all the billboards.

Cheesecake, Jazz To Be Banned From America Propaganda List

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—(INS)—American "cheesecake" will never be permitted to offend the good taste of foreign peoples in connection with official U.S. propaganda.

Jazz music likewise will be withheld from those areas which do not appreciate a few hot licks in a jam session.

Assistant Secretary of State Edward W. Barrett and his Voice of America aides gave this earnest assurance today culminating a week of rather mild debate with Rep. Walter Judd (R) Minn., onetime missionary to China.

Judd objected to a U. S. information service movie which, he declared, featured scantily attired bathing beauties, inelegantly called "cheesecake" by photographers, and a hot jazz band.

Barrett protested there had "been a certain amount of loose talk" on Capitol Hill about the State Department's propaganda efforts.

The Voice of America and the U. S. Information Service have men spotted all over the world, Barrett explained. They report daily to Washington on what the people of their particular country like — or don't like. The department is governed accordingly.

It developed that the movie in question was a four-reeler entitled "Tanglewood," produced at last year's Tanglewood Music Festival in the Berkshires, and featuring Conductor Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Judd said the "Tanglewood" bathing beauties would offend Orientals. The State Department rejoins that the film is not being distributed in the Orient.

Rep. Carnahan (D) Mo., a Foreign Affairs Committee colleague, wanted to know, however:

"Are we going to tell people we don't have bathing beauties in this country?"

This Clipping From
MARYVILLE, CALIF.
APPEAL-DEMOCRAT
FEB 9 1951

State Department Defends Bathing Beauties And Jazz

WASHINGTON—(UP)—The State department, with as much dignity as possible, defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz today.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R-Minn). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize. He acknowledged that girls and jazz are part of the American scene, but insisted they should not be emphasized.

The State department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State department said, was entitled, "Tanglewood," and was a documentary on the annual music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitsky. The State department noted that Koussevitsky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on an European tour he made.

"There was," the State department acknowledged, "a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session" during their lunch hour.

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

[135]

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
MAR 11 19

THE COLUMN

* * * * * * *

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced plans for the summer music school at Tanglewood, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The faculty will be headed by Koussevitzky with composer Aaron Copland as assistant director and Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Copland in the composition department.

The New Orleans Symphony premiered one of Dallapiccola's works early in the season. He is the friend and former conservatory classmate of Dr. Massimo Freccia.

* * * * * *

Life in show business department: One of the national news magazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed its doors for keeps, on Broadway." The play had just opened (to mixed reviews) when the magazine picked it, and the ink hardly was dry on said amgazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed it's doors for keeps.

This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT
MAR

Catching The Beat In Music World Today

BY

INA WICKHAM

"How many of us ever stop to think
Of music as a wondrous magic link
"With God, taking sometimes the place of prayer —
"When words have failed us 'neath the weight of care.
"Music, that knows no country, race or creed,
"But gives to each, according to his need!"
— Anonymous

GUY Fraser Harrison, director of the Rochester, N. Y., Civic Orchestra and associate conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra, has been appointed conductor of the Oklahoma City Symphony orchestra for the 1951-52 season. He will succeed Victor Alessandro, who recently accepted the conducting post of the San Antonio Texas symphony, taking the place left vacant by the death of Max Reiter. He will assume his duties at the close of the present season. Mr. Harrison will be the third conductor of the Oklahoma City Symphony orchestra which was founded in 1937. Previous conductors were Ralph Rose and Victor Alessandro.

MR. HARRISON

. . . who was born and educated in England, has been in the United States since 1920 and is an American citizen. He was appointed conductor of the Eastman Theater orchestra in 1924 by George Eastman, founder of the Eastman School of Music. He held his position for five years and then became the first conductor of the Rochester Civic orchestra. At present he holds the position of associate conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra and conductor of the Rochester Civic Music Grand Opera association. He has been especially noted for his work in children's concerts which are broadcast weekly to the entire school system of Rochester and for which the Rochester orchestra has received first prize on three separate occasions among all radio educational programs in the United States.

THE METROPOLITAN

. . . opera company will broadcast the final matinee in its regular season on Saturday afternoon March 17 beginning at one o'clock, when "La Boheme" is presented on the Metropolitan stage. This is the last week but one of the regular season and will present Victoria De Los Angeles, Spanish soprano making her opera debut. She already has sung in recital in New York. Miss De Los Angeles will be heard as Marguerite in "Faust" in its last performance of the season on Saturday night March 17. Other operas during the week are Monday "Siegfried"; Tuesday "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci"; Wednesday "Fidelio"; Thursday "Don Giovanni" and Friday "Fidelio."

THERE WILL BE ONLY

. . . four performances by the Metropolitan when it stops in Chicago while on its transcontinental tour. The dates are May 10, 11 and 12 with two performances, matinee and night on Friday May 11. Victoria De Los Angeles, Spanish soprano will make her Chicago debut in "La Boheme" on May 12 as will the Italian baritone Giuseppe Valdengo and Cesare Siepie, altho the latter will be heard when the Chicago symphony presents Mozart's "Requiem" on March 29 and 30. "Fledermaus" will be heard on the opening night and at the matinee on May 11 and "La Traviata" will be sung on Friday night May 11. Ferruccio Tagliavini will be heard in "La Boehme" and Marguerite Piazza will have the role of Rosalinda in "Fledermaus."

THE ITALIAN

. . . composer, Luigi Dallapiccola, will come to this country for the first time this summer to be a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. The faculty will be headed by Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky and will include Richard Burgin, Eleanor De Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Hugh Ross, Gregor Piatigorsky, Ruth Posselt and others. One of the features of the Music Center season will be a production of Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame" on July 30 and 31, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky, who will be making his first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera. The Berkshire Music center will present 40 performances in its six-week season, including choral, operatic and chamber music concerts. Student grants from the Tanglewood revolving scholarship fund are available for all departments, as well as special awards.

This Clipping From GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE
FEB 22 1951

The World Of Music

NEW YORK. (U.P.)—Plans have been announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will be at Tanglewood this summer for the first time and will share with Serge Koussevitsky, retired leader of the Bostonians, in conducting the concerts in the Tanglewood music shed.

Koussevitsky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three week-ends of concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to the music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by the full orchestra on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 12.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAR 2 - 1951

DALLAPICCOLA SIGNED FOR BERKSHIRE STAFF

Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time this summer as a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, it was announced yesterday by Serge Koussevitzky.

The season will last from July 2 through Aug. 12, and a special feature will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," staged by Boris Goldovsky and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. This will be the conductor's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera.

The faculty, headed by Dr. Koussevitzky, will include, in addition to Mr. Dallapiccola, Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Howard Shanet, Hugh Ross, Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Jean Bendetti and Ruth Posselt.

The Berkshire Music Center will present forty performances during its six-week season, including choral, operatic and chamber music concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments, as well as special awards.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & The Sun
FEB 9 - 1951

Give Jazz the Gate, Rep. Judd Demands

By the United Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The State Department today defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs Committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize.

The State Department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Mr. Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State Department said, was titled, "Tanglewood," and was a documentary on the annual music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The State Department noted that Mr. Koussevitzky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on a European tour he made.

"There was," the State Department acknowledged "a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session during their lunch hour."

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

Judd's complaint got short shrift in Hollywood. Curvaceous Marie Wilson and Jane Russell both thought that "beauty, like art, is universal."

Judd's fears that American pictures of girls in bathing suits might offend Orientals didn't impress Miss Russell's studio.

"She gets 40 fan letters a week from the Orient," a man in the fan mail department said.

Judd, as a matter of fact, failed to get much congressional support for his anti-girl complaint. Democratic Representative A. S. J. Carnahan, from the show-me state of Missouri, argued that it wasn't up to the State department to conceal American well-rounded ladies.

No, replied Judd, but then the United States government shouldn't have to exploit barely-clad girls.

America's strength, Judd felt, was based on freedom—not what you see on all the billboards.

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES
FEB 11 1951

Cheesecake, Jazz To Be Banned From America Propaganda List

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—(INS)—American "cheesecake" will never be permitted to offend the good taste of foreign peoples in connection with official U.S. propaganda.

Jazz music likewise will be withheld from those areas which do not appreciate a few hot licks in a jam session.

Assistant Secretary of State Edward W. Barrett and his Voice of America aides gave this earnest assurance today culminating a week of rather mild debate with Rep. Walter Judd (R) Minn., onetime missionary to China.

Judd objected to a U. S. information service movie which, he declared, featured scantily attired bathing beauties, inelegantly called "cheesecake" by photographers, and a hot jazz band.

Barrett protested there had "been a certain amount of loose talk" on Capitol Hill about the State Department's propaganda efforts.

The Voice of America and the U. S. Information Service have men spotted all over the world, Barrett explained. They report daily to Washington on what the people of their particular country like — or don't like. The department is governed accordingly.

It developed that the movie in question was a four-reeler entitled "Tanglewood," produced at last year's Tanglewood Music Festival in the Berkshires, and featuring Conductor Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Judd said the "Tanglewood" bathing beauties would offend Orientals. The State Department rejoins that the film is not being distributed in the Orient.

Rep. Carnahan (D) Mo., a Foreign Affairs Committee colleague, wanted to know, however:

"Are we going to tell people we don't have bathing beauties in this country?"

This Clipping From
MARYVILLE, CALIF.
APPEAL-DEMOCRAT
FEB 9 1951

State Department Defends Bathing Beauties And Jazz

WASHINGTON—(UP)—The State department, with as much dignity as possible, defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz today.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R-Minn). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize. He acknowledged that girls and jazz are part of the American scene, but insisted they should not be emphasized.

The State department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State department said, was entitled, "Tanglewood," and was a documentary on the annual music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitsky. The State department noted that Koussevitsky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on an European tour he made.

"There was," the State department acknowledged, "a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session" during their lunch hour.

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

MAR 11 19[illegible]

THE COLUMN

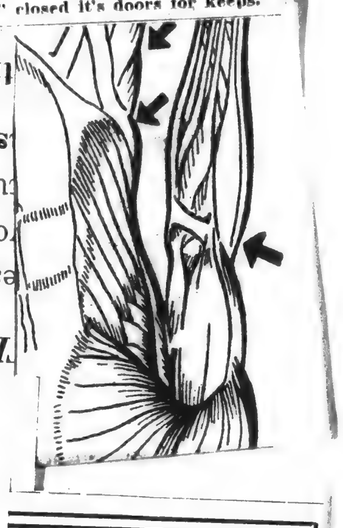
* * * * * *

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, has announced plans for the summer music school at Tanglewood, maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The faculty will be headed by Koussevitzky with composer Aaron Copland as assistant director and Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time to join Copland in the composition department.

The New Orleans Symphony premiered one of Dallapiccola's works early in the season. He is the friend and former conservatory classmate of Dr. Massimo Freccia.

* * * * * *

Life in show business department: One of the national news magazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed its doors for keeps. on Broadway." The play had just opened (to mixed reviews) when the magazine picked it, and the ink hardly was dry on said amgazine's pages when "Billy Budd" closed it's doors for keeps.



This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 2 - 1951

DALLAPICCOLA SIGNED FOR BERKSHIRE STAFF

Luigi Dallapiccola, the Italian composer, will come to this country for the first time this summer as a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, it was announced yesterday by Serge Koussevitzky.

The season will last from July 2 through Aug. 12, and a special feature will be a production on July 30 and 31 of Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," staged by Boris Goldovsky and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. This will be the conductor's first appearance in this country as a conductor of opera.

The faculty, headed by Dr. Koussevitzky ,will include, in addition to Mr. Dallapiccola, Richard Burgin, Eleazar de Carvalho, Lukas Foss, Seymour Lipkin, Howard Shanet, Hugh Ross, Gregor Piatigorsky, William Kroll, Jean Bendetti and Ruth Posselt.

The Berkshire Music Center will present forty performances during its six-week season, including choral, operatic and chamber music concerts. Student aid grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund are available for all departments, as well as special awards.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & The Sun

FEB 9 - 1951

Give Jazz the Gate, Rep. Judd Demands

By the United Press.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The State Department today defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs Committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize.

The State Department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Mr. Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State Department said, was titled, "Tanglewood," and was a docu[illegible] on the annual music festival a[illegible] Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The State Department noted that Mr. Koussevitzky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on a European tour he made.

"There was," the State Department acknowledged, a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session during their lunch hour."

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

Judd's complaint got short shrift in Hollywood. Curvaceous Marie Wilson and Jane Russell both thought that "beauty, like art, is universal."

Judd's fears that American pictures of girls in bathing suits might offend Orientals didn't impress Miss Russell's studio.

"She gets 40 fan letters a week from the Orient," a man in the fan mail department said.

Judd, as a matter of fact, failed to get much congressional support for his anti-girl complaint. Democratic Representative A. S. J. Carnahan, from the show-me state of Missouri, argued that it wasn't up to the State department to conceal American well-rounded ladies.

No, replied Judd, but then the United States government shouldn't have to exploit barely-clad girls.

America's strength, Judd felt, was based on freedom—not what you see on all the billboards.

This Clipping From CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES

FEB 11 1951

Cheesecake, Jazz To Be Banned From America Propaganda List

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10—(INS)—American "cheesecake" will never be permitted to offend the good taste of foreign peoples in connection with official U.S. propaganda.

Jazz music likewise will be withheld from those areas which do not appreciate a few hot licks in a jam session.

Assistant Secretary of State Edward W. Barrett and his Voice of America aides gave this earnest assurance today culminating a week of rather mild debate with Rep. Walter Judd (R) Minn., onetime missionary to China.

Judd objected to a U. S. information service movie which, he declared, featured scantily attired bathing beauties, inelegantly called "cheesecake" by photographers, and a hot jazz band.

Barrett protested there had "been a certain amount of loose talk" on Capitol Hill about the State Department's propaganda efforts.

The Voice of America and the U. S. Information Service have men spotted all over the world, Barrett explained. They report daily to Washington on what the people of their particular country like — or don't like. The department is governed accordingly.

It developed that the movie in question was a four-reeler entitled "Tanglewood," produced at last year's Tanglewood Music Festival in the Berkshires, and featuring Conductor Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Judd said the "Tanglewood" bathing beauties would offend Orientals. The State Department rejoins that the film is not being distributed in the Orient.

Rep. Carnahan (D) Mo., a Foreign Affairs Committee colleague, wanted to know, however:

"Are we going to tell people we don't have bathing beauties in this country?"

This Clipping From
MARYVILLE, CALIF.
APPEAL-DEMOCRAT

FEB 9 - 1951

State Department Defends Bathing Beauties And Jazz

WASHINGTON—(UP)—The State department, with as much dignity as possible, defended American bathing beauties and hot jazz today.

The girls and the jazz, in this instance, appeared in an American propaganda film—and the department obviously is proud of them.

Not so proud is Rep. Walter H. Judd (R-Minn). He complained to the House Foreign Affairs committee that bathing girls and jazz were a poor way to propagandize. He acknowledged that girls and jazz are part of the American scene, but insisted they should not be emphasized.

The State department issued a formal statement declaring that the picture Judd had in mind was mostly about symphonic music instead of those other things. The girls got in the picture just for a little variety.

The picture, the State department said, was entitled, "Tanglewood," and was a documentary on the annual music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

It features long-hair music conducted by Serge Koussevitsky. The State department noted that Koussevitsky was so proud of the film that he exhibited it frequently on an European tour he made.

"There was," the State department acknowledged, "a brief sequence devoted to recreational aspects of the festival in which some of the Tanglewood students were shown taking a swim between classes and in which a few members of the orchestra were shown relaxing at a "jam session" during their lunch hour.

The department offered the statement by way of explanation, not as an apology.

This Clipping From GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE

FEB 22 1951

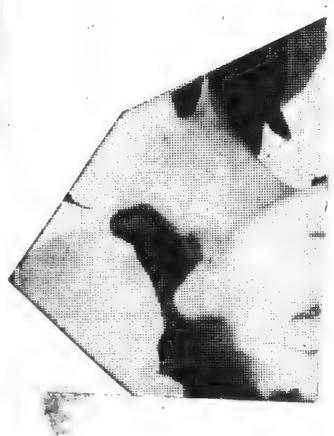
The World Of Music

NEW YORK. (U.P.)—Plans have been announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood n Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will be at Tanglewood this summer for the first time and will share with Serge Koussevitzky, retired leader of the Bostonians, in conducting the concerts in the Tanglewood music shed.

Koussevitzky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three week-ends of concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to the music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by the full orchestra on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 12.



This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

MAR 5 - 195[illegible]

Young Italian Composer Joins Tanglewood Staff

Luigi Dallapiccola, Italian composer, will join the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood [illegible] summer, it has been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. This will mark the first visit to the United States by Mr. Dallapiccola, who has attracted wide attention in European musical circles since the war.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

FEB 11 1951

ce Of An[illegible]
end Ove[illegible]

[illegible]gton, Feb. 10—
[illegible] "cheesecake" will [illegible]itted to offend th
[illegible] foreign peoples
[illegible]with official U. S.

[illegible]usic likewise will b
[illegible]n those areas wh
[illegible]eciate a few hot l
[illegible]sion.

[illegible]ecy. of State Edw
[illegible]nd his Voice of A
[illegible]ve this earnest ass
[illegible]ulminating a we [illegible]mild debate with [illegible]udd (R-Minn), on [illegible]ry to China.

[illegible]bjected to a U. S.
[illegible]ervice movie whi
[illegible] featured scantily
[illegible]b e a u t i e s, inele
[illegible]heesecake" by pho
[illegible]d a hot jazz band.

[illegible] protested there
[illegible] certain amount of [illegible] Capitol Hill abo
[illegible]artment's propaga

[illegible]ics of America ar
[illegible]rmation Service
[illegible]l all over the [illegible]ained. They [illegible]hington on wh
[illegible]r particular c
[illegible]t like. The c
[illegible]rned according [illegible] "Tanglewood

[illegible]t that the mo
[illegible] four-reeler e
[illegible], produced a
[illegible]wood music f
[illegible]hires, and fea
[illegible]ge Koussevitsk
[illegible]ymphony. Ope

[illegible]runs 36 minut
[illegible]s show that America
[illegible]s have some recreation
[illegible] one-minute general
[illegible]h sequence. Members
[illegible]on symphony also are [illegible]ingly in a jam session.
[illegible]wise runs only a minu

[illegible]ussevitsky thought high
[illegible]film and took it with hi
[illegible]uropean tour. It won high
[illegible]at the 1950 film festiv
[illegible]ce and in Edinburgh.

[illegible]dd made his complaint
[illegible]e Foreign Affairs Comm
[illegible]what he described toda
[illegible]off-hand way." He evid
[illegible] surprise at the attentio
[illegible]rks attracted, saying:

[illegible]or years I've been t
[illegible]t the Voice of America
[illegible]he paid any attention to [illegible] I make an offhand re
[illegible]veryone sits up and take [illegible] He said his phone had [illegible]g constantly since.

Not Sent To Far E[illegible]

[illegible]d said the "Tanglew
[illegible]g beauties would offend
[illegible]. The State Departmen
[illegible] that the film is not [illegible]buted in the Orient.

[illegible]. Carnahan (D-Mo.) a fo
[illegible]s committee colleague,
[illegible] know, however:

[illegible]re we going to tell p
[illegible]n't have bathing beauti
[illegible]country?"

[illegible] Asst. Secy. Barrett:
[illegible]want to knock in the [illegible]lk that the Voice of Am
[illegible]am is spreading to the w
[illegible] of frothy business
[illegible]g girls, jazz and the [illegible]ate Dept. Defe[illegible]

[illegible]nglewood Sce[illegible]
[illegible]Pronaganda Fil[illegible]

[illegible]ASHINGTON, Feb. 9—
[illegible]rtment defended its [illegible]nation programs today
[illegible]gressional charge that [illegible]ms featured bathing
[illegible]ot jazz music.

[illegible] only bathing beach
[illegible]uted have been incide
[illegible]ions in sequences desig
[illegible] Soviet lies about Ame
[illegible] a downtrodden, un
[illegible] people suffering
[illegible]sm's heel," Assistant
[illegible] State Edward W. Ba
[illegible]. "These have been e
[illegible]nd constructive, and [illegible]viewed in adance by spe
[illegible]each area before distr

[illegible], the State Depart
[illegible]questioned picture was [illegible]nglewood," a documen
[illegible]nnual music festival
[illegible]Mass. It featured m
[illegible] by Serge Koussevits
[illegible]ibited it on a Europe
[illegible]rding to the departme
[illegible]partment said a sequen
[illegible]ome students swimmi
[illegible]sses, and another
[illegible]members of the orche
[illegible]wn "relaxing in a jar
[illegible]ring their lunch hour.
[illegible]tment emphasized thi
[illegible]lanation, not an apology

[illegible]bo-N. Y. Herald Tribune.)

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
FEB 11

Voice Of Ameri... Defend Oversea...

Washington, Feb. 10—(INS)—American "cheesecake" will never be permitted to offend the good taste of foreign peoples in connection with official U. S. propaganda.

Jazz music likewise will be withheld from those areas which do not appreciate a few hot licks in a jam session.

Asst. Secy. of State Edward W. Barrett and his Voice of America aides gave this earnest assurance today culminating a week of rather mild debate with Rep. Walter Judd (R-Minn), one time missionary to China.

Judd objected to a U. S. Information Service movie which, he declared, featured scantily attired bathing beauties, inelegantly called "cheesecake" by photographers, and a hot jazz band.

Barrett protested there had been a certain amount of loose talk on Capitol Hill about the State Department's propaganda efforts.

The Voice of America and the U. S. Information Service have men spotted all over the world, Barrett explained. They report daily to Washington on what the people of their particular country like—or don't like. The department is governed accordingly.

Movie On "Tanglewood"

It developed that the movie in question was a four-reeler entitled "Tanglewood," produced at last year's Tanglewood music festival in the Berkshires, and featuring Conductor Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Each reel runs 36 minutes. In order to show that American students have some recreation there is a one-minute general bathing beach sequence. Members of the Boston symphony also are shown fleetingly in a jam session, which likewise runs only a minute or two.

Koussevitsky thought highly of the film and took it with him on a European tour. It won high honors at the 1950 film festival in Venice and in Edinburgh.

Judd made his complaint to the House Foreign Affairs Committee in what he described today as "an off-hand way." He evidenced some surprise at the attention his remarks attracted, saying:

"For years I've been talking about the Voice of America and no one paid any attention to me. Now I make an offhand remark and everyone sits up and takes notice." He said his phone had been ringing constantly since.

Not Sent To Far Eat

Judd said the "Tanglewood" bathing beauties would offend Orientals. The State Department rejoins that the film is not being distributed in the Orient.

Rep. Carnahan (D-Mo.) a foreign affairs committee colleague, wanted to know, however:

"Are we going to tell people we don't have bathing beauties in this country?"

Said Asst. Secy. Barrett:

"I want to knock in the head the talk that the Voice of America program is spreading to the world a lot of frothy business about bathing girls, jazz and the like."

Banned ...da List

...veloped that the movie in ... was a four-reeler entitled ...wood," produced at last Tanglewood Music Festival Berkshires, and featuring ...tor Serge Koussevitsky and ...on Symphony Orchestra.

...said the "Tanglewood" ... beauties would offend Ori... The State Department re... that the film is not being dis... in the Orient.

... Carnahan (D) Mo., a Foreign ... Committee colleague, want... know, however:

"Are we going to tell people we ... having bathing beauties in this ...country?"

State Dept. Defends Tanglewood Scenes in Pronaganda Film

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9—The State Department defended its overseas information programs today against a Congressional charge that one of its films featured bathing beauties and hot jazz music.

"The only bathing beach scenes ... have been incidental il... ...ions in sequences designed to ... Soviet ...es about Americans ... a downtrodden, unhappy ... people suffering under the ... heel," Assistant Secretary ... State Edward W. Barrett ... These have been appro... and constructive, and have ... viewed in advance by special... ... each area before distribu...

Earlier the State Department said the questioned picture was entitled "Tanglewood," a documentary ... the annual music festival near ... Mass. It featured music ... by Serge Koussevitsky, ... who established it on a European ... basis, according to the department.

The department said a sequence showed some ... students swimming ... between ... and another in ... which a few members of the orchestra were shown ... relaxing in a jam ... session during their lunch hour." The department emphasized this was an explanation, not an apology.

(Boston Globe-N. Y. Herald Tribune.)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 3 - 1951

...ica Officials ...as Movies

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 345,423) (S 633,364)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 20 1951

TANGLEWOOD FROWNS ON SHORTS-CLAD WOMEN

LENOX, Friday (AP) — Tanglewood officials would "prefer" that ladies wear skirts to the famous Summer concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

But more and more of the female music lovers have been showing up in slacks or shorts.

Thomas B. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Festival, last night gave guests "a chance to conform to the desired uniform."

He had ushers hand out wrap-around skirts to the informally clad visitors.

After all, Perry said, women students have long been required to wear skirts at the noted Summer school taught by Boston Symphony Orchestra artists.

Right now there are only eight wrap-arounds and they went on a first come-first served basis.

Perry said the skirts come in only two sizes: large and medium.

Attractions for 1951 Season Announced for the Berkshires

Music, Sports, Festivals and Exhibits Among Events Beginning in Mid-May

By RICHARD V. HAPPEL
PITTSFIELD, Mass.

Beginning in mid-May and carrying on through late September, a variety of events have been scheduled for the 1951 season in the Berkshires. Music, for which the county is famous, will headline the attractions, followed by theater and dance events. Sports, both spectator and participating, will not be neglected. Art and nature exhibits along with film festivals will attract their devotees. Plans are under way to house visitors with accommodations ranging from camp sites in the state forests to long-established summer hotels.

Although not strictly in Berkshire County but within easy motoring distance, the Malden Bridge Theater is presenting the first play in its barn July 4. Plans now call for a twelve-week season, giving each play a run of two weeks, an innovation for this establishment now in its twenty-first year.

William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, intends to open a season there on June 18 which will run for eleven or twelve weeks. Presentations at Stockbridge are of a Broadway caliber with a resident company and a number of visiting stars.

Concerts To Be Held

Most famous event of the summer will certainly be the Tanglewood Season, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra having Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch and Eleazar de Carvalho as conductors. Beginning on Saturday, July 7, the public performances will get under way with a Bach-Hayden-Mozart Festival under the baton of Mr. Koussevitzky.

Concerts will be held in the theater concert hall, which has had to be enlarged this year, on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7, 8, 14, 15, 21 and 22.

The three week-end series of concerts by the Boston Symphony in the Shed will open on July 26 with Weber's Overture to "Oberon" conducted by Charles Munch. Series C of the Festival program on Thursday evening, Aug. 9, will be opened with Beethoven's Missa Solemnis conducted by Mr. Koussevitzky and the cycle will be concluded with the Brahms Symphony No. 2 on Sunday, Aug. 12.

The tenth season of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival near Lee will open with a Friday matinee on June 29 in the Festival Theater. There will be ten weekly matinees and evening programs with extra performances during the Tanglewood season. The director of the theater and its companion University of the Dance will be Ted Shawn, who expects to have Ruth St. Denis, Anthony Tudor, Jose Limon, La Meri and others as faculty-performers.

14 Golf Courses

For those who wish to take advantage of the natural resources of the region, the state forests offer opportunities for camping, hiking and nature studies from May 19 through the fall. Bascom Lodge on the Mt. Greylock Reservation, which is the largest in the state, opens on that date and will provide dormitory facilities for men and women along with cooking and commissary arrangements. Hikers on the Appalachian Trail can be assured of frequent and adequate camp sites and cabins. All water sports are provided at the fifty-nine lakes which dot the region.

There are fourteen golf courses and many first-class tennis courts. Supervised recreational programs for children are part of the activities arranged by the Park Department of Pittsfield.

The Berkshire Museum, also in Pittsfield, contemplates a full range of art exhibits in addition to regular weekly showings of foreign and "prestige" films. A little farther away the Berkshire Garden Center and the Pleasant Valley Bird Sanctuary are always popular with visitors. Situated in Stockbridge and Lenox, respectively, they are easily accessible by car or bus.

Transportation to the Berkshires from New York is not difficult, whether by railroad from Grand Central over two lines, by car up the parkways or by bus. For those who fly, the Pittsfield and Great Barrington airports are available.

Howard S. Babbitt jr.

Music lovers outside the music shed at Tanglewood

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
COMPASS
JUN 3 - 1951

VACATIONING 'Round The Compass

More and More Resorts Now Offering Cultural Programs

By RO-ZEE

HAVE YOU TAKEN TIME OUT lately to look through the vacation ads? Have you noticed something new creeping into popularity in the way of entertainment programs being offered by the resorts? Even though you may have the idea of dozing and forgetting the hum-drum of the big city, where the houses are tied together with clothesline, you will probably be spending many an interesting hour listening to programs and attending classes with that cultural pitch.

It seems that the "interlectural" set is taking over the vacation field. More resorts than ever are trying to fill every hour with activity. Today they are offering folk and square dance classes, art and crafts, music festivals, lectures, plays, forums, etc. The whole idea is to see that you have something to do and make your vacation memorable.

Is this bad? I'm all for it. I'm waiting to see how the general vacationers will take to it.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will have an opera program this year at Tanglewood. There will also be a special course at the Tanglewood Festival for music teachers and students. This year it will take place July 7 to August 12.

Also in the Berkshires will be the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival at Becket, between July 2 and Sept. 2.

There are many other big events scheduled, which I will let you know about from time to time.

[136]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 5,661) (S 5,692)

This Clipping From BLACKWELL, OKLA.
JOURNAL-TRIBUNE
MAY 27 1951

Music World

NEW YORK (U.P.)—It's going to be a big summer music-wise, with "festivals" dotting the country and special summer concerts in the cities.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., the best known of the yearly off-season events, will open July 7 with Serge Koussevitzky, its founder, conducting the Boston Symphony. A special production of Tchaikowsky's opera, "Pique Dame," is scheduled.

This year Charles Munch, his successor as regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will share the conductorial assignment for the first time. Eleazar de Carvolho, the Brazilian musician, will be a guest conductor.

The Central City, Colo., Opera Festival begins June 30 in that mountain town 40 miles from Denver. Tibor Kozma, of the Metropolitan Opera, will be the musical director again this year and Ellemer Nagy will be the general director.

The Plymouth Rock festival will begin June 29 and is planned for nine weeks which will be the longest season of its six-year history. It has scheduled four operas for the Duxbury theater in Duxbury, Mass., and the 17th century masque "The Fairy Queen" by Henry Purcell. A unique double-bill will be of Kurt Weil's "Down In The Valley" and the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "Trial By Jury." Also included in the varied program will be a full production of Haydn's oratoria, "Creation."

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 83,721)
This Clipping From MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS-REGISTER
JUN 3 - 1951

Big Summer In Festivals

NEW YORK—(UP)—It's going to be a big Summer music-wise, with "festivals" dotting the country and special Summer concerts in the cities.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., the best known of the yearly off-season events, will open July 7 with Serge Koussevitzky, its founder, conducting the Boston Symphony. A special production of Tchaikowsky's opera, "Pique Dame," is scheduled.

This year Charles Munch, his successor as regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will share the conductorial assignment for the first time. Eleazar de Carvolho, the Brazilian musician, will be a guest conductor.

Kozma At Festival

The Central City, Colo., Opera Festival begins June 30 in that mountain town 40 miles from Denver. Tibor Kozma of the Metropolitan Opera, will be the musical director again this year and Slemer Nagy will be the general director.

The Plymouth Rock festival will begin June 29 and is planned for nine weeks which will be the longest season of its six-year history. It has scheduled four operas for the Duxbury Theater in Duxbury, Mass., and the seventeenth century masque "The Fairy Queen" by Henry Purcell. A unique double bill will be of Kurt Weil's "Down In The Valley" and the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "Trial By Jury." Also included in the varied program will be a full production of Haydn's oratoria, "Creation."

At Stowe, Mass., the Trapp family will be host as usual to all-comers between July 9 and Aug. 30. The Trapps have been having their Summer "sing weeks" for eight years.

New York Active

New York's Summer concerts will almost vie with the Winter ones, for orchestral music at least. The "Pops" concert series of members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony opened June 2 in Carnegie Hall. The Naumburg Symphony will play three times during the Summer in Central Park. The Goldman Band will inaugurate its Summer park concerts in Manhattan and Brooklyn June 15 and play 50 concerts in all. And there will be the famed stadium concerts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 930,890) (S 1,488,409)
This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAY 27 1951

New England to Be Summer Culture Center

By Mary E. Prim

BOSTON (AP)—Culture comes with your summer vacation this year among some of New England's fanciest scenery.

There are courses and classes for high, middle, and lowbrows in the mountains, near beautiful lakes, or at the seaside.

The Boston Symphony orchestra's Berkshire Music center embarks on opera July 30-31, when students give Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame" [Queen of Spades] at Tanglewood, near Lenox.

It will be the first time the school director, retired Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, ever has conducted an opera in this country. He will be 77 July 26.

Another Tanglewood innovation will be a special course for music teachers. Supervising will be Augustus D. Zanzig, music director for the Brookline public schools, who also lectures at Harvard university. A newcomer to the teaching staff will be Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer on his first visit to this country.

• • •

The 1951 Berkshire festival, July 7-Aug. 12, will open with three week-end concerts conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and featuring music of Bach, Haydn, and Mozart.

The Boston Symphony's new music director, Charles Munch, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood July 26, conducting the opening concerts by the full orchestra in the music shed. Eleazar de Carvalho will join with him in conducting another concert series starting Aug. 2. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the final series, starting Aug. 9.

The Berkshire hills also will be

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 110,333) (S 172,832)
This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM
MAY 27 1951

Vacation, Culture Synonymous With New England's Scenery

BY MARY E. PRIM.

BOSTON, May 26 (AP). — Culture comes with your summer vacation this year among some of New England's fanciest scenery.

KOUSSE. VITZKY.

There are courses and classes for high, middle and lowbrows in the mountains, near beautiful lakes or at the seaside.

For those looking for entertainment or uplift there are festivals of music and the dance, plus noted lecturers.

Boston's Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center summer embarks on opera, July 30-31, when students give Tschaikowsky's "Pique Dame (Queen of Spades) at Tanglewood, near Lenox.

It will be the first time the school director, lively retired Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, has ever conducted an opera in this country. He will be 77 July 26.

Another Tanglewood innovation will be a special course for music teachers. Supervising will be Augustus D. Zanzig, music director for the Brookline public schools, who also lectures at Harvard. A newcomer to the teaching staff will be Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer on his first visit to this country.

The 1951 Berkshire Festival, July 7-Aug. 12, will open with three week-end concerts conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and featuring his first appearance at Tanglewood, July 26, conducting the opening concerts by the full orchestra in the music shed. Eleazor de Carvalho will join with him in conducting another concert series starting Aug. 2. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the final series, starting Aug. 9.

The beautiful Berkshire hills also will be the scene of a dance festival during the July 2-Sept. 2 session of the Jacob's Pillow School of the Dance in Becket.

Under the direction of Ted Shawn and his wife, Ruth St. Denis, a glittering factulty of dance specialists are to give a six-week advanced course starting July 23.

Meanwhile, Boston's summer visitors may look forward to the Esplanade concerts beside the Charles River.

The free outdoor symphonic concerts will be held July 1-21 with Arthur Fiedler leading Boston Symphony Orchestra men as he has done every season since 1923 when the founded the concerts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,424) (S 23,016)
This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT
JUN 3 1951

THERE ALSO WILL BE

. . . many summer music . . . and music centers wh . . . music today, perform and . . . courses. The most famo . . . is the Berkshire M . . . which opens July 2 . . . Lake in N. Y. the D . . . Music center . . . June 24 and June 25 . . . opening of the Connecticut . . . Festival at Sa . . . T . . . ceeded by Roy Harris . . . the Tramp Family Singers . . . gin the first of four . . . at Stowe, Vermont, and . . . Monteux opens a month-long . . . classes at his estate at Hancock, Me.

ANOTHER FEATURE

. . . of the National Federation of Music Clubs biennial . . . Salt Lake City recently is a report of the musical gifts . . . Federation members have . . . all over the world. During the last two years, the clubs in the federation have sent 37,136 pieces of music to conductors and . . . abroad. With these have also gone resin for strings and a celesta for the Aachen premiere of a Richard Strauss composition. Each package has a United States gift label and each bears the address of a music club in the United States.

THE FEDERATION'S

. . . plan to send musical gifts abroad began after World War II when it was discovered that members of the Athens Greece Symphony orchestra, because lack of strings, reeds and drum heads could no longer bring music to the people of Greece. The federation purchased $1,000 worth of replacement parts and had them on the way within 72 hours. Next came a call from Aachen, Germany and gradually the movement grew until it has covered a great territory. Thru the state department the packages are handled without charge and are delivered by American embassies or consulates. To help raise funds member clubs have scheduled programs with foreign students and Alabama organizations alone have given 24 recitals. Connecticut leads in donating funds for upwards of 4,000 items of music and equipment.

THE FIRST RECORDINGS

. . . of the Alice M. Ditson Fund recordings have been released.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
JUN 3 - 1951

MASSACHUSETTS

Massachusetts . . . of vacation and holiday resources are tailored to everyone's need. From the hundreds of beaches along an 1,800-mile coastline to the verdant rolling Berkshire Hills at its western extremity, the Bay State's many and varied recreational activities are easily accessible by good highways, by train, bus or airline.

Comfortable accommodations are located all along its shoreline, as well as every kind of salt water sport and opportunity for seclusion and relaxation. Hundreds of miles of sunny beaches, unexcelled ocean sport fishing, yachting and boating of every description, plus many evening diversions may be enjoyed from Salisbury Beach, southward on the North Shore, the South Shore, world-famous Cape Cod, and the equally well-known Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Islands.

Cape Cod and the Islands offer ideal summer weather with water temperatures of 60 to 70 degrees.

The greater Boston region is saturated with historic landmarks and literary shrines, plus some of the country's greatest institutions of learning and culture. Add to this two major league baseball parks, running horse and greyhound race tracks, night clubs, famous eating places and outstanding entertainment attractions.

Berkshire Hills and adjacent Pioneer Valley have charms equally attractive. Two events of international fame draw throngs to the Berkshires during the summer. Tanglewood Music Festival at Lenox will be conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, beginning July 2 and extending through August 12, with a series of concerts of works by the great masters as well as many other activities. Jacob's Pillow School of the Dance, under the direction of Ted Shawn, presents week-end and special public performances throughout the summer.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 20 1951

Books And The Arts

New England Background For Summer Art Events

By MARY E. PRIM

Boston, May 19 — (AP) — Culture comes with your summer vacation this year among some of New England's fanciest scenery.

There are courses and classes for high, middle and lowbrows in the mountains, near beautiful lakes or at the seaside.

For those looking for entertainment or uplift there are festivals of music and the dance, plus noted lecturers.

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center embarks on opera, July 30-31, when students give Tschaikovsky's "Pique Dame" (Queen of Spades) at Tanglewood, near Lenox.

It will be the first time the school director, lively retired Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitzky, has ever conducted an opera in this country. He will be 77 July 26.

Another Tanglewood innovation will be a special course for music teachers. Supervising will be Augustus D. Zanzig, music director for the Brookline public schools, who also lectures at Harvard. A newcomer to the teaching staff will be Luigi Dallapiccola, eminent Italian composer on his first visit to this country.

The 1951 Berkshire Festival, July 7-Aug. 12, will open with three week-end concerts conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and featuring Bach, Haydn and Mozart.

Boston Symphony's new music director, Charles Munch, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood July 26, conducting the opening concerts by the full orchestra in the music shed. Eleazar de Carvalho will join with him in conducting another concert series starting Aug. 2. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the final series, starting Aug. 9.

[137]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
JUN 31 1951

'Pique Dame' At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. July 31.—Venturing most ambitiously, the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center presented Tchaikowsky's "Pique Dame" in English in the theatre-concert hall last night.

The production represented the culmination of a long-cherished dream of the late Serge Koussevitzky. He had planned it in complete detail before his death on June 4 and had intended to conduct it himself. It fell to Boris Goldovsky both to stage and conduct, and the performance was dedicated to Koussevitzky's memory.

Most handsomely mounted, the production took first honors.

A superior job by the student orchestra under Goldovsky set up the performance musically. Tchaikowsky's irresistible music exerted its strong appeal even though the score was less passionately sung than its tragic story demands.

The student cast did an excellent job in many ways. Phyllis Curtin and David Lloyd in the roles of Lisa and Hermann finally caught some of the spirit of the work in the third act, but the others in the cast conveyed little of the depth of their roles.

Among them James Pease stood out vocally.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 15,424) (S 23,016)
This Clipping From DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT
JUN 3 1951

THERE ALSO WILL BE

. . . many summer music . . . and music centers wh . . . music today, perform and . . . courses. The most famo . . . is the Berkshire M . . . which opens July 2 . . . Lake in N. Y. the D . . . Music center . . . June 24 and June 25 . . . opening of the Connecticut . . . Festival at Sa . . . T . . . ceeded by Roy Harris . . . the Tramp Family Singers . . . gin the first of four . . . at Stowe, Vermont, and . . . Monteux opens a month-long . . . classes at his estate at Hancock, Me.

ANOTHER FEATURE

. . . of the National Federation of Music Clubs biennial . . . Salt Lake City recently is a report of the musical gifts . . . Federation members have . . . all over the world. During the last two years, the clubs in the federation have sent 37,136 pieces of music to conductors and . . . abroad. With these have also gone resin for strings and a celesta for the Aachen premiere of a Richard Strauss composition. Each package has a United States gift label and each bears the address of a music club in the United States.

THE FEDERATION'S

. . . plan to send musical gifts abroad began after World War II when it was discovered that members of the Athens Greece Symphony orchestra, because lack of strings, reeds and drum heads could no longer bring music to the people of Greece. The federation purchased $1,000 worth of replacement parts and had them on the way within 72 hours. Next came a call from Aachen, Germany and gradually the movement grew until it has covered a great territory. Thru the state department the packages are handled without charge and are delivered by American embassies or consulates. To help raise funds member clubs have scheduled programs with foreign students and Alabama organizations alone have given 24 recitals. Connecticut leads in donating funds for upwards of 4,000 items of music and equipment.

THE FIRST RECORDINGS

. . . of the Alice M. Ditson Fund recordings have been released.

PEB 1 0 1951
UNCE PLANS
TANGLEWOOD
Share Conductorship
h Koussevitsky rk, Feb. 10 (UP)
been announced for Berkshire Festival at d in Lenox, Mass.
Munch, the Boston
s new music director,
Tanglewood this sum-
e first time and will
Serge Koussevitzky,
der of the Bostonians, ng the concerts in the d music shed.
tzky, continuing as di-
the Berkshire Music
e orchestra's summer
Tanglewood, will open with three week-ends by an orchestra of roportions on Saturday
nd Sunday afternoons,
-15, 21-22, devoting the o the music of Bach, Haydn.
he three weeks that e will be nine concerts
by the full orchestra, ay evenings. Saturday
nd Sunday afternoons,
July 26. The festival
n Aug. 12.
pring Season
w York City Opera will open its spring sea
City Center on March agner's "Die Meister successful new pro
last fall and the firs opera essayed by th
n since the 1945 pro
"The Flying Dutch season will close o
the repertory will b
"Manon," second
c works based on th
ost novel to be offere
ter. The company pr evived the Puccini
escaut," with Doroth
the title role, in th
York production in a y 20 years.
ertory will include
e works from th
ng, "Manon," "Faus en"; the Prokofie he Love for Three the Wagnerian hig nd the two Moza
n Giovanni" and "Th
Figaro," representin n wing; and, from th
g, "La Boheme," "M
erfly," "Aida," "Cava cana," "Pagliacci" a ta." "The Love f
nges" and "The Ma
garo" will be sung usual.
nounce Soloists
ight instrumental so announced by the Ne
harmonic-Symphony f
1-52 season. Seven will with the orchestra for t time, including the Gre
t, Gina Bachauer, who ma ly successful New York
ebut this season.
list of instrumental so
llows:
ists: Gina Bachauer, Je
eus, Robert Casadeus, Al ni, Clifford Curzon, Rud ny, Frank Glazer, Nic
t, Myra Hess, Grant John Constance Keene, Oscar
William Masselos, Horte
h, Guiomar Novaes, Rud
, Arthur Schnabel and anists—Arthur Whittem ck Lowe.
nists: Zino Francesca
Heifetz, Frances Magr
n Milstein, Erica Mor el Rabin and Isaac Ste
oncellists: Gregor Piati
nd Leonard Rose.
curriculum includes co vocal and instrumental
, theory, composition,
g and program-making der the direction of an.
Music Scholarships
connection with Jewish onth, Dewey D. Stone, of the Brandeis ation, has announced ng of $10,000 in rships.
art institute is a de of the Brandeis camp sponsored some ten the late Justice Lo
els, and under
. Shlomo
g of Jewish in Jewish cultural ca.

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
FEB 10 1951

ANNOUNCE PLANS FOR TANGLEWOOD

Munch to Share Conductorship With Koussevitsky

New York, Feb. 10 (UP) — Plans have been announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will be at Tanglewood this summer for the first time and will share with Serge Koussevitzky, retired leader of the Bostonians, in conducting the concerts in the Tanglewood music shed.

Koussevitzky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three week-ends of concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to the music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by the full orchestra on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 12.

Spring Season

The New York City Opera Company will open its spring season at the City Center on March 14 with Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," the successful new production of last fall and the first Wagnerian opera essayed by the organization since the 1945 production of "The Flying Dutchman." The season will close on April 22.

New to the repertory will be Massenet's "Manon," second of the operatic works based on the Abbe Prevost novel to be offered at City Center. The company previously revived the Puccini "Manon Lescaut," with Dorothy Kirsten in the title role, in the first New York production in approximately 20 years.

The repertory will include at least three works from the French wing, "Manon," "Faust" and "Carmen"; the Prokofieff satire, "The Love for Three Oranges"; the Wagnerian high comedy and the two Mozart works, "Don Giovanni" and "The Marriage of Figaro," representing the German wing; and, from the Italian wing, "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly," "Aida," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Pagliacci" and "La Traviata." "The Love for Three Oranges" and "The Marriage of Figaro" will be sung in English, as usual.

Announce Soloists

Twenty-eight instrumental soloists are announced by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony for its 1951-52 season. Seven will be heard with the orchestra for the first time, including the Greek pianist, Gina Bachauer, who made a highly successful New York recital debut this season.

The list of instrumental soloists follows:

Pianists: Gina Bachauer, Jean Casadeus, Robert Casadeus, Aldo Ciccolini, Clifford Curzon, Rudolf Firkusny, Frank Glazer, Nicole Henriot, Myra Hess, Grant Johannesen, Constance Keene, Oscar Levant, William Masselos, Hortense Monath, Guiomar Novaes, Rudolf Serkin, Arthur Schnabel and the duo pianists—Arthur Whittemore and Jack Lowe.

Violinists: Zino Francescatti, Jascha Heifetz, Frances Magnes, Nathan Milstein, Erica Morini, Michael Rabin and Isaac Stern.

Violoncellists: Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Rose.

The curriculum includes coaching in vocal and instrumental repertoire, theory, composition, conducting and program-making and is under the direction of Max Helfman.

Music Scholarships

In connection with Jewish Music Month, Dewey D. Stone, president of the Brandeis Youth Foundation, has announced the granting of $10,000 in music scholarships.

The art institute is a development of the Brandeis camp institutes sponsored some ten years ago by the late Justice Louis D. Brandeis, and under the guidance of Dr. Shlomo Bardin for the training of Jewish youth for leadership in Jewish cultural life in America.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
FEB 25 1951

Munch to Lead For First Time At Tanglewood

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood this summer as conductor of the first of three series of concerts by the full orchestra in the Shed, beginning Thursday night July 26. Munch, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Eleazar De Carvalho conduct the other two series.

The programs of the series were announced last week as follows: Series A, Charles Munch, conductor: July 26—Overture to "Genoveva," Schumann; Fourth Symphony, Schumann; "Fantastic" Symphony, Berlioz. Saturday night, July 28—piano concerto, Claudio Arrau, soloist; Sixth Symphony, Prokofieff. Sunday afternoon, July 28—Overture to "The School for Scandal," Barber; "Quiet City," Copland; Fifth Symphony, Mennin, Symphony in D-minor, Franck.

Series B, Thursday night, Aug. 2—"Drum Roll" Symphony, Haydn; Rapsodie Espagnol, Ravel; "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun," Debussy; Third Symphony, Roussel, Munch conducting. Saturday night, Aug. 4—Second Symphony, Guarnieri; Second Piano Concerto, Prokofieff, Jorge Bolet, soloist; "Pictures at an Exhibition," Mousorgsky-Ravel, Eleazar De Carvalho conducting. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5—"Water Music," Handel; Music for Strings and Percussion, Bartok; Third Symphony (with organ), Saint-Saens, Munch conducting.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Series C with the following programs: Thursday night, Aug. 9—"Misso Solemnis," Bethoven. Saturday night, Aug. 11—Sixth ("Pastorale") Symphony, Beethoven; Sixth ("Pathetique") Symphony, Tschaikowski. Sunday afternoon, Aug. 12—Fifth Symphony, Honegger; Second Symphony, Brahms.

The Berkshire Music Center, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, will hold sessions at Tanglewood from July 2 through Aug. 12. On July 30 and 31 Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct performances of Tschaikowski's "Pique Dame," prepared by the opera department under Boris Goldovsky.

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
FEB 15 1951

Notes Unfurl The World C

NEW YORK, (UP)—Plans have been announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will be at Tanglewood this summer for the first time and will share with Serge Koussevitzky, retired leader of the Bostonians, in conducting the concerts in the Tanglewood music shed.

Koussevitzky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three week-ends of concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to the music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by the full orchestra on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 22.

City Opera Season

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
FEB 11 1951

* * *

Berkshire Festival Plans Announced

PLANS are announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new director, will be at Tanglewood for the first time, sharing with Serge Koussevitzky in conducting the concerts in the music.

Koussevitzky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three weekends of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by full orchestra on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival concludes on Aug. 12.

* * *

EIGHTH NOTES: Bernard Izzo, baritone, Rochester native, offers a recital Tuesday in Kimball Hall, Chicago. Izzo, who received his bachelor's degree from Heidelberg College, Tiffin, O., and his master's degree at the American Conservatory of Music, Chicago, is continuing advanced study. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Izzo, 106 Santee St. . . . Fredonia State Teachers College has arranged a symposium for Saturday, with analysis of the contribution of music theory to improved music performance and a continuation of last year's experiment with new flute and woodwind instrumentation for band. Open to students, professional musicians and teachers, the symposium will be preceded on Friday evening by a joint concert from the Symphonette Orchestra and Madrigal Singers . . . Eastman School Chorus has begun work on Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, to be presented next month with the Senior Symphony Orchestra, Herman Genhart directing . . . "Gotterdammerung," last of the Wagner Ring Cycle, will be broadcast Saturday by the Metropolitan Opera, heard locally through Station WARC. Cast includes Helen Traubel, Gerhard Pech-

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,618)

This Clipping From
LATROBE, PA.
BULLETIN
MAY 25 1951

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

New York—(U.P.)—It's going to be a big summer music-wise, with "festivals" dotting the country and special summer concerts in the cities.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., best known of the yearly off-season events, will open July 7 with Serge Koussevitzky, its founder, conducting the Boston Symphony. A special production of Tchaikowsky's opera, "Pique Dame," is scheduled.

This year Charles Munch, his successor as regular conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will share the conductorial assignment for the first time. Eleazar de Carvolho, the Brazilian musician, will be a guest conductor.

Kozma At Festival

The Central City, Colo., Opera Festival begins June 30 in that mountain town 40 miles from Denver. Tibor Kozma, of the Metropolitan Opera, will be the musical director again this year and Elemer Nagy will be the general director.

At Stowe, Mass., the Trapp family will be hosts as usual to all-comers between July 9 and Aug. 30. The Trapps have been having their summer "sing weeks" for eight years.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 84,738)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
MAY 11 1951

KOUSSEVITZKY WILL CONDUCT 12 CONCERTS

Program for Tanglewood Is Announced for Summer

Serge Koussevitzky, who is returning to his home in Lenox after conducting in our Western cities and resting in Phoenix, Ariz., will conduct 12 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood this summer. Charles Munch, the Music Director of the Orchestra, will return from Europe to make his Tanglewood debut, conducting the concerts of the first two weeks in the Shed July 26-August 4. Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian conductor, will return to conduct the concert of August 5. Dr. Koussevitzky, besides directing the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and conducting Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame" by the Opera Department, will open the Festival with the Bach-Haydn-Mozart series in the Theatre-Concert Hall July 7-22, and close the Shed concerts, August 9-12.

Charles Munch returned to his native France on the completion of the Boston Symphony's winter season. He conducted the Radio Diffusion, his former Orchestra in Paris, May 7, when he gave the first European performance of Honegger's Fifth Symphony. Serge Koussevitzky, for whom the Symphony was composed, will conduct it at the Berkshire Festival on August 11. Mr. Munch will conduct Berlioz' Requiem in the Cathedral at Bordeaux on May 26. He will conduct the Italian Radio Orchestra in Turin and return to Paris to lead the Lamoureux concerts on June 15 and 19. After conducting in his native Strasbourg on June 25, he will leave for Tanglewood.

The Bach-Mozart-Haydn series by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players will take place on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons in the first three weekends of the Festival, July 7-22. The Shed concerts will be on the following three weekends (Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons) closing August 12. The series subscriptions are now being taken in Symphony Hall, Boston. Beginning June 1, remaining tickets will be sold singly for each concert.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
MAY 8- 1951

Koussevitzky Will Conduct 12 Concerts

Munch To Direct First Two Weeks At Music Shed

LENOX — Serge Koussevitzky, who is returning to his home here after conducting in the West and resting in Phoenix, Ariz., will conduct 12 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood this summer. Charles Munch, the music director of the orchestra, will return from Europe to make his Tanglewood debut, conducting the concerts of the first two weeks in the Shed July 26-Aug. 4. Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian conductor, will return to conduct the concert of Aug. 5. Dr. Koussevitzky, besides directing the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood, and conducting Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame" by the opera department, will open the Festival with the Bach-Haydn-Mozart series in the Theatre-Concert Hall July 7 to 22, and close the Shed concerts, Aug. 9 to 12.

This Clipping From Dallas, Tex.
Times-Herald
MAY 13 1951

Koussevitzky To Conduct 12 BSO Concerts

Special to The Times Herald

Boston, May 12.—Serge Koussevitzky, who is returning to his home in Lenox after conducting in our Western cities and resting in Phoenix, Ariz., will conduct 12 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood this summer.

Charles Munch, the music director of the orchestra, will return from Europe to make his Tanglewood debut, conducting the concerts of the first two weeks in the Shed July 26-Aug. 4.

Eleazor de Carvalho, the Brazilian conductor, will return to conduct the concert of Aug. 5.

Dr. Koussevitzky, besides directing the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school at Tanglewood and conducting Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," by the opera department, will open the festival with the Bach-Haydn-Mozart series in the Theater-Concert Hall July 7-22, and close the Shed concerts Aug. 9-12.

Charles Munch returned to his native France on the completion of the Boston Symphony's winter season. He conducted the Radio Diffusion, his former orchestra in Paris, May 7, when he gave the first European performance of Honegger's Fifth Symphony.

Serge Koussevitzky, for whom the symphony was composed, will conduct it at the Berkshire Festival on Aug. 11. Mr. Munch will conduct Berlioz' Requiem in the cathedral at Bordeaux on May 26. He will conduct the Italian Radio Orchestra in Turin and return to Paris to lead the Lamoureux concerts on June 15 and 19. After conducting in his native Strasbourg on June 25, he will leave for Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAR 26 1951

Berkshire Festival Program Released

18th Century Music Listed for 3 Weeks in July

Serge Koussevitzky has announced the programs of eighteenth-century music which will be played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction in July in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the first three weeks of the Berkshire Music Festival. These will be held at 8:15 on Saturday nights and at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoons.

The first two programs will be devoted to Bach's music, as follows: Saturday, July 7, the first Brandenburg Concerto, the three-piano concerto in C major and the "Magnificat"; Sunday, July 8, the cantata, "Der zufriedengestellte Aeolus," with Hugh Ross conducting, the three-piano concerto in D minor and the cantata, "Phoebus and Pan." The next two programs will be devoted to Haydn, with the symphony in E flat, No. 99, the symphonie concertante for violin, cello, oboe and bassoon, the D minor piano concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist and the "Oxford" Symphony (No. 92) scheduled for July 14, and three symphonies, Nos. 102, 101 and 88 and the D major cello concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist scheduled for July 15.

The third week end will be devoted to Mozart. The serenade in B flat for wind instruments (K. 361), the "Missa Brevis," under Hugh Ross, and the "Linz" Symphony will be heard July 21 and the Divertimento for strings and horns (K. 287), the piano concerto in E flat (K. 271) with Lukas Foss as soloist and the thirty-ninth symphony, in E flat, will be heard July 22.

The concerts by the complete Boston Symphony in the Tanglewood Music Shed, under Charles Munch, Dr. Koussevitzky and Eleazar de Carvalho, will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 26, 28 and 29 and Aug. 2, 4, 5, 9, 11 and 12. Full information is obtainable from the Berkshire Festival, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
FEB 10 1951

ANNOUNCE PLANS FOR TANGLEWOOD

Munch to Share Conductorship With Koussevitsky

New York, Feb. 10 (UP) — Plans have been announced for the 1951 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's new music director, will be at Tanglewood this summer for the first time and will share with Serge Koussevitzky, retired leader of the Bostonians, in conducting the concerts in the Tanglewood music shed.

Koussevitzky, continuing as director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood, will open the festival with three week-ends of concerts by an orchestra of chamber proportions on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 7-8, 14-15, 21-22, devoting the programs to the music of Bach, Mozart and Haydn.

During the three weeks that follow there will be nine concerts in the shed by the full orchestra on Thursday evenings. Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, beginning July 26. The festival will close on Aug. 12.

Spring Season

The New York City Opera Company will open its spring season at the City Center on March 14 with Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," the successful new production of last fall and the first Wagnerian opera essayed by the organization since the 1945 production of "The Flying Dutchman." The season will close on April 22.

New to the repertory will be Massenet's "Manon," second of the operatic works based on the Abbe Prevost novel to be offered at City Center. The company previously revived the Puccini "Manon Lescaut," with Dorothy Kirsten in the title role, in the first New York production in approximately 20 years.

